In Sioux City, Iowa, on the 11th of June, 1892, Mr. Ayres was united in marriage to Miss Cora Kelsey Smith, who was at the time a teacher in the public schools and who was born in Florence, Vermont. They have four children, Clara, Fanny, Homer and Rollin.

ARTHUR LINN came to the territory of Dakota in December, 1869, locating at Yankton. In January, 1870, he purchased the Union and Dakotian, the only paper at the capital and the first paper issued in the territory. He took an active part in territorial affairs, political and otherwise, and was elected chairman of the Republican county committee in 1870, and took a leading part in the campaigns of 1870, 1872, 1874 and 1876. His first newspaper experience was gained in the editorial rooms of Harper's Weekly in 1858, when a boy. The editor of Harper's Weekly in 1858 was John Bonner, a warm friend of Mr. Linn, and he offered him a position, which was accepted. He remained in Harper's until the summer of 1860, going to the editorial rooms of the New York Herald, then under the personal management of the elder Bennett, with Fredric Hudson as editor in chief. During Mr. Linn's connection with Harper's Weekly he met nearly all the prominent people of the nation, including Edward Everett, Stephen A. Douglas, Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia, the blind preacher, Mr. Milburn, ex-President Fillmore, General Thomas, Francis Meagher, and all the prominent literary men and women of that time.

When the echoes of rebellion rolled up from Charleston, Mr. Linn was with the Herald, and had the honor of climbing the flagstaff on the old Herald building, corner of Nassau and Fulton streets, and raising the first American flag put up over any newspaper building in New York City. After the news came that Sumter had fallen, a patriotic mob composed of thousands visited every newspaper office in the city the next day and compelled every one of them to purchase a flag and show their colors. The raising of the flag over the Herald office on the afternoon of April 14, 1861, saved that office from the demonstrations which followed.

On August 23, 1861, Mr. Linn enlisted and became a member of Company H, Tenth New York National Zouaves, and joined the regiment at Fortress Monroe. It is not material to this sketch how old Linn was when he enlisted, but as a matter of record it may be stated that he was just fourteen years and eight months old when he donned his zouave uniform in New York city, but the recruiting officer was made to believe that he was eighteen, or he could not have become a soldier. He served three years in the Army of the Potomac, and was on guard on the beach at Fortress Monroe the night the "Monitor" arrived from New York and challenged Lieutenant Worden and his boat as he was seeking a pilot so that he could go to the relief of the frigate "Minnesota," which ran into a sand bar while going to the relief of the "Cumberland" and "Congress," which were destroyed by the "Merrimac" in the fatal encounter March 8, 1862. He took part in the capture of Norfolk, Virginia, May 10, 1862, which resulted in the destruction of the "Merrimac," and Linn saw her burn and then blow up in the night, after the Union troops had captured Norfolk and Portsmouth. From Norfolk his regiment was ordered to join General McClellan's army in front of Richmond, and his regiment was one of the first to meet the onslaught of Hill's corps at Mechanicsville, which opened the seven-days fight in front of the rebel capital. After the bloody campaign his regiment was sent to Washington, along with the Army of the Potomac, and took part in the bloody battles which stayed Lee's advance against Washington, and again marched to meet Lee at Antietam and again at Gettysburg.

Mr. Linn was mustered out at Norfolk, Virginia, August 23, 1864, and was offered a position with the field staff of the New York Herald, with headquarters at City Point, and the Herald was the only paper that had headquarters within the sacred circle which surrounded General Grant at City Point during the siege of Petersburg. In the fall of 1865 Linn returned to New York, and in March, 1866, left for Iowa to visit relatives at Charles City, and, strange as it may seem, he had not visited his old home on Staten Island, below the city, until February, 1904, when he was a guest of President Hill to witness the launching of the great steamship "Dakota," at New London, Connecticut, February 6th. After the launching he visited the scenes of his boyhood in New York, Brooklyn and Staten Island, and returned to his home at Canton, South Dakota, better satisfied with his home and state than ever before.

During the summer of 1872 Mr. Linn made a visit to Spotted Tail's hostile camp, half way between the Missouri river and the Black Hills, and while on that trip was shown a bag of gold by old James Bordeau, which he easily proved came from the Black Hills. On Mr. Linn's return to Yankton he published a full account of the matter, with such proof as to convince all that there was plenty of gold in the Hills, and from that time the excitement grew and continued to develop until finally the white man had driven the Indians out and the great stampede of 1876 began. Linn's account was the first evidence of the great wealth of the Hills, and in 1873 the famous Collins expedition was organized at Sioux City, which was stopped by General Hancock. In 1874 General Custer was sent into the Hills to explore the country and Linn's account was found to be correct. In 1875 a few daring gold hunters got into the Hills, but the Indians and soldiers drove them out. In 1876 a stampede began which the Indians were powerless to stop, and the history of the famous Deadwood gulch began. In 1897 Arthur Linn was appointed commandant of the South Dakota Soldiers' Home and remained in command until May, 1901, when his successor was chosen. Mr. Linn returned to Canton and again took charge of his paper which had been in charge of his son Arthur during his absence, and he says he expects to remain in the editorial harness for the balance of his active life, and continue to promote the best interests of the state which he has done so much for. He was secretary of the territorial council during the session of 1874-75, but declined a second term in 1876-7.

Mr. Linn is a thirty-second-degree Mason and a member of Consistory No. 1, of Yankton, and is also a Knight Templar. He is the editor and proprietor of the Dakota Farmers' Leader at Canton and owns one of the best printing plants in the state.

On June 7, 1870, Mr. Linn married Etta Brown, daughter of Colonel and Mrs. E. M. Brown, of Montpelier, Vermont. Three children came to bless their home, but only one remains, Florence Jean Etta, born November 24, 1890. The eldest son, Arthur Edward, born May 8, 1876, died January 21, 1901. Alexander, born November 24, 1880, died May 18, 1895.

Mr. Linn is a member of the Methodist church, and the oldest newspaper editor in the state. He has seen Dakota grow from fourteen thousand people in 1870, to nearly five hundred thousand in 1904, and expects to see a population of one million before he retires from the active management of the Leader.

GEORGE W. BURNSIDE, the able chief executive of the municipal government of the beautiful city of Sioux Falls, is one of the representative business men of the place and a progressive and public-spirited citizen. Sioux Falls owes to him a perpetual debt of gratitude and approval for what he has accomplished in her behalf, and as mayor of the city his course has been that of a broad-minded, liberal and independent executive,—one whose policy has been dictated by consummate tact and good judgment.

George Washington Burnside was born in Delaware county, New York, on the 3d of November, 1858, being a son of Thomas and Mary (Walley) Burnside, the former of whom died in August, 1892, while the latter was summoned into eternal rest in June, 1902, the father having been a carpenter by trade and vocation. The subject received limited educational advantages, having attended the public schools of his native county during his boyhood, while he was a student in night schools in Iowa for a short time. At the age of thirteen years Mr. Burnside left the parental roof and went to Linn county, Iowa, where he lived in the home of his uncle for the ensuing two years, at the expiration of which, when fifteen years of age, he located in Cedar Rapids, that county, and initiated his independent career. He there learned the mason's trade, becoming a skilled artisan in the line, and he continued to follow his trade in Iowa until 1883, on the 28th of April of which year he arrived in Sioux Falls, where he established himself in business as a contractor and builder, continuing operations in this line for the ensuing three years. In 1888 he established himself in the omnibus and general transfer business, and in the following year also added a livery department to his enterprise, while another feature of the business was the undertaking department, the equipment being of the best throughout. His became the leading concern of the sort in the city and he successfully continued operations until August, 1903, when he disposed of the livery and transfer business, still retaining the undertaking branch, which he continues to conduct. Mr. Burnside was one of the promoters and organizers of the Citizens' Telephone Company, which was incorporated on the 1st of January, 1902, and which inaugurated business in July of the following year, with a thoroughly complete and modern plant. He was made vice-president of the company at the time of its organization, and in September, 1903, was chosen general manager, of which office he has since been incumbent, giving his attention to the duties involved and also to the superintendence of his undertaking business.

In the spring of 1886 Mr. Burnside was elected city marshal, serving two years. In 1893 he was elected to represent the fifth ward on the board of aldermen, being retained in this position five successive terms and making a most creditable official record. In 1898 he was the Republican nominee for the mayoralty and was defeated by only ten votes, and in 1900 he again became the nominee of his party for this office and was victorious at the polls, giving so able an administration as to gain to him distinctive popular confidence and endorsement, as was shown in his re-election as his own successor in 1902, the consensus of opinion being that the city has never had a more discriminating, independent, conscientious and public-spirited executive. It was in natural sequence that he should receive the nomination of his party for a third term, on the 12th of April, 1904, and in the ensuing election he again demonstrated his hold upon popular confidence and esteem, the result being his re-election by about six hundred majority. It should be noted in this connection that he has been from the start an uncompromising advocate of the municipal ownership of such public utilities as the water-works and the electric lighting system, and it is principally due to his indefatigable efforts that Sioux Falls now controls both its fine water and electric systems, the water-works being practically completed at the time of this writing. Through this system will be afforded the city a far superior supply of water than that given by the old system, controlled by eastern capital. While he met with much opposition in his plans for the installing of the new plant, he had the courage of his convictions and the determined spirit which enabled him to bring them to consummation, and citizens in general will have cause to commend him for his action for many years to come. The original water company was bonded for four hundred and thirty thousand dollars, while the city has installed a much better plant at a cost of only two hundred and ten thousand dollars. Under Mayor Burnside's administration the city also put in its own electric-lighting plant, which is modern in all respects and gives the best of service at a minimum cost, while he has infused vitality and business-like methods into all other departments of the municipal service, keeping all details under his personal attention and sparing neither time nor effort in his labors to protect and promote the general welfare. He is known as a most liberal and unostentatious supporter of charitable objects and enterprises, and in these lines his aid and influence are ever freely and graciously given.

In politics Mr. Burnside was affiliated with the Democracy until 1896, when he gave his support to the late lamented President McKinley, and since that time he has given a stanch allegiance to the Republican party, in whose cause he is a most zealous and enthusiastic worker. Fraternally the Mavor is identified with Minnehaha Lodge, No. 5, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Sioux Falls Chapter, No. 2, Royal Arch Masons; and Cyrene Commandery, No. 2, Knights Templar. He is one of the prominent and influential members of the time-honored fraternity in the state, and is past grand commander of the grand commandery of Knights Templar of South Dakota. He is a charter member of El Riad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and of Sioux Falls Lodge, No. 262, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On the 17th of November, 1881, Mr. Burnside was united in marriage to Miss Annie E. Reed, of Vinton, Iowa, and they have three children, Clarence Ambrose, May Reed and Elsie Elizabeth.

PETER B. DIRKS, cashier of the Citizens' State Bank at Oacoma, the first banking institution incorporated in Lyman county, was born in Poland, on the 29th of September, 1869, being a son of Benjamin and Agnes (Schartner) Dirks, whose eleven children are all living. The parents came with their children to the United States in 1885, locating in Turner county, South Dakota, and there the father and mother still maintain their home.

Peter B. Dirks acquired his early education in the German schools of his native land, his parents having been residents of that part of Poland which is under German dominion, and he was seventeen years of age at the time of the family emigration to America. He remained at the parental home for two years after they located in South Dakota and then secured a clerical position in a general store at Marion Junction, Turner county, where he was salesman for three years and bookkeeper for the concern for the ensuing four years, and the knowledge gained through this practical experience has enabled him to attain success and to be recognized as one of the able and progressive young business men of his adopted state. In 1893 Mr. Dirks came to Lyman county and became associated with his brother Isaac in establishing a general store at Dirks-town. Our subject was made postmaster at this point and the village which grew up about their store was named in honor of the two brothers, who were practically the founders of the town. In connection with their mercantile enterprise they became extensively interested in the livestock business, and soon gained a position of prominence in connection with the industrial affairs of this favored section of the state. In 1896 Isaac Dirks was elected county auditor, and the subject removed to Oacoma, the county seat, where he assumed charge of the office, as deputy to his brother. In 1898 he was elected county treasurer, serving one term and then withdrawing from active politics to engage in the real-estate loan business in company with his brother Isaac, under the firm name of Dirks Brothers. Upon him devolved the responsibility of supervising this enterprise, while his brother continued to have charge of their extensive ranching interests. In 1902 the Citizens' State Bank was organized and the subject was elected cashier of the same, and in this capacity he has since given efficient service, gaining to the institution a high standing and marked popularity in this part of the county. He is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party and is at the present time secretary of the county central committee. He was the prime mover in organizing the Old Settlers' Association of the county, of which he was president for the first two years, since which time he has served as secretary, having been one of the leading spirits in the organization, which now has about four hundred members. He is secretary of the Lyman Creamery Company, whose plant, in Dirktown, was completed in May, 1903. He is also vice-president of the Bankers' Association of Lyman county and is one of the representative citizens of this section of the state. Fraternally he holds membership in Chamberlain Lodge, No. 126, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Chamberlain Lodge, No. 88, Ancient Order of United Workmen. Mr. Dirks is still a bachelor, and enjoys marked popularity in business and social circles.

DAVID MOORE, one of the sterling citizens of Stanley county, and who was prominently concerned in the organization of the county and also of the present county seat, the city of Fort Pierre, is a native of the state of Indiana, having been born on a farm in Washington township, Clay county, on the 18th of September, 1838, and being a son of Levi and Indiann (Slaven) Moore, the former of whom was born in Kentucky and the latter in Indiana, while both were descended from stanch old Irish stock. Mrs. Moore was the first white child born in the old fort at Terre Haute, Indiana, during the war of 1812. The Moore family was early established in America, and the records show that the paternal grandparents and great-grandfather of the subject were born in Pennsylvania, while the great-grandfather, the grandfather and two brothers of the former were valiant soldiers in the Continental line during the war of the Revolution, serving during the greater portion of the time under General Washington. The maternal great-grandparents of the Judge were born in Ireland, and the maternal grandfather was a soldier in the war of 1812. Levi and Indiann Moore continued to reside in Indiana until about 1855, when they removed to Tazewell county, Illinois, where they passed the remainder of their long and useful lives, having become the parents of nine children, of whom five are now living, the subject having been the third in order of birth. Levi Moore devoted the greater portion of his life to agricultural pursuits, and was a man of strong individuality and sterling integrity of character. He died in 1886 and his wife in 1865.

David Moore was reared to the sturdy discipline of the farm, and received his early educational training in the common schools of Indiana and Illinois, having been seventeen years of age at the time of his parents' removal to the latter state. After his school days he continued to be identified with farming until there came the call to higher duty, as the integrity of the nation was menaced by armed rebellion. On the 1st of August, 1862, at Bloomington, Illinois, he enlisted as a private in Company H, Ninety-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being appointed fourth sergeant of his company at the time of its organization, while on the 1st of January, 1863, he was promoted second lieutenant, which office he held until January 5, 1864, when he was made captain of his company, serving as such until the regiment was mustered out, at Galveston, Texas, in July, 1865, while he received his honorable discharge at Galveston, in July, 1865. His command was assigned to the Army of the Frontier in 1863 and was assigned to the Department of the Gulf and was in that department until the end of the war, participating in many important engagements, among the more notable of which may be mentioned the following: Siege of Vicksburg, Yazoo City, siege and capture of Fort Morgan, Alabama, Spanish Fort, Alabama, and other severe battles.

After the close of his long and faithful military service Judge Moore returned to McLain county, Illinois, where he resumed his active identification with the great basic industry of agriculture, to which, it may be said, he continued to devote his attention until 1890. He first located in Hand county in 1883, and in 1884 located in Hyde county, where he took up a tract of one hundred and sixty acres of government land and engaged in farming. In April, 1887, he was appointed postmaster at Highmore, that county, and remained incumbent of this position until April, 1889, in the meanwhile continuing to supervise his farming interests. He resigned the office at the time noted and removed to Fort Pierre, where he aided in organizing Stanley county, in 1889, and the city of which he was a resident, in the spring of 1890, being elected its first police justice. It should be stated that he had held various minor offices while a resident of McLain county, and the appreciation of his ability in a popular way has led to his being called to office at all times, as he has never been an active seeker of the same. In the general election of November, 1892, he was elected county judge of Stanley county, serving two years, and in 1896 he served as state's attorney of the county, making an excellent record as a public prosecutor. In November, 1902, he was again elected to the county bench, for a term of two years, so that he is in tenure of this responsible position at the time of this writing.

Judge Moore has ever been a staunch adherent of the Democratic party, in whose cause he has taken a lively interest at all times. He cast his first presidential vote for Stephen A. Douglas, in 1860, and has voted for every Democratic presidential candidate since that time with the exception of General George B. McClellan, in 1864, having been denied the franchise at that time by reason of being absent from home as a soldier. Fraternally he is affiliated with John A. Dix Post,

No. 30, Grand Army of the Republic, at Highmore, this state, and retains an abiding interest in his old comrades in arms.

On the 11th of October, 1867, Judge Moore was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Lowery, who was born in Jefferson county, Ohio, on the 3d of February, 1840, being a daughter of William and Martha Ann (McCoy) Lowery, and the names of the children of Judge and Mrs. Moore are as follows: Levi A., Laura A., John W., Ethel M., Albert L., Alice B. and David L. Laura Ann is the wife of J. F. Comstock, sub-agent at the White Horse Indian camp. Mrs. Comstock is field matron of the Cheyenne Indian agency and is also past grand chief of the Degree of Honor of South Dakota. Ethel May is the wife of F. W. Hungate, who is engaged in the real-estate business. Alice Belle is the wife of F. J. McGraw, a stockman of Ft. Pierre, South Dakota.

ORVILLE W. THOMPSON, cashier of the First National Bank of Vermillion, Clay county, was born in the town of Vermillion, which is still his home, on the 13th of November, 1871, so that his boyhood days were passed under the territorial regime. He is a son of that honored pioneer, Myron D. Thompson, to whom specific reference is made on another page of this volume, so that it is not necessary to recapitulate the family history at this point. The subject secured his fundamental educational training in the public schools of his native town, having been graduated in the Vermillion high school as a member of the class of 1887, while later he was matriculated in the State University of South Dakota, at Vermillion, where he completed the classical course and was graduated in 1893, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Shortly afterward he became associated with his father in the grain and lumber business, the latter having at the time been a member of the firm of Thompson & Lewis. In 1896 the title was changed to the Thompson-Lewis Company, and two years later the business was incorporated under the style of the Thompson Lumber Company, the subject having been vice-president of this company from the time of its organization. In 1896 he was elected cashier of the First National Bank of Vermillion, and he has ever since retained this incumbency, proving himself one of the discriminating and able young financiers of the state and evincing an executive power which has done much to further the prestige of the institution mentioned. Mr. Thompson and his brother, Martin L., organized the Thompson Brothers Cattle Company, of which he is president, and they control an extensive business, having a fine stock ranch of sixty-five thousand acres, in Potter county.

In politics Mr. Thompson has been a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party from the time of attaining his legal majority, and he is one of the active and zealous workers in its cause, being a member of the Republican state central committee at the time of this writing. He is a member of the Baptist church, and fraternally has attained the Knights Templar degree in the Masonic order, being also identified with the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

FRANK W. WEBB, farmer and stock raiser and ex-member of the South Dakota general assembly, was born April 22, 1851, in Green Lake county, Wisconsin, being the son of Erastus and Jane Webb, the latter before her marriage having borne the family name of Clute. These parents, who were natives of New York, migrated to Wisconsin in 1846 and lived in the latter state until the year 1884, when they removed to Brown county, South Dakota, where the father entered land and developed a good farm on which he spent the remainder of his days, departing this life in the month of October, 1894.

Frank W. Webb spent his childhood in his native county and attended the public schools of the same at intervals until his sixteenth year. At that age he went to Nevada where he spent some time at farm work, was also employed for a period in a quartz mill and furnace, after which he devoted his attention to different kinds of manual labor, the meanwhile finishing his educational training in a normal school and giving one year to teaching. On September 28, 1879, he contracted a marriage with Miss Ellen Wilson and in the spring of the year following came to Brown county, South Dakota, locating in Aberdeen township, of which he and a gentleman by the name of C. F. Holms were the first settlers west of Aberdeen. Mr. Webb took up land, built a sod house and for several years lived the life of a pioneer, experiencing the vicissitudes peculiar to this country in an early day. Two years after his arrival the angel of death invaded his home and took therefrom his faithful wife and the tender, loving mother of his three young children. Later, in January, 1884, he chose a second companion in the person of Miss Penila Wilson, who has borne him one child, a son by the name of Roy W. The offspring by his first marriage, three in number, are Sadie, Flossie and Frantie, all at home and, with the other members of the family, constituting a happy and contented domestic circle.

Mr. Webb's career as a farmer has been creditable in every respect and he is today one of the enterprising and successful men of the county, owning a fine tract of land, and in addition thereto his wife has a desirable place of four hundred and eighty acres, which he also manages. He raises abundant crops of grain, which he makes a specialty, and on his place may be seen herds of fine Holstein cattle, also a number of valuable blooded horses, while the splendid condition of his home bespeaks the industry and deep interest with which he prosecutes his labors. Mr. Webb has been an active participant in political and public affairs ever since becoming a resident of Brown county, and in 1896 he was elected a member of the state senate. He entered that body as a Populist, served during the sessions of 1897-8 and became an influential factor in legislative matters, as well as a party leader. During his incumbency he was chairman of the committee on military affairs, also served in several other important committees, besides taking a prominent part in the general deliberations. When the great political reform was inaugurated throughout the west, Mr. Webb threw himself into the movement and since then he has given his allegiance and active support to the People's party. He has held several local positions, spending twelve years as chairman of the board of supervisors for his township and eight years as township clerk, and has also filled the office of school treasurer ever since the township organization went into effect. During the early days of the Farmers' Alliance he was active and influential in disseminating its principles and organizing local societies in different parts of the country, and he was honored at one time by being elected president of the organization in Brown county, the duties of which position he discharged in an able manner.

J. F. HALLADAY, editor and proprietor of the Iroquois Chief and a journalist and politician of state repute, also present state auditor, is a native of Kansas, born in the city of Topeka on the 9th day of September, 1860. Albert Halladay, the subject's father, a native of New York and son of Cornelius and Priscilla Halladay, was reared in Wisconsin, where his parents settled in an early day, and at the age of twenty-one went west, spending a number of years in Kansas, Nebraska and Colorado, before those states were open for settlement. Later he came to Kingsbury county, South Dakota, and engaged in farming and stock raising, to which he subsequently added the livery business. He has now retired from active business and is living at this time in the town of Iroquois at the age of sixty-nine years. Mary E. Thompson, wife of Albert Halladay and mother of the subject of this review, is also living, having reached the age of sixty-four years. Of her three children, two are living, J. F. and Charles, the youngest of the number, a daughter by the name of Carrie, having died in early childhood.

When J. F. Halladay was quite young his parents moved to Nebraska and it was in the town of Beatrice, that state, that he grew to manhood and received his educational training. After attending the public schools until his fourteenth year, he entered the office of the Gage County Courier, with which paper and the Beatrice Express he spent the ensuing seven years, the meantime acquiring efficiency as a typo, besides becoming familiar with other branches of the printing business. Leaving Nebraska in 1882, he came to South Dakota and accepted a position on the Huron Daily Times, which he held until some time the following year, when he resigned and began work on the Iroquois Herald, one of the leading papers in Kingsbury county. After two or three years of active and effective service with that journal, he became assistant cashier of the Bank of Iroquois, but three years later resigned his position and in 1888, in partnership with Karl Gerner, he started the Iroquois Chief, the entire interest of which he purchased in 1891, since which time he has been sole owner of the plant and editor of the paper. From the start the Chief proved successful and so rapidly did it grow in public favor that within the course of a few years its neighbor, the Herald, was obliged to suspend publication for lack of support. The Chief is a neat, well-edited paper, designed to vibrate with the public and under the able management of Mr. Halladay it has become not only the leading Republican organ of Kingsbury county but one of the most influential political journals in South Dakota. The present circulation is between eight hundred and a thousand, which, with a liberal advertising patronage, returns handsome profits on the capital invested, to say nothing of the lucrative business the office does in the line of general printing. Mr. Halladay is a terse, clear and forceful writer, fearless in discussing the issues of the day, and his able editorials have been influential in shaping the policy of the Republican party in South Dakota, and promoting its success in a number of campaigns. With a single exception he has been a delegate to every state convention within the last twenty-one years, and his influence in these, as well as in local conventions, has always been commanding by reason of his ability as an organizer and leader.

Mr. Halladay served as postmaster of Iroquois during President Harrison's administration, was re-appointed by President McKinley, and held the office for a period of nine years, resigning in July, 1903. In 1902 he was endorsed by every Republican newspaper of South Dakota for auditor of state, and when the convention convened in July of that year he received the nomination by acclamation. His election followed as a matter of course, and he is now filling the high and responsible position with credit to himself and to the entire satisfaction of the public. At the Republican state convention held in May, 1904, he was re-nominated by acclamation for state auditor, no other name being suggested. Mr. Halladay served seven years as secretary of the South Dakota Press Association and one year as president, during which time the organization thrived in its every department. He is interested in the local telephone company and the Iroquois State Bank, in both of which he is a stockholder and director, and he is also a director in the Publishers' Mutual Insurance Company.

Mr. Halladay is a staunch and uncompromising Republican, and at no time during the great Populist uprising throughout the west did he swerve a hair's breadth from the time-honored principles, but on the contrary, did yeoman service personally and through the medium of his paper in preserving the integrity of his party and saving it from dissolution. His influence, always strong and forceful, was felt in every part of the state, and he continued the fight against the popular fallacy until in due time its opposition began to give way and the triumph of true Republican principles became assured.

Mr. Halladay owns one of the most beautiful and attractive homes in Iroquois, the presiding spirit of which is an estimable and refined lady to whom he was united in the bonds of wedlock on May 20, 1886. The maiden name of Mrs. Halladay was Carrie E. Hammond, daughter of Lewis and Lucy Hammond, who were among the early settlers of Kingsbury county, the father now a retired farmer living in Iroquois. Mrs. Halladay attended Paxton College, Illinois, and has borne her husband two children, Edna May and Clinton Frank, aged fourteen and twelve years respectively.

CHARLES LINCOLN MILLETT, president of the Stockgrowers' Bank of Fort Pierre, Stanley county, and treasurer of the Empire State Cattle Company, was born at Belfast, Allegany county, New York, on the 9th of December, 1865, and is a son of William and Jennie E. (Jagers) Millett, the former of whom devoted his life to agricultural pursuits, having been born in Belfast, New York, which continues to be his home, he having now attained the age of seventy-five years, his wife being sixty-four years old at this writing. The great-great-grandfather of the subject was Jonathan Millett, who resided at Palmyra, New York, as did also his son, Samuel, the next in line of direct descent. Samuel married Rachel Douglas on the 17th of February, 1799, she having been a daughter of Samuel Douglas, of Sterling, Connecticut, and a cousin of the late Stephen A. Douglas, United States senator from Illinois. The paternal grandfather of our subject was Milton Millett, who was born at Palmyra, New York, November 30, 1800. He married Philura Sumner and they became pioneer settlers at Belfast, Allegany county. His son William, father of the subject of this review, was born at Belfast, New York, June 5, 1829, and there both he and his wife still reside, honored and revered by all who know them. Both are of Scotch, English and Irish descent, and the Millett family has been identified with the great basic art of agriculture for generations. On the maternal side the subject's great-grandmother Jagers was a first cousin of the poet, Robert Burns. Peter Jagers, the maternal grandfather, was an expert stone mason by vocation and was on the construction of some of the finest buildings in New York city. He came from Yorkshire, England, to America, about 1820, and his wife was a niece of Daniel O'Connell, the Irish patriot.

Mr. Millett received his educational training in the public schools of his native town, where he partially completed a course in the high school, withdrawing about four months prior to the time when he would have graduated, in order to accept a position in the Bank of Belfast. He assisted in the work of the homestead farm until he had attained the age of nineteen years, save when attending school, and was signally industrious in both fields of application. In January, 1885, he was tendered an unsalaried position as book-keeper in the Bank of Belfast, and at the end of the first year was presented with fifty dollars by the bank and engaged for a second year at a salary of ten dollars a month, the institution again giving him an honorarium of fifty dollars at the end of the second year. In March, 1887, he accepted a position with the Western Loan and Trust Company, of Pierre, South Dakota, whither he came direct from his native town. In June of the same year he was sent to Parker, this state, where he had charge of the company's branch office while the regular manager was absent on a vacation. In July, 1887, he was assistant cashier in the Traders' Bank, at East Pierre, but still continued in the employ of the Western Loan and Trust Company, with which he remained as a valued executive until March 1, 1890, when he resigned his position and associated himself with S. S. Clough, of Pierre, and others and organized the Stockgrowers' Bank of Fort Pierre which initiated business operations the following month, with Mr. Clough as president and Mr. Millett as cashier. In January, 1895, our subject was elected to the presidency of the institution, of which office he has since remained incumbent, so that he has been an executive of the same consecutively from the time of its inception. In April, 1890, he removed with his family to Fort Pierre, and in February of the following year he associated himself with J. L. Keyes in purchasing from the Traversee family their Indian rights to one hundred and forty acres of land lying south of Bad river and partly in the mile square in which the town is included, this property having rapidly appreciated in value, as it can not fail to continue to do. Mr. Millett is a member of the directorate of the Empire State Cattle Company, of which he is treasurer, and he holds in the interest of the same a five-years lease to nearly four hundred thousand acres of the Cheyenne river Indian reservation, the tract being utilized for the raising of cattle. He is also a director of the National Bank of Commerce, at Pierre. In politics Mr. Millett is an uncompromising advocate of the principles of the Republican party and is prominent in its councils in the state, being at the present time a member of the state central committee, as a representative of Stanley county. He and his wife are members of the First Baptist church in Pierre, but for more than seven years he has held the position of superintendent of the Sunday school of the Congregational church in Fort Pierre, there being no Baptist organization here.

On the 22d of September, 1887, at Belfast, New York, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Millett to Miss Fanny Ford, daughter of John B. and Martha Ford, of that place. Her paternal grandfather, Treat Ford, was one of the pioneer settlers of Belfast, that state, whither he came on foot from Connecticut, there being no roads through the forests at the time so that he was compelled to make his way by following the trail indicated by blazed trees. Mr. and Mrs. Millett have two children, Helen, who was born May 29, 1897, and Paul, who was born December 24, 1900.

CARTER P. SHERWOOD, journalist, business man and official, was born in Whitehall, Trempealeau county, Wisconsin, August 8, 1862. His father, A. L. Sherwood, was a native of New York, and his mother, who bore the maiden name of Nancy P. Parsons, was born and reared in the state of Pennsylvania. These parents were married in the latter state, and some time thereafter moved to Dane county, Wisconsin, where they lived on a farm several years, changing their residence at the end of that time to the county of Trempealeau. Mr. Sherwood continued agricultural pursuits in the latter county until 1880, when he came to Kingsbury county, subsequently removing to Fairmount, Minnesota, where he now resides.

In his youth Carter P. attended the district schools of his native county, also the high school at Whitehall, where he finished his education at the age of eighteen. In 1877 he entered the office of the Whitehall Messenger to learn the printer's trade, and after spending two years at that place and becoming proficient in his chosen calling, accepted a position in the book department of the State Journal at Madison, where he remained until 1883. In that year he came to South Dakota and took an interest in the Leader, published at DeSmet, Kingsbury county, buying out his partner two years later and becoming sole proprietor of the paper. In 1891 the Leader was consolidated with the News and under the latter name the paper continues to make its periodical visits to its numerous subscribers, having within the last ten or twelve years become one of the leading and influential local newspapers in the eastern part of the state.

In addition to his successful career as a journalist, Mr. Sherwood since coming to Kingsbury has been interested in various other lines of endeavor, notably among which being the DeSmet Creamery, one of the largest and best conducted enterprises of the kind in South Dakota. He was a leading spirit in the organization of this concern in 1895, since which time he has been its manager and the success of the creamery is largely due to his untiring efforts and correct and prompt business methods. Mr. Sherwood served for a number of years as a member of the National Butter-Makers' Association, and for a period of five years was secretary of the State Dairy Association. He has also been prominent in the local affairs of DeSmet, and, in addition to holding municipal offices, took an active part in organizing the Building and Loan Association of the town, which he served ably and judiciously in the capacity of secretary. He has always been deeply interested in politics, and since attaining his majority has never swerved in his allegiance to the Republican party.

Mr. Sherwood, in February, 1901, was appointed state food and dairy commissioner, being the first man in South Dakota to hold this important and responsible office. So ably did he discharge the duties of the position that he was re-appointed, in February, 1903, and he now holds the office with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of all parties concerned. He is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and has filled all the chairs in the local lodge, besides being sent at different times to represent it in the grand lodge.

The domestic life of Mr. Sherwood dates from 1888, in April of which year he entered the marriage relation with Miss Elgetha Masters, of DeSmet, daughter of Samuel O. and Margaret A. Masters, natives of New York. Mrs. Sherwood was educated in Corning, New York, and after coming to South Dakota taught for four years in the public schools of DeSmet; she is now the mother of three children, whose names are Vincent, Reginald and Aubrey. The subject and wife are zealous and influential members of the First Baptist church of DeSmet, the former having served the congregation as clerk and trustee, the latter holding the office of treasurer at the present time.

Mrs. Sherwood is also a member of the Degree of Honor, in which she has large influence, having served the local lodge in various official capacities. During 1902 and 1903 she was grand chief of honor for the state of South Dakota and the latter year represented the order in the superior lodge.

J. F. ADAMS, editor and publisher of the Leader, in the village of White, Brookings county, is a native of Mankato, Blue Earth county, Minnesota, where he was born on the 9th of April, 1877, being a son of F. J. and Lena (Kohl) Adams, of whom specific mention is made on another page of this work, so that a recapitulation of the family history is not demanded in this connection. The subject was a child of about two and one-half years at the time of his parents' removal from Minnesota to Brookings, South Dakota, in 1880, and there he was reared to maturity, having prosecuted his studies in the public schools until he was eighteen years of age, when he entered the office of the Brookings Press, where he served an apprenticeship at the "art preservative of all arts," gaining an intimate knowledge of the various details of the printing business. Prior to identifying himself with his present enterprise he worked at his trade in various towns in South Dakota, Wisconsin and Minnesota, and in 1900 established the White Leader, over whose destinies he has since presided, making the paper an effective exponent of local interests and also a local power in political and public affairs, the policy of the paper being uncompromisingly Republican. The Leader is issued on Friday of each week and is an eight-column folio. The office is located in a two-story building, which is owned by Mr. Adams, and its equipment is modern and complete, the job department having the best of facilities for turning out all classes of work customarily handled in a country office.

In politics Mr. Adams is a stalwart Republican, and both in a personal way and through the columns of his paper does what he can for the promotion of the party cause. He is affiliated with White Lodge, No. 3691, Modern Woodmen of America, and is a member of the South Dakota Press Association, in which he takes a lively interest. He and his wife are members of the Daughters of Rebekah, auxiliary to the Odd Fellows lodge, of which he is a member.

On the 25th of July, 1900, Mr. Adams was united in marriage to Miss M. H. Halstead, who was born in Mankato, Minnesota, being a daughter of F. A. Halstead, now of Mankato. She is a lady of culture and gracious presence and has won a wide circle of friends in White, being prominent in social and church affairs and being a member of the Congregational church. She has excellent literary taste and materially assists her husband in his newspaper enterprise.

F. J. ADAMS, one of the successful business men and honored citizens of White, Brookings county, was born in Cologne, Germany, on the 2d of February, 1852, being a son of Joseph and Elizabeth Adams, who emigrated to America in 1864, taking up their residence in New York city, where he remained two years, the father of the subject being there engaged in the bakery business. In 1866 he removed with his family to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he was employed in a manufacturing establishment until 1871, when he removed to Blue Earth county, Minnesota, and took up a tract of government land, near Mankato, being one of the pioneers of that section of the state and devoting the remainder of his life to agricultural pursuits. His death occurred on his home place, in 1900, while his devoted wife passed away in 1886, both having been communicants of the Catholic church.

The subject of this review was a lad of twelve years at the time of the family emigration to America, and his preliminary educational discipline had been secured in the excellent schools of the fatherland. He thereafter attended school as opportunity afforded, and after coming to Minnesota he assisted in the reclamation and cultivation of the homestead farm until he had attained the age of seventeen years, when he entered upon an apprenticeship at the harnessmaking trade, in Mankato, becoming in due time a skilled workman. In 1872 he went to the city of St. Paul, where he was engaged in the work of his trade for two years, after which he returned to Mankato, where he continued in the work of his trade until 1880, when he came to Brookings, South Dakota, where, in company with his brother Christ, he opened a harness shop, continuing to be associated with the enterprise until 1887, when he disposed of his interest to his brother and removed to the village of White, in the same county, where he has ever since maintained his home. Here he established a harness shop and in the intervening years has built up a good business.

In politics Mr. Adams has ever given an unqualified allegiance to the Republican party, and he has been prominent as a worker in its ranks since coming to South Dakota, having been a delegate to various party conventions and ever striving to promote the cause. He served for three years as a member of the board of county commissioners, was a member of the board of aldermen of Brookings for eight years, and has served one term on the school board of the village of White. He was reared in the faith of the Catholic church, but is not identified with any religious body, being liberal and tolerant in his views. Mr. Adams is one of the prominent and popular members of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in the state, and at the time of this writing is an officer in the grand lodge of the order, to which same he had previously been a delegate many times. He is a member of the encampment of the Odd Fellows and is also affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America. While a resident of Brookings he was for sixteen years president and manager of the First Regimental Band of that city, being an excellent musician. The band accompanied the South Dakota editors on their trip to the National Park, and also played two weeks at the Columbian Exposition at Chicago.

On the 30th of April, 1876, Mr. Adams was united in marriage to Miss Lena Kohl, who was born in St. Paul, Minnesota, being a daughter of John and Gertrude Kohl, both of whom were born in Germany. To Mr. and Mrs. Adams have been born seven children, all of whom are living except one: J. F. is the subject of an individual sketch appearing on another page of this volume; F. C. died at the age of nineteen years; Gertrude is a teacher in the public schools of Brookings county; and Cornelius, Walter, Louise and Anthony remain at the parental home.

R. H. HOLDEN, of White, Brookings county, is a native of the Badger state, having been born in Sparta, Monroe county, Wisconsin, on the 26th of November, 1874, and being a son of Nelson H. and Nettie H. (Stewart) Holden, both of whom were born and reared in the state of New York, where their marriage was solemnized. The father of the subject read law for some time and continued to make his home in the old Empire state until the latter part of 1860, when he removed to Sparta, Wisconsin, where he was for some time a popular teacher in the public schools, eventually becoming superintendent of schools in Monroe county. In the spring of 1879 he came with his family to South Dakota and located on a homestead claim, in Sherman township, Brookings county, being numbered among the first settlers in this section. He continued to reside on this farm for eight years, in the meanwhile accumulating other tracts of land and becoming one of the prosperous farmers of the county. In 1886 he established himself in the banking business in White, opening what was known as the Citizens' Exchange Bank, of whose stock he was the sole owner. In 1898 he reorganized the institution under the name of the Bank of White, and in 1901 it was incorporated as the Farmers' State Bank of White, and converted into the Farmers' National Bank of White, in 1904, he being one of the largest stockholders. He is now a director of the bank and is one of the town's most influential and honored citizens. Of his eight children we enter the following brief record: Almond N. is a teacher in the state school for the deaf and dumb in San Francisco; Mabel is the wife of Arthur H. Kenyon, a successful lawyer of Spokane, Washington; Nellie is the wife of Dr. Henry H. Clark, who is engaged in the practice of his profession in Watertown, South Dakota; Ralph H. is the immediate subject of this sketch; Florence is the wife of Delbert E. Wood, assistant postmaster at Pipestone, Minnesota; and Pearl, Patience and Netta still remain at the parental home.

The subject of this sketch was a lad of five years at the time of his parents' removal to South Dakota, and he was reared to the age of fourteen years on the homestead farm in Brookings county, in the meanwhile attending the district schools. After the family located in White he entered the public schools, being graduated in the high school as a member of the class of 1892. In the following spring he entered the Northern Indiana Normal School and Business University, at Valparaiso, Indiana, where he was graduated in 1895, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He then went to the city of Spokane, Washington, where he began reading law in the office of his brother-in-law, Mr. Kenyon. In October of the following year he returned to White and entered his father's bank, being made cashier at the time of the first reorganization, in 1898, while upon the second reorganization, under the present title, he became a stockholder in the institution, in which he acted as assistant cashier until April, 1902, when he was elected to his present office of cashier. He has shown marked discrimination and administrative ability and has handled executive duties to the full satisfaction of all concerned. He is the owner of a section of valuable land, located in Oaklake and Sherman townships and also of two or three residence properties in White, having accumulated about fifteen thousand dollars since leaving school and being one of the progressive and public-spirited young business men of the state which has been his home from his boyhood days. In politics Mr. Holden gives an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party, in whose local ranks he has been an active and valued worker, having been a member of the county central committee since 1898 and having been a delegate to several of the state conventions of his party, as well as to the minor conventions. Fraternally he is affiliated with Washington Lodge, No. 111, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is master at the time of this writing.

On the 3d of July, 1902, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Holden to Miss Grace A. West, a daughter of Frank H. West, a prominent citizen of White, and she was summoned into eternal rest only a few months later, her death occurring on the 20th of the following November.

AUBREY LAWRENCE, a member of the well-known law firm of Hall, Lawrence & Roddle, of Brookings, was born in Mineral Point, Wisconsin, on the 13th of June, 1870, and is a son of Philip and Matilda H. (Wilkinson) Lawrence, the former of whom was born in Cornwall, England, while the latter was born in Yorkshire. The father of the subject came to America in 1845 and settled in the town of Mineral Point, Wisconsin, where he served for a number of years as postmaster, while he also conducted a book and stationery store, becoming one of the prominent citizens of the town. He finally removed to Elkader, Iowa, where he became manager of the Clayton County Journal, and later he removed to the city of Milwaukee, where he maintained his home until 1879, when he came as a pioneer to South Dakota, locating in Arlington, Kingsbury county, where he established himself in the general merchandise business, in which he there continued until 1887, when he removed to DeSmet, the capital of that county, where he held the position of cashier of the First National Bank for a number of years. He was clerk of the courts of that county for two terms and also served two terms as judge of probate, while later he was deputy state auditor for four years and assistant secretary of state for an equal length of time. In 1901 he took up his residence in Huron, Beadle county, where he and his wife have since maintained their home and where he is prominently engaged in the real-estate business. Of his two children the subject is the younger, the other, Lulu, having died at the age of eight years. The father of the subject tendered his service in defense of the Union at the outbreak of the Rebellion, enlisting, in 1861, as a member of the Second Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. He was severely wounded in the first battle of Bull Run, but re-enlisted in 1863, and continued in service until the close of the war, having been mustered out as first lieutenant of his company. He is one of the prominent and popular members of the Grand Army of the Republic in South Dakota, and served one term as commander of the order for the state.

Aubrey Lawrence secured his initial educational training in the public schools of Elkader, Iowa, which he attended one year, after which he passed a similar period in the schools of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, whither the family had removed. He was nine years of age at the time of his parents' removal to Arlington, South Dakota, and there he prosecuted the work of the public schools until 1884, when he was matriculated in the State Agricultural College, at Brookings, where he completed a four-years course, being graduated as a member of the class of 1888, with honors, and receiving the degree of Bachelor of Science. During the time he was in college he also devoted considerable attention to the reading of law, having as his preceptor J. O. Andrews, of Brookings, and after leaving college he went to DeSmet and there entered the office of James F. Watson, with whom he continued his technical reading until 1889, when he was admitted to the bar, at Brookings. Thereafter he was for a short time associated in practice with his former preceptor, Mr. Watson, after which he removed to Sumas City, Washington, in 1890, and there continued the practice of his profession until 1894. In 1891 he was appointed United States court commissioner for the northern district of Washington, and at the age of twenty-one years was elected mayor of Sumas City, serving three terms. In 1894 he removed to New Whatcom, Washington, where he was engaged in practice until 1896, becoming one of the leading lawyers of that section of the state, and also being secretary of the Republican county central committee for two years. In May, 1896, Mr. Lawrence returned to South Dakota and located in Castlewood, Hamlin county, where he engaged in practice, while from 1898 until 1900 he was acting state's attorney of the county, being elected to the office in the latter year, without opposition, while he was re-elected in 1902. May 1, 1903, he resigned the office and came to Brookings, where he entered into a professional partnership with Messrs. Philo Hall and W. H. Roddle, with whom he has since been associated in practice, under the firm name noted in the opening paragraph of this article. In politics he has ever accorded a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, and has been active in promoting its cause. He was secretary of the Republican central committee of Hamlin county in 1896 and 1898, and was also president of the McKinley Club of Castlewood during the campaign of 1896. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America.

On the 12th of November, 1890, Mr. Lawrence was united in marriage to Miss Laura Remington, who was born in Manston, Wisconsin, being a daughter of Captain William N. Remington, who served throughout the war of the Rebellion, having been captain of his company in the Sixth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. In 1880 the Captain came with his family to DeSmet, South Dakota, where his wife still resides. Mr. Remington having died in 1886. Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence have one child, Raymond Aubrey, who was born on the 20th of March, 1892.

NIELS EBBESEN HANSEN, professor of horticulture in the South Dakota Agricultural College, at Brookings, and horticulturist at the government experiment station, was born near Ribe, Denmark, on the 4th of January, 1866, being the youngest child and only son of Andrew and Bodil (Midtgaardt) Hansen. The family came to America in the autumn of 1873, and the first three years were passed in the states of New York and New Jersey. The father was a fresco artist, of sturdy Danish farmer ancestry. In 1876 they removed to Des Moines, Iowa, in whose public schools the subject prosecuted his educational work, having entered the high school in East Des Moines in 1879 and having there been a student for two years. Something over two and one-half years were spent as assistant in the office of the secretary of state under appointment of Hon. J. A. T. Hull, of Des Moines, while secretary, beginning in the fall of 1881, which helped in preparations for college. In 1887 he was graduated in the Iowa Agricultural College, at Ames, and during his collegiate course he made a specialty of study and investigation and experimentation in horticulture, under Professor J. L. Budd, who attained national distinction and reputation through his effective efforts in introducing Russian fruits, trees and shrubs and in originating new varieties of fruit. The four years immediately succeeding his graduation Professor Hansen spent in practical work in two of the leading commercial nurseries of Iowa, at Atlantic and Des Moines, respectively, and he resigned his position in this connection in the autumn of 1891, when he returned to his alma mater, the Iowa Agricultural College, where he became assistant professor of horticulture under Professor Budd, remaining thus engaged for four years and then resigning to accept his present position, in September, 1895. Four months of the summer and autumn of 1894 were devoted to a study of horticulture in eight countries of Europe, including Germany, Russia, England, Denmark, Sweden, Austria, France and Belgium, while for four years he served as assistant secretary of the Iowa State Horticultural Society. Under commission from Hon. James Wilson, secretary of agriculture of the United States, Professor Hansen was absent from June, 1897, to March, 1898, on a ten-months tour of exploration, securing new seeds and plants for the said department, and in this connection he visited Russia, Siberia, the Crimea, Transcaucasia, Turcomania and other parts of Russian Turkestan and western China. About five carloads of products were obtained, and some of the new seeds thus introduced by the subject have proved so valuable that larger lots have since been imported to meet the demands, notably the Turkestan alfalfa. The two-thousand-mile overland journey made in Asia by the Professor included a trip of thirteen hundred miles in a wagon and seven hundred in a sleigh, and in the connection he encountered several tussles with the strenuous and turbulent Siberian blizzards, in his endeavor to return home by way of Omsk, on the Siberian Railway. At one time he was fully one thousand miles from the nearest railroad, while Kuldja, in western China, was the most eastern point reached. This adventure-some journey showed the remarkable powers of endurance of the young explorer, while the danger involved was the last thing considered by him.

Professor Hansen is an honorary life member of the Minnesota State Horticultural Society and of many other associations in the line of his profession, and he frequently attends their sessions. He is secretary of the plant section of the American Breeders' Association and secretary of the South Dakota State Horticultural Society. He has written many bulletins and papers and contributes much to the agricultural press. In 1890 he wrote and published a "Handbook of Fruit Culture and Tree Planting for the Northwestern States," the same being published in the Danish-Norwegian language. In 1902-3 he assisted Professor Budd in preparing the "American Horticultural Manual," published by John Wiley & Sons, of New York.

The present collection of trees and shrubs at the South Dakota Agricultural College grounds is very extensive and is constantly being enlarged by importations and exchanges. Many novelties are propagated and sent out for trial. The chief feature of the experimental work is the originating of new varieties of fruit, especially from the native Dakota species by hybridizing and by selection from large numbers. At present the one-quarter of a million fruit seedlings on the station grounds is second in number only to that grown by Luther Burbank, of California, who has the largest fruit-breeding establishment in the world. The object of Professor Hansen's work in this direction is to obtain hardy and choice fruits for the northwest, better adapted to this region than any now in cultivation. Already many valuable varieties have been bred up from the native species. In short, the work means the creation of a new pomology.

At La Crosse, Wisconsin, on the 16th of November, 1898, was solemnized the marriage of Professor Hansen to Miss Emma Elise Pammel, who is likewise a graduate of the Iowa Agricultural College. Two children, Eva and Carl, have come to bless their home. Mrs. Hansen was born in La Crosse, Wisconsin, and is a daughter of Louis and Sophia (Freise) Pammel. Professor Hansen is a Lutheran in his religious faith, and fraternally is a Royal Arch Mason, while both he and his wife are affiliated with the adjunct organization, the Order of the Eastern Star. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Republican party.

GEORGE N. BREED, one of the editors and publishers of the Brookings Register, was born in Little Grant, Grant county, Wisconsin, on the 16th of October, 1857, being a son of Samuel S. and Maria J. (Thurston) Breed, the former of whom was born in the state of New York and the latter in Pennsylvania. The Breed family is of staunch English lineage and the name is one which has been identified with the annals of American history from the early colonial epoch, while it should be noted in the connection that the paternal great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch was the owner of Breed's hill, on which was fought the battle of Bunker Hill, the latter name having been applied at a later period. Samuel S. Breed was reared and educated in the old Empire state, where he continued to be identified with agricultural pursuits until late in the 'forties, when he removed with his family to Jo Daviess county, Illinois, having in the meanwhile been married to Miss Thurston, who came of English and German descent. To the pioneer state of Illinois he was also accompanied by his father and brothers, and all began improving farms in the county mentioned, being numbered among its earliest settlers. There the father of the subject remained until the early 'fifties, when he removed to Grant county, Wisconsin, where he continued to devote his attention to agriculture until his death, which occurred in 1866, while his wife long survived him, her death occurring in the year 1900, at the age of seventy-nine years. Mr. Breed was a man of sterling character and ever held the confidence and esteem of his fellow men. He served as county commissioner of Grant county about eight years and was also chairman of the board of education of his district during that time. Of his seven children four died in early childhood. Byron W., who served with honor and loyalty as a soldier in the Union army in the war of the Rebellion, is now a successful farmer and stock grower of Moody county, South Dakota. Sarah J., who became the wife of William M. Leighton, of Denver, Colorado, is dead. George N., the subject of this sketch, is the youngest of the three children who lived to attain years of maturity. William M. Leighton, Jr., son of the subject's sister, has been reared in the home of Mr. Breed, while he also received the care and guidance of his maternal grandmother until the time of her demise.

George N. Breed attended the district school in the vicinity of the homestead farm in Grant county, Wisconsin, until the death of his father, and he then accompanied his mother on her removal to Bloomington, Wisconsin, where he continued to attend the public schools until he was fifteen years of age. He then entered the office of the Lancaster Advocate, at Lancaster, Wisconsin, where he gained his initial experience in the "art preservative of all arts." The paper mentioned was an advocate of the cause of Horace Greeley at the time he was running for the presidency, and when defeat ensued the paper ceased publication, and thus Mr. Breed removed to Plattville, Wisconsin, to finish his trade, where he remained until 1877, becoming a skilled compositor and familiarizing himself with the various details of the newspaper and printing business. Thereafter he was employed in offices at Galesburg, Illinois, and River Falls and Broadhead, Wisconsin, from which latter point he came to Brookings, South Dakota, in October, 1880, becoming one of the pioneers of the town, which had at the time a population of not more than two hundred persons. Here he began the publication of the Brookings Sentinel, disposing of the plant and business in 1883 and thereafter working at his trade until the spring of 1890, when he became telegraph editor of the News, at Aberdeen, this state. In June, 1890, he became associated with Paul Dutcher and returned to Brookings where they began publishing the Brookings Register and in 1891 purchased the plant and business of the Brookings Sentinel, which they forthwith merged into the Brookings Register, to whose publication they have since given their attention, having made it one of the best papers of the sort in the state. It is a six-column quarto and is issued on Thursday of each week, while its standard is a high one, both in point of editorial makeup and letter press. The office is well equipped and the Register has been made a success under the control of the gentlemen mentioned, the firm name being Dutcher & Breed. Mr. Breed, in point of consecutive service, is one of the oldest newspaper men in the state, while he has witnessed the growth and substantial advancement of Brookings and the county from the time of inception. He has been specially insistent in making the paper an exponent of local interests and of the cause of the Republican party, of whose principles he has ever been a staunch advocate, though he has neither held nor sought political office. He has been very prominent in advocating the ownership of public utilities in his home city, and he takes marked satisfaction in reverting to the fact that he was one of the first to urge that Brookings, as a municipality, should own its own electric-light, telephone and water-works systems, and the plan as adopted has proved the wisdom of his admonition, for the two plants are paying the expense of operation and are giving to the citizens a most effective and economical service. He is a zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and was the second superintendent of the first Sunday school ever organized in Brookings, this being at a time when there was but the one church organization in the town. He is a charter member of Brookings Lodge, No. 40, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is noble grand at the time of this writing, while he is also identified with the local organizations of the Modern Woodmen of America and the Ancient Order of United Workmen, in the latter of which he was formerly incumbent of the office of financier. He has been a member of the Brookings Cornet Band for the past twenty years, still continuing to give his services in the connection in order that the organization may be kept intact and in good order.

On the 15th of November, 1882, Mr. Breed was united in marriage to Miss Eva J. Thomas, who was born in Hazel Green, Grant county, Wisconsin, being a daughter of Thomas and Caroline Thomas, both of whom were born in England, whence they came to Wisconsin in an early day. Of the three children born to Mr. and Mrs. Breed one died in infancy, while the two surviving are Ray, who was born on the 6th of September, 1883, and Lillian, who was born on the 14th of May, 1890, and who is now attending the public schools of Brookings, having distinctive talent as an elocutionary reader, while her brother has shown marked ability in drawing and other art work.

O. C. DOKKEN, cashier of the Farmers' Exchange Bank at Toronto, Deuel county, was born in Eidsvold, Norway, in 1858. In 1869 he immigrated with his parents to the United States, where they took up their residence at Rushford, Minnesota, where they remained till 1873, when the family moved west and came to what is now the state of South Dakota, when they took a homestead near Fish Lake, Deuel county, being among the first settlers in that part of the state. After spending his youth on his father's farm in Deuel county, Mr. Dokken entered the normal school at Mankato, Minnesota, in 1882, and graduated from that institution as a member of the class of 1887. Before, as well as after finishing his course at the normal, he turned his attention to teaching, and in the fall of 1888 was elected to the office of superintendent of schools of Deuel county, which position he occupied for six years. Thereafter he was for seven or eight years engaged in the general merchandise business in Toronto and in 1902 he was made incumbent of his present position, that of cashier of the Farmers' Exchange Bank. In politics Mr. Dokken is Republican. He is married and has a family of four children.

ELMER E. RODABAUGH, junior member of the well-known law firm of Orr & Rodabaugh, of Sioux Falls, who likewise maintains an office in Garretson, comes of staunch old Pennsylvania German stock, and the name which he bears has been for several generations identified with the annals of the old Keystone state of the Union. He was born on a farm in Lycoming county, that state, on the 18th of September, 1862, and is a son of Benjamin F. and Martha W. Rodabaugh, both of whom were likewise born and reared in that county, where the father is engaged in agricultural pursuits, being one of the representative citizens of this section. Our subject received his more rudimentary educational discipline in the public schools of his native county, and thereafter continued his studies in the Central State Normal School, at Lockhaven, while in 1883 he was matriculated in the University of Pennsylvania, where he followed the scientific course, being a student in that well-known institution for a period of three years. In 1882 he began teaching in the schools of Pennsylvania, and thereafter continued to follow the pedagogic profession at intervals during a period of eighteen years, meeting with marked success in the educational field. In 1890 he came to South Dakota and took up his residence in Sioux Falls, and here engaged in reading law under the preceptorship of Alpha F. Orr, making rapid advancement in his studies, and being admitted to the bar of the state in 1895, since which time he has been successfully established in practice in Sioux Falls, having been associated with Mr. Orr, under the firm name of Orr & Rodabaugh, since 1895, while the firm controls a large and representative business, both as advocates and counselors, maintaining also an office in Garretson, this county, as previously noted. Mr. Rodabaugh is an uncompromising Republican in his political proclivities, and takes an active part in party work in a local sense. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, in which he is affiliated with Unity Lodge, No. 130, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, while he also holds membership in Garretson Lodge, No. 74, Ancient Order of United Workmen. Though not a member of any religious body he has a deep reverence for the spiritual verities and his views are perhaps most nearly in harmony with the tenets of the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church. It should be noted in passing that the subject tendered his services to the government at the time of the Spanish-American war, but was rejected by reason of overweight.

On the 12th of November, 1898, at Sioux Falls, South Dakota, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Rodabaugh to Miss Lydia Bailey, who was born in Lancaster, New York, on the 28th of October, 1862, being a daughter of Samuel and Julia Bailey, who are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Rodabaugh have no children.

GEORGE P. WALDRON.—An enumeration of those sterling pioneers of the territory of Dakota and state of South Dakota who won honor and public distinction for themselves and honored the state to which they belonged, would be signally incomplete were there failure to make prominent reference to George Prentiss Waldron, who identified himself with the history of what is now South Dakota nearly a half century ago, when it was on the very border of civilization, and who became a most conspicuous figure in its early history. He held distinctive precedence as an able lawyer, was distinctively a man of affairs and one who wielded a wide influence. A strong mentality, an invincible courage, a most determined individuality so entered into his makeup as to render him a natural leader of men and director of opinion, and his name merits a place high on the roll of those who have figured as founders and builders of the commonwealth of South Dakota.

George P. Waldron, the son of Jeremiah and Mary (Scott) Waldron, was born in the historic old town of Farmington, New Hampshire, on the 21st of September, 1821, and in its schools received his early educational training, while later he completed a course of study in the law department of Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1843. Shortly afterward he located in Lowell, Massachusetts, where he engaged in the practice of his profession and where he remained until 1854, having in the meanwhile become interested in the shipping of lumber to California, by way of Cape Horn. He was a personal friend of General Benjamin F. Butler, General Wilson, Charles Sumner and other eminent men of New England. In 1857 he came to the west and numbered himself among the pioneers of Dubuque, Iowa, where he engaged in the practice of his profession and also became secretary and treasurer of the Western Land and Townsite Company, whose headquarters were in that city, while Senator William B. Allison and other prominent men of the state were associated with him in this company, which had important influence for a number of years in forwarding the development of the industries of the state. In 1859 he came with his family to South Dakota and located in a diminutive settlement which had been established on the site of the present beautiful city of Sioux Falls. During the Indian troubles of 1862 the family sought safety by fleeing to Yankton, and there established a home. Mr. Waldron having been appointed provost marshal by President Lincoln and having served as such during the Civil war. He was a member of the first territorial legislature and in the same was the framer of the exemption law, while he was otherwise a prominent figure in public affairs in the territory. After the war he devoted his attention to farming until his removal to Fort Pierre in 1877, where he held the position of United States court commissioner until Stanley county was organized, when he was elected probate judge. He remained a resident of Fort Pierre until his death, which occurred August 26, 1896, while his devoted wife passed away in 1884. Their three children are all yet living, and one still resides in South Dakota.

In the year 1849 Judge Waldron was united in marriage to Miss Lydia E. Jones, daughter of Elijah and Mary (Roberts) Jones, of his native town of Farmington, New Hampshire, where she was born and reared, and she preceded him into eternal rest, her death occurring at Fort Pierre on the 8th of May, 1884. Of their children we enter the following brief record: Charles W. is one of the substantial farmers and stock growers of Stanley county and one of its honored pioneers; Lulu P. is the wife of George R. Pearsons, of Fort Dodge, Iowa; and Augusta is the wife of G. A. Bickle, of Humboldt, Iowa.

ALBERT EUGENE THROOP, of Brookings, was born in Hillsdale county, Michigan, on the 20th of July, 1857, being a son of Erastus D. and Angeline (Salisbury) Throop. His father was born in Canada, and when he was twelve years of age he accompanied his parents on their removal to the state of New York, where he was reared to maturity. He finally removed to Michigan, settling in Hillsdale county, where he was married. The family there continued to reside until the subject of this sketch was six years of age, when they removed to Montcalm county, that state, where the father turned his attention to the lumbering business, in which he continued to be engaged until his death, which occurred in about 1900. When he took up his abode in Montcalm county the nearest railroad point was forty miles distant and he settled in the midst of the primitive wilds, opening a lumber camp and giving employment to a large number of men. The mother died in Chicago, in 1898, while there for a visit. Erastus Throop was in fair circumstances at the time of his death, but the subject never took any part of the estate, having been dependent upon his own efforts from his childhood and having contributed to the support of the other members of the family until after he had attained his legal majority. In the family were seven children: Ella is the wife of Orlando Scott, of Montcalm county, Michigan; Albert E. is the subject of this sketch; D. L. was killed in Colorado; Volma D. resides on the old homestead farm in Michigan; Alta became the wife of Dr. Sweet, of Crystal Lake, Michigan, and is now deceased; Page still resides in Montcalm county, that state; Maude is the wife of a Mr. Proctor, of Chicago. Owing to the exigencies and conditions of time and place the subject received very limited educational advantages in his childhood, having had no schooling after attaining the age of nine years. His alert and receptive mind has, however, enabled him to make good this handicap, and through the varied experiences of a busy and useful life and through personal application he has rounded out his fund of knowledge and is a man of broad information. At the age of nine years he began to assist his mother in cooking for the workmen, and he continued to be thus employed for three years. At the age of thirteen he was found driving team and buying supplies for the lumber camp, and he continued to give the major part of his time and labor to his father until he was twenty-two years of age. At the age of seventeen he had charge of one of his father's camps, and for fifteen years he ran logs on the pine river and engaged in fishing, while he was employed in the lumber woods for a full score of years. From the age of twenty-two he began to personally receive the rewards of his labors, and he was united in marriage, at the age of twenty-three, to Miss Charlotte Miller, who was born in the state of New York and a daughter of Samuel Miller, who removed thence to Illinois and finally to Michigan, his wife having died when her daughter (Mrs. Throop) was but seven years of age. The subject considers his marriage as having been an auspicious event in his career, and his wife has proved a devoted and able helpmeet. Her fortitude can scarcely be measured by her avoirdupois, since she weighs but one hundred and ten pounds, while her husband tips the scales at two hundred and eighty-five pounds. At the time of their marriage they had not sufficient resources to provide even the most meager equipment for a home, and the struggle was one which tested the loyalty and affection of the young folk, who grew the stronger through the vicissitudes through which they passed, laboring and hoping side by side. After his marriage Mr. Throop first took a job of cleaning out a ditch, from which labor he received eleven dollars, working eight hours a day. Within a short time he had cleared about three hundred and sixty dollars, and he then purchased a tract of wild land, soon selling therefrom enough timber to pay the purchase price, while at the end of the first year he found himself quite well provided with this world's goods, since he was the owner of a team of horses, a cow, a wagon, forty acres of land and five hundred dollars in money. He forthwith gave evidence of his liberality by loaning three hundred dollars to a friend—the outcome being to him a total loss of the amount. With the remaining two hundred dollars Mr. Throop invested in “plug” horses, which he traded for shingles and fencing, his transactions yielding him a good profit. In 1885 he came to Brookings, South Dakota, for a visit, having at the time about one thousand dollars. He was greatly impressed with the country at that season and decided to cast in his lot with the pioneers of this section. By the time he had purchased a quarter section of land and paid for the same a blizzard swept through the state and caused him to wish that he had remained in Michigan, but time proved that he had made no mistake in his original estimate. For his farm here he paid five hundred dollars in cash and gave in addition his personal note for one hundred dollars. He had as yet erected no dwelling on his place and when he arrived here for permanent settlement he had a little span of disconsolate mules, weighing but nine hundred pounds with the harness on, and, as he facetiously expresses it, “They were so heavily mortgaged that they could not switch their tails.” In the following spring he erected on his farm a shack thirty-two feet in length, sixteen feet wide, and eight feet in height, one end being partitioned off for the use of his team and the other portion being the family home. In the autumn he built a house sixteen by twenty-four feet in dimensions and twelve feet in height, and thus segregated himself from the live stock. He built this house without having a dollar in his possession and without giving security for the material, and when it was finished he was able to pay only twenty-five cents on the dollar in extinguishment of the claims against him, his yield of grain having fallen far short of expectations. He reserved sufficient wheat for bread and for feed for his stock, selling the remainder and from the amount received he invested in three tons of coal and then found that he had only eight dollars left with which to satisfy the claims of his creditors. He then went to them and stated the circumstances, agreeing to divide his remaining cash equally among them and asking for two years in which to make recompense. The amount which was left to be paid the second year was five hundred dollars, and that year his crop of wheat aggregated only eight hundred bushels, which was sold at fifty cents a bushel. The returns represented all he had available to pay his debts, maintain his family and carry on the farm for the ensuing year, so that it may be seen that the outlook was not altogether propitious or gratifying. In the meanwhile, however, Mr. Throop had purchased an old well-drilling apparatus, which in October he took into Lake county and entered vigorously to work constructing wells for the settlers, his services being in such demand that at the end of two months and three days he had saved three hundred and nine dollars. The second time he came home from his work in this line he dropped into his wife's apron five hundred dollars in cash, and her query was to ask him whether or not he had been robbing a bank. From that time forward fortune proved more propitious and success attended his efforts. When he first came to the state he was compelled to sow his grain by hand, having no money with which to purchase farming implements which were practically essential. In the early days it was impossible to secure credit, and in July of the first year of his residence here he found himself with no money, no credit and nothing with which to provide for the daily needs of his family. The last loaf of bread had been used for breakfast, this being on Sunday, and it seemed that no avenue was open to provide more. It chanced that the young men of the neighborhood assembled together for a little sport, and finally a foot race was proposed, our subject and his brother, V. D., having in the meanwhile joined the little assembly. The reward to the victor was to be the sum realized by the contribution of the twenty-five cents each to the purse. The brother of the subject was actually weak for lack of proper food, both having gone hungry for several days, and though the former was naturally fleet of foot he was too weak to enter into the contest, but the subject, who was naturally somewhat corpulent, had been better able to withstand the temporary privation and was in good trim for the race, his only difficulty being that he was unable to produce the twenty-five cents as entry fee. This was kindly supplied by a friend in the company, and realizing what the little fund meant to him and his family, it is needless to say that Mr. Throop girded himself for victory, and he was successful, winning the race by one and one-half laps. The wager was then doubled, as was also the distance to be traversed by the contestants, and again victory crowned the efforts of Mr. Throop, who realized two and one-half dollars from his efforts. He immediately sent his brother to Arlington, where was secured a sack of flour, some codfish and a pound of tea. Mrs. Throop made biscuit and cooked a portion of the fish, and the family enjoyed their meal to a greater extent than could the pampered epicure the most extravagant spread. Profiting by his experiences, Mr. Throop has husbanded his resources and is today the owner of eleven hundred and twenty acres of land, all in one body, and also a quarter section.

The entire tract is well fenced, has two good dwelling houses, good barns and other outbuildings, a fine grove of one hundred soft maple trees and five hundred of ash, and a large number of wells, for which ample provision is made for the live stock and for domestic uses. Mr. Throop continued to reside on the farm until the autumn of 1901, when he removed with his family to the city of Brookings, in order to afford his children the superior educational advantages there offered. From the sale of the stock and grain on his farm prior to removal therefrom he received eleven thousand dollars. Mr. Throop is the owner of two valuable pieces of property in Brookings, and is now living practically retired. In politics he was reared in the Democratic faith, but in bringing to bear his personal judgment he determined that the Republican party was eminently entitled to his support, and he has given to the same an unqualified allegiance, having been an active worker in its cause and wielding an unmistakable influence in the public affairs of his county. Of the three children of Mr. and Mrs. Throop we record that Lottie, who is now nineteen years of age, has completed the business course in the State Agricultural College, and it is her intention to now complete the full literary course in the same college; Ross, aged sixteen; and V. D., aged fifteen, are both attending the high school at Brookings.

Later.—Since the foregoing sketch was put in type, Mr. Throop's death has occurred, on February 5, 1904, after an illness of but five days, his remains being laid to rest in Arlington (South Dakota) cemetery.

CHARLES F. ALLEN, of Brookings, was born on March 4, 1869, at Chatfield, Minnesota. He attended the schools of this town until he was thirteen years of age, when he entered the office of the Chatfield Democrat, as an apprentice, working there a couple of years except for one summer, when he worked on a farm. He went to Rochester, Minnesota, in the winter of 1886, and entered the employ of Blakely & Son as foreman of the Record and Union office, where he remained until December, 1899. At that time he went to Brookings and bought the Brookings County Press from George W. Hopp, taking possession on the first of January, 1890. He is still publishing the Press, which has grown and developed into one of the best and strongest weekly papers in South Dakota, occupying what is conceded to be the finest country newspaper office building in the Northwest.

Mr. Allen was married on September 25, 1888, to Miss Julia Garvey, at Rochester, Minnesota, and they have three children, all girls, namely: Norma, aged thirteen; Doris, aged ten; and Mildred, aged six.

Mr. Allen is a member of the South Dakota Press Association, of which organization he has been president. He is also a member of the Elks, Odd Fellows, Modern Woodmen and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. On December 19, 1903, he was appointed by President Roosevelt as postmaster at Brookings. He has served as alderman and city clerk at Brookings, and has been an enterprising citizen, doing much for the substantial growth of the city.

PAUL DUTCHER, senior member of the firm of Dutcher & Breed, editors and publishers of the Brookings Register, is a native of the Badger state, having been born in Stoughton, Dane county, Wisconsin, on the 9th of August, 1864, and being a son of Curtis E. and Lucinda C. (Mattice) Dutcher, the former of whom was born in May, 1831, and the latter on the 25th of September of the same year. The father of the subject stood representative of one of the early pioneer families of the state of Michigan, his birth having occurred in Bloomfield, Oakland county, that state, while he was a son of William Dutcher, who was born in the state of New York, being of sturdy Holland Dutch stock. Curtis E. Dutcher was reared to manhood in Michigan and as a young man he adopted a seafaring life, becoming a sailor before the mast and visiting all the important ports of the globe. He continued to follow the sea until his marriage, which was solemnized in 1861, and he then located in Stoughton, Wisconsin, where he engaged in the mercantile business, later removing to Lone Rock, that state, where he continued in the same line of enterprise for a time, finally removing thence to Waterloo, Wisconsin, where he passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring on the 15th of April, 1872. His widow, who was born in the state of New York, is now residing in Aberdeen, South Dakota. Of her two children, the younger is the subject of this sketch, while his brother, Ward, is superintendent of the job department of the Daily News office in Aberdeen, this state.

Paul Dutcher secured his early educational discipline in the public schools of Waterloo, Wisconsin, where he continued his studies until he was about fourteen years of age, after which he passed one year in the high school at Lake Mills, that state, where his mother was at the time teaching, having followed this vocation for many years and having received her education in a ladies' seminary at Schoolcraft, Michigan. At the age of about ten years the subject began to depend, to a certain extent, upon his own resources, since he was but nine years of age at the time of his father's death. He worked on farms and in various other capacities until he was fourteen years of age, when he accompanied his mother to the city of Milwaukee, where his elder brother was then located. There he served his novitiate in the "art preservative," securing a position in the office of the Evening Wisconsin, and there learning the printer's trade, remaining there employed for a period of five years, at the expiration of which he returned to Waterloo, that state, where he and his brother effected the purchase of the Waterloo Journal, the publication of which they continued for the ensuing two years.

In August, 1884, the subject came to South Dakota and located in Clark county, where he was employed in the office of the Clark Pilot for a brief interval, at the expiration of which he purchased the Raymond Gazette, at Raymond,

Clark county, successfully publishing the same for five years. He then removed to Aberdeen and took a position in the office of the Daily News. Six months later he came to Brookings, and on the 1st of June, 1890, he established the Brookings Register, with the publication of which he has since been identified. In the same year he became associated with George N. Breed in the purchase of the Brookings Sentinel, which they consolidated with the Register, and they have since been associated in the conducting of the enterprise, having made the paper a particularly successful one and developed the same into one of the best papers in the state. The Register is staunchly Republican in its political policy and is an appreciated exponent of local interests in all lines. The firm began operations upon a most modest scale, and they now have one of the best equipped newspaper plants to be found in any county seat town in the state, while the job department is maintained at an equal standard of excellence. Mr. Dutcher has been a member of the South Dakota Press Association from the time of its organization until within the past few years, having identified himself with the same in 1884, prior to the admission of the state to the Union. In the Masonic fraternity he has made the circle of the York-rite degrees, being identified with the lodge, chapter, council and commandery in Brookings, as well as the chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star, and he has taken a deep interest in the affairs of this time-honored fraternity, being past master of his lodge at the time of this writing, while in 1903 he served as grand steward of the grand lodge of the state. He is also a member of the local lodge of the Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Dutcher has been an uncompromising advocate of the principles of the Republican party from the time of attaining the right of franchise. He served four years as aide-de-camp on the staff of Governor Seldon, with the rank of colonel, and in 1895 he was assistant chief clerk of the house of representatives in the legislature of the state. He and his family attend the Presbyterian church, of whose board of trustees he was chairman for a period of six years. They have an attractive residence in Brookings and the same is a favorite rendezvous for their wide circle of friends, the family being prominent in the social life of the community. Mr. Dutcher has been practically dependent upon his own resources from the early age of nine years, and on this score it is gratifying to note the distinctive success he has attained in temporal affairs. Of his cherished and devoted mother, who has now attained the venerable age of more than three score years and ten, it may further be said that she came of staunch old Knickerbocker stock. Her father, Lawrence B. Mattice, was born at Middleburg, Schoharie county, and her mother, whose maiden name was Bouck, was a relative of Governor Bouck, who was a prominent figure in the early history of the Empire state.

On the 15th of June, 1885, Mr. Dutcher was united in marriage to Miss Susan M. Adams, a daughter of Hon. Mic Adams, of Columbus, Wisconsin, an honored pioneer of that state and a man of prominence and influence in public affairs. Mr. and Mrs. Dutcher are the parents of two children, namely: Raymond A., who was born on the 28th of March, 1886, and who is now a student in the State Agricultural College, in Brookings; and Gladys Pauline, who was born on the 25th of August, 1892, being now a student in the public schools.

HANS H. KORSTAD, the able editor of the Individual, published at Brookings, was born in Valders, Norway, on the 11th of July, 1864, and is a son of Helge and Siegrid (Lommen) Korstad, the former of whom was engaged in teaching in the schools of his native land for a number of years, being a man of high intellectuality. In 1870 he emigrated with his family to America and located in Lyon county, Iowa, where he engaged in teaching in a Norwegian settlement, and also entered claims to a homestead, to whose improvement and cultivation he gave his attention, in connection with his other vocation. In 1878 he came to Brookings, South Dakota, securing land in this vicinity and devoting the balance of his days to farming. He died in 1897, and his widow still resides on the homestead farm, which comprises a half section of valuable land. In the family are seven children, all of whom are living, namely: Ole, who resides on the home farm; Hans H., who is the immediate subject of this sketch; Peter, who is likewise a farmer of this county; Tollef, who is a resident of Alberta, Canada; John, who is associated in the management of the old homestead; Belle, who is the wife of Rev. Nels Jacobson, of Claremont, this state; and Mary, who remains with her mother, who has now attained the venerable age of seventy-five years, being a devoted member of the Lutheran church, as was also her husband.

Hans H. Korstad was but six years of age at the time of his parents' immigration to the United States, and at the age of eight years he became a student in the public schools of Lyons county, Iowa, having previously attended the Norwegian schools. He continued to there continue his educational work until the removal of the family to Dakota, where at that time educational advantages were most meagre, as the great territory, as yet undivided, was practically on the frontier of civilization. The town of Brookings had not yet been established and no railroads penetrated the territory. During the first few years after coming to what is now the favored and prosperous state of South Dakota, the subject of this sketch found his portion to be that of arduous and consecutive toil, while he had no opportunity to continue his education. Finally a school was established in Brookings, and he attended the same until he had attained the age of twenty years, when he entered the State Agricultural College, at this place, where he completed the general course in 1889, having fully profited by the opportunities there afforded. During 1890-91 he was engaged in teaching and then turned his attention to farming, in which he continued until the autumn of 1896, when he disposed of his land and came to Brookings, where he became associated with Stacy A. Cochran in the purchase of the plant and business of the paper known as the Individual, whose publication they have since continued, our subject being editor and having made the paper an able exponent of local interests. It is issued on Thursday of each week and is non-partisan in politics. The paper has gained distinctive popularity, having a circulation of about one thousand at the time of this writing, while additions to the list of subscribers are being made each week. Mr. Korstad is also the owner of a quarter section of valuable land near Pierre, while he owns his attractive residence in Brookings and also the building in which the office of the paper is located. In politics the subject has given his support to the Populist party, while he is quite in sympathy with the socialistic movement in its higher and legitimate form. He and his wife are members of the Lutheran church, and fraternally he is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 22d of October, 1899, Mr. Korstad was united in marriage to Miss Dorothea E. Skorr, who was born in Norway, being a daughter of Elias Skorr. Her mother died in Norway, and when Mrs. Korstad was about sixteen years of age she came alone to the United States, where she joined her brother. Her father came to America in 1902 and died at the home of his son, Ole, of Bruce, South Dakota, on the 3d of September, 1901, at the age of seventy-one years. Mr. and Mrs. Korstad have one son, Elvin H., who was born on the 22d of July, 1900.

CHARLES BRYAN BILLINGHURST was born at Juneau, Dodge county, Wisconsin, on the 17th of April, 1854, and is a son of Charles and Hannah (Barber) Billingshurst, his father being a lawyer by profession. He is a scion of a family of distinctive pioneers, the original American ancestors having located in New England in the colonial epoch, while his paternal great-grandfather was a soldier in the Revolution. His grandfather and father were numbered among the earliest settlers in Dodge county, Wisconsin, where they took up their abode in the territorial days and long before the advent of railroads. Prompted perhaps by inherent pioneer instinct, the subject himself came to Spink county, Dakota territory, in the early days. He attended the common schools of his native town until he had attained the age of twelve years, when, in 1866, he accompanied his parents to Horicon, in the same county, where he completed the curriculum of the village schools, supplementing this by a course of study in the Spencerian Business College, in the city of Milwaukee. He was an ordinarily active boy, but not precocious, being devoted to swimming in Rock river during the summer season and to skating in the winter, varying the latter amusement by occasionally breaking through the ice in dangerous places. He early learned to milk the family cow and to groom the horse, while his good mother shrewdly encouraged him to effort and prompted him to do many domestic chores and to learn how to use his hands by assuring him that there was not a lazy hair in his head. In short, he was just a boy, with all that the name implies. His first work after leaving school was to paint a foundry building for the firm of Van Brunt & Barber, seeding manufacturers at Horicon, and he then became assistant bookkeeper and finally head bookkeeper for the firm, as well as cashier and eventually a traveling salesman for the concern, which he represented in this capacity in Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska and Dakota territory. In 1882 he took up his permanent residence in what is now the state of South Dakota, arriving in Ashton, Spink county, on the 28th of February. Here he opened a bank and engaged also in the real-estate business. He was named as one of the incorporators of the city of Ashton by legislative enactment and was one of its early mayors. In 1886 he was joined by his brother, William S., and they were associated in business, under the firm name of Billingshurst Brothers. In 1899 he removed from Ashton to Pierre, and in the capital city purchased a publishing business, incorporating the enterprise under the title of the State Publishing Company, Mr. Billingshurst having since been the president and treasurer of the same. In November, 1903, he established in Pierre the Daily and Weekly Dakotan. His company published the supreme court reports, session laws and statutes of the state known as Revised Code of 1903. He is an occasional writer for various publications, being the first and only one to draw up a historical sketch of the fiscal affairs of South Dakota, showing state expenditures, assessed valuations, bonding operations and debt per capita annually since the admission of the state to the Union, and these contributions are of great contemporary and permanent value. In the same are also included schedules of all state institutions and of all school and state lands. His fiscal articles continue to be in wide use for reference purposes, recourse being had to the same by state officials and by other citizens interested in the finances and endowments of the state. He has also contributed valuable articles touching the history of Spink county.

At Ashton, Spink county, on the 19th of May, 1887, Mr. Billingshurst was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Bowman, daughter of Hon. Samuel W. Bowman, who settled in Spink county as a pioneer in 1879, becoming one of its most honored and influential citizens. Mr. and Mrs. Billingshurst have two children, Lida, born February 11, 1890, and Florence, born March 10, 1895.

JOHN W. LAUGHLIN, sheriff of Hughes county, and also deputy United States marshal, was born in the vicinity of Mount Pulaski, Logan county, Illinois, on the 2d of January, 1860, and is a son of Robert H. and Susie (Jackson) Laughlin, the former of whom was born in Union county, Ohio, and the latter in Illinois. The Laughlin family have made an enviable record for loyalty and patriotism since its founding in America in the latter portion of the sixteenth century. The original progenitor in the new world was Patrick Laughlin, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, who came to America on a French vessel in 1597, landing in St. Augustine, Florida, and the subject of this sketch has a complete record of all his descendants down to the present time, the work having been carefully and admirably compiled by one of said lineal descendants. The paternal great-grandfather of Sheriff Laughlin was a valiant soldier in the Continental line during the war of the Revolution, having been with Washington at Valley Forge, and his son John C., who was born in Pennsylvania, was the grandfather of the subject and was an active participant in the war of 1812. Three of the latter's sons ably upheld the military prestige of the family during the Civil war, and one of the number was the father of Sheriff Laughlin. It should be noted in the connection that said Robert H. Laughlin was the first man to enlist in Logan county, Illinois, after the outbreak of the Rebellion. He became a member of Company H, One Hundred and Sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in which he served for three years and six months. He became a prosperous farmer of Logan county.

John W. Laughlin was reared on the old homestead farm in Logan county, Illinois, and secured his early education in the public schools. He continued to be associated in the management of the home place until 1883, when he cast in his lot with the pioneers of Hughes county, South Dakota. He took up government land in Byron township, and there passed the first seven years of his residence in the state, improving the property and being still the owner of a valuable farm of three hundred and twenty acres. Upon leaving his ranch he removed to the village of Blunt, where he became identified with the raising and training of high-grade horses, having owned some of the best standard-bred stock in this section of the state. In May, 1898, at the time of the organization of the well-known regiment designated as Grigsby's Rough Riders, he enlisted as a member of Troop E, and was mustered into the United States service as second lieutenant, while later he was promoted first lieutenant. His command proceeded to Chickamauga Park, where it remained for four and one-half months, its services not being demanded in the active military operations of the war with Spain. A previously published article has said of Mr. Laughlin in the connection that upon receiving his commission as first lieutenant he "Honored the office by uncomplaining, intelligent and loyal service at a time when sickness, hardship and dull routine best tested the soldier's mettle."

Concerning his official service in Hughes county we cannot do better than to quote farther from the same appreciative article published in the Weekly Capital Journal of February 20, 1902: "The fact that Mr. Laughlin was elected to the office of sheriff in 1900—an office most hotly contested in both primary and general elections—is proof of the capacity and worth which secured his appointment as deputy United States marshal in 1901, and testifies to the respect in which his large circle of acquaintances hold him as an honorable, capable and courageous man. Socially he is a good fellow and politically he is an unswerving Republican who will work days and sit up nights to further the interests of his party, which he helps by pulling instead of kicking." Mr. Laughlin is a Master Mason and is also identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Sons of Veterans.

On the 7th of April, 1887, Mr. Laughlin was united in marriage to Miss Lizzie Dickey, who was born in Indiana, being a representative of stanch old Kentucky stock. She is a lady of culture and gracious presence, was graduated in the high school of Greensburg, Indiana, and in the Northern Indiana Normal School, in Valparaiso, while in 1892 she was elected county superintendent of schools for Hughes county, South Dakota, giving a most capable administration and remaining incumbent of the office for four years. Mr. and Mrs. Laughlin have one son, Robert Virgil.

REV. HENRY STRAKS, A. M., at present pastor of the Reformed church of Harrison, South Dakota, was born of pioneer Dutch parents in a rude cabin in a clearing near Waupun, Wisconsin, on February 13, 1853. His father, John Straks, elder for over fifty years in the Reformed church of Alto, Wisconsin, came to America in 1846 and his mother, Johanna Van Wechel, came in 1848. Henry S. received his common-school education in the common schools of Wisconsin and at the same time by private instruction from his pastors, Revs. J. H. Karsten and R. Pieters. Then he attended a parochial school near his home for five years, where he completed an academic course and at the same time aided his teacher as tutor in the same school. In 1873 he became teacher in the same school, and taught very successfully the same pupils that attended with him for years as fellow pupils. Encouraged by his success as a school teacher, his father sent him for three years to the State Normal School at Oshkosh, Wisconsin. He graduated from the elementary department in 1875, and the following year finished the full course so nearly that he concluded to spend his time in teaching the next year. He taught the large village school of his school-boy days successfully for six years, carrying along with his usual work a class in advanced or academic work.

In 1877 the subject was married to Miss Priscilla Neevel, of Alto, Wisconsin, a granddaughter of Rev. G. Baay, the first pastor of his home church. For awhile he was interested at the same time in the mercantile business, at which he spent his spare time during vacation as well as when "school kept," but he soon gave that up. In 1885 he was engaged as principal of the high school of Waupun, Wisconsin, which position he resigned after two years in order to take up his long coveted course in theology to prepare himself for the active work of the Christian ministry. In 1891 he finished a three-years course in the Western Theological Seminary of the Reformed church in America, located at Holland, Michigan. June 21, 1891, he was installed and ordained as pastor of the Second Reformed church of Cleveland, Ohio, which church became very prosperous during his three years' service as almost their first pastor. This charge he resigned in 1894 to accept the pastorate of a larger church and a wider field of usefulness at Maurice, Iowa, which charge he resigned after five years in November, 1898, to become financial secretary and educational agent of an academy of the Reformed church at Orange City, Iowa, then heavily in debt. After clearing away this debt and teaching the mathematical branches the last half year to fill out the year for the principal, Rev. M. Kolyn, who had resigned, he resigned this work to accept the pastorate of the Reformed church of Harrison, South Dakota, August 1, 1901, which church he has served for nearly three years. Mr. Straks was stated clerk of the classis of Iowa for a number of years and is at present member of the board of domestic missions of the Reformed church in America, meeting regularly three times a year in New York city. He is also a member of the board of superintendents of the Western Theological Seminary at Holland, Michigan. For successful work in the gospel ministry and elsewhere the council of Hope College, Holland, Michigan, bestowed on him the degree of Master of Arts in June, 1900. Rev. H. Straks is the father of Rev. John H. Straks, now pastor of the Reformed church of Clymer Hill, Chautauqua county, New York.

SAMUEL WAGNER RUSSELL is a native of Pennsylvania, and paternally is descended from one of the oldest families of New England, tracing his ancestry in an unbroken line to Hon. William Russell, who came to America in 1632 with Lord Seal, and who was one of the founders of Connecticut, as well as one of the first judges of the colony. Later, when the colonies revolted, the Russells espoused the American cause, and a number of the family served with distinction during the Revolution; subsequently they demonstrated their loyalty to the government in the war of 1812, and in the various Indian wars; indeed, the Russells have been represented in every war in which the United States has been engaged, patriotism and love of country being prominent characteristics of the family.

Benjamin S. Russell, father of the subject, was born in Pennsylvania and is living now in Jamestown, North Dakota, being still active in business. Mary Gaskill, wife of Benjamin S. and mother of Samuel W. Russell, and also a native of the Keystone state, departed this life in the year 1891. Samuel Wagner Russell was born September 27, 1857, in Towanda, Bradford county, and received his early education in the schools of his native town, subsequently, in 1871, entering Shattuck School at Faribault, Minnesota. By reason of failing health, however, he was not able to finish his studies; accordingly, in 1873, he quit school and returned home, remaining with his parents until 1877. In that and the following year he took special courses in civil and mining engineering at Lehigh University, Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, but his health again becoming impaired, he laid aside his studies and during the winter of 1878-9 taught school at Chelton Hills, in his native state. The following summer he went to East St. Louis, Illinois, as bookkeeper for the National Stock Yard Bank, of that place, which position he held for three years, resigning at the expiration of that time to go on the cattle range in Nebraska and Montana.

Mr. Russell enjoyed the free out-of-door life on the range until 1887, when he went to El Paso, Texas, where, in partnership with a Mr. Newman, under the firm name of Newman & Russell, he was engaged for five years in the real-estate and brokerage business. Leaving the latter place in 1892, he located at Eddy, New Mexico, where he dealt in real estate, loaned money, etc., until 1896, when he returned to East St. Louis and accepted a position with the National Stock Yard Company, holding the same until the spring of the year following. Severing his connections with the above concern at the time noted, he went to Miles City, Montana, in connection with one of the largest of the live-stock commission firms, and after remaining at that place until December, 1898, came to Deadwood, South Dakota, where, in partnership with certain gentlemen from Montana, he bought the "Uncle Sam Mine," on Elk creek in Lawrence county. Mr. Russell, in 1899, with his partners, organized the Clover Leaf Gold Mining Company, of which he was made vice-president and treasurer, and he still holds these positions, contributing greatly to the success of the enterprise by his energy, executive ability and correct business management. In 1900 he was elected vice-president of the Black Hills Mining Men's Association, of which he was also one of the original organizers, and in December of the same year he took a leading part in organizing the Black Hills Business Men's Club, being chosen its vice-president, which position he has since filled. In addition to the official relations referred to, Mr. Russell at the present time holds the office of first vice-president of the American Mining Congress, a national organization composed of the leading miners and representatives of the largest mining properties in the United States; this high honor, coming to him unsought, is a recognition of his distinguished abilities as a business and a mining man, also a graceful compliment to him as an enterprising, public-spirited man of affairs and accomplished gentleman. Mr. Russell is a master of the profession to which he has devoted so much of his time and attention, and as a practical miner, familiar with all the varied details of the great mining industry, has few equals and no superiors in South Dakota. By his energy and straightforward business course, he has done much in the way of organizing companies and developing valuable mineral properties, and while advancing his own interests in the prosecution of these various enterprises, he has also been instrumental in promoting the prosperity of his association.

Mr. Russell, at the request of the Black Hills Mining Men's Association, accepted the appointment of commissioner to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition from Governor Herreid and when the commissioners organized, in July, 1903, he was elected president and devoted his energies and best abilities to winning success for the state at the St. Louis Exposition.

Mr. Russell is a Republican, but has never entered the arena of partisan politics as an office seeker, having no ambition whatever in that direction, although by nature and training well qualified to fill any public position within the power of the people to bestow. Fraternally he is a thirty-second-degree Mason and in religious matters subscribes to the Episcopal creed, being, with his wife, a consistent member of the church of that name in the city of Deadwood. Mr. Russell has a pleasant and attractive home in Deadwood, his family consisting of himself and wife only. The latter before her marriage, on the 20th of August, 1896, was Miss Mary Logan, of St. Louis, Missouri. Mrs. Russell was born and reared in the latter city and is the daughter of C. C. and Elizabeth (Finigan) Logan, also of St. Louis.

ANTHONY G. TUVE, the able and honored president of Augustana College, at Canton, was born in Fillmore county, Minnesota, on the 21st of January, 1864, and was the youngest of five children. His parents emigrated from Norway to America in the early 'fifties and his father was among the pioneers of Fillmore county, where he engaged in farming and attained a position of independence. In 1868 the family removed to a farm near Decorah, Winneshiek county, Iowa. Reared in a home puritanical in its simplicity and religious devotion, young Anthony early developed a serious turn of mind, characterized by persistent energy and determination. When entering the public schools at the age of eight years, he had been taught to read and memorize in the Norwegian language, but knew practically nothing of English. His inherent energy and alert mentality soon won him front rank in his classes, however, and at the age of thirteen we find him at the height of the country boy's literary ambition—presiding over the district debating society. After completing the course in the district school he continued his studies for three years in the Decorah Institute, conducted by the late Professor John Breckenridge, a teacher of more than local reputation. The ensuing three years were devoted to teaching in the district schools and completing a course in a business college. After completing a course in pedagogics, Professor Tuve was elected principal of the village schools of Ridgeway, Iowa, where he did a most successful work and attained distinctive popularity. After remaining incumbent of this position for three years he declined re-election, his intention being to take up the study of law.

Within a short time, however, he was called to fill the vacant position of instructor in physics and rhetoric in Augustana College, in Canton, South Dakota. Although most reluctant to give up his plans of preparing himself for the legal profession, he was prevailed upon to enter upon his career in connection with the college in the autumn of 1889. The following year, at the age of twenty-six, Professor Tuve was elected president of the institution by the board of regents of the United Norwegian Lutheran church, which, after the union of certain Lutheran bodies, now assumed control of the school. Under his presidency, with the hearty co-operation of faculty and controlling board, the college has steadily progressed and grown in attendance and popular favor.

One of the ambitions of Professor Tuve, together with the stanch friends of the school, was to see it located in new and commodious quarters. After years of persistent and indefatigable effort this desideratum was largely realized, for in the autumn of 1903 a large dormitory and a new college building with modern improvements stood completed. The main building is an imposing structure, built of Sioux Falls granite.

In the hardships incident to pioneer educational work Professor Tuve faithfully stood at his post and by skillful management and persistent and well-directed energy enlisted the confidence and support of others and carried the school through hard times and financial difficulties, with a firm faith in its future prestige and ultimate success. The last few years have amply demonstrated the consistency of his attitude in the connection, for the school has attained an enviable reputation and won for itself a permanent place among the valuable educational institutions of the state. The president is a devoted adherent of the Lutheran church, and both by precept and example wields a beneficent influence over the youth who receive instruction in the institution of which he is chief executive, while his genial, kindly and sympathetic nature endear him to the students, who accord him the fullest measure of confidence and respect. President Tuve was united in marriage to Miss Ida Marie Larson, of Ridgeway, Iowa, on the 2d of June, 1893. They have three children: George Lewis, Merle Antony and Rosemond Theresa Marie.

WILLIAM J. ROWLANDS, a successful farmer and stock raiser of Brown county, was born in Wales on the 14th of July, 1846, and was brought to America when one year old and grew to manhood's estate in Columbia county, Wisconsin, where his parents settled on coming to this country. He was reared to agricultural pursuits and on attaining his majority selected that ancient and honorable vocation for his life work, and has followed it ever since, meeting with the success that inevitably attends the man of industry whose efforts are directed by good natural ability, and whose career bears the stamp of earnestness and sincerity of purpose. Mr. Rowlands succeeded well as a farmer and continued his labors in Wisconsin until 1880, in the fall of which year he sold his possessions in that state and became a resident of Brown county, South Dakota. Shortly after reaching his destination he took up a homestead, three miles northwest of Bath, but after holding the same until 1882 and making a number of improvements, he disposed of the place and moved to his present home, three miles north of Plana, where he now owns a finely improved farm of four hundred and eighty acres, a large part of which is in cultivation, the remainder consisting of rich pasture land, peculiarly adapted to live-stock purposes. Mr. Rowlands is an up-to-date agriculturist and as a raiser of fine cattle he has a reputation second to that of few of his fellow citizens similarly engaged. He has prospered greatly since coming west, being the possessor of a beautiful and attractive home, while his business affairs have so worked to his advantage that he is now in independent circumstances. While not a politician in the exclusive sense of the term, he is decided in his allegiance to the Republican party and has been a delegate to a number of conventions, besides rendering valuable service to the ticket. Religiously he subscribes to no creed or statement of faith, but is a regular attendant of the Presbyterian church, to which his wife belongs, contributing of his means to its support, as well as to the building up and sustaining of charitable institutions irrespective of name or order.

The married life of Mr. Rowlands dates from January, 1887, when he was united in the bonds of wedlock with Miss Sarah Morris, of New York, the union being blessed with children as follows: John Howard, Eunice E., Catherine J. and Beulah May.

WILLIAM MCGAAN, who is serving most efficiently and acceptably on the bench of the county court of Clark county, was born in the historic old town of Ayr, Ayrshire, Scotland, on the 1st of October, 1853, and his forbears have been identified with the annals of Scottish history from the time to which the "memory of man runneth not to the contrary." His parents, William and Agnes (Andrews) McGaan, came to America in 1857, at which time he was a child of four years, and they settled in Knox county, Illinois, where the father engaged in agricultural pursuits, while he still resides on the old homestead, having attained the venerable age of eighty-six years at the time of this writing, in 1904. His devoted and cherished wife was summoned into eternal rest on the 2d of October, 1893, having been a lifelong member of the Presbyterian church, as has also her husband.

Judge McGaan was reared on the home farm, near Altoona, Illinois, and after completing the curriculum of the public schools continued his studies in Lombard University, at Galesburg, that state, quitting in his junior year to take up the study of law in the office of the firm of Davis & Thompson, of Galesburg, prosecuting his technical reading with scrupulous care and fidelity and being admitted to the bar of the state in June, 1880, by the supreme court. In the same month he was admitted to partnership in the firm under whose preceptorship he had pursued his law studies, the title being changed to that of Davis, Thompson & McGaan, and he there continued in practice until March, 1883, when he came to South Dakota and located in Clark, as one of its pioneer lawyers. In 1887-8 he served as state's attorney of the county, and in 1898 he was elected judge of the county court, and is now serving his fourth consecutive term in this important office. He has gained a high reputation for his fair and impartial rulings, which are invariably based on the law and evidence, and is known as a man thoroughly well informed in the minutiae of the great science of jurisprudence. For the past ten years the subject has been and is now associated in business with Hon. S. H. Elrod, Republican nominee for governor of South Dakota. He has ever given an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party and has been one of the leaders in its local ranks. In a fraternal way he is identified with the Knights of Pythias, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Modern Woodmen of America, as is he also with the college fraternity, the Phi Delta Theta.

On the 5th of November, 1889, Judge McGaan was united in marriage to Mrs. Emma L. (Coats) Dice, who was born in White Pigeon, St. Joseph county, Michigan, on the 24th of October, 1859, being a daughter of James and Julia Ann Coats. The only child of this marriage, a son, died in infancy, but Mrs. McGaan has two daughters by her first marriage, Laverne B., now Mrs. W. L. Ware, of Lakota, North Dakota, and Vera M. Dice.

GEORGE BOLLES, a leading real-estate and insurance man of Aberdeen, of which city he is treasurer, was born at Marshall, Michigan, on June 30, 1854, the son of George Nelson and Sarah (Polhemus) Bolles. The father of Mr. Bolles was a native of New York state, and was descended from an old American family, his ancestors having come over from England in 1620, settling in the New England states, and later the family getting into New York state. At an early date the father removed to Kalamazoo, Michigan, where he died about 1885. The mother of the subject died a few days after his birth.

George Bolles was reared on a farm, and attended the high school and the Baptist college at Kalamazoo, Michigan. After leaving school, he worked on a farm in summers and taught school in winter for several years, and then entered an insurance office in Kalamazoo, where he continued until 1883, at which time he came to Aberdeen, South Dakota. He at once engaged in the real-estate and insurance business in that town, now city, at the same time taking up land near Ipswich, upon which he settled his family. Mr. Bolles is a Republican in politics, and has served as treasurer of Aberdeen practically all the time since 1885, holding the same at present. He is a member of the Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Woodmen of America fraternities.

Mr. Bolles married Ellen A. Dennis, who was born in Kalamazoo county, Michigan, the daughter of Wilfred and Mary J. (Downey) Dennis, and to their union one son has been born, C. Bliss Bolles.

ALFRED ABRAHAM was born in Chisago county, Minnesota, on the 14th of September, 1856, and is a son of Charles and Beata Abrahamson, both of whom were born and reared in Sweden, where their marriage was solemnized and where two of their children were born. One of the children died on the voyage to America and another shortly afterward, one son died in 1885, while those who survive are four sons and two daughters. In 1853 Charles Abrahamson immigrated with his family to the United States, first locating in La Salle, Illinois, where he remained until the spring of the following year, when he removed to Minnesota and settled in Chisago county, being one of its pioneers and there developing a valuable farm. His wife died in 1886, while he still resides in Chisago county, having attained the venerable age of eighty-four years. While he has retired from active labor he is blessed with excellent health and is enjoying the rewards of his former toil and endeavor, being a man of sterling character and one who has ever commanded the high regard of his fellow men.

The subject of this review was reared on the homestead farm and secured his early educational training in the public schools of his native county. He continued to be identified with the work on the home farm and teaching school until 1882, when he came to the present state of South Dakota. On the 16th of February of that year he took up a homestead claim in Riverside township, Brown county, where he improved a valuable farm, the property now being owned by his brother, John A., who there maintains his home, at the same time being engaged in business and becoming identified with the early history of Grotton, South Dakota. Mr. Abraham continued to devote his attention to farming and stock growing until 1889, when he located in Langford, Marshall county, where he engaged in the clothing and men's furnishing-goods business, continuing operations until 1894, when he closed the business. One year later he opened his present store at Claremont, where he handles general merchandise, and here he controls a large and representative business and has a finely equipped and appointed establishment. His brother, John A., was associated with him in the business and in 1899 they opened a lumber yard in connection with their mercantile enterprise, continuing to be associated in the carrying on of both until 1902, when the partnership was dissolved, on the 1st of January, the subject retaining the mercantile and lumber business while his brother assumed the farm previously mentioned as his share, the original claim having in the meanwhile been materially augmented in area. The subject is the owner of a section of well-improved land in the county, renting the same, while in addition to this he has equity in six other quarter sections in the county. Through his energy and good management he has gained noteworthy success since coming to South Dakota, and he is duly appreciative of the advantages which have been here afforded him and takes a deep interest in all that concerns the welfare and advancement of his home town, county and state. In politics Mr. Abraham is a staunch adherent of the Republican party. In 1892 he was elected county treasurer, and was chosen as his own successor two years later, thus serving four consecutive years and giving a most able administration of the fiscal affairs of the county.

On the 11th of November, 1900, Mr. Abraham was united in marriage to Miss Maude E. Griffith, who was born in Lakeview, Michigan, and reared in South Dakota, being a daughter of E. E. Griffith, one of the honored pioneers of the state. They have one son, Arden Louellwyn, who was born on the 13th of October, 1901.

THOMAS J. BILLION, M. D., one of the prominent physician and surgeons of Sioux Falls, is a native of Iowa, having been born in the town of Sibley, on the 25th of October, 1878, a son of Henry and Mary (Rooney) Billion. When he was a child of three years his parents removed to Minnesota, where he received his early educational discipline, the family continuing to reside in that state until he had attained the age of ten years, when they came to South Dakota and took up their abode in Sioux Falls, where the Doctor continued his studies in the public schools, eventually entering the Sioux Falls Normal School. His parents still reside in this city, his father being a commercial traveler by vocation. In 1895 Dr. Billion was matriculated in St. Thomas College, at St. Paul, Minnesota, where he pursued a classical course, remaining in the institution until 1897, when he entered upon the technical work of preparing himself for the profession to which he had determined to devote his life. He became a student in the John A. Creighton Medical College, in Omaha, Nebraska, where he completed the prescribed course, being graduated as a member of the class of 1901 and receiving his coveted degree of Doctor of Medicine. Shortly after his graduation the Doctor returned to Sioux Falls, where he established an office, and here he has since been engaged in the general practice of his profession, in which his efforts have been attended with gratifying success, indicating a popular appreciation of his professional talent and his devotion to his noble and humane vocation. He is a close student of his profession and keeps in constant touch with the advances made in the sciences of medicine and surgery. The Doctor is a member of the State Medical Society of South Dakota, and is serving as county physician of Minnehaha county. In politics he is found stanchly aligned in support of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and fraternally is identified with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

CHARLES ALLEN HOWARD, who is successfully engaged in the real-estate business in the city of Aberdeen, was born in Frontier, Clinton county, New York, on the 16th of July, 1865, being a son of Charles Adams Howard, who was a farmer by vocation, while the maiden name of the subject's mother was Nancy Patterson. Charles Adams Howard was likewise born in Frontier, being a son of Junio Howard, whose father, Antipas Howard, was numbered among the early settlers in that section of the old Empire state. Antipas Howard was born in Andover, Vermont, and was a son of James Hayward, who was born in Mendon, Massachusetts, on the 18th of February, 1724. The latter was a son of Jonathan Hayward, who was the third of the name in America, being a son of Jonathan 2d, who was a son of Jonathan 1st, born in Ashford, Connecticut, in 1692. The last mentioned was a son of John Hayward, who was with Miles Standish in 1643. Martha, the wife of John Hayward, was a daughter of Thomas Hayward, who came from England prior to 1638 and settled Duxbury, Plymouth county, Massachusetts. This data is derived from Volume XI American Ancestry, published in 1898. The subject is also a grandson of Rebecca J. Spaulding, also representing one of the old and prominent families of New England, the ancestry being fully traced in the Spalding Memorial, published in 1897.

Charles A. Howard, the immediate subject of this review, was reared on the old homestead farm and his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the public schools of his native county. By the death of his father, in 1877, he was thrown upon his own resources, and went to Ontario, Canada, in the following year, at the age of thirteen. In 1879 he took up his residence in Port Huron, Michigan, entering the employ of the Grand Trunk Railroad and continuing in the service until 1883. In May of that year he came to Columbia, Brown county, Dakota. In January, 1884, he secured a position as clerk in the office of the register of deeds of Brown county, and in January of the following year was appointed deputy register. He resigned this position in November, 1885, and engaged in the abstract business, in which he has ever since continued, in connection with his extensive real-estate enterprise.

In November, 1887, Mr. Howard enlisted as a private in Company F, National Guard of Dakota, in Aberdeen. He became corporal on the 3d of June, 1889; second lieutenant January 23, 1892; first lieutenant October 2, 1893; and captain May 7, 1894. He held this position in Company F, First Regiment, South Dakota National Guard, until the outbreak of the Spanish-American war. He then took his company to Sioux Falls, the state rendezvous, arriving there on the 1st of May, 1898, where four days later he was mustered into the United States service as captain of Company F, First South Dakota Infantry, United States Volunteers, enjoying the distinction of being the first South Dakota soldier to be mustered into the service of the United States. On the same day he was promoted to major of his regiment and assigned to the command of the Second Battalion, consisting of Companies D, M, F and E. He proceeded with his regiment to the Philippines and took part in every march, skirmish and battle in which any of this valiant regiment was engaged during the war. He was mustered out of the service, in San Francisco, California, in October, 1899, with the other members of his regiment, which had made a gallant record in the Orient. Major Howard has ever been a staunch supporter of the Republican party and has been an active worker for the promotion of its interests. He served as a member of the board of aldermen of Aberdeen in 1890, and was a member of the state senate during the general assembly of 1895. Fraternally the subject is affiliated with the following named bodies: Aberdeen Lodge, No. 38, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Aberdeen Chapter, No. 14, Royal Arch Masons; Damascus Commandery, No. 10, Knights Templar; El Riad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; Aberdeen Lodge, No. 49, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Aberdeen Lodge, No. 55, Knights of Pythias; Bab-el-Wed Temple, No. 17, Dramatic Order Knights of Khorassan, and Aberdeen Lodge, No. 30, Ancient Order of United Workmen. Of the last mentioned he has served as master workman, while in 1900 he was eminent commander of Damascus Commandery, Knights Templar, being now the grand generalissimo of the grand commandery of the state, and has held other official chairs in the various bodies noted. He has been a member of the Theosophical Society since 1898.

In Aberdeen, on the 10th of December, 1902, Major Howard was united in marriage to Miss Grace E. Brown, who was born in Maquoketa, Iowa, October 5, 1874, being a daughter of Ebenezer C. and Emma H. (Smith) Brown.

We cannot more consistently close this sketch than by quoting the following words uttered by its genial and popular subject: "I have been since coming to Dakota an ardent believer in the grand future of the territory now embraced in the states of North and South Dakota, and this confidence has never wavered, while to this individual faith I attribute my success in business."

C. J. HAZEL, the president and general manager of the Golden Rule Company, who conduct the Golden Rule, one of the best equipped and most popular department stores in Aberdeen, was born in Odessa, southern Russia, on the 25th of December, 1864, and is a son of Jacob Hazel, who was born and reared in the same place and who came to the United States in 1886 and took up his residence in Campbell county, South Dakota, where he took up government land and engaged in farming and stock growing. He is now residing on his fine ranch eighteen miles west of Eureka, Campbell county, and is one of the prominent and honored citizens of his community. Of the nine children in the family the subject of this sketch was the third in order of birth. He was educated in the excellent schools of his native land, where he remained until 1885, when, at the age of twenty years, he came to the United States, making the present state of South Dakota his destination. He passed the first year in Menno, Hutchinson county, and then removed to Eureka, McPherson county, where he engaged in the general merchandise business, beginning operations upon a very modest scale. He continued the enterprise individually until 1888, when he admitted Frederick Hepperle and Jacob Sauter to partnership, this association continuing until 1889, when Mr. Sauter withdrew, while in 1892 Mr. Hepperle likewise retired from the firm. The business was thereafter continued under the title of C. J. Hazel & Company, the father of our subject being the silent partner. Most gratifying success attended the enterprise under this regime and the firm name was retained until 1897, when the concern was incorporated under the title of the Eureka Bazaar, and the establishment has since been in operation under this name while it controls a very large business, having a commodious and finely appointed store and adequate warehouse facilities. The subject still retains his interest in the business, having been president of the company until 1901, when he removed to Aberdeen and opened the Golden Rule dry goods store of Hon. T. F. Marshall, located in the Ward hotel building. Within the few intervening years the house has gained a place of unmistakable priority, while its stock has been materially increased and various departments added to the original dry-goods store. The store occupied by the company has a frontage of fifty feet and a depth of one hundred and thirty-six feet, while the basement, of the same dimensions, is utilized for the crockery, kitchen hardware, grocery and other departments. Mr. Hazel is president, treasurer and general manager of the company, and is known as an alert and discriminating young business men, while it is largely due to his efforts that the Golden Rule has risen so rapidly in popularity and gained place as one of the leading mercantile enterprises of the city.

In politics Mr. Hazel accords allegiance to the Republican party, and while a resident of Eureka he served four years as a member of the village council, and for an equal period as a member of the board of education. Fraternally he is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Knights of the Maccabees.

On the 11th of July, 1892, Mr. Hazel was united in marriage to Miss Caroline Schamber, a sister of Frederick W. Schamber, in whose sketch, on another page of this work, is given an outline of the family history. Mr. and Mrs. Hazel have four children, Othillie, Higo, Elsie and Edgar.

JOHN F. SAWYER, one of the representative citizens of Roubaix, Lawrence county, comes of stanch old colonial stock, the name which he bears having been identified with the annals of American history since the middle of the seventeenth century. The original progenitor in the new world was Captain William Sawyer, who was a royalist in England, and on this account was expelled by the great dictator, Oliver Cromwell. He came to America in 1640, and settled in what is now Newburyport, Massachusetts, whence his immediate descendants later removed to other parts of New England.

The subject of this sketch was born in Deerfield, Rockingham county, New Hampshire, on the 2d of March, 1856, and is a son of Ezra and Sarah Collins (Bean) Sawyer, both of whom were likewise born and reared in the old Granite state, where they passed their entire lives. Samuel Collins, great-grandfather of the subject in the maternal line, was a drummer boy in the war of the Revolution, and during the war of 1812 served with distinction, holding the office of captain. He was prominently identified with the establishing of the United States military academy at West Point, and continued to be deeply interested in military affairs during his entire life. Mr. Sawyer is a direct descendant, on the maternal side, of Hannah Dustin, whose name is perpetuated in early American history. While a captive of the Indians on an island in the Merrimac she arose at night, awakened her companion captive, a boy of ten, with whose aid she tomahawked and scalped the entire party of thirteen Indians and escaped in a canoe down the river. A statue of this noble woman graces the scene of her heroic exploit. The father of the subject was successfully engaged in the lumber business in New Hampshire during the greater portion of his active career, and was a man of prominence and influence in his section.

John F. Sawyer completed the curriculum of the common schools in his native village and then further pursued his studies in the Northwood Academy. After leaving school in 1874, he came west to Dubuque, Iowa, where he was in the employ of the Illinois Central Railroad Company for the ensuing two years, at the expiration of which he set forth for the Black Hills. Upon his arrival he secured employment in the Homestake mine, where he worked two years. He then went out as a shipper of wood and timber on the Black Hills & Fort Pierre Railroad, in the interests of the Homestake and associated mining companies of this district, and has continued to be actively concerned in this enterprise ever since, shipping the entire supply for some time and now having charge of all the narrow-gauge shipments to these companies. Mr. Sawyer is a stockholder in the First National Bank of Lead, also in the Lead Hotel Company, having owned the corner upon which the hotel was erected; he is also a stockholder in the First National Bank of Deadwood. He has directed his efforts with signal discrimination and good judgment since coming to the state, and is now one of the substantial and highly honored citizens of the Hills. In politics he gives his support to the Republican party. Fraternally he is numbered among the noble band of Elks.

On the 29th of January, 1891, Mr. Sawyer was united, in marriage to Miss Nellie Pierce, who was born and reared in Iowa, being a daughter of Jesse P. Pierce, who for the past thirty years has been identified with the board of trade and live-stock interests of Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. Sawyer have no children, having lost their only child, a son, in infancy.

LEWIS E. WOOD, auditor of Spink county, was born near Bourbon, Marshall county, Indiana, on the 15th of August, 1853, and is a son of Daniel R. and Lydia E. (Wickersham) Wood, both of whom were born in Ohio. Daniel R. Wood was of Welsh and English extraction and the original ancestors in America were early settled in Virginia, which was the theater of so important a portion of the historic events of our nation. The mother of the subject was a representative of the old English Quaker family of Wickershams, who settled in Pennsylvania as colonists of William Penn. The parents of the subject removed from Ohio to the densely timbered region of Marshall county, Indiana, in 1851, and there literally hewed out a home in the midst of the virgin forest.

Lewis Edwin Wood, the immediate subject of this review, was reared under the sturdy discipline of the old homestead farm. His rudimentary education was secured in the district schools and was supplemented by effective courses of study in the public schools of Rochester, Indiana. He taught in the schools of his native county for three years, after which he was engaged in farming in that county until 1883, when he came to South Dakota, in company with his brothers, Joshua F. and Joseph T. He entered a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres, near the present town of Doland, Spink county, and here developed a valuable farm. He assisted in the organization of the first school districts in the county and in the erection of the first school buildings, while his efforts in looking to the educational interests of the new county were freely given and did not lack for popular appreciation. In 1896 he located in Doland, where he was engaged in the drug and jewelry business until 1900, disposing of his interests there upon his election to his present office. He has ever been found a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and has striven to maintain the honesty of the party and to defend it against corrupting influences. In 1895 he was elected a member of the board of county commissioners, and was re-elected in 1898. Before the expiration of his second term he was elected to his present office of county auditor, removing with his family to Redfield in 1901. He gave a most able and satisfactory administration of the affairs of this office and was honored with reelection in the fall of 1902. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, the Knights of Pythias, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Modern Woodmen of America.

In June, 1876, Mr. Wood was united in marriage to Miss Mary T. Kirk, who was a successful and popular teacher in the schools of their home county in Indiana. She was summoned to the life eternal in January, 1895, and is survived by her two children, Roscoe, who is now a commercial traveler for the Jewett wholesale drug house, of Aberdeen, this state, and Elma, who was graduated in shorthand and typewriting in Redfield College, and who now finds her services much in demand in the various offices in her home town. In May, 1897, Mr. Wood consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Eliza Richards, who was for seven years a teacher in the primary department of the graded schools of Argos, Indiana, in which state she was born and reared.

WILLIAM A. MORRIS, one of the leading members of the legal profession of Spink county, and a prominent citizen of Redfield, was born at Mount Carroll, Carroll county, Illinois, on December 13, 1864, and is the son of J. P. and Jamima Morris, both natives of Ohio. When a youth the father removed to Wisconsin with his parents, and he there grew to manhood, and was there married. From Wisconsin the parents of the subject removed to Carroll county, Illinois, where they resided until 1881, then removed to Fulton, Illinois. In 1896 they came to Redfield. The mother died in 1899, and the father died in July, 1901.

William A. Morris was reared on the home farm in Illinois. He attended the district schools, and then entered the Northern Illinois College at Fulton, where he was graduated in the class of 1883. While a student at college he also read law to some extent. After leaving college he became associated with his brother, S. E. Morris, in the clothing business at Fulton, Illinois. Subsequently they removed their business to Darling-ton, Wisconsin, and combined the same until S. E. Morris came to South Dakota, at which time the subject resumed his legal studies. In 1888 he came to South Dakota, and the following year was admitted to the bar of the state. In January, 1890, he engaged in the practice at Redfield, where he has since continued with success. In 1894 Mr. Morris was elected state's attorney for Spink county, and was re-elected in 1896. During 1893-4 he also held the office of city attorney for Redfield. At the national meeting of the Sons of Veterans held at Syracuse, New York, in 1901, Mr. Morris was elected by that body to the position of secretary and attorney for the Memorial University, the buildings for which are now in course of erection at Mason City, Iowa. The duties of his dual office requires the presence of Mr. Morris in Mason City a considerable portion of his time.

Mr. Morris is a Republican in politics. He is identified with the Masonic fraternity, belonging to the chapter and commandery of that order. He is also a member of the Knights of Pythias.

On December 29, 1892, Mr. Morris was married to Edna Upton, who was born in Illinois, and who came with her parents to South Dakota in 1886. To this union the following children have been born: Marguerite, Helen and Merle, the last named having died at the age of six years.

HERMAN V. SEARS, of Plankinton, Aurora county, was born in Rock county, Wisconsin, on the 23d of October, 1848, being a son of Thomas W. and Elizabeth K. (Stone) Sears, of whose four children three are living: Herman

V., subject of this sketch; Edgar P., engaged in the real-estate business in Salt Lake City; and Minnie, wife of J. F. Anderson, a lumber merchant of Mitchell, South Dakota. Thomas W. Sears was born in Southampton, England, and was ten years of age at the time of his parents' emigration to America, the family settling on a farm in New York state, where he was reared and educated. He came west about 1845 and settled in Rock county, Wisconsin, as a pioneer farmer, purchasing government land and there continuing to follow agricultural pursuits until 1867, when he removed to West Union, Iowa, where he engaged in mercantile business and was also interested in farming. In 1882 he came to Chamberlain, South Dakota, and here made wise investments in connection with various enterprises, having likewise been in advance of the tide of immigration in this state, as had he been in Wisconsin and Iowa. He here lived practically retired until his death, in 1887. He was a Republican in politics and both he and his wife were active members of the Congregational church, her death occurring in 1888.

Herman V. Sears secured his rudimentary education in the public schools and thereafter attended the Allen's Hill Seminary, at Allen's Hill, Wisconsin. He continued to be identified with farming until 1873, when he engaged in the livery and live-stock business in West Union, Iowa. In 1881 he came as a pioneer to Chamberlain, South Dakota, and here, on the 1st of January of that year, was associated with George Wright in opening to the public the popular hotel then known as the Wright House and now as the Mussman House. One year later he sold his interest to his partner and engaged in the livery and live-stock business, disposing of his livery a few years later and then becoming extensively engaged in the ranching business in Jackson county, being associated in this enterprise with his eldest son. In 1900 Mr. Sears, in company with J. W. Sanford and W. L. Montgomery, organized the Commercial Bank at Plankinton, and he was chosen cashier of the same, in which capacity he has since served, the bank having gained a high reputation for stability and capable management. In the spring of 1903 the subject purchased the interest of Mr. Sanford and the institution is now owned by him and Mr. Montgomery. Mr. Sears is a progressive and public-spirited citizen, is a stalwart Republican in politics and served as a member of the council and the school board while a resident of Chamberlain. He is a member of West Union Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in West Union, Iowa, and also of the Iowa Legion of Honor, while he is identified with the various bodies of the Masonic fraternity in Chamberlain and with the consistory of the Scottish Rite in Yankton, having attained to the thirty-second degree in the same.

On the 5th of March, 1869, Mr. Sears was united in marriage to Miss Libbie Wade, of Sumner, Iowa, who died June 14, 1882, and of their four children three are living, namely: Fred H., who has charge of the ranching business in which he is associated with his father; Nellie W., who has charge of the books in the lumber yards of J. F. Anderson at the headquarters in Mitchell, this state; and Charles W., who is in the marine service at Yokohama, Japan, having participated in the Chinese campaign and also in the military maneuvers in the Philippines. On August 8, 1884, Mr. Sears was married to Miss Belle Drury, of Mason, Illinois, and they have one child, Lulu M. Sears, born September 20, 1889.

AARON S. STUVER, a well-known and honored citizen of Kimball, Brule county, is a native of the old Keystone state, having been born in Northampton county, Pennsylvania, on the 5th of January, 1842, a son of Charles and Mary (Santee) Stuver, of whose twelve children ten are yet living. The parents removed to Summit county, Ohio, when the subject was but seven years of age, and there he received his preliminary educational discipline in the common schools, after which he continued his studies in Hiram College, at Hiram, that state, the late President James A. Garfield having been at the head of the institution at the time. In August, 1862, Mr. Stuver manifested his loyalty and patriotism by enlisting as a private in Company I, One Hundred and Fifteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, which was assigned to the Army of the Cumberland, and he continued in active service until the close of the war, having participated in several important battles and having ever been found at the post of duty, while the history of his regiment is the history of his military career. He received his honorable discharge at Murfreesboro, Tennessee, June 22, 1865. He retains his interest in his old comrades in arms and manifests the same by holding membership in the Grand Army of the Republic.

After the close of the war Mr. Stuver went to Illinois, where he followed the vocation of land surveyor about two years, at the expiration of which he located in Jasper county, Iowa, where he completed a thorough course of study in the law, being admitted to the bar of the state in 1871. He then entered upon the active practice of his profession in Newton, Iowa, where he remained until 1880, when he removed to Colorado and turned his attention to mining and civil engineering. On the 20th of October, 1882, he arrived in Brule county, South Dakota, and the attitude which he held in regard to his mining operations may be understood when we revert to the fact that he admits that at that time he considered a quarter section of Dakota land worth more than an average mine in Colorado. He has been actively engaged in the practice of his profession ever since coming to the county and he is also engaged in the abstract business at the present time, having maintained his home and business headquarters in Kimball since 1885. He is at the present time a member of the board of commissioners of the State Soldiers' Home, at Hot Springs, having been appointed to this position by Governor Herreid, in 1904, for a term of six years. In politics Mr. Stuver is a stalwart advocate of the principles of the Republican party, taking an active part in the party councils in his county and state, and fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order.

In 1872 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Stuver to Miss Josephine Hough, who died in Chamberlain, this state, in August, 1883. In 1887 he married Miss Ellen Pratt, who was summoned into eternal rest in 1896, the family home at the time having been on a farm owned by the subject near Kimball. On the 26th of June, 1900, Mr. Stuver married Miss Flora Weitzel, at Warsaw, Indiana. They have no children, nor were any born of the preceding marriages.

FRANCIS D. ADAMS, deceased, late of Groton, Brown county, was a native of the old Green Mountain state, having been born in Waterbury, Vermont, on the 21st of February, 1838, while it can not be denied that he possessed to a marked degree the noble characteristics which ever typify the sturdy sons of New England. He was reared and educated in his native state and there remained until about the year 1861, when he came west to the state of Michigan, locating in Grattan, Kent county, where he became associated with his brothers, George and John, in the manufacturing of furniture, wagons and carriages. To this enterprise he was giving his attention at the time when the dark cloud of war cast its pall over the nation, and he forthwith subordinated his personal interests to the needs of his country. He effected the organization of Company D, First Michigan Engineers and Mechanics, and was elected second lieutenant of the same, later being promoted first lieutenant, while he acted in the capacity of adjutant general. Mr. Adams was in active service for two and one-half years, and his record was that of a loyal and valiant son of the Republic. After victory had crowned the Union arms it was his privilege to participate in the grand review, in the national capital.

After the war Mr. Adams continued his residence in Grattan and Lowell, Michigan, until 1880, when he came to Groton, South Dakota, where he forthwith identified himself most intimately with local affairs, his mental powers and long business experience well equipping him for leadership. He here became associated with S. W. Weber and H. C. Sessions in the organization of the Farmers' Bank, which was later reorganized as the Brown County Bank, and of this well-known and popular institution he served as a director until his death, while he also made large and judicious investments in lands in the valley of the James river. He ever kept in touch with civic and public affairs, was progressive in his ideas and did his part in promoting the development and material prosperity of his home city.

In politics Mr. Adams gave an uncompromising support to the principles of the Republican party, and in 1892 he was elected to represent his district in the state senate, this being the third general assembly after the admission of South Dakota to the Union. In the council chambers of the commonwealth he proved anew his loyalty and his ability, being recognized as one of the valuable working members of the senatorial body and being made chairman of the important committee on appropriations. In 1895 Governor Sheldon appointed Mr. Adams a member of the state board of regents of education, and here his influence was exerted in a most helpful way. He continued incumbent of this office until he was summoned from the field of life's labors. His religious faith was liberal, mainly in doing good to those around him. Fraternally he was a member of the Masonic order, in which he had attained the Knights Templar degrees, his funeral services being conducted under the beautiful and impressive ritual and ceremonies of this time-honored fraternity. The death of Mr. Adams occurred on the 17th of January, 1899, and the community manifested a sense of personal bereavement, for he was a man who ever held friendship as inviolate and one who had made his entire life count for good. He was kindly and considerate, tolerant in his judgment, earnest and sincere in all things. It is needless to say that the passing away of such an individual must leave a distinct void.

On the 15th of March, 1871, Mr. Adams was united in marriage to Miss Jane Ashley, of Grattan, Michigan, she being a daughter of Sheldon Ashley, a pioneer of Kent county, that state, and an influential citizen. Mrs. Adams survives her honored husband, as do also their four children, namely: Persis E., who is the wife of Robert Reynolds, of Groton; George Sheldon, M. D., who is a member of the medical staff of the state hospital, at Yankton; John Francis, who is a student in Rush Medical College, in the city of Chicago; and Charles Edwin, who is a student in the University of Minnesota.

HARRY D. CHAMBERLAIN, the efficient and popular Indian agent at the Crow Creek reservation, was born in Boone county, Illinois, on the 3d of September, 1856, and is a son of Joseph and Sally (Hovey) Chamberlain, of whose eleven children five are still living, namely: Helen, who is the widow of O. C. Brown, is a resident of Sterling, Nebraska; Eliza J. is the wife of Eugene Reeves, of Burr, that state; Leroy E. is a resident of Capron, Illinois; Harry D. is the immediate subject of this sketch; and Horace resides in Belvidere, Illinois. The parents of the subject were born in New York. Joseph Chamberlain removed with his mother to Boone county, Illinois, in 1832, his father having died in Brattleboro, Vermont, and a few years later the parents of his future wife also took up abode in the same county, which was then practically an unbroken wilderness. The paternal grandmother of the subject was one of the first settlers in that section, where she lived to attain the venerable age of ninety-eight years, while the maternal grandparents had nearly attained the age of ninety at time of death. Joseph Chamberlain became one of the pioneer farmers of Illinois, and his death occurred on the land which he secured from the government fifty-nine years prior to his demise, which occurred in 1891. After his death his widow removed into the town of Capron, where she has since maintained her home, being eighty-one years of age at the time of this writing, in 1903. The father was originally a Whig and later a Republican, and though he held various local positions of trust he was never an office seeker.

The subject of this review was reared on the old homestead farm and his early educational advantages were those afforded in the common schools. He was married at the age of twenty years and then took charge of the home farm, where he remained until the spring of 1883, when he came to the territory of Dakota and located in the village of Lafoon, which was later made the county seat of Faulk county, South Dakota. In 1886 the line of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad was completed through Faulkton, and the same year the subject was elected sheriff of the county. The county seat was removed to Faulkton in the following year, and Mr. Chamberlain naturally transferred his residence to that place. In 1888 he was re-elected to the shrievalty, thus serving for two consecutive terms. After retiring from office he was engaged in contracting for one year, and in 1892 engaged in the general merchandise business in Faulkton. Two years later he closed out his interests in this line, and he was thereafter engaged in the hotel business in the town until June 1, 1901, when he rented his hotel property to enter upon the duties of his present office. He has been one of the leading figures in the Republican party councils in the state, having served two terms as a member of the state central committee, and in May, 1902, he was appointed to his present office as government agent at the Crow Creek Indian reservation, where he is rendering most satisfactory service. He is a member of Faulkton Lodge, No. 95, Free and Accepted Masons; Faulkton Chapter, No. 30, Royal Arch Masons; Lacotah Commandery, No. 6, Knights Templar; and El Riad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Sioux Falls.

On the 29th of November, 1876, Mr. Chamberlain was married to Miss Ada S. Marvin, of Union Center, Wisconsin, and of their seven children three are living, namely: Iva, who is the wife of Rude H. Sands, of Belvidere, Illinois; and Josie F. and Vera, who remain at the parental home.

ALMON CASE WHITBECK, of Chamberlain, is a prominent figure in financial circles in the state, being a member of the firm of Case & Whitbeck, bankers of Chamberlain and Oacoma, and being individually engaged in the banking business at Kimball, this state. He was born in Sodus, Wayne county, New York, on the 3d of May, 1864, and is a son of Cornelius A. and Mary M. (Case) Whitbeck, whose four living children are as follows: Minnie L., the wife of W. G. Wallace, of Albion, Michigan; James, paymaster's clerk in the United States navy and now stationed on the island of Guam; Anna E., who remains at the parental home; and Almon C., the subject of this sketch. The parents were likewise born in Sodus, New York, being representatives of sterling pioneer families of that state, and there they still maintain their home. The parental grandparents were of the old Knickerbocker stock, and were born in Columbia county, New York, on the Hudson, where their respective parents settled upon coming from Holland. The father of the subject devoted his active life to agricultural pursuits and has lived retired for the past three years. The maternal grandfather was born in New England and his wife was of Holland Dutch extraction.

The subject of this sketch was reared on the homestead farm and after completing the curriculum of the district schools continued his studies in Sodus Academy and in the Genesee Wesleyan Seminary, at Lima, New York, where he completed a scientific course, being graduated as a member of the class of 1882. He then went to Poughkeepsie, New York, and was there graduated in the Eastman Business College, after which he accepted a position as city editor of the Poughkeepsie Daily News, being retained in this capacity until after the consolidation of the paper with the Evening Press, under the name of the Daily News-Press. His duties in the connection were arduous and exacting, and his health became so much impaired that he resigned his position in the autumn of 1883. After recuperating from a serious illness he came west to Iowa and entered the employ of his uncle, Almon G. Case, working in his banking houses in Charles City and Nashua. In September, 1884, Mr. Whitbeck came to Chamberlain, South Dakota, where he became the first bookkeeper of the First National Bank, ill health compelling him to resign the position about six weeks later, whereupon he returned to his home in New York and passed a year on the home farm, being thus enabled to regain his health. In January, 1886, he came to Kimball, South Dakota, and secured the position of cashier in the Henry & Case Bank, gradually working himself up in the business and eventually purchasing the interest of Mr. Henry in the institution, of which he became sole owner in 1895, by acquiring the interest of Mr. Case, his uncle. This bank was established in 1883 and is still conducted by our subject, its affairs being in a most prosperous condition and being conducted under state supervision. In June, 1897, Messrs. Case and Whitbeck opened a private banking institution in Oacoma, and in August, 1901, became associated in the establishing of the Case & Whitbeck Bank in Chamberlain, our subject being thus identified with three substantial and popular banking institutions in the state and being known as an able and discriminating financier, while his course has been such as to ever commend him to popular confidence and esteem. In politics Mr. Whitbeck is a staunch Democrat, and while never a seeker of public office he served as mayor of Kimball, while since taking up his residence in Chamberlain he has served as a member of the board of aldermen. He is a member of Castle Lodge, No. 10, Knights of Pythias, of which he is chancellor commander.

On the 23d of May, 1888, Mr. Whitbeck was married to Miss Emily May Pomeroy, of Nashua, Iowa, and they are the parents of two children, Clarence A. and Laura M. Mrs. Whitbeck was born at Greenwood, Iowa, September 1, 1865, the daughter of George A. and Catharine Pomeroy. She affiliates with the Episcopal church, which her husband and children also attend.

RUSSELL G. PARMLEY, senior member of the well-known firm of R. G. Parmley & Brother, dealers in coal, coke, fire brick, clay, lime and cement, sewer pipe, pressed brick, etc., in the city of Sioux Falls, with headquarters at 201 Second avenue south, is one of the representative business men of the city, where he has maintained his home for a quarter of a century, his business career having closely followed the industrial development of the town, of which he may consistently be termed a pioneer, while he commands the confidence and regard which are the invariable concomitants of sterling integrity and straightforward business methods.

Mr. Parmley was born on a farm in Rock county, Wisconsin, on the 13th of March, 1851, being a son of Ira and Aurora E. (Austin) Parmley, both of whom are now deceased, while of their seven children five are living. The subject was reared to the wholesome discipline of the farm and received his early educational training in the common schools of his native county, including a course in the high school in Janesville. He continued to be associated with the management of the old homestead farm until he had attained the age of twenty-five years, when he established himself in the grain business in Footville, Wisconsin, where he continued operations until 1878, when he came to the territory of Dakota and located in what was then the village of Sioux Falls, where he engaged in the coal and wood business. His energy and good management made the venture a successful one from the time of its initiation, and three years later he admitted his brother Harry to partnership. Since that time the enterprise has been consecutively conducted under the firm name of R. G. Parmley & Brother, while its scope has been expanded materially and the business controlled has become a large and important one in the various lines of products handled, while special attention has been given to the building of cement walks, in which line they are numbered among the leading contractors in the city. Mr. Parmley was one of the organizers of the Union National Bank, of which he was vice-president until the time of its closing business. He was elected president of the old Commercial Club, which accomplished excellent work in exploiting the attractions and resources of the city and state, and he is at the present time president of the Dakota Club, a strong and valued business and social organization. He is a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and while not ambitious for public office his loyalty to his home city has been such that he has consented to serve as a member of the city council and also of the board of education. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, in which he has attained the chivalric degrees, being affiliated with Cyrene Commandery, Knights Templar.

On the 25th of December, 1872, Mr. Parmley was united in marriage to Miss Fannie A. Dann, of Center, Rock county, Wisconsin, and they have two sons, Arthur L. and Frank G.

DANIEL BRUNER GETTY, of Sioux Falls, was born in Providence Square, Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, on the 10th of February, 1865, and is a son of David Todd Getty, who was likewise born in the old Keystone state, the lineage being of German and Irish extraction. When our subject was about two years of age his parents removed to Iowa, and in the public schools of Belle Plain, that state, he received his early educational discipline. In the spring of 1885 he secured a clerkship in the office of the Iowa Mutual Benefit Association, an assessment life-insurance company, at Toledo, Iowa, where he remained until the autumn of 1886, when he came to Sioux Falls, to enter the employ of the Fargo Insurance Company, fire underwriters. In the spring of the following year he accepted a clerical position in the office of Hon. Nyrum E. Phillips, register of deeds of Minnehaha county, and he continued to be thereafter identified with the work of the register's office during the major portion of the time until the spring of 1893, having had practical control of the abstract department of the office during this interval. In the spring of the year mentioned Mr. Phillips was appointed warden of the South Dakota state penitentiary, in Sioux Falls, and the subject of this sketch was appointed clerk in the same institution, and both retained these respective offices until May 10, 1899, when they resigned, owing principally to the fact that a Populist governor had been elected the preceding autumn. Mr. Getty has been successfully established in the abstract business since August 27, 1899, and his long experience in connection with the practical work of the office of register of deeds has made his judgment in regard to real-estate in this section authoritative, and he has gained a high reputation for accurate, neat and altogether admirable abstract work, while this fact, as coupled with his personal popularity, has gained to him a distinctively representative support. In politics Mr. Getty is a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, in whose cause he takes a lively interest, and fraternally he is affiliated with the local organizations of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Both he and his wife hold membership in the Congregational church.

On the 27th of June, 1899, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Getty to Miss Blanche I. Metcalf, who was born at Lake Benton, Minnesota, on the 27th of June, 1873, being a daughter of Edward S. and Anna Metcalf.

RT. REV. WILLIAM H. HARE.—The Protestant Episcopal church has ever retained in her far-reaching service and manifold works for the uplifting of humanity the consecrated effort of the most zealous and self-abnegating devotees. No privations, no obstacles, no dangers have been sufficient to deter her emissaries from carrying the gospel of the divine Master to the furthestmost corners of the earth, doing good to all those "in any ways afflicted or distressed in mind, body or estate." Naught but honor and reverence can be accorded to those who thus give their lives to the church and to humanity, and it is insistent that due record be entered in this connection concerning the labors of the present missionary bishop of the state of South Dakota, the sketch in hand being more of a personal nature, since in the generic history in this publication appears an article outlining the progress of the church work in this field.

William Hobart Hare was born in the city of Princeton, New Jersey, on the 17th of May, 1838, being a son of Rev. George Emlen Hare, D. D., and Elizabeth Katherine (Hobart) Hare, the former of whom was born in the state of Pennsylvania and the latter in that of New York. Dr. Hare was for many years a professor in the divinity school of the Protestant Episcopal church in Philadelphia, and was a prominent member of the Old Testament committee for the revision of the English version of the Bible, being a man of noble character and high intellectual attainments. The American branch of the Hare family settled in the city of Philadelphia in 1778, and the subject of this sketch is a grandson of the famous Bishop Hobart, of New York, and a great-grandson of Rev. Thomas Bradbury Chandler, whose name is one of prominence in connection with the colonial history of our nation. The founder of the Hobart family in the new world was Edmund Hobart, who came hither from Bingham, Norfolk county, England, in 1633, and who founded the town of Bingham, Massachusetts. He had eight sons and six of the number were graduated in Harvard College, the newly established university of the colony. Five of them entered the ministry, a profession which had attracted a number of representatives of the family in England, the late Earl of Buckinghamshire, a member of the family, having been a member of the clergy of the established church of England as well as a peer of the realm.

Bishop Hare was educated in the Episcopal Academy in the city of Philadelphia and in the University of Pennsylvania. He then began the work of preparing himself for the ministry of the church which his honored father had so signally served, entering the Episcopal Divinity School, in Philadelphia, of which his father was at the time the executive head. Here he completed his ecclesiastical studies and on the 19th of June, 1859, received deacon's orders at the episcopal hands of Bishop Bowman, of the diocese of Pennsylvania. While in the diaconate he served as assistant to the rector of St. Luke's parish, Philadelphia. After two years he became rector of St. Paul's, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia.

He was married on the 30th of October, 1861, to Mary Amory Howe, a daughter of Rev. Mark Anthony DeWolfe Howe, who subsequently became bishop of the diocese of Central Pennsylvania. She died a few years after marriage, leaving one child, Hobart Amory Hare, who is a member of the faculty of Jefferson Medical College, in the city of Philadelphia, and the author of well-known medical works. In 1862 the subject of this sketch received the full holy orders of the priesthood, having been ordained by Bishop Alonzo Potter, in St. Paul's church, Chestnut Hill. Resigning that cure on account of the illness of his wife, he took charge for a year as locum tenens of St. Luke's, Philadelphia. In 1864 he was chosen rector of the Church of the Ascension and served in this capacity until 1870, when he was appointed secretary and general agent of the foreign committee of the board of missions of the Episcopal church. In October, 1871, the house of bishops elected him missionary bishop of Cape Palmas and parts adjacent, in west Africa. The house of deputies, however, represented that his services were invaluable in the office of which he was at the time incumbent, and the house of bishops withdrew the nomination mentioned. On All Saints' day, November, 1872, the house of bishops again elected him bishop, with the title of missionary bishop of Niobrara, a district in the territory of Dakota, and one inhabited at that time chiefly by wild Indians. After somewhat of hesitation Bishop Hare accepted the appointment and was consecrated in St. Luke's church, Philadelphia, on the 9th of January, 1873, receiving simultaneously the degree of Doctor of Divinity from Trinity College, Hartford, and Kenyon College, Ohio, while Columbia College conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Sacred Theology.

The wilderness assigned to the young bishop seemed an almost unmanageable field, but he betook himself to tent life and traveled over the wild country and, having thus made himself familiar with it, he gradually divided it into ten departments and placed a clergyman of ability and fidelity in charge of each of these departments and the missionary work soon fell into shape and was carried on with comparative ease.

The development of South Dakota and its final admission to statehood led to a slight change in the territory assigned to his jurisdiction, and in 1883 his title was changed to missionary bishop of South Dakota, and he chose

Sioux Falls as the see city of his missionary diocese. He has labored with all of zeal and earnestness and has infused vitality into all departments of church work in his diocese, while he has been aided and encouraged by the hearty and faithful co-operation of his clergy and his people. It has been his to watch the progress of the church in South Dakota from its inception, ever keeping pace with the onward march of the years as they have fallen into the abyss of time. He has guided the destinies of his church with a hand made strong by power from on high, and with the power which came to steady the hand has also come the divine light to illumine the way. In politics the Bishop gives his allegiance to the Republican party, jealously maintaining "the right of scratch," and fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order. He has witnessed the rise of the state, where he has served as bishop for thirty-two years, is loyal to it and its people and has the sincere respect and affectionate regard of all with whom he has come in contact as a church man and as a citizen.

The Bishop was quite alive to the intelligent character of the leading people coming into the newly formed state, and to the educational privileges they had left behind them in their old homes. It was for this reason that the well-known institution. All Saints' School, was projected and laid before the people of Sioux Falls. They cordially responded and subscribed toward the proposed institution in cash and land ten thousand dollars. The school occupies high ground at the head of the main street on the southern edge of the city of Sioux Falls on a five-acre tract. A large part of the ground slopes off from the building towards the town in a beautiful lawn adorned by shrubs and fine shade trees. On all sides streets sixty-six feet wide isolate and protect the school. In the midst of the grounds stands the building itself, marked by striking architectural features. The school has the patronage of many influential people of the state. The Bishop has apartments in the eastern end of the building and makes his home with the family and the institution is a fit culmination of his work.

SAMUEL H. JUMPER, of Aberdeen, Brown county, was born in New Gloucester, Maine, on the 24th of October, 1844, and his parents, John and Mary (Tufts) Jumper, were likewise born in that state, where they passed their entire lives, the father having been a farmer by vocation, while both he and his wife were of English genealogy.

Samuel Henry Jumper received his early education in the common schools of his native state, where he was reared to manhood. At the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion he, in September, 1861, enlisted in Company K, Tenth Maine Volunteer Infantry, with which he proceeded to the front and served until the expiration of his term, in the summer of 1863, when he re-enlisted in Company K, Twenty-ninth Maine Veteran Volunteer Infantry, with which he served until July, 1866, when he received his honorable discharge, having been sergeant major of his regiment during the last year. He took part in the battles of South Mountain, Winchester, Culpeper, Antietam, South Mountain, Fisher's Hill, Cedar Creek and many other engagements and skirmishes of somewhat less importance. In the battle of Cedar Creek he received a severe wound and was there promoted for meritorious conduct on the field of battle. In 1864 his regiment went with Banks on the famous Red River expedition. Mr. Jumper had the distinction of taking part in the grand review of the victorious armies in the city of Washington after the Union arms had been crowned with victory, and thereafter his regiment continued in service for one year in South Carolina. He retains a deep interest in his old comrades in arms and signifies the same by his affiliation with the Grand Army of the Republic.

In 1866 Mr. Jumper removed to the state of Minnesota and in 1871 became manager of the Nicollet hotel in the city of Minneapolis, where he remained in this capacity until the spring of 1881, when he came to South Dakota and became the first settler on the town site of Aberdeen, with whose development and material upbuilding he has been prominently identified, ever showing a loyal and public-spirited interest in the city and state of his adoption. He opened the first general store in the town, and in 1883 organized the First National Bank of Aberdeen, of which he continued to be the president from that time forward until 1898, when he resigned. In 1897 President McKinley appointed him postmaster of the city, of which office he remained incumbent four years, while at the present time he is serving as deputy postmaster. He is a stalwart Republican in politics and has wielded no slight influence in its local councils and work. He was mayor of the city in 1893-4 and also served several terms as a member of the board of aldermen, and also as a member of the board of education. He is one of the prominent members of the Masonic fraternity in the state, having attained the thirty-third and highest degree in the Scottish-rite Masonry. He was the first commander of Damascus Commandery, No. 10, Knights Templar, of Aberdeen, which was organized in 1888, and in 1891 had the distinction of serving as grand commander of the grand commandery of Knights Templar of the state, while at the present time he is grand high priest of the grand chapter of Royal Arch Masons of South Dakota. He attends the Protestant Episcopal church, of which Mrs. Jumper is a communicant.

On the 9th of February, 1874, at Portland, Maine, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Jumper to Miss Ella May Hilt, who was born in Warren, that state, on the 31st of July, 1855, being a daughter of John and Nancy (Toner) Hilt.

JAMES MARSHALL LAWSON, who is engaged in the practice of the legal profession in the city of Aberdeen, is a native of the Old Dominion state, having been born in Virginia, on the 5th of January, 1863, his father, Rev. Orr Lawson, D. D., having been at that time a missionary in that section, in the interests of the Presbyterian church, and was compelled to leave the south a few weeks after the birth of the subject by reason of the animosity of the southern people, the war of the Rebellion being then in progress. The father of the subject was born in western Pennsylvania, as was also his wife, whose maiden name was Mary E. Marshall, and to the old Keystone state they returned upon leaving Virginia. Rev. Orr Lawson has long been a distinguished clergyman of the Presbyterian church and is now residing in Iowa, having attained the venerable age of seventy-five years, while his noble and devoted wife was summoned into eternal rest on the 17th of February, 1903, at the age of sixty-six years. Of their four children, two are yet living. The original progenitors of the Lawson and Marshall families in America came from the north of Ireland and the north of England in the colonial days, and both settled in western Pennsylvania, while representatives of the families did valiant service in the cause of independence during the war of the Revolution.

James M. Lawson passed his boyhood days in Pennsylvania, where he secured his early educational discipline in the public schools. At the age of twenty years he was matriculated in Princeton University, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1884, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He then entered the law department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, where he was graduated in 1886. Shortly after his graduation in law he came to Aberdeen, South Dakota, where he exposed his professional "shingle" in July, 1886, and made ready for the practice of law. He was soon established in a satisfactory business, while he is now one of the leading members of the bar of this section, retaining a representative clientage, and having had to do with much important litigation in the state federal courts, his prestige and precedence being the diametrical result of the proper application of his energies and abilities. He is financially interested in farming, and in mining developments in the Black Hills, and his success in temporal affairs has been of no equivocal order. In 1884-5 Mr. Lawson was a private in the Washington Artillery of Pottsville, Pennsylvania, the same being at the time a portion of the Fourth Regiment of the Pennsylvania State Guard. This company has had a long and distinguished history, having had an uninterrupted military existence since the war of 1812. It was in General Scott's army of occupation in the city of Mexico in 1847, and was one of the first five companies to volunteer for service in the Civil war under President Lincoln's first call, later receiving the thanks of congress for its prompt response to this exigent call. These five companies were in the city of Washington twenty-four hours in advance of all other troops. They passed through the city of Baltimore the day before the Sixth Massachusetts arrived there, and one of their men was seriously injured in a conflict with a mob of southern sympathizers, this being the first blood shed incidental to the great internecine conflict which followed. All five companies were from Pennsylvania, and served from Bull Run to Appomattox. The Washington Artillery was also with General Miles in Porto Rico during the late Spanish-American war.

Mr. Lawson has ever given an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party, and he is one of its leaders in the state. In 1893 he was speaker of the house of representatives, during the third general assembly of the new commonwealth, and since 1899 he has served continuously as the representative of the thirty-third senatorial district in the state senate, in which he has been an influential and valued worker, having been chairman of the judiciary committee during the sessions of 1899 and 1903, and chairman of the apportionment committee in 1901, while he has also held membership in other important circumstances of the senate. In 1899 he introduced and urged forward to enactment the bill establishing the Northern Normal and Industrial School at Aberdeen, and he has been consistently called the father of this excellent and valuable institution. In 1893 while a member of the house, he introduced the bill providing for the state geological survey. Senator Lawson's religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church, in which he was reared, and fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, in which he has attained the chivalric degrees, being a member of Damascus Commandery, No. 10, Knights Templar, in Aberdeen. The Senator remains a bachelor. He has a distinctive predilection for out-door life and sports afield and afloat, while he has announced as his fad or special fancy that of tree culture.

FRANK B. GANNON, president of the First National Bank of Aberdeen, was born in Genoa, Ottawa county, Ohio, on the 21st of October, 1851, being a son of William and Sarah A. (Compton) Gannon. The mother died in 1893. The father is a farmer by occupation, and still resides at Genoa, Ottawa county, Ohio. The subject secured his early educational training in the common schools, and when but fifteen years of age began to depend upon his own exertions in defraying the expenses of his school work. He continued to attend the public schools two and one-half years and also was for a short time a student in the Lebanon Normal School at Lebanon, Ohio. At the age of nineteen he began teaching in the district schools of Ohio, and through this means accumulated two hundred dollars, which practically served as the nucleus of his present fortune. In 1874 Mr. Gannon engaged in the meat-market business in Eaton Rapids, Michigan, continuing this enterprise five years, and being thereafter engaged in the boot and shoe business in the same town, for three years, at the expiration of which, in November, 1882, he came to Jamestown, Dakota territory, and shortly afterward located in Ellendale, both places being now in the state of North Dakota. In the latter village he engaged in the banking business under the title of Gannon, Smith & Company. In 1891 the institution was reorganized as a state bank, and was thereafter conducted under the firm name of F. B. Gannon & Company, until November, 1902, when it was reorganized as the First National Bank of Ellendale, our subject being elected president at the time and still being incumbent of this position. On the 7th of March, 1899, he became associated with J. H. Stuttle in purchasing a controlling stock in the First National Bank of Aberdeen, and of its institution he has since been president, having been a resident of Aberdeen since 1899.

In 1902 Mr. Gannon was one of the organizers of the Aberdeen Wholesale Grocery Company, of which he is treasurer, and this has become one of the leading commercial enterprises of this thriving city. Mr. Gannon has also been for a number of years prominently interested in the cattle business in North Dakota, and in company with his brother, W. H., he is the owner of one of the finest herds of full-blooded Herefords to be found in this section of the northwest. In politics he has ever maintained an independent attitude, giving his support to the men and measures meeting the approval of his judgment, but having no political ambition in a personal way. Mr. Gannon is a Mason, belonging to the blue lodge, the chapter, commandery, consistory and the Shrine. He is also a member of the Odd Fellows fraternity, holding membership at Ellendale, South Dakota.

On July 2, 1873, Mr. Gannon married Sarah Cook, of Sandusky county, Ohio. They became the parents of two sons: Deak, who died aged four years and eight months; and Ralph, who died aged eight months.

WILLIAM HENRY RODDLE, one of the pioneer settlers of what is now the attractive city of Brookings, is a native of the Badger state, which has made many contributions to the personnel of the best citizenship of South Dakota. He was born on a farm in Kenosha county, Wisconsin, on the 28th of December, 1850, being a son of William and Mary Roddle, the former of whom was born in England and the latter in New York city. For many generations the Roddle family has been identified with agricultural pursuits in the south of England, while the ancestors of the subject's mother were among the first to settle in what is now New York city, the lineage being of Holland Dutch extraction. The parents of the subject removed in 1860 from Wisconsin to Wilton, Waseca county, Minnesota, residing there until the time of their deaths, and were numbered among the sterling pioneers of that state.

William H. Roddle received his rudimentary education in the district schools and passed his boyhood days on the homestead farm, later continuing his studies in the public schools. In 1869, at the age of nineteen years, he secured a position as apprentice in a hardware establishment in Waseca, Minnesota, where he remained for the ensuing decade, during the last three years a member of the firm of J. M. Robertson & Company, at the expiration of which, in 1879, he came as a pioneer to the territory of Dakota and took up his residence in the little village of Medary, the then county seat of Brookings county. In October, 1879, he established himself in the hardware business in Brookings, South Dakota, meeting with success in the prosecution of the enterprise, with which he continued to be actively identified until 1896, when he disposed of his interests in this line. He took up the study of law a number of years ago and finally determined to complete a thorough course of technical reading, the result being that he thoroughly informed himself in the science of jurisprudence and was admitted to the bar of the state in 1901, since which time he has been successfully engaged in the practice in the city in which he has for so many years maintained his home, being a member of the well-known and representative law firm of Hall, Lawrence & Roddle.

In politics Mr. Roddle has ever been found staunchly arrayed in support of the principles and policies of the Republican party, in whose ranks he has been an active and efficient worker in South Dakota, both under the territorial and state regimes. In 1892 he was elected treasurer of Brookings county and was chosen as his own successor in 1894, thus serving four consecutive years. In 1896 he was the candidate of his party for the office of secretary of state, being victorious at the polls, where he secured a gratifying majority, and giving a most able and discriminating administration of the affairs of the important office. The popular appreciation of his services in this capacity was significantly manifested in 1898, when he was elected to succeed himself. Mr. Roddle is one of the prominent and appreciative members of the ancient and honored Masonic fraternity, and has the distinction of being past grand master of Masons of the state. His affiliations are with Brookings Lodge, No. 24, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Brookings Chapter, No. 18, Royal Arch Masons; Brookings Commandery, No. 14, Knights Templar; El Riad Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, in Sioux Falls, and Brookings Chapter, No. 15, Order of the Eastern Star, while he is also identified with Brookings Lodge, No. 40, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in his home city, being one of its charter members.

On the 1st of January, 1876, Mr. Roddle was united in marriage to Miss Fannie R. Stevens, who was born in Waushara county, Wisconsin, on the 21st of June, 1856, being a daughter of Royce F. and Lucinda M. Stevens. Of this union have been born two daughters, Mary E., wife of F. J. Alton, of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, and Anna F., who died in infancy.

CHARLES F. HOLMES, one of the well-known business men of Aberdeen, is a native of the Badger state and a representative of one of its pioneer families, having been born in Green Lake county, Wisconsin, on the 5th of June, 1852, and being a son of Anson L. Holmes, who was born in the city of Indianapolis, Indiana, coming of stanch old Scottish lineage. Anson L. Holmes removed with his family to Wisconsin in an early day and there passed the remainder of his life, which was devoted principally to agricultural pursuits and lumbering. The subject of this sketch was reared and educated in Wisconsin, and in 1876, as a young man of twenty-four years, he removed to Nevada, becoming one of the pioneer gold miners in that section of the Union. He followed placer mining for a number of years and was fairly successful in his efforts. In 1879 he returned to Wisconsin, where he passed the winter of that year, and in the spring of 1880 he came to the present state of South Dakota and located in Watertown, where he continued to reside until the spring of 1882, when he came to Aberdeen, taking up land in the vicinity and in due time perfecting his title to the same. He then engaged in the cigar business in the city, while he was also identified with the police department for eight years, during a portion of which he was chief of the same, proving a most able executive. In 1897 he engaged in the drug business at the corner of Main and Third streets, where he continued operations until March, 1904, when he sold out. In politics he is a stalwart Republican and fraternally is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America.

T. S. TEED, a successful farmer and stock raiser of Brown county, is a native of Erie county, Pennsylvania, and dates his birth from the 7th day of October, 1852. On coming to Brown county, in the spring of 1888, Mr. Teed settled on a tract of land west of the town of Westpoint, and engaged in agricultural pursuits and stock raising. He improved his farm, rendered it highly tillable and continued to live thereon until 1893, when he purchased the place, twelve miles north of Aberdeen, where he has since lived and prospered. As an agriculturist he has made a creditable record, being up-to-date in his methods of tilling the soil, progressive in all he undertakes and his well-directed labors and judicious management have resulted so greatly to his advantage that he is now recognized as one of the leading farmers of the community in which he resides. While devoting considerable attention to farming, he relies chiefly upon stock raising, being largely interested in cattle, especially cows, from which he derives every year a handsome income. He keeps nothing but first-class stock, selects or raises his animals with especial reference to their value as milkers and for some time past has supplied several creameries with the larger part of the cream used in their business, besides selling considerable quantities to individual customers. Mr. Teed was raised in a country where great attention is given to the manufacture of butter and cheese, and he came west with the intention of engaging in the cheese business, but failed to secure enough cows to justify him in the attempt. Failing to carry into effect his original object, he turned his attention to dairying and being thoroughly conversant with the business has made it quite profitable. The farm on which Mr. Teed now lives consists of one hundred and sixty acres, lying contiguous to Elm river, all of it bottom land with a soil of great depth and remarkable fertility. It is admirably adapted to general agriculture, producing abundantly all the crops of grains, fruits and vegetables grown in this latitude, the part devoted to pasturage being thickly covered with grasses and herbage, noted for nutritious qualities.

Financially Mr. Teed has met with success commensurate with the energy and ability displayed in the prosecution of his various interests and he is now classed with the enterprising, well-to-do men of Brown county. Politically he is independent in all the term implies, adhering to men and measures best calculated to further the interests of the people. Mr. Teed has made a careful study of sociology and kindred subjects and entertains views relative to present social and political conditions which some people would pronounce radical and heterodox. Convinced of the justness of his position, however, he expresses himself fearlessly and is able at all times to maintain the soundness of his opinions. He is identified with the Tacoma Park Association, an organization for the purpose of awakening an interest in social questions and disseminating knowledge pertaining thereto, being one of the leaders of this school of thought in his part of the country.

NELS H. PETERSON is a native of Denmark, where he was born in 1854. He received his early education in his native land, where he was reared to the age of eighteen years, when he started forth to try his fortune in America, whither he came in the year 1872. He made his way westward to the city of Chicago and was for a time employed in railroad work and then turned his attention to farm work, in which he was engaged near Woodstock, Illinois, for two and one-half years, having in the meanwhile secured a small farm of his own in that section. At the expiration of the period noted he disposed of his interests there and came as a pioneer to what is now Moody county, South Dakota. Here he took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres, and as the years have passed prosperity has attended his efforts and he has added to the area of his landed estate until he is now the owner of six hundred and forty acres of as fertile and valuable land as can be found in the state.

CHARLES WESTBROOK WALDRON is a native of Lowell, Massachusetts, where he was born on the 22d of January, 1853, being a son of George P. and Lydia E. Waldron, both members of old and honored New England families. He received his early educational training in the schools of Yankton, where he passed his boyhood days. In the fall of 1876, at the age of twenty-three years, he started for the Black Hills, proceeding by boat to Fort Pierre and thence proceeding with mule teams to his destination. In the following year he engaged in freighting, with ox-teams, between Fort Pierre and the Black Hills, and continued to be identified with this enterprise until 1882, in the meanwhile enduring many hardships and encountering great perils from the attacks of the hostile Indians. In 1882, when the Cheyenne Indians came back to their former hunting grounds, Mr. Waldron was near at the time of the massacre of the freighters at Cheyenne river crossing. After arriving at Rapid City one of the Reed Brothers' freighting trains was corralled by the Indians, on Box Elder creek. After night had fallen one of the brothers succeeding in making his way to town and there asked assistance, having traversed a distance of nine miles. Mr. Waldron and five other freighters responded to his call and returned with him and succeeded in bringing the train into town. The subject also had several other encounters with the aborigines, but escaped injury. He was successful in his freighting business, which he finally sold to the Northwestern Stage and Transportation Company in 1882. He then engaged in operating a ferry across the Missouri river between Pierre and Fort Pierre, conducting the same for two years, and then turning his attention to the raising of cattle and horses, in which he was engaged for the ensuing five years, since which time he has given his attention exclusively to the raising of high-grade horses, breeding fine roadsters of the Hambletonian type and also Percheron draft horses. He has at the present time about two thousand head of horses on his fine stock ranch, and this indicates how extensive is the scale upon which he conducts his operations, giving him the distinctive priority over all other horse breeders in the state. His ranch comprises several thousand acres and is equipped with substantial buildings for the proper housing and care of his stock, while the facilities are of the best modern type in all particulars. His ranch is located on Mule creek, in Stanley county, four miles from the Black Hills road and sixty-five miles west of Fort Pierre. Mr. Waldron has a fine modern residence in the city of Pierre and gives a general supervision to his ranch and his other capitalistic enterprises, while he is known as one of the progressive and reliable citizens of the state in which he has passed practically all his life. In politics he has been a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, except in 1896, when he identified himself with Bryan as a Populist, though when the Democracy and Populists amalgamated he forsook them and returned to the Republican ranks. Fraternally he is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Degree of Honor, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Modern Brotherhood of America.

On the 30th of June, 1885, Mr. Waldron was united in marriage with Miss Jane E. Van Metre, of Fort Pierre, who was born on the 21st of September, 1861. She is a daughter of Arthur C. and Mary (Aungie) Van Metre, and passed her girlhood days in Vermillion, where she received her early education, and at the age of seventeen years she accompanied her parents upon their removal to Brule county. She attended the public schools of Vermillion until she had attained the age of fourteen years, and thereafter served an apprenticeship at the printer's trade, becoming an expert compositor. In 1879 she rejoined her parents in Brule, where she remained until the fall of the following year, when she went to Ripon, Wisconsin, where she attended college for two years, returning in time to join her father and other members of the family in the buffalo hunt in Montana. She much prizes the heirloom which is in her possession, the rifle carried for many years by her honored father, who had killed more than three hundred buffaloes with the same. In the spring of 1883 Mrs. Waldron engaged in teaching in the Indian school at DuPree's camp, on the Cheyenne river, while she also was an instructor in music for some time, being a skilled musician, and she continued her earnest endeavors in this line until the time of her marriage. She and her husband, in 1886, located on Bad river, sixty-five miles from Fort Pierre, where they established a trading store and she also entered claim to three hundred and twenty acres of land adjoining Fort Pierre on the north, in 1889, taking it under the provisions of the treaty made with the Indians in 1868. Title to this property cannot be transferred by sale or exchange, the holding depending upon the retention by those of Indian blood, be it much or little. As Mrs. Waldron's father was not of Indian extraction she is not a citizen of the United States, but through her Indian lineage she feels that she will be able to hold her claim, as all treaties have recognized Indian blood, even if represented in remote scions of the stock. Governor Lee appointed Mrs. Waldron an honorary member of the woman's board of managers for South Dakota at the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo, and while she took an active part in promoting the work she did not attend the exposition in person. In the same year the Governor also appointed her a member of the woman's board of investigation of penal and charitable institutions of the state, and she proved an active and efficient worker in the position, her term having expired in 1903. Mr. and Mrs. Waldron have had six children, all of whom are living except Carl Prentiss, who died at the age of sixteen months. The others are Arthur Westbrook, Alice Island, Allan Bryan, George P. and John Charles.

DANIEL HOWARD SMITH, who is incumbent of the office of railroad commissioner for the northern district of South Dakota, is a native of the state of Wisconsin, having been born in Marquette county, on the 18th of December, 1864, and being a son of Rev. William and Elizabeth H. (Chambers) Smith, both natives of the state of Pennsylvania. The father of the subject was a clergyman of the United Presbyterian church, in whose work he continued to be zealously engaged until his death, which occurred in July, 1873. His devoted wife survived him many years, being summoned into eternal rest in April, 1898. They became the parents of eight children, of whom four are living.

The subject of this review received his early education in the public schools of his native county, and continued to reside in Wisconsin until he had attained the age of eighteen years, having been there engaged in farming until 1883, when, in company with his mother, he came to South Dakota and located in the village of Blunt. In the following year he entered the employ of the Van Dusen Grain Company, and in 1885 was made agent of this concern at Harrold, Hughes county, where he remained until December, 1886, when he went to southern California, where he passed one year. Upon his return to South Dakota, in 1888, Mr. Smith located in the village of Miller, where he re-entered the employ of the Van Dusen Grain Company, to whose interests he continued to devote his attention until 1890, when he established himself in the retail grocery business in Miller, under the firm name of D. H. Smith & Company. In December, 1894, he disposed of his interests in this line and on the 1st of the following January he accepted a position in the office of the state commissioner of schools and public lands, taking up his residence in the capital city of the state at that time and continuing to serve in the capacity noted until January 1, 1903, when he returned to Miller.

On the 4th of November, 1902, he was elected to his present office as railroad commissioner of the northern district of the state, and in this position he has given most able and efficient service, justifying the confidence reposed in him and indicated in his unanimous election. Mr. Smith has served as township treasurer, as a member of the board of education and as city assessor of Miller. He is an active and earnest worker in the upbuilding of his city. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order and the Knights of Pythias. When a young man he became a member of the Presbyterian church and is an active and zealous church worker.

On Christmas day, 1888, Mr. Smith was united in marriage to Miss Eva R. Dunn, of Millersburg, Illinois, and she entered into the life eternal on the 19th of March, 1890, being survived by her only child, C. Everett. On the 28th of November, 1892, Mr. Smith wedded Miss Georgiana Clayton, of Ludington, Michigan, and they have two children, Harry A. and Fred C.

JOHN H. JACKSON, president of the Jackson Hardware Company, of Aberdeen, is known as one of the representative business men of the city. In 1888 Mr. Jackson established himself in the retail hardware business in Aberdeen, and soon gained a wide reputation as a progressive and able business man. The location of Aberdeen is such that from the start there came a demand for the accommodations afforded by a wholesale establishment in the line, and within three years after the inception of the enterprise fully seventy-five per cent. of his business was of the wholesale nature. In 1900 he found it expedient to turn his entire attention to the jobbing trade, and the business has been that of a distinctively jobbing house since the year mentioned. The business has doubled in extent within three years, the annual sales having reached an average aggregate of a quarter of a million dollars. In 1903 the fine modern building now used was completed, which has an aggregate floor space of twenty-six thousand square feet. The Jackson Hardware Company was incorporated in 1902, with a capital stock of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Three traveling salesmen are employed by the house, who represent its interests throughout its extended trade territory.

J. H. Jackson was born in the province of Quebec, Canada, on the 22d of May, 1853, being a son of Alonzo and Mary J. Jackson. He was reared in his native province to the age of twenty-four years, and there received excellent educational advantages. In 1877 he removed to Marshall, Lyon county, Minnesota, where he gave his attention to farming until 1881, when he came to what is now the state of South Dakota and opened a hardware store in Ordway, Brown county, this being prior to the time of the completion of the line of the Chicago, Minneapolis & St. Paul Railroad to Aberdeen. In 1883 he also opened a store in Columbia, where he continued to be actively engaged in business until coming to Aberdeen, in 1888, since which time his business career has already been outlined in this article. In politics Mr. Jackson is a member of the Republican party, and takes an active interest in its cause. He was elected the first mayor of Columbia, South Dakota. During territorial days he served on the staff of Governor Church as commissary of supply, with the rank of major. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, having attained the Knight Templar, Scottish Rite and Mystic Shrine degrees.

On the 20th of February, 1889, Mr. Jackson was united in marriage to Miss Nora Ringrose, who was born and reared in Wisconsin, and who was a resident of Aberdeen at the time of their marriage. They are the parents of five children, namely: Helen M., John H., Genevieve, Alice and Edward.

SAMUEL C. HEDGER, one of the representative business men of the city of Aberdeen, is a native of Michigan, having been born on a farm in Monroe county, on the 15th of March, 1853, a son of B. H. and Mary A. Hedger, both of whom died in this state. He received his early educational training in the common schools and supplemented this by a course of study in that celebrated institution, the Michigan State Agricultural College, near Lansing, this having been the first college of the sort established in the Union and one which has ever remained a model for all others. After leaving college he was variously engaged for a time and finally engaged in the general merchandise business in South Lyon, Oakland county, Michigan, where he remained until 1882, having been successful in his operations. In March of that year he came to Brown county, South Dakota, and located in Columbia, this county, but shortly afterward took up a homestead near the present village of Detroit. He was the founder of this village, having platted the town on his land and having named the same in honor of the metropolis of his native state. In 1885 Mr. Hedger was elected auditor of Brown county, and this caused him to take up his residence in Aberdeen. He was twice re-elected to this responsible office, thus serving for six consecutive years and gaining unqualified popular commendation. After retiring from office he was for eight years employed as traveling salesman for George D. Barnard & Company in South Dakota, still retaining his residence in Aberdeen, and since that time he has here been established in the real-estate and insurance business, receiving a large and representative support in both departments of his enterprise, while he is also one of the stockholders in the Aberdeen Gas and Electric Light Company and other local enterprises. In politics he is stanchly arrayed in support of the principles and policies advanced by the Republican party, and fraternally he has attained the Knights Templar degrees in the Masonic order, thus completing the York rite.

On the 22d of February, 1878, in Oakland county, Michigan, Mr. Hedger was united in marriage to Miss Mary Bullock, who was born and reared in the state of Michigan, and who was summoned into eternal rest in Columbia, South Dakota, August 16, 1888. Her only child, Ivy, is now the wife of Frederick Bartholomew, of San Francisco, California. On the 28th of April, 1896, Mr. Hedger wedded Miss Elizabeth Chalmers, who was born in Illinois, where she was reared and educated, and they have one child, Jeanette.

JOHN QUINN ANDERSON, government trader at the Crow Creek Indian agency, in Buffalo county, is a native of the state of Missouri, having been born in Lagrange, Lewis county, on the 1st of January, 1866, and being a son of Captain Lee Anderson, who was born and reared in Virginia, being of Scotch ancestry. He was an early settler in Missouri, where he passed the closing years of his life, having died when the subject was but seven years of age, and the latter having passed away five years later, at Dallas, Texas, in 1878. He thereafter lived in the home of an uncle until he had attained the age of fourteen years, having in the meanwhile attended the public schools as opportunity afforded. At the early age noted he went to Iowa, where he was for two years employed in a creamery, and then coming to what is now the state of South Dakota, where he arrived in the year 1882, locating in Mitchell, Davison county, and turning his hand to such work as he could secure. He assisted in building a portion of the line of the railroad between Mitchell and Aberdeen when nineteen years of age, and held the position of tie foreman. He early identified himself with the cattle industry, buying and selling stock, while during the past few years he has also raised cattle, on a constantly increasing scale. In 1894 he started a stock ranch sixty miles west of Chamberlain, in Brule county, and has there continued operations most successfully, while he is at the present time one of the executive officers of the Western Stock Growers' Association. For a number of years past he has been a government beef contractor, and since March, 1901, he has been bonded Indian trader at Crow Creek Indian agency. In politics he is a stanch Republican, and fraternally is identified with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias.

On the 16th of November, 1898, Mr. Anderson was united in marriage to Miss Clara L. Willrodt, who was born in the city of Davenport, Iowa, on the 30th of July, 1874, being a daughter of Senator Lawrence H. and Mary (Wagner) Willrodt, who are now residents of Brule county, South Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson have no children.

When Mr. Anderson resided in Lyman county, South Dakota, he was named as a presidential elector for this year. He was a representative in the legislature from Lyman and Stanley counties in 1901.

ROSWELL BOTTUM, one of the leading real-estate men of Aberdeen, was born in Fond du Lac county, Wisconsin, on the 3d day of August, 1857. He spent his boyhood and youth in his native state and attended for a number of years the public schools, supplementing the training thus received by a course in Ripon College. Leaving that institution, he engaged in teaching, which profession he followed in Wisconsin for a period of three years, and at the expiration of that time came to South Dakota, locating in Spink county in 1879, and took up a homestead near the town of Redfield. When that county was set apart as an independent jurisdiction, Mr. Bottum took an active part in its organization, which being effected, he was appointed county treasurer, holding the office one term. He discharged his official functions in an eminently satisfactory manner, in addition to which he also exercised a potent influence in shaping county affairs generally, the meanwhile devoting all of his leisure to the improvement of his homestead, which increased greatly in value as the country became more thickly populated. After living on his place for about six years, he removed to Faulkton, Faulk county, where, in partnership with his brother, J. H. Bottum, he established the Citizens Bank, of which he was cashier during the four years of the institution's existence. Disposing of his interests in Faulkton, Mr. Bottum, in 1892, changed his residence to Watertown, where he was engaged in the real-estate business until 1896, when he found a larger and more favorable field in the city of Aberdeen.

Since the latter year Mr. Bottum has built up a large and prosperous business, which includes the handling of all kinds of city and country real estate in many of the best counties of South Dakota, besides acting as agent for F. R. Clement, of Minneapolis, whose extensive landed interests in this state are subject to his management. He has consummated a number of large deals, for which liberal commissions were received, and his patronage has steadily grown, until in magnitude and importance his business now compares favorably with that of the most successful agencies of the kind in the state.

Mr. Bottum is a thirty-second-degree Scottish-Rite Mason, and has been honored with a number of high official positions in the brotherhood; he is an active worker in the lodge at Aberdeen and like all true members of the mystic tie, endeavors to square his life and control his conduct according to its precepts.

Mr. Bottum is a married man and the father of two children, a son, Frank, and a daughter by the name of Margaret. His wife was formerly Miss Alla A. Beardsley, of Redfield, South Dakota, and the ceremony by which her name was changed to the one she now so worthily wears took place in that town on the 23d of August, 1887.

ANDREW THORSON, one of Brown county's well-known farmers, residing on his large farm four miles northeast from the city of Aberdeen, is a native of Norway, where he was born on August 24, 1848, being the son of Thore Thorson. At the age of nineteen years the subject became a sailor before the mast, and sailed all over western European waters. After following the sea until 1871, he returned to his old home in Norway, and in 1872 he came to America, landing at New York. From New York he came direct to St. Peter, Minnesota, from where he went to New Ulm, Minnesota, and took employment on the construction of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad. He worked on the grading and in other capacities until the road was constructed to Watertown, South Dakota, putting in the summer months on the work and returning to

St. Peter, Minnesota, for the winters. In the spring of 1880 Mr. Thorson located land in Brown county, South Dakota, taking up one hundred and sixty acres, which is his present home, but continued to work on the railroad until 1893, when he diverted all his attention to farming. He now owns over fourteen thousand acres, in two pieces, and carries on operations on a large scale, growing grain and raising horses, cattle, etc. Of late years, however, his health has been poor, and he has traveled considerably, spending much of his time in California.

At St. Peter, Minnesota, in 1881, Mr. Thorson was married to Carrie Peterson, who was born in Norway, and came to America in 1870. To this union the following six children have been born: Theodore, Mina, Annie, Christian, Arthur and Josephina. Mr. Thorson is a Republican.

WALLACE L. DOW, one of the most talented and best known architects in the state of South Dakota, comes of stanch New England stock and is himself a native of the old Granite state, having been born in Croydon, Sullivan county, New Hampshire, on the 21st of September, 1844, and being a son of Hial and Lura (Powers) Dow. The father of our subject was a carpenter and building contractor at Newport, New Hampshire, and under his direction Wallace L. learned the trade in his youth, while his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the local schools and Powers Institute, at Bernardston, Massachusetts. Mr. Dow's early ambition was to follow the profession of architecture, and he devoted all his energies for several years to preparing himself for work along this line. From 1861 to 1866 he was engaged in the heating and plumbing business in Springfield, Massachusetts, the knowledge thus gained proving of much value to him in connection with the practical work of his profession in later years. At the expiration of the period noted he returned to Newport, New Hampshire, where he organized the firm of W. L. Dow & Company, for the purpose of contracting and also manufacturing builders' supplies. An extensive enterprise was built up by the firm and he continued to be identified with the same for several years. He then devoted a few years to the study of architecture, under the effective direction of his uncle, Edward Dow, a prominent architect in Concord, New Hampshire, and then came west, in the autumn of 1880, locating in Pierre, South Dakota. In February of the following year Hon. N. G. Ordway, then governor of the territory, appointed him a member of the board of directors to whom was assigned charge of building the territorial penitentiary in Sioux Falls, to which city he removed in 1882, while he has ever since made this his home and business headquarters. He was chairman of the board for four years, within which time the penitentiary was completed and placed in operation, the same being now the state prison of South Dakota. Since the completion of this important work Mr. Dow has devoted his entire attention to architectural work, and has made plans for most of the public buildings in the state, while his professional services have been in requisition outside the limits of the commonwealth. The development of the building-stone industry in his section of the state has been accomplished largely through his efforts. In politics he is stanchly arrayed in support of the principles and policies for which the Republican party stands sponsor.

In 1865 Mr. Dow was united in marriage to Miss Lois M. Whipple, of Croydon, New Hampshire, and they have three sons, namely: Edward W., who is associated with his father in business; Baron C., who has been for many years an attache of the well-known Sioux Falls newspaper, the Argus-Leader; and Annie H., who is at home.

McARTHUR, dealer in agricultural implements in the city of Aberdeen, is a native of the state of Minnesota, having been born in Plainview, Wabasha county, on the 11th of September, 1871, and being a son of John and Mary (Campbell) McArthur, who now reside in the city of Seattle, Washington. The subject received his elementary educational discipline in the public schools of Minnesota, and was ten years of age at the time of his parents' removal to Ordway, South Dakota, in 1881. Here he continued his educational work, the family removing to Aberdeen in 1886, and in the high school of this city he was graduated as a member of the class of 1891, having completed the scientific course. After leaving school Mr. McArthur became identified with his father in the implement business, being admitted to partnership in 1893, under the firm name of John McArthur & Sons. This association continued until 1894, when the firm of C. A. McArthur & Company was organized. Under this title the enterprise was continued until November, 1901, when the subject became the sole owner, having individually conducted the business since that time. He handles a full line of agricultural implements and machinery, including the McCormick harvesters and mowers, the John Deer plows, the Gaar-Scott threshing machines and engines, windmills, gasoline engines, the United States cream separators, Winona wagons and a select stock of carriages and buggies. She was well and favorably known in Aberdeen, having here held the position of delivery clerk in the postoffice for some time prior to her marriage, and both she and her husband are active in the social life of the community. They have two children, Everett and Stuart.

This association continued four years and since that time he has conducted his operations individually. He erected the public-library building and many of the best business blocks and private residences in the city, while his methods have always stood voucher for the best of workmanship and the most absolute fidelity to contract. of the order in the state. On the 4th of October, 1878, the subject of this sketch was married to Carrie Franson, who was born in Norway, on the 28th of December, 1858, and they have six children, namely: Forest, Guerdon, Mae, Bernie, Etta and Ruth.

ZECHARIAH SPITLER, one of the representative citizens of Aberdeen, was born on a farm in Newton county, Indiana, on the 24th of March, 1855, being a son of Zechariah and Sally (Rider) Spitler, the former of whom was born in Virginia and the latter in Pennsylvania. The paternal ancestors settled in the Old Dominion state in the colonial epoch of our national history, the name being prominently identified with the annals of that patrician section of the Union, where a fine old homestead has been retained in the family for many generations. The maternal ancestors were numbered among the early settlers in York county, Pennsylvania. The parents of the subject became residents of western Indiana in the latter 'thirties, and there their marriage was solemnized in 1842, while for fifty-eight years they resided continuously on one farm, retiring to town for the remainder of their old age. The subject received his early education in the common schools of his native county and supplemented this discipline by a course in an academy at Battle Ground, Indiana, in which institution he was graduated in the early 'seventies, after which he gave his attention principally to teaching in the country schools of Indiana and farming until September, 1880, when he entered the law department of the famous University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, where he was graduated in 1882, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Within the same year he came to the territory of Dakota, locating in Frederick, Brown county, where he remained until the fall of 1887, engaged in the land business and in a desultory practice of his profession. He then took up his residence in the city of Aberdeen, where he was most of the time in the employ of Lincoln & Boyd, in the real-estate mortgage business until the 1st of January, 1901, since which time he has been personally engaged in the real-estate business as an individual enterprise, never having entered actively into the practice of his profession. He is one of the incorporators of the Aberdeen Clothing Company, a manufacturing institution. Soon after coming to the territory Mr. Spitler took up tracts of government land, and he has given much time, thought and energy to the handling of realty for others as well as his own properties, controlling a large and important business in the line at the present time. In politics Mr. Spitler is an advocate of the basic principles of the Democratic party, is in favor of free trade or of tariff for revenue only, while he is unequivocally opposed to the expansion policy which has been manifest in governmental affairs since the late Spanish-American war. He and his wife are zealous members of the Presbyterian church and are earnest workers in the cause of the divine Master.

On the 20th of November, 1887, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Spitler to Miss Sarah Drum, who was born in Chittenden county, Vermont, and their only child, Lela Mae, was born on the 14th of November, 1889.

FRANKLIN T. JACKSON, the immediate subject of this sketch, remained at the parental home until the time of his marriage, in 1883, having received his educational training in the public schools and the Curtis Business College, in Minneapolis. After his marriage he removed to Redwood county, Minnesota, where he engaged in farming and stock growing, in which line of enterprise he there continued until 1886, when he came to South Dakota, arriving in McCook county, on the 22d of January, in company with his wife and child, while his equipment for the winning of success and independence in the new home was summed up in his energy, integrity and determination, his visible accessories being represented in a span of mules and a lumber wagon. He took up a pre-emption claim of one hundred and sixty acres and there engaged in farming and stock raising. In the fall of 1886 Mr. Jackson took up his residence in the village of Montrose, where he devoted his attention to the buying and shipping of stock for the ensuing eight years. In 1894 he took up his residence in Salem, where he has since been successfully engaged in the same line of enterprise, being one of the leading stock buyers of this section of the state. He also owns and superintends the operation of more than a thousand acres of farming land in this county, and he is known as one of McCook county's most progressive and alert business men. In politics Mr. Jackson is a staunch Republican, and for a number of years past has been a prominent figure in local affairs of a public nature. In the fall of 1902 he was elected to represent his district in the state legislature, and his course has been such as to amply justify the choice of the voters of the district. He is affiliated with Fortitude Lodge, No. 73, Free and Accepted Masons; Salem Chapter, No. 34, Royal Arch Masons; Oriental Consistory, No. 1, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, in Yankton; Salem Lodge, No. 106, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Sioux Falls Lodge, No. 262, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Salem Lodge, No. 60, Knights of Pythias; Salem Lodge, Ancient Order of United Workmen; and Ramsey Camp, No. 5634, Modern Woodmen of America, of which he served two terms as consul.

On the 19th of July, 1883, Mr. Jackson was united in marriage to Miss Nettie M. Gibbs, of Lake City, Minnesota, and they are the parents of four children, namely: John A., Fay F., Carol F. and Helen H.

THOMAS M. SHANAFELT, D. D., state superintendent of Baptist missions in South Dakota and North Dakota, was born April 1, 1840, at Brinkerton, Clarion county, Pennsylvania. He came to his present position in April, 1888. Dr. Shanafelt is a graduate of Blackwell University, 1861. He served in the Rebellion as a private in the Pennsylvania volunteer infantry. He is at present a member of the board of commissioners for the South Dakota Soldiers' Home and vice-president of the State Historical Society. He is deeply interested in historical topics and is the author of an authoritative history of the Baptist church in South Dakota, published in 1899. Outside his sacred calling in which he has won high distinction, he is a public-spirited citizen and a leader in every good work. Few men possess in a greater degree that habit of persistent industry which makes every minute count for good.

DELORME W. ROBINSON, M. D., Pierre, South Dakota, president of the state board of health, was born October 26, 1854, at Pulaski, Pennsylvania. He was educated at Allegheny College, Meadville, Pennsylvania, and received medical training in the medical department of Wooster University, Cleveland, Ohio, and took post-graduate work in the Chicago Medical School and at the Kentucky School of Medicine, Louisville. He located in Pierre in 1882. Dr. Robinson has attained the highest eminence in his profession in South Dakota and it is probable that he would readily be accorded the first place upon the vote of his co-professioners, both in general practice and surgery. His success in capital operations has been somewhat phenomenal. Dr. Robinson is a loyal citizen of his city and the state, progressive in all of his views and active in his support of public measures. He was the author of the first territorial law creating a board of health and also of the first state law upon the subject. He has served three terms as a member of the state board of health and has written extensively upon medical topics. He takes great interest in studious historical researches and his contributions to the history of the northwest are recognized authorities. His contributions of one hundred and fifteen notes upon South Dakota history, including careful studies of most of the famous Indians, to the first volume of the Collections of the State Historical Society, have won many encomiums from scholars and critics. His wife, the daughter of the renowned Dr. William Maxfield Blackburn, died in 1891. He has two children, a daughter of fifteen and a son aged twelve.

CHARLES A. JEWETT is a native of the old Buckeye state, having been born in Newark, Licking county, Ohio, on the 7th of February, 1848, and being a son of David D. and Mary (Taylor) Jewett, natives of Ohio. The father of the subject was engaged in the grocery trade in Newark for many years and was one of the honored citizens and successful business men of that section. He died in 1891, and his wife passed away in 1848. They became the parents of ten children, of whom four are living at the present time. The subject secured his early educational training in the public schools and continued his studies until he had attained the age of seventeen years, when he commenced work in his father's grocery store, being thus engaged until 1870, when he removed to Kansas City, Missouri, and embarked in the wholesale grocery business upon his own responsibility. At the expiration of two years he disposed of his interests in that city and removed to Independence, Kansas, where he was established in the same line of trade until 1875, when he sold out, passing the ensuing seven years as traveling salesman for prominent wholesale grocery houses, in New York and Chicago. In July, 1882, he entered into a partnership with his brothers, Harvey and R. N., and opened a grocery house in Aberdeen, South Dakota, in which city he took up his residence in March of the following year. There he remained until June, 1888, when he removed to Sioux Falls, where he has since maintained his home, the enterprise in Aberdeen being still continued, under the corporate titles of Jewett Brothers. At the time of taking up his abode in Sioux Falls the firm of Jewett Brothers & Jewett, which is now incorporated under the laws of the state, purchased the wholesale grocery business of Ward & Frick, in this city, and forthwith began to expand the scope of the enterprise, and this concern figures as the first distinctively wholesale house in South Dakota, and its business has grown to magnificent proportions under the able management of our subject and his coadjutors. In March, 1893, a branch establishment was opened at Sheldon, Iowa, and the trade of the concern now ramifies thoroughly a very wide area of country, the facilities being unexcelled and the reputation of the concern unassailable. In 1884 the firm shipped the first carload of sugar ever brought into the state, the same having been consigned to their establishment in Aberdeen. In 1897 its shipment of sugar into the state reached the enormous aggregate of two hundred and forty carloads, which one item gives evidence of the great and substantial growth of the business, which in that year represented transactions amounting to more than one million and two hundred thousand dollars. In 1902 the concern shipped in three hundred and thirty-three carloads of sugar, averaging forty thousand pounds to a car, more than double the weight per car of the shipment of 1897, while the aggregate of the business for the year reached more than two and a quarter millions of dollars. The branch establishment at Sheldon is conducted under the title of Jewett Brothers & Company, and this is also incorporated. In 1901 Mr. Jewett effected the organization of the Jewett Fruit & Fish Company, of Sioux Falls, of which he has been president from the start, and the concern has likewise built up a large and prosperous business. In 1902 he organized the Manchester Biscuit Company, of Sioux Falls, of which he is president, while he is also vice-president of the Andrew Kuhn Company, wholesale grocers, in Sioux Falls. Each of these large enterprises has felt the influence of his progressive spirit and high administrative talents, and he is held in high regard in business circles and is esteemed by all who know him. In 1903 Mr. Jewett organized the Jewett Drug Company, of Aberdeen, the same conducting a wholesale and general jobbing business, and he is president of this corporation.

Mr. Jewett has taken an active interest in public affairs, as touching civic advancement, and prior to 1896 he was a stalwart supporter of the Republican party. In the campaign of that year he found his views not in harmony with the platform of the party and has since maintained an independent attitude, taking the stand that he is today a Lincoln Republican and being well fortified in his convictions and opinions as to matters of public policy. He has been a delegate to both state and county conventions of the Republican party and has never wavered in his allegiance to its basic and primary principles. He was for two years president of the Sioux Falls Daily Press Company, but has now disposed of his interests in the same.

On the 12th of May, 1869, Mr. Jewett was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Ryan, of Troy, New York. No children have been born of this union, but they have reared and educated two nieces of Mrs. Jewett.

DANIEL J. CONWAY, junior member of the well-known law firm of Muller & Company, of Sioux Falls, is a native of the state of Illinois, having been born in the city of LaSalle, on the 8th of March, 1860, and being a son of Daniel and Mary (McTiernan) Conway, the former of whom was born in Sligo, Ireland, both in Drumkeerin, County Leitrim, Ireland, both representative of staunch old Irish lineage. The subject received his early educational training in the public schools of his native city, and later continued his studies in St. Viateur's College, in Bourbonnais, Illinois. He later was for two years a resident of Dixon, that state, where he took a course of study in the Northern Illinois Normal College, and in the meanwhile began the study of law, under an able preceptor in that place. He then removed to Sioux county, Iowa, where he held the office of deputy auditor of Sioux county from January, 1888, until March, 1889. In the month last mentioned he came to Sioux Falls, where he engaged in the real-estate business, to which he devoted his attention until 1891, having in the meanwhile secured admission to the bar of the state, while he is also a practitioner in the federal courts. In the year noted he entered into a professional partnership with David E. Powers, under the firm name of Powers & Conway, and this alliance continued until 1893, when he became associated with Henry A. Muller, under the title of Muller & Conway, which has ever since obtained, the firm controlling a large and representative legal business and having distinctive precedence both as attorneys and counselors.

Mr. Conway has been one of the wheel-horses of the Democratic party in the county and state and has wielded marked influence in the party councils, while his leadership has been acknowledged and appreciated. He was manager of the Democratic campaign in the state in 1896, and has been secretary of the state central committee of his party for the past six years. In 1897 he was appointed United States commissioner, an office of which he is still incumbent, and he served with great acceptability as city attorney of Sioux Falls from May, 1898, until May, 1900. In religious belief Mr. Conway is a Roman Catholic.

On the 26th of November, 1891, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Conway to Miss Jane Frances Conness, of Kansas City, Missouri, and they have five children, namely: Henrietta M., M. Roberta, Marie Beulah, Frances F. and Daniel Walter.

GRANVILLE G. BENNETT was born at Middletown, Butler county, Ohio, October 9, 1833, the son of Peter and Mary (Pinkerton) Bennett. He was educated at Washington College, Washington, Iowa, and studied law. In June, 1861, he enlisted in the Seventh Iowa Regiment and served throughout the war as lieutenant of the Seventh and adjutant of the Nineteenth, but during the last two years of the war as an officer upon the staff of General Thomas J. McKean. After the war he practiced law at Washington and served in both houses of the Iowa legislature. He was appointed associate judge of the supreme court of Dakota in 1875 by President Grant, and served in that capacity until August, 1878, when he resigned to accept a nomination to congress. While justice of the supreme court of Dakota he organized the courts in the Black Hills and held the first sessions there. He made an excellent record in congress and since that time has practiced law at Deadwood. He is a public-spirited citizen, a leader in all public enterprises, and is still a power in politics, always representing his county in state conventions and was a delegate to the national convention which nominated McKinley and Roosevelt in 1900. He is a powerful and eloquent speaker, and a popular lecturer upon scientific and literary subjects. He is a leading member of the Congregational church.

Mr. Bennett was married at Washington, Iowa, October 11, 1860, to Miss Mary Dawson, and their home life has been ideal throughout the happy years of their union. Their surviving children are Misses Esteline and Helen, and Granville G., Jr. The young ladies are leaders in social and professional life, the former as a musician and journalist in Chicago and the latter in educational work, being at present the superintendent of schools in Lawrence county. Granville G., Jr., is preparing for the Episcopal ministry.

PHILO HALL.—The legal affairs of the great state of South Dakota at the present time are placed in able hands, and as attorney general of the state the subject of this sketch is giving an administration which is creditable to the commonwealth and to himself professionally and officially. Mr. Hall is a native of the state of Minnesota, having been born in Wilton, Waseca county on the 31st of December, 1865, a son of Philo and Mary E. (Greene) Hall. Philo Hall, Sr., was born in Caledonia Springs, Canada, being the son of Philo and Susana Hall, both of whom were born in the state of Vermont. When about fifteen years of age the father of the subject left his native town in Canada and went to Kenosha, Wisconsin, his father having died when Philo was a mere child. He attended school in Kenosha and Racine, Wisconsin, continuing his studies until he was about nineteen years of age, and he then removed to Waseca county, Minnesota, where he turned his attention to teaching school, gaining distinctive prestige in this profession. In April, 1861, in response to the President's first call for volunteers, he enlisted as a member of the First Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, with which he served three years, making the record of a valiant and faithful soldier of the republic. He then returned to his home in Minnesota and engaged in the hotel business in Wilton, having married Miss Mary E. Greene, daughter of William and Mary Greene, of New York city. The father of the subject died on the 30th of April, 1883, and he is survived by his wife and their four children, the mother being now a resident of Brookings, South Dakota, which is likewise the home of her son, the attorney general, who is the eldest of the four children, the others being as follows: Mary E., who is the wife of Arthur Alton, of Brookings; George P., who is likewise a resident of this place; and Nellie, who remains with her mother. After the death of his father in 1883, the family removed to Brookings, and here the subject of this review took up the study of law in the office of Judge J. O. Andrews, under whose direction he prosecuted his technical reading until 1886, and was admitted to the bar of the territory of Dakota in 1887. Shortly afterward Mr. Hall entered into partnership with his former preceptor, Judge Andrews, this association continuing until 1889, when Judge Andrews was elected to the circuit bench, and since that time Mr. Hall has been actively engaged in the practice of his profession in Brookings, and is now the senior member of the present firm of Hall, Lawrence & Roddle. Mr. Hall has ever been a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party and has been a valued and able worker in the cause of the same. In 1894 he was elected state's attorney of Brookings county, and was chosen as his own successor in 1896, while in 1895 he was elected mayor of the city of Brookings, serving one term and giving a most able administration of municipal affairs. He has also served as city attorney and in 1901 he represented his district in the state senate. In the autumn election of 1902 he was elected to his present distinguished office of attorney general of the state, assuming the duties of the position in January, 1903, and was unanimously re-nominated to that office at the Republican state convention at Sioux Falls, May 4, 1904. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 27th of April, 1890, Mr. Hall married Mrs. Mary A. Cooke, and of this union have been born three children, namely: Vivian, who was born on the 25th of September, 1891; Philo, Jr., who was born on the 8th of August, 1895, and Morrell, who was born on the 26th of March, 1898.

REV. GARY T. NOTSON, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church at Pierre, was born in Decatur county, Iowa, September 19, 1865. In his youth Mr. Notson learned the printer's trade, but in 1892 entered the ministry in the Des Moines conference and joined the Dakota conference in 1894. He has rapidly risen to a position of eminence in his calling. He is secretary of the Dakota conference and is the historian of the church in this state.

H. B. NOBLE, M. D.—Few men have a better claim to the title of early settler of Howard than the popular physician whose name heads this paragraph. There were a few before him, but when it is stated that he built the second residence put up at the county seat of Miner county, it is easy to see that he was on the scene at a very early period of the settlement of this section of South Dakota. His coming moreover was a distinct public benefit, as he "took hold," to use a western phrase, immediately after his arrival and his shoulder has been up against the car of progress ever since. In other words, he has been in touch with every movement to help Miner county, and has done his full share in educating public opinion along the lines of progress. Dr. Noble's parents were Albert G. and Lucy L. Noble, who came west in the first half of the last century and found a location in the rich agricultural region bordering the upper Mississippi on the west. Their son, with whose biography we are dealing, was born in Delaware county, Iowa, September 10, 1848, and his early education was confined to the somewhat meagerly-equipped public schools of that day. In late life, however, he made up by study for all deficiencies and eventually became a well-informed man. Having decided on medicine as his life's vocation, he entered the Missouri Medical College at St. Louis, and after a very studious session, marked by close application on his part, he was graduated as a Doctor of Medicine with the class of 1882. He had long regarded the Dakotas as an inviting field for ambitious young men, and immediately after obtaining his professional diploma he turned his face toward the prairies of the upper Missouri. The prospect at Howard was not especially inviting when the young doctor arrived, as the present thriving seat of justice was as yet a straggling hamlet and the population of Miner county was not such as to unduly swell the census. Dr. Noble, however, had confidence in the growth of this section and therefore cast his bread upon the waters with full assurance that after many days it would return to him. His "shingle" was hung out with the brave assurance that characterizes the true-born pioneer and he set to work with a will to make business come. Industry and determination seldom fail of their effects, and it was not long until Dr. Noble was able to put up a house to live in, this building, by the way, being the second that graced the streets of Howard. He grew in favor as the town grew in size and in due time was elected to preside over the destinies of Howard as its mayor. He gave such satisfaction by his first term that he was honored with a re-election, and, in addition to the mayoralty, he has held many minor offices. For ten years past he has been health officer of Miner county and in this position has succeeded in bringing about some needed reforms. The Doctor's standing, socially, professionally and fraternally, can not be better emphasized than by the statement that he is a member of the Episcopal church, of the Masonic fraternity and of the State Medical Association.

In 1880, Dr. Noble was married to Miss Carrie Hill, who died in September, 1891, leaving two children: Roy B. and Albert. In September, 1892, the Doctor was united in matrimony with Miss Jennie O. Strong, by whom there has been no issue. In politics, Dr. Noble is an earnest advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party and may usually be found well to the front among the party workers when a campaign is on. He is public-spirited as well as patriotic, and takes a just pride in the rapid strides made by South Dakota during the last decade in the race for supremacy among the great states of the northwest.

EUGENE HUNTINGTON.—It is signally consistent that in a contemporary way shall be perpetuated the records of those who have aided in the development of a splendid civilization in the great northwest, for in the future years this data can not but prove of inestimable historic value. The subject of this sketch is to be noted as one of the early pioneers of the present state of South Dakota and as one who has done his part in advancing its material and civic progress. He has served in various positions of public trust, under both the territorial and state regimes, and is at the time of this writing incumbent of the office of deputy collector of internal revenue for the north half of the state, retaining his residence in Webster, Day county.

The name borne by the subject is one which has long been identified with the annals of American history. The original progenitor in the new world was Simon Huntington, who emigrated from Norwich, England, in 1633, but who died on the voyage, his family settling in Roxbury, Massachusetts. His son Christopher was one of the founders of Norwich, Connecticut, being one of the twelve patentees of that place and one of its prominent and influential citizens. The subject is of the eighth generation in descent from Simon Huntington, the head of the original family in America.

Eugene Huntington was born in Norwich, Connecticut, on the 18th of April, 1844, being a son of Horatio and Julia (Horton) Huntington. His parents removed to New Jersey when he was a child, later to the state of New York, and in 1856 became pioneer settlers in Mitchell county, Iowa, where they passed the remainder of their lives. The father there gave his attention to agricultural pursuits and became a prosperous and highly honored citizen of the state. The subject of this review received a common-school education, having been a lad of about twelve years at the time of the family removal to Iowa, so that he has had his full quota of experience in connection with pioneer life. In 1861, shortly after the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion, he enlisted as a private in the Fourth Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, with which he served until the expiration of his term, in 1863, when he re-enlisted as a member of the same regiment and remained in active service therewith until the close of the great internecine conflict through which was perpetuated the integrity of the Union. He received his honorable discharge, as sergeant of his company, in August, 1865, and then returned to his home in Iowa. In 1867-8 Mr. Huntington was employed in the engineering department of the Union Pacific Railroad, and in 1869 held the position of construction engineer on the Illinois Central Railroad, while in 1872 he was similarly engaged in connection with the construction of the Iowa Pacific Railroad, which is now a portion of the system of the Chicago & Great Western Railroad.

In 1878 Mr. Huntington came to South Dakota, locating in Flandreau, Moody county, where he established himself in the real-estate and loan business, being one of the pioneers in the line in the state, which was then a portion of the great undivided territory of Dakota. In 1883 he removed to Webster, Day county, where he has since maintained his home, and where he continued in the same line of enterprise for a number of years, doing much to secure to this section a desirable class of settlers and also to further the upbuilding and advancement of the town.

In politics Mr. Huntington has ever given an unqualified allegiance to the Republican party, in whose cause he has been an active and efficient worker. He cast his first presidential vote for General Ulysses S. Grant, and has ever since been an uncompromising advocate of the principles of the "grand old party." In 1884-5 he was a member of the legislature of Dakota territory, and introduced the bill creating Marshall county, said bill being duly enacted. In 1888 he was appointed adjutant general by Governor Mellette, and held that office during the term of that honored and able chief executive of the state of South Dakota. He was the first president of the board of trustees of Webster after its incorporation as a village, and as an official and a private citizen he has ever shown a deep and loyal interest in all that pertains to the welfare of his home town, county and state. In 1899 he was appointed to his present office of deputy collector of internal revenue, and its duties demand practically his undivided attention. In a fraternal way Mr. Huntington is identified with the Grand Army of the Republic, has attained the thirty-third and highest degree in Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite Masonry, and is also affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 29th of December, 1867, Mr. Huntington was united in marriage to Miss Artemicia Button, who was born in the state of New York, and who was a resident of Iowa at the time of their marriage. They have four children, namely: Marcia, Richard, Grace and Gertrude.

BERNARD C. McCROSSAN.—It is eminently consonant that in this history should be entered a memoir to Mr. McCrossan, who was one of the sterling pioneers of the state, being prominently concerned in its industrial, commercial and civic development and progress and having been one of the leading business men of the city of Sioux Falls at the time of his death.

Bernard Carland McCrossan was born in Straband, Ireland, on the 15th of June, 1846, and was a scion of sturdy and loyal old Irish stock. He was reared and educated in the Emerald Isle and early gave evidence of that alert mentality, good judgment and indefatigable energy which later played so important a part in securing to him independence and prosperity. He became identified with the cattle business in his native land and had his entire financial resources invested in this line. He had loaded his cattle on a vessel for the purpose of transporting the stock to the markets in England, and on the passage the vessel was wrecked and he barely escaped with his life, losing all but the under-clothing which he wore at the time of the accident. This misfortune placed him again at the foot of the ladder, but with invincible courage and determination he set forth to retrieve his fortunes. When about twenty-four years of age he bade adieu to the fair land of his nativity and came to America. He located in the city of Chicago, where he was employed about one year by a street-car company, and he then came to the territory of Dakota and became one of the pioneers of the little frontier village of Pierre, the present attractive capital city of the great state with which his fortunes were linked until his death. In Pierre he established himself in the produce business, and thus laid the foundation for the great business enterprise of which he was at the head when called from the scene of life's activities. He also took up a claim of government land in that locality and in due time perfected his title thereto. He continued in business in Pierre for a number of years, and simultaneously maintained a number of branch houses throughout the state. For nearly two years he resided in Deadwood, where he became interested in mining ventures, and he then located in Sundance, the capital of Cook county, Wyoming, where he was successfully engaged in business until 1887, when he returned to South Dakota and located in Sioux Falls, where he engaged in the wholesale fruit business, which he conducted under his own name until October, 1898, when the business was incorporated under the title of the B. C. McCrossan Fruit Company, with a capital stock of one hundred thousand dollars. He became president and principal stockholder of the company and under his able and energetic executive control the business continued to increase in scope and importance, becoming the leading enterprise of the sort in the state and controlling a trade which was of wide ramifications. The business is still conducted under the same title, his widow retaining her interest in the same, while it is being successfully carried on under the general management of Henry M. Jones, who had previously been a stockholder and able coadjutor of the founder of the business, while he is a brother of Mrs. McCrossan. He was summoned to the life eternal on the 28th of October, 1903, and in his death the city lost one of its honored business men and loyal citizens, while to those nearest and dearest to him the loss is one which can never be replaced. Mr. McCrossan was reared in the faith of the Catholic church and received his education in a Christian Brothers' school in Ireland, while he ever clung to the faith in sincerity and consistency of life, having been a communicant of St. Michael's church in Sioux Falls at the time when he was called to his reward, his widow likewise being a communicant of this church. He was affiliated with the Catholic Order of Foresters and his political support was given to the Democracy, though he never sought office or was active in political affairs.

On the 26th of November, 1886, Mr. McCrossan was united in marriage to Miss Linnie B. Jones, who was at the time a resident of Spearfish, South Dakota. She was born in Cheyenne, Wyoming, and is a daughter of William and Ellen (Keliher) Jones, who were numbered among the pioneers of South Dakota. The father died in 1884, while the mother now resides with her daughter in Sioux Falls. Mrs. McCrossan had no children. She still resides in the attractive home in Sioux Falls and is surrounded by a circle of devoted friends, being actively interested in church work and in social affairs also until the period of bereavement through which she is now passing.

ALEXANDER C. JOHNSON, a native of Pennsylvania, was educated at Allegheny College, Meadville, afterwards taking a commercial course and serving acceptably as a teller in a bank. Then, graduating with high honors in the law, he came to South Dakota to engage in the practice of his profession, but circumstances threw him into the grain trade, and for fifteen years he had the supervision of the line elevators upon the Northwestern system in South Dakota and western Minnesota, and became a recognized authority upon all matters pertaining to grain growing and marketing. In 1898 he was taken into the employment of the Northwestern Railway as general agent in Dakota, and a year or so later was made general agent for the Northwestern lines in Minnesota and South Dakota. For many years Mr. Johnson's residence was at Wattertown, where he was a leader in all enterprises demanding public-spirited action, and he was also active in Republican politics and has for twenty years been regarded as one of the party's safest counsellors. He was a delegate to the national convention of 1892 and a member of the committee to notify the President of his nomination. Recently his business relations have compelled him to maintain his residence in Winona, Minnesota, but his interest in South Dakota matters is unabated and he still regards himself as a South Dakotan. He has a splendid home and his home life is ideal. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have three children, just arriving at maturity, two daughters, Misses Evelyn and Alta, and Carl.

PETER J. HEGEMAN, of Brookings, is a native of the Empire state of the Union, having been born in Gloversville, Fulton county, New York, on the 10th of May, 1849, and being a son of Peter J. and Catherine (Allen) Hegeman. In the public schools of Gloversville, New York, he received his early educational discipline. When eleven years of age he began work, and the major portion of his stipend he gave to his mother, reserving only sufficient for the absolute necessities of life. Later he accompanied his parents on their removal to Wisconsin, in which locality he remained until 1877, when he came to South Dakota as a pioneer, taking up a homestead claim near Lake Hendricks, Brookings county, and proving up on the same. He improved the farm and brought the same under effective cultivation, being there engaged in general farming. Subsequently Mr. Hegeman removed to the village of Clark Lake, where he erected a commodious warehouse and engaged in the buying of grain and the handling of flour, feed, etc. He continued in business at Clark Lake for some time and then removed to White, where he was engaged in the same line of enterprise for some time, after which he again resided on his farm, but later returned to White and resumed operations in the manufacturing of gloves and mittens. In 1894 he removed his business to Brookings, and here he has built up a large and prosperous enterprise, controlling an excellent business throughout this section of the state.

JOHN HEREFORD KING, who is engaged in the real-estate, loan and insurance business in the city of Huron, Beadle county, and who is a distinguished member of the legal profession, is distinctively a western man and imbued with its self-reliant and progressive spirit. He was born at Salem, Henry county, Iowa, on the 3d of October, 1845, and is a representative of one of the sterling pioneer families of that state. He is a son of Samuel and Content (Version) King, both of whom were birthright members of that noble organization, the Society of Friends, to whose faith they adhered throughout life, the father being a native of Pennsylvania and the mother of Georgia. They removed, with their parents, to Ohio about 1815, and after their marriage removed to Iowa in 1844, settling in Henry county, at Salem, and later moving to Cedar county, Iowa, where the father entered the land whereon West Branch now stands. The subject was reared on the old homestead farm, early beginning to assist in its work, while he also learned the trade of broom making under the direction of his father. His early educational advantages were such as were afforded in the common schools of the locality, and was supplemented by a three-months course in an academy conducted by Joel Beans, at West Branch, that state. He left school at the age of eighteen years and continued to work on the home farm until his marriage, at the age of twenty-one. He then, in 1866, located on a tract of land in Hardin county, Iowa, and engaged in farming on his own responsibility, breaking the greater portion of the ground himself and fencing the property, which was virgin prairie at the time when it came into his possession. In the meanwhile he was employed as teacher in an adjoining district school for three winter terms. In the spring of 1869 he began the careful study of law at his home, and completed his technical reading under the direction of an able preceptor, Hon. H. L. Huff, of Eldora, Iowa, being admitted to the bar of Iowa in the winter of 1870, and located in Eldora, the county seat of Hardin county, where he initiated the active practice of his profession, and two years later he removed to Hampton, Franklin county, where he rapidly gained prestige in his profession, building up a large and lucrative legal business and being one of the leading lawyers of that section for many years. In 1877 he was elected to represent his district in the state legislature, said district comprising the counties of Franklin and Cerro Gordo, and he was chosen as his own successor in 1879, receiving large and gratifying majorities on both occasions. He took a very prominent part in the legislative proceedings and held the important position of chairman of the house committee on railroads during the eighteenth general assembly. At the time of the Civil war he was most desirous of enlisting in defense of the Union, but his parents, being of the Quaker faith and thus opposed to warfare by principle and training, refused to permit him to become a volunteer. In July, 1880, he came to South Dakota and in the fall of that year laid out Chamberlain and became president of the town-site company, and soon removed there with his family. He was appointed postmaster in 1882 and became editor of the Chamberlain Register and actively engaged in the many enterprises calculated to build up a town. Like many others in South Dakota, he lost his all in the hard times of the later 'eighties, but stuck to the state and with keen foresight later saw the great development that might come, and he believed would come, to this great artesian section of Central South Dakota. After a painstaking search he secured help from Dubuque capitalists and purchased a very large quantity of land, commencing in the latter part of 1899, in Beadle, Spink, Hand, Hyde, Hughes and Sully counties, fully eighty thousand acres, and nearly five years ago removed to Huron and commenced pushing and advocating the digging of artesian wells, and planting of trees, and bringing new settlers into the country, loaning money to help farmers and others who wished to build and buy more land. He improved a large number of farms, building good houses and barns, and infused new life and confidence in central South Dakota and built up a great business at Huron, in lands, loans and insurance.

In politics Mr. King has ever been an ardent Republican and has been a vigorous and effective worker in its cause. He made an uncompromising stand against the free-silver heresy in 1896, and in the presidential campaign of that year made a large number of strong speeches in advocacy of the single gold standard, the now established financial policy of his party. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masons and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He was reared in the faith of the society of Friends, of which he is a birthright member, but both he and his wife now hold membership in the Congregational church.

On the 20th of September, 1866, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. King to Miss Permelia A. Andrews, who was born in Hamilton county, Indiana, being a daughter of William E. and Mary E. Andrews, who were early settlers in Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. King have four children, namely: Guneath D., now Mrs. Gilbert E. Roe, of New York city; Laona M., now Mrs. Walter Montgomery, of Chamberlain, South Dakota; Lorena C., a graduate of Chicago University, now at home in Huron, and Grace E., now Mrs. Fred J. Hutchins, of Chicago, all of whom share their father's loyalty in the belief in South Dakota's future greatness.

GEORGE GROVER, one of the representative citizens and prominent merchants of Hartford, Minnehaha county, is a native of the state of Michigan, having been born on a farm in Pulaskee township, Jackson county, on the 3d of June, 1859, and being a son of Allen W. and Jane E.

(Phipps) Grover, natives of New York state. The father was one of the representative farmers of that county and a man of prominence in his section. He died in 1902, while the mother is still living at the old homestead. The subject was reared to the sturdy and invigorating discipline of the homestead farm and was afforded excellent educational advantages. After completing the curriculum of the public schools he was matriculated in the Michigan State Agricultural College, at Lansing, where he completed the prescribed four-years course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1881, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Science. After leaving college Mr. Grover was for two years a successful teacher in the public schools of his native county and he then, in 1882, purchased the Concord Enterprise, at Concord, that county, continuing as editor and publisher of the same for two years, after which he was there engaged in the general merchandise business until 1889, when he removed to Janesville, Wisconsin, where he learned the art of telegraphy, at which he was there employed for some time, as was he later in Hamilton, Minnesota. He was thus employed in the service of the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railroad for nearly a decade, in Minnesota and South Dakota, having been station agent and operator at Hartford, this state, from 1891 until 1898. He thereafter passed a year in looking for an eligible location in the southern states, but became convinced that South Dakota offered superior attractions, and in 1899 he returned to Hartford, where he entered into partnership with Herman C. Robsahm, under the firm name of Robsahm & Grover, and engaged in the general merchandise business, with which enterprise he has since been successfully identified, having purchased the interests of his partner on the 1st of May, 1903, and being now the sole proprietor of the business, which is one of the most important of the sort in this section, his store being well stocked in its various departments and controlling a trade which extends throughout the wide radius of country normally tributary to Hartford. Mr. Grover has ever believed in the principles of the Democratic party as exemplified in the teachings of Jefferson and Jackson, but the heretical tendencies in the party ranks in later years have caused him to withdraw his allegiance and he is now an out-and-out supporter of the policies of President Roosevelt. Fraternally he is identified with Hartford Lodge, U. D., Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Hartford; and Sioux Falls Lodge, No. 262, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, at Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

On the 4th of August, 1891, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Grover to Miss Hattie B. Smith, daughter of Isaac F. and Mary A. (Earl) Smith, of Jackson county, Michigan, and of this union have been born three children: Allen S., who was born on the 16th of September, 1894; Raymond, who was born on the 21st of July, 1899; and Theodore, who was born on the 28th day of October, 1903.

WILLIAM SCHOOF, one of the well-known and popular citizens of Gettysburg, Potter county, has had an eventful career, and is a man of broad experience. He has the distinction of being able to speak in both the high and low Dutch, Norwegian and the Danish languages, besides the English.

Mr. Schoof is a native of Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, where he was born on the 22d of September, 1857, being a son of Henry and Amelia (Dursen) Schoof. His father was a successful farmer, owning about three hundred acres of land in the province mentioned and being a man of prominence and influence in his community. He served in an office corresponding to the American justice of the peace for many years, and being an income tax payer was eligible for and elected to a number of more important offices than the one noted. In his family were seven children, of whom all are living at the present time, while three of the number are residents of the United States.

The subject of this sketch was reared to maturity in the fatherland, and received excellent educational advantages in his youth, having attended the schools maintained by the national government and also private institutions and a technical school of agriculture. At the age of nineteen years he entered the cavalry arm of the national military service, in which he remained three years. He was promoted to the office of corporal, the highest rank attainable in the three-years term of cavalry service, and during one year he was stationed with his command at Flensburg in his native province, and the remaining two years near the city of Metz, in the present German province of Alsace-Lorraine, which had but a short time previously been taken from the French government, so that it was a position demanding strong governmental control and a place of marked strategic importance. After the expiration of his three-year term Mr. Schoof, in 1879, came to America, being twenty-one years of age at the time. He was on furlough at the time, being still considered as a member of the military reserve of his native land. He landed at New York and came west to Bureau county, Illinois, where he was an inmate of a family home for some time, his principal object being to acquire a knowledge of the English language, and the customs of the people.

After a trip through Kansas and the Indian territory, he returned to his native land for a visit, in 1880, remaining there during the winter of the year mentioned. In the spring of 1881 he returned to the United States and located in Bureau county, Illinois, where he engaged in farming on his own account, having received financial aid from his home. Lack of experience and unpropitious conditions caused a failure in this venture, and, as he himself states the case, at the end of two years his five hired men had the money while he had incidentally acquired a modicum of experience. He then became infused with the enthusiastic spirit which was animating those who were beginning to develop the resources of what is now the state of South Dakota, and on the 21st of March, 1883, find him located at Frankfort, Spink county. In this vicinity he rented a large farm, his resources being summed up in eight dollars in cash and three crippled horses so far as tangible evidences were concerned, but he had the better equipment of undefatigable energy and a determination to win. He devoted his attention to farming for the ensuing three years and was very successful in his efforts. In the meanwhile he had exercised the prerogatives of citizenship by taking up homestead, pre-emption and tree claims in Potter county, and here he has made his home consecutively since June 10, 1883, save for the time which he devoted to his farming interests in Spink county. In the spring of 1886 he made a permanent location in Potter county, and the following year met with a success of decidedly negative order, so that in the fall of that year he was constrained to accept a clerkship in a mercantile establishment in Gettysburg. He was thus engaged until 1890, since which time he has been engaged in the furnishing of seed grain on shares throughout Potter and adjoining counties, having had at times as many as two hundred and sixty-eight customers and having supplied seed for seven thousand acres of land. In this somewhat unique line of enterprise Mr. Schoof has met with gratifying success, while he has gained the unqualified confidence and esteem of the persons with whom he has had dealings. He is also engaged in the real-estate and insurance business in Gettysburg, and is a popular auctioneer, his services in the line being in requisition throughout a wide radius of country. He never made a failure in any business venture save that of farming and his failure in that line was not due to mismanagement or want of ability, but to the elements. In politics Mr. Schoof is a staunch Democrat, and fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Modern Woodmen of America and other social organizations. In 1896 he was elected register of deeds of Potter county, retaining this office two years.

On the 30th of November, 1891, Mr. Schoof was united in marriage to Miss Florence Knickerbocker, who was born in the state of Michigan, being a daughter of Andrew and Carrie (Mills) Knickerbocker, who are now prominent and honored residents of Gettysburg. Mr. and Mrs. Schoof have four children, namely: Henrietta, John, Maud and Bessie.

ROBERT E. McDOWELL, who is private secretary of United States Senator Robert J. Gamble, of South Dakota, is a native of the state of Wisconsin, having been born near Fox Lake, Dodge county, on the 21st day of December, 1866. He is the son of Samuel C. and Margaret J. (Gamble) McDowell, the former of whom was born near Downpatrick, County Down, Ireland, on the 12th of July, 1832, while the latter was born in the same county, near Belfast, on the 16th day of May, 1838. The father of the subject came to the United States when seventeen years of age, having received excellent educational advantages in the Emerald Isle, and was successfully engaged in teaching for a number of years in New York and Wisconsin. He served in the war of the Rebellion, enlisting as a private in Company D, Eighth (Eagle Regiment) Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and was honorably discharged from the service as first lieutenant, having served some three years and nine months. During two years of his service he acted as adjutant of the regiment. While serving with his regiment, it took part in over thirty engagements and battles, in which were included a number of the most memorable battles of the war. On return from the war Mr. McDowell located on a farm in the town of Trenton, near Fox Lake, Wisconsin, becoming one of the honored and influential citizens of that section, removing in 1901 to the village of Fox Lake. He served as a member of the Wisconsin legislature, and held a number of local offices at different times. In politics he is a Republican, and fraternally is commander of the Grand Army of the Republic post. His wife, mother of the subject, is a sister of United States Senator Gamble, and of the late John R. Gamble, member of congress from South Dakota, and Hugh S. Gamble, all of Yankton, South Dakota. Jennie B., a sister of the subject, born February, 11, 1870, resides with her parents at Fox Lake, Wisconsin.

Robert E. McDowell secured his preliminary educational training in the public schools, and supplemented the same by a course in Wayland Academy at Beaver Dam, Wisconsin, graduating in 1887; afterward continuing his studies at Yankton College, and Bryant & Stratton Business College in Chicago. He took a position in 1889 in the law offices of Gamble Brothers at Yankton, South Dakota territory (the firm consisting of the late John R. Gamble and the present United States Senator Robert J. Gamble), studied law and was admitted to the bar of the state of South Dakota. He acted as secretary to Senator Gamble while the latter was a member of the house of representatives in the fifty-fourth congress, and thereafter he was for two years engaged in the active practice of his profession in Yankton, being associated with Hon. John Holman, under the firm name of Holman & McDowell. He again acted as private secretary to Mr. Gamble during the fifty-sixth congress, and has continued to act as such since the latter's election to the United States senate in 1901.

The subject is a staunch adherent of the Republican party, is actively identified with the Masonic fraternity, in which he has advanced to the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, holding membership in Oriental Consistory, No. 1, in Yankton; is a member of El Riad Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, in Sioux Falls; is a member of Phoenix Lodge, No. 37, Knights of Pythias, and of Yankton Lodge, No. 1, Ancient Order of United Workmen, in the same city. He and his wife are members of the Congregational church in Yankton.

On June 6, 1900, Mr. McDowell was married in the Zion Reformed church at Hagerstown, Maryland, to Miss Edith Ellen Eyerly, of Hagerstown, she being a daughter of Hon. George W. Eyerly, an old-time resident and prominent merchant of that city, she is also a sister of Prof. Elmer K. Eyerly, a member of the faculty of the State Agricultural College of South Dakota.

REV. CHARLES MOTT DALEY, state superintendent of the Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society, resides at Huron. He was born at Damascus, Henry county, Illinois, July 17, 1859, and was educated at Oberlin

College and was ordained in 1882 and next year located in South Dakota. He has occupied his present position since 1890. He served as chaplain of the South Dakota Infantry in the Philippine war and won the gratitude and affection of all of the men. Always public-spirited, he was selected by Governor Sheldon to superintend the distribution of supplies to the destitute homesteaders in the great drought, a work he accomplished at great labor and sacrifice and to the complete satisfaction of every one affected. He is the president of the State Sunday School Association, and a member of the executive committee of the State Historical Society.

GEORGE D. FOGLESONG, the efficient bookkeeper in charge of the office of the Homestake Mining Company at Lead, Lawrence county, is a native of the state of Missouri, having been born in Westport, Jackson county, on the 5th of December, 1862, and being a son of George D. and Martha W. (Wetzel) Foglesong, both of whom were born and reared in Greenbriar county, West Virginia. They removed finally to Missouri and later to Cheyenne, Wyoming, whence they came to Lawrence county, South Dakota, in 1880, settling on a ranch and there developing a valuable property. The father died twelve years ago, and the mother six years ago.

The subject of this review was about six years of age at the time of his parents' removal to Wyoming, and he secured his educational training in the public schools of the city of Cheyenne. At the age of fourteen he began serving as a messenger for the Western Union Telegraph Company, and within this time learned the art of telegraphy in the Cheyenne office, so that when but sixteen years of age he held a responsible position as operator. He continued in the employ of the company until the autumn of 1880, when he accompanied his parents on their overland trip to the Black Hills. He remained with them on the home ranch until the autumn of 1890 when he entered the employ of the great Homestake Mining Company, holding a position in one of their mills. In June of the following year he became bookkeeper and telegraph operator in the office of the company at Lead, and is at the present time in charge of the office, his able and faithful service having gained to him the appreciative regard and confidence of the company, while his genial and open-hearted ways have made him distinctively popular in all classes. In politics Mr. Foglesong was reared in the faith of the Democratic party, to which he clung until the first nomination of the late lamented President McKinley, whom he enthusiastically supported, and since that time he has given an unqualified allegiance to the Republican party. He and his wife are communicants of the Protestant Episcopal church, and fraternally he is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America.

On the 30th of June, 1892, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Foglesong to Miss Olivia A. Hokins, who was born in the fair old city of Stockholm, Sweden, on the 3d of October, 1866, being a daughter of John G. and Anna L. Hokins. The subject and his estimable wife have four children, namely: Mary M., Ruth H., Walter D. and Hilda L.

E. W. FEIGE., M. D., one of the successful young physicians and surgeons of the state, established in the practice of his profession at Woonsocket, Sanborn county, was born on a farm near the city of St. Joseph, Missouri, on the 9th of August, 1871, and is a son of William and Frieda (Werner) Feige. He accompanied his parents upon their removal to the territory of Dakota, and he completed a course in the high school at Huron, South Dakota, being graduated as a member of the class of 1891, and he then took up the study of medicine. In the fall of 1892 the subject was matriculated in the Chicago Homeopathic Medical College, where he completed the prescribed course, being graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. After his graduation he located in Hawarden, Iowa, where he was engaged in practice until December, 1896, when he located in Alpena, South Dakota, where he continued his professional work until he established himself in practice at Woonsocket, where he has since resided and where he has secured a most gratifying support. The Doctor is a staunch supporter of the principles of the Republican party, is a member of the Presbyterian church in his home town and has become affiliated with the Masonic fraternity.

DUDLEY C. PHELPS is an enterprising farmer and successful stock raiser of Custer county, living on a beautiful and well-improved ranch, about seventeen miles from Hermosa, which has been his home since the year 1899. Dudley C. Phelps was born in Ashmore, Coles county, Illinois, July 22, 1865, and spent the first eight years of his life in his native state. At that age he was taken by his parents to Vernon county, Missouri, where he grew to maturity and received his education, remaining there as his father's assistant on the farm until 1885, when he returned to Illinois, thence, about one year later, went to Fletcher county, Nebraska, where, with an uncle, he engaged in cattle raising. After remaining in the latter state until 1890 Mr. Phelps came to South Dakota, and during the ensuing nine years rode the range in various parts of the country, principally among the Black Hills, and in that time became thoroughly experienced in every detail of the great cattle industry. Leaving the trail in the spring of 1899, he purchased his present beautiful ranch, on Battle creek, where he has since devoted his time and attention to agriculture and stock raising, and, as already indicated, he has forged rapidly to the front in his two-fold vocation, being at this time one of the most enterprising and well-to-do men of the community in which he resides. Mr. Phelps has made many improvements on his place in the way of buildings, has a comfortable and attractive home and is well situated to enjoy the large measure of material prosperity with which his efforts have been crowned. Mr. Phelps' character is above reproach, his integrity unswerving and his relations with his fellow-men have been eminently honorable, his name wherever known having all the sacredness of a written obligation.

Mr. Phelps was married in the town of Hermosa, August 21, 1898, to Miss Jessie Steffing, of Minnesota, and is now the father of two interesting children, a daughter by the name of Dorothy and a son, Walter.

FRED W. GUNKLE, who is numbered among the successful and popular business men of Sioux Falls, was born in the city of Reading, Pennsylvania, on the 26th of October, 1857, and is a son of Fred and Elizabeth (Kalkhoff) Gunkle, both of whom were born and reared in Germany, and both of whom are now deceased, the father having been a roadmaster for the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad. The subject received his early educational discipline in the public schools of his native city, and in his early youth entered upon an apprenticeship at the machinist's trade in one of the extensive concerns of Reading. He became a skilled artisan in the line and continued his residence in the old Keystone state until 1876, when he located in the city of Chicago, where he was for the ensuing three years employed in the works of the Crane Brothers' Manufacturing Company. In 1879 he located in Dubuque, Iowa, where he held a responsible position with the Iowa Iron Works for the following two years, at the expiration of which he returned to Chicago and accepted a position as traveling representative for Samuel Bliss & Company, with whom he remained until 1884, having established headquarters in Sioux Falls in 1881, at the time of entering the employ of the concern. In 1884 he became a traveling salesman for the Sioux City Steam Engine Works, of Sioux City, Iowa, retaining this incumbency four years. In 1891 he was appointed deputy United States marshal for western division, northern district of Iowa, with headquarters at Sioux City, Iowa, holding office until 1895, and being thereafter traveling representative for the Andrew Kuehn Company, of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, in the meanwhile maintaining his home in Sioux Falls during the greater portion of the interval. In 1896 he "quit the road" and engaged in the wholesale cigar and tobacco business in this city, and he has reason to be satisfied with the results which have been attained, for his trade is of the best order and covers a good territory, normally tributary to the city as a jobbing center. In politics he is stalwart Republican and ever shown a deep interest in the promotion of the party cause, though he has never been a seeker of official preferment. In a fraternal way Mr. Gunkle is identified with Unity Lodge, No. 130, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Sioux Falls Chapter, No. 2, Royal Arch Masons; Sioux Falls Commandery, No. 2, Knights Templar; and El Riad Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, while he is also a prominent and popular affiliate of the Sioux Falls Lodge, No. 262, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of which he is past exalted ruler, while he has also represented the same in the grand lodge of the state.

On the 13th of June, 1888, Mr. Gunkle was united in marriage to Miss Emma J. Carter, who was born in the state of Illinois, and who was a resident of Sioux Falls at the time of her marriage. They have no children.

In early life he removed to Freeborn county, Minnesota, where he alternately attended school and worked on his father's farm. In 1882 he came to South Dakota, locating at Redfield, Spink county. He became associated with the Redfield Journal as an employe and later purchased a half interest in the plant. In 1892 he removed to Watertown, Codington county, and, in company with Herbert Geddes, purchased the Watertown News, a daily newspaper. Later, in company with Frank J. Cory, he purchased Public Opinion, a weekly paper, consolidating the two and taking the latter name. In 1894 Mr. Geddes retired from the firm, leaving Messrs. Ransom and Cory sole owners and equal partners.

THOMAS H. TAYLOR, one of the successful and representative stockmen and ranchers of Rapid Valley, is a native of Westmoreland county, England, born on October 5, 1850. He was educated in his native county and remained there until he reached the age of twenty, then in 1870 came to the United States, settling near Decatur, Illinois, where he engaged in farming three years. In 1873 he removed to Columbus, Nebraska, and there gave his attention to dealing in cattle and horses for four years. At the end of that time he loaded a bull outfit with provisions and machinery and came to the Black Hills, arriving at Haywood on April 28, 1877. From there he moved to Rockerville, then one of the busy mining camps of the territory, and from that point made trips over the Hills to Deadwood, Rapid City and elsewhere and back to Rockerville. He was occupied in prospecting and was also interested in the Nebraska Mining Company, organized by him and a companion from Nebraska. Having brought a haying outfit with him from his former home, he operated it in the neighborhood of Rapid City during the summer of 1877. He also operated the first mail and express route between Rapid City and Rockerville, with headquarters at the former place. In the fall of 1878 he took a contract to carry the mails between Rapid City and Rockford during the winter, and in April, 1879, located a ranch on Rapid creek six miles from the town, where he settled and began farming and raising stock. At the same time he started a livery business at Rapid City which he carried on until 1881, when he sold this and devoted his entire attention to his stock and farming industry. In 1886 he sold the ranch and stock and opened a harness and saddlery business at Rapid City, which he continued until 1891, during this time being also interested in mining, in 1887, in company with others putting in a smelter at Galena. In the spring of 1891 he took up the ranch on which he now lives in Rapid valley, nineteen miles from Rapid City, and disposing of his other interests, he moved his family to the place and they have since resided there. He has been extensively and successfully engaged in raising stock of high grades, and has also devoted much time and energy to the promotion of the interests of the community along all lines of wholesome development, bringing to the aid of public local affairs the wisdom gained in his long and varied experience and the breadth of view characteristic of an enlightened and patriotic citizen. In politics he is an active worker for the Republican party, but he has never desired the honors of public station for himself.

On December 22, 1888, Mr. Taylor was married at Rapid City to Miss Emma L. Hays, a native of Missouri, they being the first couple thus united in the Episcopal church of that town. They have five children, Claude W., Earl H., Guy R., Florence M. and Weslev P.

ROBERT F. CAMPBELL, M. D., engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery in the city of Watertown, Codington county, is a man of high professional attainments, and has been eminently successful in the exacting work of his vocation. Dr. Campbell was born in Aylmer, province of Ontario, Canada, March 23, 1857, and is the son of William and Jane Van Wagener Campbell. His father was born near Toronto, Canada, and his mother in New York, going to Canada with her parents when young. His father enjoys the best of health at seventy-eight years of age and resides in Watertown. His mother died about a year ago. Dr. Campbell lived in Aylmer until he attained manhood. He attended McGill Medical College at Montreal for two years, then graduated as a member of the class of 1882 from Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York. He went to London, England, and Berlin, Germany, spending some months in the hospitals, attending clinics. He came to Watertown twenty-two years ago and was married in 1884 to Miss Kate A. Williams, daughter of the late Charles G. Williams, for many years a member of congress from the Janesville, Wisconsin, district, and at the time of his death register of the United States land office at Watertown. Dr. Campbell has gained prestige as one of the representative members of his profession in the state, controlling a large practice. He is devoted to the work of his calling and keeps in touch with the advances made in the science of medicine and surgery, his genial temperament and humanitarian sympathy contributing as much to his success as his technical knowledge. In 1900 Dr. Campbell, in company with Dr. Tarbell and Dr. Finnerud, established the Watertown city hospital and is president of the institution, which exercises most beneficent functions and is a credit to the city and an honor to its projectors. He is also division surgeon for the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, the Great Northern, the Minneapolis & St. Louis and the Rock Island; while he is also identified with the State Medical Society, and fraternally affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He gives his allegiance to the Republican party, but has never sought official preferment, holding his profession as entitled to his undivided attention. He is popular in business and social circles and his home is a center of gracious hospitality.

ADOLPH W. EWERT, cashier of the National Bank of Commerce, No. 4279, at Pierre, is a native of the Badger state, having been born in Burr Oak, La Crosse county, Wisconsin, on the 18th of June, 1865, and is a son of Edward and Mina (Habermann) Ewert, the former of whom was born in Prussia, Germany, of stanch German lineage, while the latter came of French and German stock. They accompanied their respective families to America when children, and their marriage was solemnized at La Crosse, Wisconsin, where they remained until about 1857, being thus numbered among the pioneers of that state. The father of the subject acquired the trade of blacksmith in his youth, and he followed the same for several years in Burr Oak, Wisconsin, and then removed to West Salem, that state, where he became a successful manufacturer of wagons, sleighs and various types of farming implements, there conducting a prosperous wholesale and retail business along these lines for about a decade, at the expiration of which he removed to Pipestone, Minnesota, where he continued to be engaged in the agricultural implement business until 1891, when he retired to his farm near that place, where he and his estimable wife still reside, being well advanced in years and being honored and influential citizens of their community.

The subject of this review secured his early educational discipline in the public schools of West Salem, Wisconsin, completing a course in the high school. At the age of fifteen years he began to render active assistance to his father in his business operations, and later devoted two years to the study of law, under the direction of able attorneys of Pipestone, Minnesota. Before completing his technical studies he accepted a position in the counting room of the Pipestone County Bank, retaining this incumbency two years and gaining an intimate knowledge of the practical details of the business. In 1890 he came to Pierre and accepted his present position as cashier of the National Bank of Commerce, and he has proved a most able and discriminating executive officer and has done much to further the interests of the institution, in which he is a stockholder. The bank is capitalized for one hundred thousand dollars and its stockholders are numbered among the leading capitalists and substantial business men of the state.

Mr. Ewert enjoys marked popularity in both business and social circles, and no better mark of the confidence reposed in him by the people of the capital city could be asked than that shown in his election to the mayoralty of Pierre in 1902, and his re-election, without opposition, in 1904. He is one of the most progressive executives the municipal government has ever had, and directs the affairs of the city with much discernment, scrupulous care and fidelity and upon the strictest of business principles. In politics the mayor gives an unqualified allegiance to the Republican party, and fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Knights of the Macca-bees, and the Modern Brotherhood of America. Both he and his wife are valued members of the Baptist church.

On the 30th of September, 1890, Mr. Ewert was united in marriage to Miss Caroline E. Dutcher, who was born in Sanilac county, Michigan, being a daughter of Byron M. and Rebecca Dutcher. Mr. and Mrs. Ewert have two sons, Winfred Edward and Mark H.

JOSEPH BOONE MOORE.—Standing out as one of the central figures in the legal history of South Dakota is Hon. Joseph Boone Moore, of Lead City, who was born October 13, 1862, in Nashville, Tennessee, and is the son of James G. and Mary (Hiter) Moore, the father for many years a prominent merchant and representative man of that city. The early educational training of the subject was acquired in the schools of Nashville and sometime after finishing the high-school course he came to Dakota territory, locating, in September, 1880, at Lead City, where in due time he secured employment with the Homestake Mining Company, entering the service of that large concern as a common laborer. Later he resigned his place to become a brakeman on the Black Hills & Fort Pierre Railroad, subsequently rising by successive promotions to the positions of fireman and conductor, and it was while discharging his duty in the latter capacity that an accident occurred, which very materially changed his future course of life. On April 5, 1884, while attempting to board a moving train, he lost his footing and fell under the cars, the injury resulting in the loss of his left leg, just below the knee, also the four small toes of the right foot, from the effect of which painful, and what at the time was thought fatal, injuries he was a long time recuperating. When sufficiently recovered, he returned to his old home in Nashville, Tennessee, where he entered the law department of Vanderbilt University, becoming what is known as a "one-year man,"—that is, by hard study and attendance at both junior and senior lectures, finishing the full course in one-half the allotted time. He made a brilliant record as a student, and in 1885 was graduated with the honors of his class, being selected on the occasion as one of the moot court commencement orators on account of his rare power and eloquence as a public speaker. Shortly after his graduation Mr. Moore returned to South Dakota and, opening a law office in Lead City, soon built up a lucrative practice and gained recognition as one of the rising members of the Lawrence county bar. His success was immediate, his ability as a jury lawyer winning him worthy prestige, and for a number of years he was connected either for the prosecution or defense in nearly every important case tried in the courts where he practiced. In 1889 he was elected city attorney of Lead and held the office with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the public until May, 1892, on the first day of which month he was appointed state's attorney for Lawrence county. He held the latter position one year, his term closing in 1894, from which time until 1897 he devoted his attention solely to his private practice, which had greatly grown in magnitude and importance during the intervening years.

In 1897 Mr. Moore was elected judge of the eighth judicial circuit of South Dakota, for which high and responsible position he was well fitted and he occupied the bench until 1901, winning the meanwhile an enviable reputation as an able and popular jurist. His rulings were not only fair and impartial, but embodied a thorough knowledge of the points at issue, and his decisions were comprehensive and exhaustive, few of them suffering reversal at the hands of the supreme court.

In 1900 Judge Moore was nominated for congress on the fusion ticket, a union of Democrats and Populists, but by reason of the overwhelming strength of the opposition that year failed of election, although running several hundred votes ahead of his ticket. He was a South Dakota member of the national Populist convention, held in Sioux Falls in 1900, and took a leading part in its deliberations, securing the insertion of a resolution in the platform denouncing the incarceration of miners in the Coeur d' Alene Bull Pen, as an infamous outrage. The Judge was also a delegate to the Populist national convention which met in St. Louis in 1896, and had much to do in formulating the policy of the party and directing its operators in the campaigns of that and succeeding years. He has always had the interests of the laboring classes at heart, and, having been a toiler himself for many years, thoroughly appreciates their condition, sympathizes with their aspirations and to the extent of his ability assists them in carrying out every laudable measure for their advancement. In the line of his profession he has demonstrated his interests in the poor and needy in many ways, frequently giving legal advice gratuitously, and never refusing to take a case for a man or woman on account of lack of fees.

When Troop A of Grigsby's Cow-Boy Regiment, Third United States Volunteer Cavalry, of South Dakota, perfected a permanent organization, Judge Moore was made an honorary member, being the only man accorded the honor, the list closing with his name. As an evidence of the high esteem in which he was held by the troop, they presented him with a button badge, which he has since worn on the lapel of his coat and which he proposes thus to wear as long as he lives.

The Judge's last official position was that of city attorney, to which he was appointed the second time in 1902, and the duties of which he has since discharged with his characteristic ability. He has always been a zealous Democrat and an active party worker, and his influence as a politician is confined to no particular locality, being state-wide on account of his effectiveness as a campaigner and his ability in the hustings. In the campaign of 1900 he gained a national reputation by reason of his pronounced views and utterances in opposition to the Philippine war, his able discussion of this question and other issues of that year carrying conviction to the minds of the large and appreciative audiences that greeted him, wherever he appeared. Without invidious distinction, it is but fair to state that Judge Moore is today one of South Dakota's best known and most popular citizens, his career as a lawyer, judge and public-spirited man of affairs fully meeting the high expectations of his many friends and admirers, and reflecting credit upon the state.

On June 2, 1886, Judge Moore was united in marriage with Miss Susie B. Jordan, of Tennessee, who was born and reared near Franklin, in the county of Williamson. Her father at one time was one of the largest land proprietors in the middle part of that state, a man of great wealth and wide influence and before the war the owner of a large number of slaves. Three children have blessed the union of Judge and Mrs. Moore, their names being Rupert E., Mary Alice and Norma Elizabeth.

Judge Moore is an enthusiastic member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and now holds the title of past exalted ruler of Deadwood Lodge, No. 508. In 1902 he was a delegate from this lodge to the grand lodge, which met at Salt Lake City, and while attending that body took a prominent part in its deliberations and was influential in shaping the policy of the order, not only in his own state, but throughout the entire country. In religion the Judge is liberal, not belonging to any church or inclining more favorably to one denomination than to another; nevertheless he is a firm believer in a supreme being, recognizes in Christianity a great moral and spiritual force, but accepts as his only creed the Golden Rule.

PATTISON FRANCIS McCLURE, president of the Pierre National Bank, was born in Laurel, Franklin county, Indiana, on the 8th of August, 1853, and is a son of James R. and Hester A. McClure, who removed from the Hoosier state to the territory of Kansas the year after the birth of the subject, and they located one hundred and thirty-five miles west of Kansas City, and as a pioneer the father of the subject became prominent and influential in the public affairs of the territory and state, having been one of the early members of the bar of the Sunflower state and having been successfully established in the practice of his profession in Junction City for nearly half a century and up to the time of his death, which occurred in 1903. As a young man James R. McClure ran away from college to tender his services to his country in its war with Mexico, while he also served with signal valor and gallantry during the war of the Rebellion, as a member of a Kansas regiment, in which he was made captain of his company and later promoted to the office of quartermaster. He did not come forth unscathed, since he lost his right leg in the battle of Shelbyville, Missouri. During his many years' residence in Kansas, Captain McClure has much to do with the shaping of its political and civic history and material upbuilding, having been conspicuously concerned in many of its most important historical events and having filled numerous offices of public trust and responsibility.

The subject of this sketch received his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools of Junction City, Kansas, later being a student in the State Agricultural College, at Manhattan, Kansas, while he thereafter was matriculated in Cornell University, in Ithaca, New York, where he continued his course into the junior year. After leaving college he began reading law under the effective preceptorship of his honored father, but before completing his technical course he went to Illinois, where he put his distinctive mechanical talent into play in connection with the perfecting of a self-binder reaper for a well-known manufacturer of harvesting machinery, being one of the first workers, in 1874-5, who successfully brought about the solution of the mechanical problem involved. In 1878 Mr. McClure went abroad to assist in introducing American harvesting machinery in Great Britain, Belgium, France and Spain, while during 1879-80 he had charge of important affairs, throughout the state of Minnesota, for a large manufacturing concern in Ohio.

Mr. McClure identified himself with the city of Pierre at the time of its inception, having come here on the first passenger train to enter the town, in the autumn of 1880. Here he forthwith established himself in the hardware business, entering into partnership with William H. Gleckler, under the firm name of Gleckler & McClure, and they built up a most prosperous business, being thus associated until 1889, when our subject disposed of his interests in the enterprise. In that year he was one of the principals concerned in the organization of the Pierre National Bank, of which he was elected president, an office of which he has ever since remained incumbent, while to his wise executive policy and progressive methods is largely due the magnificent growth which has marked the course of this solid and popular financial institution. Upon the organization of Hughes county, in 1880, he was made the first county surveyor, and in 1882 he was elected a member of the board of county commissioners. In 1885 he was elected mayor of the city, and was chosen as his own successor in the following year, giving a most able and acceptable administration and doing much to further the municipal growth and material prosperity. He was one of the committee, in 1885-6-7, representing this section of the state at the federal capital in the matter of urging upon congress the opening to settlement of a large tract of valuable land then included in the Sioux Indian reservation, a measure which was finally brought to a successful issue and which had great effect in hastening the development of the state and in affording opportunities for a large number of good citizens to secure homes. He has been one of the prominent and valued members of the board of trade of Pierre and in the connection rendered most effective service in the contest which secured the location of the state capital here, in 1889-90, while his influence and energies are being again brought into action at the present time (1904) in defending the claims of his home city and in aiding to defeat the proposition to remove the capital elsewhere. In 1887-8 Mr. McClure served as commissioner of immigration of the territory of Dakota, having been appointed by Governor L. K. Church. In 1889 he was the first nominee for governor of the state on the Democratic ticket, and made a brilliant canvass, but was defeated by the Republican nominee, Hon. A. C. Mellette. In 1893 he was appointed commissioner of the state to the World's Columbian Exposition, in Chicago. He was most actively identified with the movement which resulted in the division of the great domain of Dakota territory and in the admission of North and South Dakota to the Union. Mr. McClure has ever given a stanch allegiance to the Democratic party and is one of its leaders in the state, while as a citizen and as a business man he is held in unequivocal confidence and esteem.

On the 24th of July, 1893, at Sioux City, Iowa, Mr. McClure was united in marriage to Mrs. Elizabeth S. Bowen, nee Bentley, and their beautiful home is a center of gracious hospitality.

DOUGLAS W. MARCH, one of the representative members of the bar of Pierre, is a native of the old Buckeye state, having been born in New Franklin, Stark county, Ohio, on the 25th of September, 1859, a son of Henry C. and Sarah J. (McLoughlin) March, both of whom are now deceased, the father having devoted the last twenty years of his life as a treasury department clerk at Washington, D. C. After completing the curriculum of the public schools in his native town Mr. March entered Mount Union College, at Alliance, in the same county, and in this well-known institution he completed his literary course. In 1882 Mr. March matriculated in the law department of the National University at Washington, D. C., and was there graduated in 1884, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and in 1886 he took the degree of Master of Laws. In 1887 he located in Oberlin, Kansas, where he was engaged in the practice of his profession until 1889, when he came to Pierre, South Dakota, where he has ever since been established and where he has built up a large and representative practice. He has ever given an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party, but has held his profession worthy of his undivided time and attention. Mr. March is affiliated with Capital City Lodge, No. 36, Knights of Pythias, which he has represented in the grand lodge of the state, of which latter important body he is a past chancellor.

On the 17th of September, 1894, Mr. March was united in marriage with Miss May Cowan, daughter of Archibald and Mary Cowan, of Pierre, and they are the parents of four children, namely: Harry C., Doris, Julia E. and Alta May.

GEORGE W. PALMER is a prosperous citizen of Lennox, Lincoln county, where he has been practicing veterinary surgery for a number of years. He was born April 1, 1836, in Madison county, New York, and lived at home until of mature years, assisting his father on the farm and receiving an education in the schools of his native state and Wisconsin. He then left the parental roof and went to Iowa, where he engaged in farming. Subsequently he disposed of his Iowa farm and moving to Wisconsin, engaged in the drug business. A number of years ago he came to Lincoln county and took up land, to which he later moved his family, and under his labors the claim in due time was improved and converted into one of the good farms in the neighborhood. Subsequently he removed to the village of Lennox, where he has since resided, devoting his attention the meanwhile to veterinary surgery, a profession in which he has acquired unusual proficiency and skill and much more than local reputation.

MRS. PHOEBE L. MCCOLLUM, of Sioux Falls, who is conducting a notable enterprise under the title of the North and South Dakota View Company, is a native of the state of Illinois, and a representative of one of its early and honored pioneer families. She was born in Granville, Putnam county, on the 8th of October, 1865, and is a daughter of Anton and Anna (Merryfield) Lowenberg, the former of whom was born in Illinois and the latter in Ohio. He was a farmer by vocation and both he and his wife are now at Hastings, Nebraska. They became the parents of seven children, of whom seven are living. The paternal grandfather of Mrs. McCollum was George Lowenberg, who was one of the first settlers in the vicinity of the present town of Granville, Illinois, where he took up his residence as early as 1835, and his large farm is now being platted into city lots. When he located there his nearest market place was Chicago, about one hundred and twenty-five miles to the east, and the great western metropolis was then represented by a straggling town of the most unpretentious kind.

Mrs. McCollum received her educational training in the public schools of her native state, having been graduated in the high school in the city of Ottawa as a member of the class of 1888. She was for two years successfully engaged in teaching in the schools of her native town. On the 20th of September, 1890, in the city of Chicago, was solemnized the marriage of the subject to Arthur C. McCollum, who was born in Ottawa, Illinois, on Christmas day of the year 1865, being a son of William and Doris McCollum, of Ottawa, where he was reared and educated. Mr. and Mrs. McCollum have one child, Ruth Esther. Immediately after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. McCollum removed to San Jose, California, where the former was for nine years a clerk in the local postoffice, having been in the postoffice previous to the marriage. In the spring of 1894 Mr. and Mrs. McCollum came to Sioux Falls, and here the subject has since been engaged in business, as previously noted. Mr. McCollum is now employed in the postoffice at Sioux Falls. Both she and her husband are members of the Congregational church.

WASHINGTON C. GRAYBILL, one of the highly honored citizens of Chamberlain, was born in Fairfield county, Ohio, on the 24th of January, 1851, being a son of Samuel R. and Sarah A. (Carlisle) Graybill, of whose children five are living, namely: Henry Clay, who is traffic manager of the Belt Railroad & Stock Yards Company in the city of Indianapolis, Indiana; George R., who is traveling emigrant agent for the Frisco Railroad Company, at Shelbyville, Illinois; Frank C., who is engaged in the commission trade in Kansas City, Missouri; Washington C., who is the immediate subject of this sketch; and Sarah O., who is the wife of Charles McLeod, of Portland, Oregon. The father was likewise born in Fairfield county, Ohio, whither his parents removed from Pennsylvania in the pioneer days, both having been native of Germany. Samuel R. Graybill was reared on the pioneer farmstead and as a young man prepared himself for the legal profession, being duly admitted to the bar of his native state. About 1859 he removed to Shelby county, Illinois, where he engaged in farming and stock growing, having been led to devote his attention to the great basic art of agriculture from the fact that he had married the daughter of a prosperous farmer. His own parents were well-to-do and had given him a liberal education, but he never had cause to regret his final choice of vocation. He was originally an old-line Whig, but eventually arrayed himself with the Democracy, having held various local offices. His death occurred in 1895, while his wife passed away in 1871.

The honored subject of this sketch was reared on the homestead farm and after duly attending the public schools continued his studies in the Shelbyville College, in Shelbyville, Illinois. At the age of nineteen he began teaching in the district schools, and for thirteen years thereafter was successfully engaged in pedagogic work. In 1883 he came to Dakota and located in Chamberlain, where he was soon afterward admitted to the bar of the territory, having previously given careful attention to the study of law while engaged in teaching. He opened a law office here and also established himself in the real-estate business, while he soon gained a strong hold on the confidence and regard of the community. In 1886 he was elected county judge of Brule county, and was chosen as his own successor two years later, giving a most able and discriminating service on the bench and showing himself well informed in the minutiae of the law. In 1890 Judge Graybill was elected register of deeds of the county, serving one term, and in 1894 he was appointed receiver of the United States land office at this place, retaining this position until 1898. In the fall of 1902 he was elected to represent his district in the lower house of the state legislature, being also the minority candidate for speaker, and here he has shown himself once more the loyal citizen and one deeply interested in the welfare and progress of his state, serving on several important committees. He has ever been a stalwart Democrat and has been an active worker in the party cause. He is a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, being affiliated with Chamberlain Lodge, No. 56, Free and Accepted Masons; Pilgrim Chapter, No. 10, Royal Arch Masons; St. Bernard Commandery, No. 11, Knights Templar, at Mitchell; and El Riad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Sioux Falls; while he has been also a prominent figure in the Knights of Pythias, having served as grand chancellor of the grand lodge of the state in 1890, and being a member of Castle Lodge, No. 10, in his home city.

On the 30th of January, 1895, Judge Graybill was united in marriage to Miss Marion W. Perry, of Saratoga Springs, New York, no children having been born of this union. Mrs. Graybill's only brother, Dr. John L. Perry, is one of the proprietors of the United States Hotel at Saratoga, New York, and it is worthy of mention that the family is related to Commodore Perry, of Lake Erie fame.

H. W. HAHN, president of the Farmers' Bank, Humboldt, and one of the leading merchants of the same place, was born in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on the 24th day of May, 1870. His parents, Ferdinand and Emelia (Hennig) Hahn, moved to Sioux Falls, South Dakota, when he was eight years old and it was in the public schools of that city that he received his early educational training. The discipline thus acquired was afterward supplemented by a course in the Western Normal School, at Lincoln, Nebraska, where he was graduated in 1894, but prior to that date he taught in South Dakota, also followed the same profession for some time thereafter, devoting altogether about eight years to educational work. In 1897 Mr. Hahn located at Humboldt, where he became associated with Harry Duncan in the mercantile business, forming the firm of Hahn & Duncan, which still exists as originally organized. During the ensuing five years the subject devoted his attention exclusively to the general goods business, but in 1903 became one of the founders of the Farmers' Bank of Humboldt, of which institution he has been president ever since its organization and the success of which is largely due to his able and effective management. Associated with Mr. Hahn in the banking business are Harry Duncan, M. Owens, I. D. Maloney and F. B. Lockwood, four thoroughly reliable and far-seeing business men whose high standing in the community is recognized by all and whose ability to carry on successfully this important financial enterprise does not admit of a doubt. Although but recently established the bank has made commendable progress and the volume of business which it now commands indicates its permanence and popularity among the leading institutions of the kind in the state.

The mercantile establishment with which Mr. Hahn is identified is not only the largest and most successful general store in Humboldt, but one of the most extensively patronized in Minnehaha county. Every article of merchandise for which there is any demand can be found in the large and carefully selected stock; the business from a small stock has grown to enormous proportions, and few establishments in the same length of time have come so rapidly and prominently to the front as the annual sales, amounting to over fifty thousand dollars, abundantly testify. Mr. Hahn is essentially a self-made man and every dollar in his business enterprises and in the large private fortune in his possession has been honestly earned through his own efforts. Working his way upward by industry and honorable methods, he has become thoroughly familiar with every detail of the mercantile business, and his sound judgment and discriminating knowledge render him especially eligible for the management of large enterprises, such as he today so successfully directs and controls. He is recognized as one of the able financiers and wide-awake men of affairs in the southeastern part of the state, and his influence in promoting the material welfare of the city of his residence and advancing the varied interests of the people has been as great if not greater than that of any other individual in the community. Upright and honorable in all of his dealings, he is as punctilious in the discharge of his duties now as he was when struggling against opposition in an almost menial capacity, and he attains to a marked degree not only the high regard of all with whom he has business relations, but with the general public as well.

Mr. Hahn is a Republican in politics, but the pressing claims of his business affairs prevent him from taking a very active part in political work. He has never held office nor aspired to leadership, his only public position being that of chairman of the Republican township committee, which he held for a brief period and in which his services were effective and greatly appreciated by the party. He was married, on October 21, 1902, to Miss Carrie M. Rehfeldt, of Williamsburg, Iowa, a most estimable and accomplished lady, who moves in the best social circles of Humboldt and is popular with all of her friends and associates.

DAVID F. SULLIVAN, M. D., who is actively engaged in the practice of his profession at Frankfort, Spink county, is a native of the Badger state, having been born in Hazelgreen, Grant county, Wisconsin, on the 10th of May, 1849, and being a son of Denis and Catherine (Flinn) Sullivan, both of whom were born in Ireland, whence they came to America when young, passing the closing years of their lives in Wisconsin, of which great commonwealth they were early settlers. The subject was reared under the conditions of the pioneer era in Wisconsin, but was afforded excellent educational advantages in his youth. He attended school at Cincineway Mound, in that state, where he completed his preliminary work of preparation for the priesthood, while later he was graduated in the medical department of the famous University of Dublin, Ireland, while later he took a post-graduate course in the city of Chicago, in which city he also took a special course of study in law, in the International University. The Doctor began the practice of medicine in 1876, and in 1879 was made surgeon of the Thirteenth United States Infantry, with which he rendered service in the line until 1883, when he was appointed to a similar incumbency with the Twenty-fifth Infantry, with which he continued as surgeon until 1884, having taken up his residence in South Dakota in 1885. He has been established in the practice of his profession in South Dakota since 1885, and has built up a large and representative business, while he maintains a strong hold upon popular confidence, esteem and affection and is a man of high professional attainments and general scholarship. He is one of the prominent and valued members of the South Dakota Homeopathic Medical Society, in politics is a staunch Republican, and fraternally is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 8th of February, 1898, Dr. Sullivan was united in marriage to Miss Malvina Lemeuix, who was born in the dominion of Canada, in 1864, being a daughter of Charles LaChance. Dr. and Mrs. Sullivan have no children. Both are devoted members of the Catholic church, in whose faith they were reared, while, as previously noted, the Doctor in his youth began preparing himself for the priesthood of the church, finally maturing other plans and entering the profession which he has honored and dignified by his able services.

LUDWIG LEVINGER, president and owner of the Aurora County Bank, at White Lake, is a native of the kingdom of Wurtemberg, Germany, where he was born on the 10th of April, 1867, being the second in order of birth of the four children born to Herman and Mary (Linder) Levinger. All the children are still living, but the subject is the only representative of the immediate family in the United States. He was afforded liberal educational advantages in the fatherland, where he remained until he had attained the age of seventeen years, when he decided to come to America, where he was convinced better opportunities were afforded for attaining independence and success. Accordingly, in the spring of 1883, he embarked for the United States, landing in New York city, whence he made his way to the city of Chicago, where he secured employment in a wholesale men's furnishing-goods house. He retained this position a few months, in the meanwhile sparing no pains to inform himself in regard to American business methods and customs, and in the summer of the same year he decided to seek his fortunes in the west. He located in Mitchell, South Dakota, where he held a clerkship in a furniture establishment until the spring of 1885, when he took up his residence in White Lake, where he secured a position in the White Lake Bank. From a clerical position he was soon advanced to that of cashier of the institution, and in this executive office he continued to render efficient service until 1890, when he purchased the business of the Aurora County Bank, the oldest monetary institution in this section, the same dating its inception back to the year 1882, and as president and manager of this bank he has attained a high degree of success and an enviable reputation in business circles. All this is the more gratifying to contemplate in view of the fact that he came to this country without capitalistic resources or influential friends, and in the short period of twenty years has placed himself well in the forefront in the ranks of financiers in the great and prosperous state of South Dakota, being known and honored as one of the influential citizens of his county. He is a stalwart Republican in his political proclivities, and for sixteen years has served as mayor of White Lake, of which office he is incumbent at the present time, while he has been also a member of the board of education for the past fifteen years. He stands high in rank in the Masonic fraternity, holding membership in the following bodies: White Lake

Lodge, No. 84, Free and Accepted Masons; Mitchell Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Mitchell Commandery, Knights Templar; Oriental Consistory, No. 1, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, at Yankton; and El Riad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Sioux Falls.

In 1896, Mr. Levinger was married to Miss Sadie Wagner and they have two children, Frank R. and Margaret.

R. H. SOMERS, who holds the responsible office of government agent for the Lower Brule Indian agency, is a native of New Brunswick, Canada, where he was born October 23, 1857, being a son of Lafayette and Elizabeth A. (Chapman) Somers, and the eldest of their nine surviving children, the others being as follows: Amelia, the wife of L. W. Lewis, who lives at Madison, Wisconsin; Lowell, a resident of Lafayette, Indiana; Clifford M., a farmer on the Lower Brule reservation; Lafayette, a resident of Chamberlain, this state; and Le Baron B., Peolia L., Fred D. and Eliza M., who remain at the parental home. The father of our subject was born in New Brunswick, Canada, in 1826, and when a young man he removed to Robertstown, Maine, where he served an apprenticeship at the trade of blacksmith, after which he returned to his home in Canada, where he continued to follow his trade until 1878, when he emigrated with his family to the territory of Dakota, locating in Brule City, the prospective terminal of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, though by a later dispensation Chamberlain was made the terminus. He engaged in farming and stock growing and continued to reside in Brule City until 1898, when he removed to Chamberlain, where he is now living retired. His wife was likewise a native of Canada, and is one of the honored pioneer women of the state.

Major R. H. Somers, the immediate subject of this sketch, acquired his early education in the schools of his native province, and before attaining the age of sixteen he entered upon an apprenticeship at the blacksmith trade, under the effective direction of his father. After the removal of the family to Dakota he bought an ax and began chopping wood for the steamboats plying the Missouri river, and after being thus occupied for one year he was tendered and accepted the position of blacksmith at Fort Hale, where he served four years. In 1883 he left this position and removed to Chamberlain, and devoted the following three years to farming and stock raising. In July, 1886, he married Miss Helena F. Archer, of Brule county, and as a severe drought the following year caused an entire loss of his crops he removed from his ranch to the village of Chamberlain and here opened a blacksmith shop, which he conducted until the spring of 1888, when he sold the same and returned to his farm. The droughts continued, however, and in 1891 he was forced to again abandon his agricultural operations and to re-engage in the blacksmith business in Chamberlain, where he continued at his trade until 1898, having also engaged in the livery business in 1894, making a success of both enterprises. In October, 1897, Major Somers was appointed deputy United States marshal, in which capacity he served until May, 1901, when he resigned to assume the duties of his present office as agent at the Lower Brule Indian agency, his appointment having been conferred on the 15th of May. He is a staunch Republican in his political proclivities, and fraternally is identified with Chamberlain Lodge, No. 56, Free and Accepted Masons; Pilgrim Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Castle Lodge, No. 10, Knights of Pythias, of which he is a charter member; and Chamberlain Lodge, No. 88, Ancient Order of United Workmen. Our subject and his wife are the parents of five children, all of whom are still beneath the home roof, namely: Robert E., Frances E., Evelyn, Lucky H. and Thomas M.

CHARLES D. TIDRICK, one of the representative and highly esteemed citizens of Chamberlain, is a native of Winterset, Iowa, where he was born on the 24th of May, 1863, being a son of Levi M. and Martha (Bell) Tidrick, of whose eleven children seven are living, namely: Lee, a resident of Winterset, Iowa; Addie, wife of O. M. White, of that place; Grace, wife of E. W. Geiger, of Ottawa, Kansas; Hoyt, Joseph and George, all residents of Winterset, and Charles D., the immediate subject of this sketch. Levi Tidrick was born in Guernsey county, Ohio, in 1827, and when twenty years of age he removed thence to St. Louis, Missouri, where his brother, Robert L., a prominent attorney and receiver of the land office, was then residing, and in 1848 they both went to Winterset, Iowa, where the father of our subject took up his permanent abode, his brother eventually removing to the city of Des Moines. Levi Tidrick was married at Winterset, and took up the study of medicine, being enabled to defray nearly the entire expense of his course in the St. Louis Medical College, and receiving some financial assistance from his brother Robert. After his graduation in this institution Dr. Tidrick continued in the active practice of his profession in Winterset until his death, in 1896, at the age of sixty-nine years. His death was the result of exposure in Florida, where he passed the winter of that year on his orange farm, the season being one in which the severe frosts did so great damage to the Florida fruit crops. The Doctor was widely known and much loved in his section of Iowa, and his death was deeply lamented in his home town. His widow still resides in Winterset.

Charles D. Tidrick acquired his early educational discipline in the public schools of his home village, being graduated in the Winterset high school and then entering the Normal School at Ladoga, Indiana, later continuing his studies at the State University of Iowa, at Iowa City, where he was a student for four years. After leaving school he passed a short interval in Indian Territory, and in the spring of 1884 came to Beresford, South Dakota, where he secured a position as auditor for F. M. Slagle & Company, lumber dealers. He retained this responsible office about five years, being located at the firm's yards in Alton, Iowa. In 1888 he was elected recorder of Sioux county, that state, on the Democratic ticket, his victory at the polls being the more noteworthy by reason of the fact that the county had a normal Republican plurality of about one thousand at the time. He was re-elected in 1890, thus serving two terms.

In 1893 Mr. Tidrick effected the organization of the German Savings Bank in Alton, disposing of his interests in the same in the fall of that year, when he came to Chamberlain. Here, in the spring of 1894, in company with G. W. Pitts, he organized the Bank of Iowa & Dakota, of which he became president. In 1896 they sold the bank and purchased the electric-lighting and gas plants of Chamberlain, which they have since owned and operated. Mr. Tidrick is the owner of twenty-five hundred acres of valuable land in Brule county, and fifteen hundred acres in contiguous counties, while he conducts a large business in the real-estate line, and in the extending of financial loans, as well as in the insurance and abstracting departments of his business. Mr. Tidrick built and now owns the gas plant at Chamberlain. He is a stalwart Democrat in politics, and is now a member of the board of aldermen of his town. In 1897 he was appointed United States commissioner for this district, and is strictly serving in this capacity. Fraternally he is identified with Chamberlain Lodge, No. 56, Free and Accepted Masons; Chamberlain Lodge, No. 88, Ancient Order of United Workmen; Sioux Falls Lodge, No. 262, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Castle Lodge, No. 10, Knights of Pythias, and Sioux Tent, Knights of the Maccabees.

In 1893, Mr. Tidrick was married to Miss Lillian Love, of Albion, Indiana, and they have three daughters, Eugenia, Mary and Frances.

THOMAS A. STEVENS, the popular postmaster at Chamberlain, was born in the city of Elgin, Illinois, on the 26th of January, 1840, being a son of Josiah and Sarah (Rowley) Stevens, of whose eight children he is the younger of the two surviving, his sister, Caroline, being now the wife of Jacob Ebersole, of Fredericktown, Ohio. The parents of the subject were both born in the village of Painted Post, New York, and the genealogy in the paternal line is traced back to ancestors who came from Liverpool, England, to America, in 1654, and the subject has in his possession a valued heirloom in the form of a cane which was brought over to the new world by the founder of his family, the name and date being carved on the cane, while he himself bears the full patronymic of his colonial ancestor, while the cane has been handed down from generation to generation to persons thus bearing the name of their first American progenitor. The maternal ancestry is of Irish extraction, and the name has likewise been identified with the annals of our national history from the colonial epoch.

In 1834 Josiah Stevens emigrated from New York to Illinois, making the long overland trip with wagons, and he took up a claim of government land lying within the present corporate limits of the great city of Chicago. A year later he traded this land for a team of horses and removed to Elgin, that state, being one of its early settlers, and thereafter he was engaged in railroad work for several years. About 1853 he removed to Rockford, and later to Pecatonica, Illinois, where he was railroad station agent up to the time of his retirement from active work, about the year 1860, while his death there occurred in 1872, at the age of seventy years. He was a Democrat up to the time of the formation of the Republican party, when his anti-slavery views led him to espouse the cause of the new party, of whose principles he ever afterward continued a staunch advocate, while he was one of the early members of the Masonic fraternity in Illinois and active in its work.

Thomas A. Stevens received a common-school education in his native state. On the outbreak of the Civil war he was among the first to tender his services in defense of the Union. On April 17, 1861, the day after President Lincoln issued his first call for volunteers, he enlisted as a private in the Rockford Zouaves, being the first person in the town of Pecatonica to enter the service. The zouaves were mustered in as Company D, Eleventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, on the 1st of May, and the command was one of the first to pass through Chicago enroute to the front. He served with this regiment during his three-months term of enlistment and after being mustered out assisted in raising a company which became Company K, First Illinois Cavalry, and of which he was made first lieutenant, in which capacity he served until January 1, 1864. In July of that year he enlisted in Company C, One Hundred and Forty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, with which he served as first lieutenant until August 1, 1865, when he was mustered out, receiving his honorable discharge.

After the close of the war Mr. Stevens, in May, 1866, started from Illinois for the west, making the trip overland with team and wagon. Upon reaching Fort Riley, Kansas, he found that there was an uprising of Indians, and he returned to Omaha, whence he proceeded by steamboat up the Missouri river to Fort Benton, Montana, whence he proceeded by stage to Helena, now the capital of that great state. In that locality he engaged in prospecting for gold and in general contracting, in which he continued until the fall of 1868, when he returned to his home town in Illinois, where he established himself in the grocery business. In the spring of 1872, just after the great fire in that city, he went to Chicago, where he entered the employ of the Adams Express Company, in whose service he there continued until March 1, 1882, when he started for Chamberlain, South Dakota, his brother Erastus C. having come to this territory in 1878, as a pioneer settler, and having come to Chamberlain in 1881, as a contractor and builder, his arrival here being simultaneous with that of the railroad. He erected a number of the first buildings in the town. After the subject's advent in the town he became associated with his brother in the contracting business, to which he devoted his attention about three years. In 1885 he was appointed deputy register of deeds, serving about four years. In 1889 he was elected register of deeds, serving one term and being defeated in the ensuing election by reason of the Populistic wave which swept over the west in that campaign. In 1892, under the administration of President Harrison, he was appointed clerk at the Crow Creek Indian agency, in which capacity he served until June 1, 1894.

when he was removed by President Cleveland, by reason of his political views. He then came to Chamberlain and established himself in the abstract business and also became a prominent figure in political affairs, being made chairman of the Republican county central committee. On the 8th of March, 1898, Mr. Stevens was appointed postmaster at Chamberlain, under President McKinley, and on the 6th of March, 1902, he was reappointed, under President Roosevelt. Both appointments came as the result of popular endorsement in the community.

Mr. Stevens has been an uncompromising Republican from the time of attaining his majority, having cast his first presidential vote for Lincoln, as did he also his second, having been at that time a soldier in the field and making the trip from New Orleans to his home in Illinois for the purpose of thus exercising his franchise. He is one of the charter members of McKinzie Post, No. 340, Grand Army of the Republic, and is also affiliated with Chamberlain Lodge, No. 56, Free and Accepted Masons.

On the 23d of August, 1865, Mr. Stevens was united in marriage to Miss Emily Elliott, of Pocatonia, Illinois, and her death occurred, at Crow Creek agency, in April, 1893. Of the five children of this union four are living; Lucy, who remains at the paternal home; Elizabeth, who is the wife of Ray Gooder, of Iona, this state; Harry, who is at the paternal home; and Erastus C., who is deputy postmaster under his father.

EDMUND A. BARLOW, who is register of deeds of Lyman county, is one of the honored pioneers of the state and is at the present time president of the Old Settlers' Association of the county. He was born in Eaton, province of Quebec, Canada, on the 14th of February, 1855, and is a son of George F. and Ann (Day) Barlow, both of whom were born in the state of New Hampshire, whence they removed to the province of Quebec in the same year in which their marriage was solemnized, passing the remainder of their lives in the dominion of Canada, the father being a carpenter and inventor. The subject received his early educational training in his native province, and at the age of seventeen years removed thence to Eau Claire, Wisconsin, where he continued to attend school as opportunity afforded, defraying his expenses for a time by clerking in mercantile establishments and later by teaching in the public schools. In 1879 he attended the Wisconsin State Normal School, at River Falls, and in the following year came to what is now the state of South Dakota, locating in Flandreau, Moody county, where he secured a clerical position in the important mercantile house of the W. Jones Company. About three years later he purchased the business, which he successfully continued until 1887, when he disposed of the same and purchased the general merchandise business of Ross Whalen, in Artesian, Sanborn county, South Dakota. In the fall of 1889 he removed thence to Chamberlain, South Dakota, purchasing a stock of general merchandise and preparing to engage in business immediately upon the opening of the Sioux Indian reservation to settlement, this occurring the following spring. He then brought his stock of goods to Lyman, where he continued his mercantile business about eighteen months, at the expiration of which he sold out and engaged in ranching, to which line of enterprise he successfully gave his attention until June, 1903, when he disposed of his interests in that line, in order to assume the duties of his present office. He is a staunch adherent of the Democratic party, and in 1890 he was appointed postmaster at Lyman, serving about three years. He also served one term as county superintendent of schools and four years as justice of the peace, ever proving worthy of the confidence reposed in him by the people of the county. In November, 1902, Mr. Barlow was elected to his present office, that of register of deeds, for which he is specially well qualified. He has ever taken a lively interest in educational affairs in the county and has done much to advance the cause. He is a member of Flandreau Lodge, No. 11, Free and Accepted Masons; Pilgrim Chapter, No. 32, Royal Arch Masons; Cyrene Commandery, No. 2, Knights Templar, at Sioux Falls, and Lodge No. 9449, Modern Woodmen of America. He has served as president of the Old Settlers' Association of Lyman county since 1900, is well known throughout this section and is held in the highest esteem in business and social circles.

On the 23d of November, 1883, Mr. Barlow was united in marriage to Miss Carrie Jones, of Flandreau, this state, no children having been born of this union.

WILLIAM FRANCIS CORRIGAN was born at Prior Lake, Scott county, Minnesota, on the 22d of January, 1865, and is a son of Peter Corrigan, a native of Ireland, who came to the United States in his youth and who won success through his own indefatigable efforts, having the respect and esteem of his fellow men. The subject secured his early educational training in the public schools of Scott county, Minnesota, and at the age of seventeen years began reading law, having decided to adopt its practice as his vocation in life. He took up his residence in Mellette, South Dakota, on the 2d of August, 1895, and at the October term of the supreme court of the state he was admitted to the bar in that year. He at once established himself in practice in Mellette, and by his devotion to his work and his excellent technical knowledge and his power of applying the same he has built up a representative general practice in the state and federal courts and is one of the highly honored members of the bar of his county. He is general attorney for South Dakota of the St. Croix Lumber Company, of Minnesota, and is also similarly retained by other important corporations. In politics Mr. Corrigan is staunchly arrayed as a supporter of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and fraternally he is identified with the local lodge of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and with the chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star.

On the 10th of October, 1891, Mr. Corrigan was united in marriage to Miss Hattie B. Skinner, who was born in Delphis, Ohio. They have no children.

WILLIAM D. CRAIG, cashier of the James River Bank, at Frankfort, Spink county, is a native of the province of Ontario, Canada, where he was born on the 26th of August, 1849, being a son of David C. and Mary J. Craig, both of whom were born in the state of New York. In 1855 they removed from Canada to Winneshiek county, Iowa, remaining but a short time, since within the same year they removed to Fillmore county, Minnesota, where Mr. Craig became one of the early settlers and pioneer farmers, being duly successful in his efforts and being one of the influential citizens of his section. The parents came to Spink county, near Frankfort, in 1882, and here died, the mother dying in the summer of 1899, and the father dying in the summer of 1901. During the war of the Rebellion the father served three years and ten months as a member of the Third Minnesota Volunteer Infantry. The subject of this sketch was reared on the home farm in Fillmore county, Minnesota, and received his early educational training in its common schools. He continued to assist his father in the work and management of the home place, until he married, when he engaged in farming on his own responsibility, continuing his residence in Minnesota until 1884, when he came to South Dakota and located in Spink county, where he secured a farm of three hundred and twenty acres and engaged in farming and stock growing. In the autumn of 1888 he was elected sheriff of the county and was re-elected in 1890, while in 1892 he was elected to represent his district in the state senate, succeeding himself in the election of 1894, and proving himself a valuable working member of the general assembly of the newly admitted commonwealth, while in 1902 he was elected a member of the lower house of the legislature, as a representative of Spink county. He is still the owner of valuable farming land in the county and is also engaged in the buying and shipping of grain, in addition to his banking interests, while he has shown a helpful interest in all that has tended to conserve the advancement and material prosperity of his home town and county. In politics he has ever been stanchly arrayed in support of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and fraternally he is identified with Frankfort Lodge, No. 77, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Frankfort Lodge, No. 303, Ancient Order of United Workmen, being recorder of each of these organizations at the time of this writing. For the past quarter of a century he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and of the same Mrs. Craig also is a member.

On the 25th of May, 1873, at Harmony, Fillmore county, Minnesota, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Craig to Miss Addie R. Elliott, who was born in St. Lawrence county, New York, in March, 1852, her parents having likewise been born in the old Empire state, whence they removed to Minnesota in the pioneer days. Mr. and Mrs. Craig have two children, John D., who was born on the 26th of April, 1874, and Edith J., who was born on the 23d of February, 1879, and who married Oscar Blain, of Frankfort, South Dakota.

JOHN KNOX KUTNEWSKY, M. D., the efficient and honored superintendent of the northern hospital for the insane, at Redfield, Spink county, was born in Groveland, Tazewell county, Illinois, on the 20th of April, 1858, and is a son of John and Margaret (Knox) Kutnewsky, the former of whom was born in Germany and the latter in Ireland, of Scottish lineage. The parents of the Doctor were numbered among the pioneers of Illinois, where the father followed the vocation of milling, and where he and his devoted wife continued to reside until 1883, when they moved to Redfield, South Dakota, where the father built the Redfield City Mills, and where he died in 1884. The mother, two sisters and three brothers moved to Salt Lake, Utah, in 1900, where they are still living. The Doctor availed himself of the advantages of the public schools of his native state and was thereafter a student in the University of Illinois, at Champaign, for two years, while in 1880 he was matriculated in that celebrated institution, Rush Medical College, in the city of Chicago, where he was graduated in February, 1882, receiving his coveted degree of Doctor of Medicine and coming forth admirably equipped for the active work of his chosen profession. He was engaged in practice at Groveland, Illinois, until 1884, when he came to Redfield, South Dakota, where he built up a large and representative general practice, to which he continued to give his undivided attention until October 1, 1901, when he was appointed to his present responsible and exacting office as superintendent of the northern hospital for the insane, one of the noble and well-equipped institutions of the state. He is a member of the American Medical Association, the South Dakota State Medical Society and the Aberdeen District Medical Society, while in a social way he is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Knights of the Maccabees. His political allegiance is given unreservedly to the Republican party, of whose principles he is a staunch advocate.

On the 4th of May, 1882, Dr. Kutnewsky was united in marriage to Miss Julia Etta Kincaid, who was born in Athens, Illinois, on the 9th of January, 1860, being a daughter of John K. and Vienna Williams Kincaid. They have two children, Walter Knox, who was born on the 7th of May, 1883, and Edna V., who was born on the 29th of January, 1886.

MAURICE MORIARTY, the efficient and popular clerk of courts for Spink county, and a pioneer attorney of that county, was born at Clinton, Iowa, on May 13, 1859. He attended the public schools of Muscatine county, Iowa, and later was matriculated in the Iowa State University at Iowa City, where he was graduated in the class of 1881, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy. In the meanwhile, however, he had been reading law. In 1882 he came to South Dakota and located at Northville, Spink county, and formed a partnership with George C. Britton for the handling of real estate in connection with the practice of law. In 1884 he was admitted to the bar of Dakota territory. The firm of Britton & Moriarty was dissolved in 1885, at which time the subject removed to his farm near Northville. He carried on farming successfully until 1901, when, having been elected clerk of the courts in 1900, he removed to Redfield to assume the duties of his office. His administration of the clerk's office proved so satisfactory to the people that at the expiration of his term of two years he was re-elected for a second term, and is still incumbent of the office. In politics Mr. Moriarty is a member of the Republican party, and has ever been an earnest exponent of that party's cause. He was a member of the first convention called in reference to securing the admission of South Dakota to the Union. He has taken an active part in the different campaigns, and has stumped the state several times. Mr. Moriarty is identified with both the Knights of Pythias and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On December 13, 1863, Mr. Moriarty was united in marriage to Miss Estella Reiter, who was born in Martin county, Minnesota.

LEMUEL B. LAUGHLIN is a native of Grundy county, Illinois, where he was born on the 13th day of November, 1851, being a son of Robert S. and Melinda (Livingston) Laughlin, to whom were born four children, two daughters and two sons. The subject of this sketch was educated in the common schools, and at Wheaton College, Wheaton, DuPage county, Illinois. In October, 1882, he first came to Dakota, and in May, 1883, settled with his family in Bridgewater, where he resided until April, 1901, when he removed to Chamberlain, after being appointed by President McKinley receiver of public moneys for the United States land office situated at that point. In March, 1893, he was appointed by Governor Sheldon a member of the state board of charities and corrections, which position he filled until the expiration of his term, in March, 1899, four years of which he was secretary of the board.

On the 5th day of November, 1874, Mr. Laughlin was united in marriage to Susan L.

Armstrong, of LaSalle county, Illinois, and they have five children, Bertha R., wife of William S. Burroughs, of Sioux City, Iowa; Robert A., of Kansas City, Mo.; Grace M., Constance S. and Clinton J., who remain at the parental home.

FREDERICK TREON, M. D., one of the representative physicians and surgeons of the state, established in the practice of his profession in Chamberlain, was born in Shelby county, Indiana, on the 12th of August, 1857, and is a son of Dr. Andrew and Lydia (Steinberger) Treon, of whose five children three are living, namely: Rebecca, the wife of Edward Gabbert, of Bloomington, Illinois; Frederick, the subject of this sketch, and Elizabeth, the wife of Robert Lytle, of Michigan City, Indiana. The father of our subject was born in Lebanon county, Pennsylvania, where he was reared and educated. As a young man he removed thence to Miamisburg, Ohio, where he read medicine under the preceptorship of his uncle, Dr. John Treon, being graduated in his chosen profession and then locating in Shelby county, Indiana, in the 'thirties, when that locality was practically unclaimed from the wilderness. He was one of the pioneer physicians of the county, and there he continued in practice until his death, in 1865, at the age of sixty-two years. He was twice married, the maiden name of his first wife having been Coffman, and of their children five are living, namely: Samuel, who is a resident of Mattoon, Illinois, was a valiant soldier in the war of the Rebellion, being severely wounded in the siege of Vicksburg and re-enlisting after recovering from the effects of this injury; Jackson, who was likewise a soldier in the Civil war, is now a resident of Washington, Indiana; Sarah is the wife of John Heck, of Bartholomew county, that state; Sabill is the wife of H. C. Williamson, of Michigan City, Indiana, and Charlotte is the wife of William Collins, of Bartholomew county. Michael Treon, grandfather of the Doctor, was born in France, and he also was a physician, the family name having thus been long and prominently identified with the medical profession, the subject and two of his cousins, his father and grandfather, his uncle Michael and his great-uncle, John Treon, all having adopted the profession as a vocation.

After availing himself of the advantages afforded in the public schools of his native county Dr. Treon continued his studies in the academy at Franklin, Indiana, and when about eight years of age he secured a position in the machine shops of Haskill & Barker, in Michigan City, where he completed a special course in geometry and trigonometry and civil and mechanical engineering. He was not yet satisfied with his mental attainments, however, and thus entered upon a careful study of anatomy under the personal direction of Dr. J. Sadler, of Edinburg, Indiana, with a view of preparing himself for the practice of medicine. He thus continued his technical studies for two years, in the meanwhile clerking in a drug store and by this means supplemented his knowledge of materia medica and therapeutics. In the fall of 1876 he went to Aurora, Indiana, and began the systematic study of medicine under the preceptorship of Drs. James and L. K. Lamb, remaining in their office until the latter part of the following year, when he was matriculated in the Ohio Medical College, in Cincinnati, where he continued his studies two years, being then graduated and receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine. He at once entered upon the active practice of his profession, forming a partnership with his father-in-law, Dr. James Lamb, with whom he continued to be associated for six years. In 1886 Dr. Treon was appointed physician in the government Indian service, being assigned to service at the Crow Creek Indian reservation, in South Dakota. His commission expired four years later and he then went to the city of Chicago, where he took a post-graduate course in Rush Medical College and then opened an office in Hyde Park, that city, where he was in practice about three months, being then re-appointed to the Indian service and assigned to the San Carlos agency, in Arizona, where he remained six months, being then transferred to the Crow Creek agency, where he had previously served with so much acceptability. In 1893 the Doctor was appointed Indian agent for this reservation and also for the Lower Brule agency, retaining this incumbency four years and seven months and making an excellent record as an executive. In the spring of 1898 he came to Chamberlain, and soon afterward was appointed medical examiner, under General Andrew E. Lee, in the Spanish-American war service, being located at Sioux Falls. Later he was offered a commission as assistant surgeon under Colonel Grigsby, but did not accept the office. In the fall of 1898 the Doctor located in Chamberlain, where he has since been actively engaged in practice. In the fall of 1900 he became associated with R. F. Terpenning in the drug business and under the firm name of Terpenning & Treon they now conduct one of the leading pharmacies of the city, Mr. Terpenning being a graduate in pharmacy and a skilled chemist. The Doctor is a member of the South Dakota State Medical Society, of the Mitchell District Medical Society, and of the American Medical Association. In politics he is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Democratic party, and both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church. Fraternally he is identified with Chamberlain Lodge, No. 56, Free and Accepted Masons; Pilgrim Chapter, No. 32, Royal Arch Masons; St. Bernard Commandery, No. 11, Knights Templar, at Mitchell; Sioux Falls Lodge, No. 262, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Castle Lodge, No. 10, Knights of Pythias, and also with the local organizations of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Mutual Benefit Association and the Knights of the Maccabees, being medical examiner for these three lodges, as well as for numerous old-time insurance companies.

On the 29th of March, 1879, Dr. Treon was united in marriage to Miss Rella L. Lamb, daughter of Dr. James Lamb, of Aurora, Indiana, and their only child, Dr. James F. Lamb, is a graduate of the Ohio Medical College, in Cincinnati, and is engaged in the practice of his profession in Aurora, Indiana.

BEN P. HOOVER, of Gettysburg, is one of the best known and most popular men in South Dakota. He has been a resident of the section since 1877, when he arrived at Fort Bennett, the two-company post near Fort Sully, established a few years earlier to afford protection to the Cheyenne river Indian agency. He soon entered the Indian service as agency farmer and his experience during the next few years with the still wild Indians ranges all the way from the humorous to the tragic. He was assigned to cut the hair of the wild fellows who surrendered after the Custer war, and saw big braves who had been leaders in massacres tremble and whine with fear as the scissors clipped off the sacred scalp lock which is so important an article in their superstitious faith. He was present and assisted in the fight with the Cold Spring robbers in the celebrated bout at the Water Holes, and was a participant in many other thrilling experiences. Leaving the Indian service, he established himself as a ranchman in Sully county and at once became a leading factor in the business and politics of that locality. He is an ardent Republican and first impressed himself upon the party leaders as possessing extraordinary powers in handling men, in the national Republican convention of 1892 when he rounded up and kept in line for Harrison, against the powerful influences of the opposition, several of the colored delegations from southern states. From that time he has held a high position in the councils of his party in the state and beyond. About 1894 he took up his residence in Gettysburg, and has since that time engaged in the real-estate and live-stock business, but has been much of the time employed in special service for the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, and for four years past has been the special representative of that line before the state legislature.

In 1898 Mr. Hoover met with a serious accident, falling from a high trestlework upon the railway and, alighting upon a bed of boulders, his spine was dislocated. Almost any other man would have effectually been put out of commission by an accident of this nature; indeed his physicians felt that it was necessarily fatal, but his splendid constitution and indomitable courage brought him through, and though he is not the robust man he was in his earlier days, he enjoys very good health and is in business affairs as active and forceful as ever.

Mr. Hoover was born August 27, 1854, at Wayne, Wisconsin, and was educated in the common schools. He was married February 14, 1879, to Miss Alberta Rounds, of Malone, New York. Mrs. Hoover died in 1895, leaving to Mr. Hoover two sons and a daughter, Mabel A., Wayne and Ben C. A gentleman of Mr. Hoover's popularity could be scarcely less than an active lodge man, and he is honored in the Masons, Odd Fellows, Elks, Workmen and Woodmen of America.

BERT G. WATTSON, senior member of the firm of Wattson & Hulseman, hardware merchants of Chamberlain, was born in Northwood, Worth county, Iowa, September 23, 1867, and is a son of George F. and Felixine M. (Wardall) Wattson, of whose six children he is the eldest of the five now living, the others being as follows: Carrie, the wife of L. G. Gunn, of Lawton, Oklahoma; Charles, a resident of El Reno, that territory; as are also Robert and Kenneth. The father of the subject was born in Michigan, and there his mother died when he was a child, his father soon afterward removing to Iowa. There he was reared and educated, and at the age of seventeen years he enlisted as a private in Company K, Fifth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, with which he served during the major portion of the Civil war, the history of that regiment being that of his career as a valiant son of the republic. After the close of the war he engaged in the drug business in Northwood, Iowa, where he continued to reside until 1888, when he disposed of his interests there and removed to Texas, where he engaged in railroad contracting and in the real-estate business. In 1891 he removed to El Reno, Oklahoma, where he established himself in the real-estate business, and soon after the inauguration of the late lamented President McKinley he was appointed postmaster in that place, a position which he has ever since filled, having been reappointed under President Roosevelt. He was elected a member of the Iowa state legislature in the early 'eighties, serving one term. He is a Royal Arch Mason. His devoted wife entered into eternal rest in 1894, and he later married Mrs. Adah Birney, no children having been born of this union.

Bert G. Wattson secured his early education in the public schools of his native state and then entered the Iowa State Agricultural College, at Ames, where he continued his studies, after which he was engaged in teaching for one term. He then secured a clerkship in the office of the United States Express Company at Northwood, and in September, 1886, he came to Chamberlain, South Dakota, where for the ensuing three years he was employed as clerk in the dry-goods establishment of M. W. Egleston. In the autumn of 1889 he went to Vernon, Texas, where he was assistant postmaster for one year. In 1890 he returned to Chamberlain and in the spring of the following year he was here united in marriage to Miss Mildred M. Hart, daughter of Charles B. Hart, local station agent of the Chicago, Minneapolis & St. Paul Railroad. Soon after his marriage he removed with his bride to the state of Washington, where they remained about four months, and he then returned to Chamberlain, with the intention of entering into partnership with a friend and engaging in the dry-goods business here. But shortly after his arrival the store of his former employer, Mr. Egleston, was sold to J. W. Orcott, and our subject was engaged as manager of the enterprise, and somewhat less than a year later Mr. Egleston again engaged in business, in a new location, and Mr. Wattson again entered his employ, remaining with him about four years, or until 1892, when he was elected city auditor, of which office he continued incumbent about four years. In the fall of 1896 Mr. Wattson purchased an interest in the grocery business of Charles H. Young, and the enterprise was continued under the firm name of Wattson & Young until the fall of 1897, when the business was sold, and thereupon our subject purchased the interest of J. M. Green in the hardware business of J. M. Green & Company, the firm name being simultaneously changed to Cook & Wattson. On the 1st of January, 1903, J. F. Hulseman purchased Mr. Cook's interest, and the present firm name was adopted.

Mr. Wattson is a staunch Republican, and is identified with Chamberlain Lodge, No. 56, Free and Accepted Masons; Pilgrim Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Chamberlain Lodge, No. 88, Ancient Order of United Workmen; Sioux Tent, No. 34, Knights of the Maccabees; and Sioux Falls Lodge, No. 262, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Mr. and Mrs. Wattson have had three children, of whom two are living, George H. and Donald H. Mrs. Mildred Wattson died in April, 1900, and on March 10, 1904. Mr. Wattson married Miss Cora M. Miner, of Mitchell, South Dakota, daughter of George H. Miner.

JOSIAH LOCKE PHILLIPS, M. D., was born in the picturesque old town of Farmington, Maine, on the 8th of June, 1835, and his death occurred in Sioux Falls, South Dakota, on the 12th of June, 1882. His father, Dr. Alan Phillips, was born at Greene, Maine, on the 29th of June, 1798, and died at Dubuque, Iowa, on the 9th of October, 1878, having been one of the early settlers in the Hawkeye state. He prepared for college under the preceptorship of Dr. Holland, of Canton, Maine, and was graduated in the medical department of Bowdoin College as a member of the class of 1822, after which he was engaged in the practice of his profession in Strong; that state, where he remained until 1829, when he removed to Farmington, where he continued his professional labors until the time of his removal to Iowa, where he passed the remainder of his life. The family name has been identified prominently with the medical profession for a number of generations, and records extant show that the family was founded in America in the early colonial epoch of our national history. The genealogy is traced in a direct way to Richard Phillips, who was married, at Pembroke, Massachusetts, on the 9th of October, 1746, to Miss Ruth Bonney. In 1777 they removed to Turner, Androscoggin county, Maine. Richard Phillips served in defense of Boston in 1775, and his son Ichabod, grandfather of the subject of this memoir, was also a soldier in the Continental line in the war of the Revolution. Ichabod Phillips was born in Pembroke, Massachusetts, on the 11th of April, 1765, and his death occurred October 13, 1830. In Hanover, Massachusetts, in July, 1798, he was united in marriage to Mary Bailey, who was born in that place, on the 15th of March, 1763, and whose death there occurred on the 1st of August, 1815: Annie (Croswell) Phillips, the mother of the subject of this sketch, was born at Falmouth, Massachusetts, on the 23d of August, 1795, and she died at Farmington, Maine, June 27, 1875.

Dr. Josiah L. Phillips was reared in his native state, and after duly availing himself of the advantages afforded in the common schools, he entered Bowdoin College, in 1852, and there continued his studies for two years, at the expiration of which he was matriculated in Rush Medical College in the city of Chicago, Illinois, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1856, being one of the early graduates of this celebrated institution. He engaged in the active practice of his profession at Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, where he remained one year, and he then removed to Iowa, being established in practice in the city of Dubuque at the time when the Western Town Company sent out a party to locate a town at the falls of the Big Sioux river, in the territory of Dakota. He became a member of this party and arrived in what is now the city of Sioux Falls on the 27th of August, 1857. He thus became one of the first settlers of the new town, and here continued his residence until 1861, within which time he served as justice of the peace, under appointment by the governor of Minnesota, who had jurisdiction in Dakota. In the year last mentioned Dr. Phillips returned to Dubuque, Iowa, and enlisted in the Sixteenth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, which was organized in Davenport, being commanded by Colonel Alexander Chambers. The original surgeon of the regiment was Dr. J. H. Camburn, and Dr. Phillips became assistant surgeon at the time of the organization of the regiment, while later he was promoted to the office of surgeon. Proceeding with his regiment to the front, he continued in active service until the close of the great Civil war, making an enviable record and attaining to the rank of major. After victory had crowned the Union arms he received his honorable discharge and then returned to Dubuque, Iowa, being thereafter engaged in the practice of his profession in East Dubuque until 1860, when he came again to Sioux Falls, where his family joined him in June of the following year. He gained a strong hold upon popular confidence and esteem and built up a large and representative practice, being one of the pioneer physicians of the state and ever maintaining high professional rank and prestige. He continued in active practice here until the close of his life, while as a citizen he was ever loyal, progressive and public-spirited. He was a man of noble attributes of character and won to himself the friendship of all with whom he came in contact, while his name merits an enduring place upon the list of those strong and earnest characters who were the founders of the great and prosperous commonwealth of South Dakota. In politics he was ever a staunch Republican.

On the 1st of July, 1867, at Houston, Texas, Dr. Phillips was united in marriage to Miss Harriet C. Daggett, who was there engaged in philanthropic work, as a teacher in a school for negroes. Mrs. Phillips survives her honored husband and still retains her home in Sioux Falls, where she is held in affectionate regard by all who know her and have come within the sphere of her gracious influence. Of the children of this union we here enter the names, with respective dates of birth: Annie C., June 25, 1868; Abbie I., February 23, 1871; Alice C., August 10, 1873; Flora C., September 30, 1875; Charles A., September 21, 1877; Rossie C., February 24, 1880; and Josie L., January 26, 1883.

FREDELL EUGENE FIELD, D. D. S., a member of the state board of examiners in dental surgery and ex-president of the South Dakota State Dental Society, was born in South Acworth, Sullivan county, New Hampshire, on the 21st of June, 1866, and is a son of George B. Field, who likewise was born in the old Granite state, the family having been founded in New England in the colonial era of our national history. The Doctor passed his boyhood in his native state and duly availed himself of the advantages of the public schools, while in 1885 he took up the study and work of dentistry under the direction of an able instructor, in Brattleboro, Vermont. In the following year he came to South Dakota, locating at Sioux Falls, where he remained three years, at the expiration of which he returned to Vermont and opened an office in Putney, where he followed professional work for the ensuing two years. He thereafter was connected with dental offices in various cities and towns, finally entering a dental college in the city of Chicago, where he completed a technical course and was graduated in 1892, receiving the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery. He then engaged in the active practice of his profession in Phillips, Wisconsin, where he remained until 1895, when the town was practically destroyed by fire, and he thereupon returned to Sioux Falls, where he has ever since been engaged in the practice of dentistry, having finely equipped offices and receiving a representative support. In 1901 the Doctor was elected president of the South Dakota State Dental Society and served in this capacity for one year, while in 1903 Governor Herreid appointed him a member of the state board of dental examiners, for a term of five years. In his political allegiance the Doctor is known as a stalwart Republican, while both he and his wife are valued members of the Congregational church. He is identified with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Pythias and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 21st of November, 1894, Dr. Field was united in marriage to Miss Etta Belknap, who was born in Hancock, New York, being a daughter of George W. and Olive Belknap. Dr. and Mrs. Field became the parents of two children, Eugene Belknap, who is now attending the public schools; and Gladys Olive, who is deceased.

WALTER R. KINGSBURY, who is one of the successful real-estate dealers of the city of Sioux Falls, is a native of the state of Connecticut, having been born in the town of Andover, on Christmas day of the year 1832, and being a son of Joseph and Amelia (Reynolds) Kingsbury, both of whom were likewise native of Connecticut, where they passed their entire lives, the father having been a farmer by vocation. It is practically well authenticated that the original progenitors of the Kingsbury family in America were of staunch old English stock and that they immigrated to the new world and settled in the Massachusetts colony about the year 1635, while the maternal ancestors of the subject came from Scotland at an early period. Mr. Kingsbury completed the curriculum of the common schools in his native state, and then continued his studies for a time in an academy at Monson, Massachusetts, while in 1854 he was matriculated in the Connecticut State Normal School, at New Britain, where he completed a course of study and fitted himself for the pedagogic profession. He began teaching in the common schools of his native state in the year 1849, meeting with signal success, and he continued to follow this vocation, in various localities, for the ensuing ten years. After teaching he engaged in the merchandise business at Camp Point, Illinois, where he had been engaged in teaching for some years previous. He served as postmaster in 1863 and in 1865 he closed out his business and removed to Chicago, where he engaged in the dry-goods business, continuing until 1875, having been successful until the panic of 1873. He then removed to Oak Park, a suburb, where he continued in the dry-goods business until 1878. Coming then to Sioux Falls, he engaged in the same business, continuing five years, being successful. He then engaged in the real-estate business, in which he has since continued. He has been successful in his operations and is one of the honored citizens of the place, being held in high esteem by all who know him. He is independent in his political attitude, giving his support to men and measures meeting the approval of his judgment, and both he and his wife are prominent and valued members of the Congregational church.

On the 20th of April, 1865, at Mendon, Illinois, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Kingsbury to Miss Cornelia Starr, who was born in Mendon, Adams county, Illinois, on the 2d of November, 1837, being a daughter of Richard and Sarah (Benton) Starr, who were numbered among the sterling pioneers of that state. Mr. and Mrs. Kingsbury have two children, Helen L., who is still at the parental home, and a teacher in the public schools, and Howard L., who is engaged in the lumber business at Sioux Falls.

JOHN FRANCIS HULSEMAN, JR., who is engaged in the hardware business at Chamberlain, Brule county, is a native of the beautiful old city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he was born on the 26th of June, 1868, being a son of John F. and Louisa Hulseman, who were likewise born and reared in Philadelphia, being representatives of staunch old families of the Keystone state, whither the original progenitors in the new world came from Germany. The father of our subject is a leather merchant by vocation and at present resides in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

John F. Hulseman, Jr., secured his early educational training in the public schools of his native city, after which he engaged in the saddlery and heavy hardware business in Philadelphia with Kennedy, Nilling & Company. In 1889 he went to Chicago and was house salesman for A. F. Resser & Company, wholesale saddlery and hardware. In 1892 he moved to Milwaukee, as city salesman for B. Young estate, wholesale saddlery and hardware, remaining with them until 1894. At that time he changed firms to travel through the state of South Dakota and northwestern Iowa, with headquarters at Sioux Falls, South Dakota, for Scheffer & Rossum, of St. Paul, Minnesota, wholesale saddlery and hardware. The following year he accepted a position with Wallace Smith & Company, wholesale saddlery and hardware, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, remaining with them until January 1, 1903, when he engaged in the hardware business at Chamberlain, South Dakota, with B. G. Wattson, under the firm name of Wattson & Hulseman, hardware, harness, farm implements, etc.

In politics Mr. Hulseman is a staunch Democrat, his religious faith is that of the Catholic church and fraternally he is identified with the Catholic Order of Foresters, the United Commercial Travelers and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 1st of September, 1895, at Sioux Falls, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Hulseman to Miss Anna A. Donahoe, who was born in Decorah, Iowa, and reared in Sioux Falls, South Dakota, being a daughter of Daniel Donahoe, and of this union have been born three children, namely: Giles Daniel, Leo John and Raymond Francis.

JULIUS D. BARTOW, one of the prominent and highly esteemed merchants of Plankinton, Aurora county, was born in Republic, Seneca county, Ohio, on Christmas day of the year 1851, being a son of Joel C. and Mary A. (Hosford) Bartow, the maternal ancestry tracing back to English origin. The name is of French derivation and was originally spelled Bardeaux. Joel C. Bartow was born at Bartow's Ridge, in Erie county, Ohio, the name having been given to the locality by four brothers of his mother, they having been pioneers of that section, whither they emigrated from the state of New York in an early day. After his marriage the father of our subject removed to Seneca county, Ohio, where he was identified with farming, and also with merchandising and the hotel business in the town of Republic, where he died October 19, 1901, at the age of seventy-four years, having been one of the honored and influential citizens of that locality. He was a Democrat and a member of the Odd Fellows' fraternity. His devoted wife, who died on the 9th of March, 1891, at the age of sixty-seven years, was born in Dartmouth, England, whence she came to America with her parents when a child of six years. The subject of this sketch attended the common schools of his native place and then completed a four-years course in the academy at Republic. He then entered the employ of the firm of Hemmingway & Hensinger, dealers in groceries and drugs at Republic, where he remained one year. He was married in 1873 and for the following eight years had charge of his father-in-law's farm, in Seneca county, Ohio. On the 19th of February, 1883, he and his family arrived in Plankinton, South Dakota, having been out on a tour of inspection through the west during the preceding year. Shortly after locating in Plankinton Mr. Bartow purchased the general store of Conway Thompson, and from this modest nucleus has been built up the magnificent business now controlled by him, twenty-one thousand two hundred feet of floor space being demanded for the accommodation of the various departments of the enterprise, which is one of the most extensive of the sort in the county. In September, 1900, the business was incorporated and is now conducted under the title of the Aurora Lumber Company, while the mercantile house has well-equipped departments, including those devoted to dry goods, groceries, boots and shoes, harness and saddlery goods, agricultural implements, etc. Mr. Bartow is also the owner of valuable farming land in the county. He is now a staunch Republican in politics, but was formerly arrayed with the Democracy, as the candidate of which he was elected to the state legislature in 1890, serving one term. He was for several years a member of the board of education of Plankinton, which is celebrated for having one of the best schools in the state. He is identified in a prominent way with the Masonic fraternity, being affiliated with the lodge in Plankinton, the chapter and commandery in Mitchell, the consistory of the Scottish Rite in Yankton and the temple of the Mystic Shrine in Sioux Falls, while he is also a member of the lodge of Elks in Sioux Falls and of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in his native town in Ohio. He and his family are members of the Congregational church.

On the 7th of May, 1873, Mr. Bartow was united in marriage to Miss Clara A. Stearns, of Republic, Ohio, where she was reared and educated, being a daughter of John B. and Adaline

H. Stearns. Of this union were born six children, of whom three survive, namely: Addie, who remains at the parental home; Nona, who is the wife of F. L. Snyder, of Plankinton, and John S., who is also at home.

GEORGE B. BALE is a native of England and dates his birth from November 25, 1867. He first saw the light of day in Norfolk and spent his early life in that place, receiving a good education in the schools of the same, and remaining with his parents until eighteen years of age. Severing home ties in the spring of 1885, he came to the United States, making his way direct to Watertown, South Dakota, where he remained for a brief period, after which he traveled extensively over various western states and territories, going as far as the Pacific coast. Being pleased with Dakota, he finally returned to this state, and took up a pre-emption on the "Divide" near Battle creek, Custer county, where he engaged in farming, but the venture not proving successful, he left his place and for some time thereafter was employed by a horse dealer, to whom his services proved of great value. Later Mr. Bale began buying and selling horses upon his own responsibility, and in due time worked up an extensive and lucrative business in the vicinity of Battle creek. In 1890 he changed his location to the Cheyenne river, where he continued running horses until 1897, when he effected a co-partnership in the business with C. W. Arnold, the two greatly extending the scope of their operations, buying up all the outfits in a large area of territory and within a short time achieved the reputation of being the largest and most successful horse dealers in the western part of the state. The firm thus constituted lasted until 1902, in which year the subject withdrew from the partnership and purchased the ranch on Battle creek, twenty-three miles east of Hermosa, where he has since lived and prospered, as a cattle raiser, devoting considerable attention the meantime to the improvement of his place. In addition to the live-stock business, Mr. Bale also carries on farming, the greater part of his land being irrigated and easily susceptible to tillage. He raises abundant crops of grain, vegetables and fruits, which with the returns from his cattle sales yield him a handsome income every year. He belongs to the Masonic lodge at Hermosa, and, like the majority of intelligent and progressive citizens, manifests an abiding interest in public and political affairs, giving his support to the Republican party.

On November 11, 1901, Mr. Bale and Miss Nettie Bower, of South Dakota, were united in the holy bonds of wedlock, the marriage resulting in the birth of one child, a son who answers to the name of George J.

JAMES L. PRATT, editor and publisher of the Elkton Record, at Elkton, Brookings county, is one of the able and popular newspaper men of the state and has made his paper a potent factor in local politics and an effective exponent of the interests of the section in which it is published. Mr. Pratt was born in Allamakee county, Iowa, on the 13th of September, 1856, and is a son of Azel and Mary (Hersey) Pratt, both of whom were born and reared in the state of Maine, whence they came west to Iowa in 1848, becoming pioneers of Allamakee county, where the father of our subject purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land, which he improved and sold, moving to Waukon, the county seat, where he lived until his death, which occurred in 1881. He was a carpenter by trade and continued to work at the same to a greater or less extent after his removal to Iowa, where his services in the line were in much demand in the early days. He built the first house in the village of Waukon, Allamakee county, said village having been named in honor of a prominent Indian chief. He was a man of prominence and influence in his township and county, and held various township offices. He was an expert player of the snare drum, and in the time of the Civil war he used his abilities in this line most effectively in connection with the organizing of various companies, being past the age of service at the time. He was a most devoted member of the Baptist church, in which he served as deacon for many years, and his wife also exemplified the same faith in her beautiful and gracious character, her death occurring in 1881. They became the parents of seven children, concerning whom we offer the following brief record: William C. died in infancy; Noah H. is a resident of Waukon, Iowa, and is a carpenter and builder by vocation; Marellus H., who was a wheelwright by trade, died in Spokane, Washington, in 1892; Richmond G. died in Sheldon, Iowa, in 1890; Emery W. is a carpenter and builder of Waukon, Iowa; Ella is the wife of Altheras J. Rogers, of Chicago; and James L. is the immediate subject of this sketch.

James L. Pratt was reared to maturity in his native county and received his early education in the public schools of Waukon, where he continued his studies until he had attained the age of sixteen years. During his boyhood days he worked with his father at the carpenter trade during his vacations, receiving one cent a day in recompense for his services, while with increasing years and ability he continued to secure larger wages, until he finally commanded three and one-half dollars a day. Upon leaving school, at the age of sixteen, he entered upon an apprenticeship at the printers' trade, at Postville, Iowa, serving six months in the dignified and autocratic office of "printer's devil," and there gaining in due time a comprehensive knowledge of the "art preservative of all arts." At the age of seventeen he became foreman in the office of the Waukon Standard, retaining this position four years, after which he had charge of the Waukon Democrat for an equal length of time. Thereafter he was for a time employed at the carpenter trade, and in 1882 he was called to accept a position on the Pipestone Republican, in Pipestone, Minnesota, where he remained about two years. In 1885 he came to South Dakota and took charge of the Elkton Record, of which he is now editor and publisher and which he has made a most successful publication.

At the time he assumed control the business was at the lowest possible ebb, the town being small and the paper eking out a precarious existence, but by good management and thorough technical ability he has gained to the paper the reputation of being one of the best local papers in the state, while he has a well-equipped job department, controls a satisfactory advertising patronage and has built up a gratifying circulation. The paper is Republican in politics and thus voices the sentiments of Mr. Pratt, who is a vigorous and forceful writer. He has been village clerk of Elkton for the past twenty years, and is at the present time justice of the peace for the town and county. He is one of the leaders in the political affairs of the county and is prominent in the councils of his party in the state. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Modern Brotherhood of America, the Knights of the Maccabees and other social and beneficiary organizations. He and his family are members of the Baptist church, and he is one of the most influential workers in the church in his home town, taking an active part in forwarding its spiritual and temporal interests. He is one of the popular citizens of the village and county and commands unqualified esteem, while his aid and influence are ever cast in favor of all objects and enterprises tending to conserve the general welfare. He is also manager and drum major of the Woodmen band of Elkton, one of the best bands in the state.

On the 31st of March, 1880, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Pratt to Miss Edith F. Wedgwood, of Rossville, Iowa. She was born in the state of Iowa and is a daughter of the late Rev. John M. Wedgwood, a prominent member of the clergy of the Baptist church. Mr. and Mrs. Pratt have six children, concerning whom we enter the following brief record: Ada M., who was graduated in the Elkton high school and in the Cedar Falls Seminary, at Osage, Iowa, and the State Normal at Winona, Minnesota. She is a successful and popular teacher, and was assistant principal in the Elkton high school at the time of this writing; Jesse L., who was graduated in the Elkton high school and the seminary at Osage, Iowa, and also in the Commercial Business College at Mankato, Minnesota, is now employed as bookkeeper in the office of the Hays-Lucas Lumber Company at Watertown, South Dakota; Vern and Vera, twins, and Gladys are students in the home high school; Ruth is the youngest, not yet of school age.

JOHN E. C. WILSON, one of the extensive farmers and stock growers of Charles Mix county, is a native of the fine old Hoosier state, having been born in Adams county, Indiana, on the 30th of April, 1845, and being a son of Edward D. and Elizabeth (Coynor) Wilson. The father was a farmer in Indiana, where he died when the subject of this sketch was a mere child. The latter received his rudimentary education in the district schools of his native state, where he remained until he had attained the age of ten years, when he began to depend upon his own resources, going to Peoria county, Illinois, securing work on a farm and continuing to attend the public schools as opportunity afforded. At the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion Mr. Wilson gave prompt evidence of his youthful ardor and patriotism by tendering his services in defense of the Union. At the age of sixteen years he enlisted as a private in Company G, Eighth Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and it was his fortune to take part in many of the most important campaigns and battles of the war, among which may be mentioned the following: Fort Henry, Donelson, Shiloh, Holly Springs, Memphis, Vicksburg, from which last mentioned city the command proceeded into Arkansas, later returning to Vicksburg and thence going to Jackson, Mississippi; thereafter he was a participant in the engagements at Memphis, Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and Knoxville, and later the regiment was in the battle of Atlanta. The subject was then on a veteran furlough, and then joined Sherman, at Newbern, North Carolina. Mr. Wilson continued in active service for a period of four years, ever being found at the post of duty and making the record of a gallant young soldier, while he received his honorable discharge in the city of St. Louis, Missouri. He was wounded in the engagement at Arkansas Post and also slightly in two other contests. After his discharge he returned to Illinois, being employed on a farm in Stark county for the ensuing two years, at the expiration of which he went to Des Moines, Iowa, where he continued to be identified with agricultural pursuits for twelve years, having purchased a farm in Polk county, that state.

On October 19, 1868, Mr. Wilson was married to Sarah Ann Pyle, but she died about one year later. In 1871 he married Mary Brazelton, but after a union of about twelve years they separated and on November 25, 1886, he consummated a third marriage, being then united to Miss Mary McCartney, who was born January 1, 1865, in New York city, moving to Iowa at the age of five years. They are the parents of five children, namely: The eldest, a boy, died in infancy; Elizabeth, May, Edna and Alta, all of whom are attending school, the eldest daughter being a student in Ward Academy, in Charles Mix county, South Dakota.

In 1883 Mr. Wilson came with his family to South Dakota and located in Charles Mix county, where he took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres, while in subsequent years he added to the area of his landed estate until it now comprises nearly twenty-five hundred acres, having made purchases of land as his judgment and means justified, while most of this fine estate is located about five miles south of the village of Platte, where he has a large hotel. He has about nine hundred acres under cultivation and the balance is utilized for grazing purposes. Mr. Wilson is one of the most extensive and successful raisers of cattle and swine in this section, keeping an average of three hundred head of cattle and about one hundred hogs, while he gives special care to maintaining a high grade of live stock and is known as a capable and progressive business man and valuable citizen. He paid at the rate of about five dollars an acre for his land, and it will now command from twenty-five to forty dollars an acre. He has made excellent improvements on his estate, including good buildings, his residence having been erected at a cost of about three thousand dollars, while he also erected one of the finest barns in the county at a cost of about four thousand dollars, the same having been destroyed by a cyclone, in 1902, but which is now rebuilt. On his farm is a fine apple orchard of twelve acres, and everything about the place bespeaks thrift and prosperity. In the spring of 1904 the family took a pleasant trip to the National Park, making the journey in wagons.

In politics Mr. Wilson is a Republican, but is not insistentlly partisan, particularly in local affairs, but gives his support to men and measures meeting the approval of his judgment. He has been a member of the school board of his district for many years, and in religious matters he is not definitely identified with any church, though he realizes the value of all and has a deep respect for the true spiritual verities.

DAVID PHILLIPS was born in Providence county, Rhode Island, on the 4th of February, 1834, being a son of Rufus and Lillias (Young) Phillips. He was about six years of age at the time of his parents' removal to Pennsylvania, and there he secured his early educational discipline, while he aided in reclaiming the homestead farm. He continued to reside in the old Keystone state until the spring of 1858, when he came with others from that locality to Nebraska, but he only remained there three weeks, returning eastward as far as Illinois, where he was employed at farm work during three summers, while during the winter seasons he devoted his attention to chopping wood, along the Mississippi river, receiving two dollars a day in compensation for his arduous toil in this connection. He then went to Bloomington, Illinois, where he was employed until the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion, when he responded to the call of higher duty by enlisting as a private in Company G, Thirty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, his enlistment taking place in August, 1861. He continued in active service until January 24, 1863, when he received an honorable discharge, on account of physical disability. He then returned to Illinois, and in 1883 he came to South Dakota, taking up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres in Charles Mix county. He is at the present time chairman of the school board of his district. Fraternally he is a valued comrade of P. H. Sheridan Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Geddes.

In 1863 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Phillips to Miss Mary Elizabeth Kelly, who was born in Twin Grove, McLean county, Illinois, and of this union have been born eight children.

DAVID OLNEY BENNETT, deceased, was born in McDonough, Chenango county, New York, on the 10th of January, 1843, and is a son of Olney and Elizabeth (Place) Bennett, both of whom were born and reared in Rhode Island, where the former's birth occurred in 1800 and the latter about the year 1810, while their marriage was there solemnized. The father of the subject was a clergyman of the Baptist church, and about 1830 removed with his family to Madison county, New York, where he remained until 1860, when he removed to Wisconsin, where he passed the remainder of his life, engaged in the noble work of his high calling and also being identified with agricultural pursuits. His wife likewise died in that state, and of their seven children two are yet living, our subject having been the sixth in order of birth. David O. Bennett received his early education in the common schools of his native town and those of McGrawville, Cortland county, New York, while at the age of fifteen he entered Cincinnati Academy, in Cortland county, where he continued his studies until 1861, being prepared for matriculation in college and expecting to thus continue his educational work. About this time, however, there came the call to higher duty, as the integrity of the Union was menaced by armed rebellion, and in August, 1862, having joined his parents in Wisconsin, he enlisted as a member of Company K, Twenty-ninth Wisconsin

Volunteer Infantry, which was assigned to the western department and served under General Grant until after the surrender of Vicksburg, when his corps, the Thirteenth, was transferred to the Department of the Gulf. Mr. Bennett was discharged, on account of disability, in February, 1864, at New Orleans, and then returned to his home in Wisconsin. After recuperating his energies he, by chance, identified himself with the mercantile business, having been for six months employed in a clerical capacity in general stores in Beaver Dam and Juneau, Wisconsin, his intention being to soon enter college and complete his education. He was deflected from this course, however, and began the study of medicine under the direction of his brother, Henry Judson Bennett, a prominent practicing physician at Juneau, and finally, as offering further discipline along this line, he took a position in a drug store at Fond du Lac, that state, where he remained until 1869. His brother, previously mentioned, died in December of that year, and the subject thereafter continued his study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. H. M. Lilly, at Fond du Lac, and completed his technical course in that famous institution, Rush Medical College, in the city of Chicago, where he was graduated in February, 1870, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He thereafter remained with his preceptor, Dr. Lilly, until the following June, when he removed to Waterloo, Jefferson county, Wisconsin, where he was actively engaged in practice until 1887, when his health became so seriously impaired by rheumatism that he was compelled to withdraw largely from the active work of his profession. He purchased a half interest in a local drug business, but his health became even more precarious while in the store, so that in the latter part of 1887 he disposed of his interest in the same and in the following spring came with his family to Clark county, South Dakota, locating on a farm and devoting his attention to its improvement and cultivation for the ensuing eight years, within which time his health steadily improved. During the hard times of 1896 people left the state in great numbers and among them many of the physicians, so that there were left in Clark county or near its borders only three practicing physicians. Under these conditions calls upon the professional services of Dr. Bennett became so frequent and insistent that he was constrained to remove to the city of Clark and establish himself in practice, and here he continued, having built up a large and representative business as a physician and surgeon, until his death, April 16, 1904. He had been confined to his home about a week with a complication of diseases brought on by overwork, though the direct cause of death was heart failure. In politics the Doctor ever gave an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party, and he recalled to the writer the fact that when a boy of thirteen years, at the time of the candidacy of General John C. Fremont, the first presidential nominee of the party, he was most enthusiastic in his youthful enthusiasm for the newly organized party. He held various village and school offices after coming to South Dakota, and in 1892 was elected to represent the twenty-ninth district in the state senate, and was chosen as his own successor in 1894. In 1901, upon the reorganization of the state militia, the Doctor was commissioned assistant surgeon of the Third Battalion of the First Regiment, South Dakota National Guard, with rank of first lieutenant, and about a year later he was appointed surgeon general of the National Guard of the state, with rank of colonel, and remained incumbent of this office. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, with which he was identified from 1885, and also of the Grand Army of the Republic, and while a resident of Wisconsin he was affiliated with the Temple of Honor, in which he passed the various official chairs. He was a prominent and zealous member of the Baptist church, as is his widow.

On the 17th of February, 1873, at Concord, Jackson county, Michigan, was solemnized the marriage of Dr. Bennett to Miss Floretta Elizabeth Young, the eldest child of Andrew Sproul Young, who was a son of Andrew Young. The Young family formerly lived near Williamstown, Massachusetts, whence rep-representatives removed to Bergen, Genesee county, New York, in 1833, and from that locality Andrew Young and his family removed to Concord, Jackson county, Michigan, in 1855. The maiden name of Mrs. Bennett's mother was Elizabeth Lewellin, who was a daughter of Lewis Lewellin. The Lewellin (or Llewellyn, as the name was originally spelled, according to the Welsh form) family removed from Pennsylvania to Genesee county, New York, in 1826. Dr. and Mrs. Bennett have three children, Henry Judson Bennett, D. D. S., who is engaged in the practice of dentistry at Fond du Lac, Wisconsin; Luella Elizabeth, who is in Clark, and Mary, who died March 13, 1886, at the age of thirteen months.

JOHN A. THRONSON is a native of Norway, where he was born on Christmas day, 1857, being a son of Andrew and Agnette Thompson, both of whom live with their daughter, Mrs. E. O. Eggen, near Toronto, Deuel county, South Dakota. They emigrated from Norway to America in the spring of 1859 and located in LaCrosse county, Wisconsin, in which state Mr. Thronson was engaged in agricultural pursuits for many years, meeting with success in reward of his untiring industry. He is a Republican in politics and both he and his wife are devoted members of the Lutheran church.

The subject of this sketch was a child of about two years at the time of his parents' immigration to America, and he was reared to manhood in La Crosse and Trempealeau counties, Wisconsin, where he duly availed himself of the advantages afforded by the public schools. He there continued to assist his father in the work of the homestead farm until he had attained his legal majority, when he set forth to seek his fortunes in the west, arriving in Deuel county, South Dakota, on the 7th of December, 1878. For the first year he was employed in a general store at Gary, and he then took up one hundred and sixty acres of government land near the present village of Toronto, this county, and was there engaged in farming until the summer of 1885. He still owns this property, having developed the same into one of the valuable farms of the county. At the time noted he became county auditor of Deuel county, the territorial legislature having created the office during its session in the preceding winter, and he continued in tenure of this position until March, 1893, by successive elections, having thus served under both the territorial and state regimes. In March, 1892, upon the organization of the Farmers' State Bank of Clear Lake, Mr. Thronson was chosen cashier of the same. In 1902 the institution was reorganized as the First National Bank and he was retained in the office of cashier, of which he is incumbent at the present time.

Mr. Thronson is known as a progressive and public-spirited citizen, and has ever stood ready to lend his aid and influence in support of all worthy measures advanced for the general good, while in politics he is an uncompromising Republican. Both he and his wife are active and valued members of the Lutheran church.

On the 26th of June, 1891, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Thronson to Miss Clara J. Peterson, who was born in Clayton county, Iowa, being a daughter of Thomas C. and Rachel Peterson, who are now living at Brandt, Deuel county, South Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Thronson have one daughter, Norma E.

EMIL A. SYVERSON, who is president of the Farmers and Citizens' Bank, at Bryant, Hamlin county, was born in Fredrikstad, Norway, on the 20th of September, 1869, being a son of Peter and Anna M. Syverson, who emigrated to America in 1872, locating in the state of Wisconsin, where the father engaged in the work of his trade, that of blacksmith. They are now living in Bryant, South Dakota. When the subject was but nine years of age he left home, his parents at the time being residents of Crawford county, Wisconsin, and started with a party of strangers for the Black Hills, arriving in Deadwood, South Dakota, in May, 1879. He remained in that section until the spring of 1882, at which time he returned to the home of his parents, in Wisconsin; where he remained until 1887, when he returned to South Dakota and located in Kingsbury county. He had in the meanwhile attended the public schools as opportunity offered, having been a student in the high school at DeSmet, this state, in 1888. He had previously to this been successfully engaged in school teaching for two years, and in 1889 he entered the Northern Indiana Normal School and Business College, at Valparaiso, Indiana, where he took a commercial course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1890. He then returned to South Dakota and located in Bryant, where he secured a position as book-keeper in the Merchants' Bank, being but twenty years of age at the time. Two years later he was elected cashier and in 1900, at the age of thirty, he became president of the Farmers and Citizens' Bank of Bryant, South Dakota, of which position he is still incumbent. Mr. Syverson is a Republican in his political proclivities, and he served as first lieutenant of Company G, First Regiment, South Dakota National Guard, from 1894 until 1898, at Bryant. He has been a member of the Lutheran church for the past nineteen years.

In the city of Brookings, this state, on the 6th of August, 1892, Mr. Syverson was united in marriage to Miss Inga O. Kragh, and they have two children, Ernest P., who was born June 3, 1893, and Alice M., who was born October 20, 1895.

THOMAS JAMES LAW, the able and popular young state's attorney of Deuel county, was born in the city of Chicago, Illinois, on the 17th of January, 1870, and is a son of Thomas J. and Josephine (Stanley) Law, the former of whom was born in the dominion of Canada and the latter in Wisconsin. The paternal grandfather of the subject came from the north of Ireland to America and settled in the province of Ontario, Canada, where he married, his wife being a native of that section. The maternal grandfather was a native of New York and a descendant of staunch old New England stock, while his wife was of German extraction and was likewise born in the old Empire state. When the subject was a child of two years his parents removed to Lafayette county, Wisconsin, where his father engaged in the practice of law, and the latter and his wife now reside in Shullsburg, Wisconsin. After completing the curriculum of the high school in Shullsburg, Lafayette county, Wisconsin, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1887. Mr. Shaw entered the law department of the University of Wisconsin, at Madison, where he completed the prescribed course and was graduated on the 1st of July, 1891, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, while he was also admitted to the bar of the state. On the 28th of the following October he located at Clear Lake, the judicial center of Deuel county, South Dakota, where he has since been engaged in the practice of his profession and where he has gained prestige as an able trial lawyer and counselor, while he has proved a most efficient and discriminating public prosecutor. He is a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party and has been a zealous worker in its local ranks. In 1894 he was elected state's attorney of Deuel county and was chosen as his own successor in 1896, while in 1900 he was again elected to this office, as was he also in 1902, his second term expiring January 1, 1905. In 1891 Mr. Law was raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason in Amicitia Lodge, No. 25, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Shullsburg, Wisconsin, and he was one of the charter members of Phoenix Lodge, No. 129, of Clear Lake, with which he is still affiliated. He is also a charter member of Clear Lake Camp, No. 1981, Modern Woodmen of America, and of Watertown Lodge, No. 838, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, at Watertown, this state.

On the 10th of October, 1894, Mr. Law was united in marriage to Miss Ethel M. Roberts, who was born at Emsdale, province of Ontario, Canada, on the 8th of September, 1877, being a daughter of William and Elizabeth Roberts, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Law have two children, Elsie M. and Stanley R.

JOHN O. JOHNSON, a member of the well-known and popular mercantile firm of Johnson Brothers, who have a well-equipped establishment in the village of Westerville, is a native of Illinois, having been born in Leland, LaSalle county, on the 25th of April, 1866, and being a son of Jacob and Mary Johnson, both of whom were born and reared in Norway, where their marriage was solemnized, and where the father followed the trade of carpenter until 1865, when he left the fair Norseland and immigrated with his family to America, and located in Leland, Illinois, where he was engaged in wagonmaking until 1869, when he came to the territory of Dakota, making the trip through from Iowa with a horse-team and wagon, with which he transported his family and their few necessary household effects. He became one of the first settlers in Clay county, where he took up four hundred and eighty acres of government land, upon which he erected a log house, and at once began the work of breaking ground and otherwise improving his pioneer farm. He later sold one hundred and sixty acres, retaining the balance for a number of years, after which he sold out and purchased other land in the county, thereafter making several other transactions of like order. The parents are both devoted members of the Lutheran church, and the father is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party. They became the parents of ten children, concerning whom we incorporate the following data: John O., subject of this sketch, is the eldest; Lavina, who became the wife of Thomas Sands, is dead; Martha is the wife of George Cleveland; Jacob is engaged in the shoe business at Canton, this state; Richard is associated in business with the subject, in Westerville; Isaac is a resident of Idaho; Dominicus resides in Vermillion, this state; Joseph has the management of the parental farm; Mary is married; and Ella died at the age of four years. The children were afforded the best possible educational advantages, all having attended the public schools, while Richard was for some time a student in the State University, at Vermillion.

The subject of this review was a child of three years at the time of his parents' removal from Illinois to what is now South Dakota, and he has thus, in a literal sense "grown up with the country." He attended the common schools, in the meantime lending his aid in the reclamation and improvement of the home farm, and he continued to be thus associated with his father until he reached his legal majority, when he initiated his independent career, purchasing a farm of one hundred and twenty acres, which formed the nucleus of his present valuable landed estate, which comprises three hundred and sixty acres, all of which is under effective cultivation, while he is extensively engaged in diversified agriculture and in the raising of high-grade stock. In due time he erected on his ranch a fine modern residence, and all other permanent improvements are in harmony therewith. His place is located contiguous to the village of Westerville, and he continues to reside on the farm, giving a general supervision to its operation, in connection with his mercantile interests. In the autumn of 1893 Mr. Johnson purchased of T. J. Wester his mercantile business in Westerville, and he individually carried on the enterprise until 1897, when he admitted his brother Richard to partnership, the latter purchasing a half interest, and the business has since been conducted under the firm title of Johnson Brothers. Soon after the formation of this partnership the brothers erected their present commodious store, sixty by twenty-four feet in dimensions, while in connection they also have a large warehouse. They handle a general stock of merchandise, including dry goods, clothing, boots and shoes, groceries, etc., and also hardware, and farming implements and machinery, while they are also extensive buyers and shippers of grain and live stock. Their transactions in the year 1902 reached the notable aggregate of twenty-five thousand dollars, and they carry a stock valued at an average of ten thousand dollars, while it is needless to say, their trade is well established and prosperous, being derived from the wide radius of country tributary to the town. In politics Mr. Johnson is a stalwart Republican and takes a loyal interest in public affairs of local order, though he has never desired official preferment. He and his wife are members of the Lutheran church. On the 22d of October, 1891, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Johnson to Miss Laura Lund, a daughter of Hans Lund, of Dixon county, Nebraska, where he is a prominent farmer. Of this union have been born four children, namely: Mabel, Harry, Sherman and Jessie.

WILSON WISE, one of the honored pioneers of Sanborn county, was born in Clearfield county, Pennsylvania, on the 19th of November, 1833, being a son of Samuel and Phoebe (Meriman) Wise, both of whom were also natives of the Keystone state, where the former was born in 1808, and the latter in 1810. Of their eleven children seven are still living. The father of the subject was engaged in farming in Pennsylvania until the fall of 1855, when he removed with his family to Illinois, where he remained two years, and then continued his way westward into Winneshiek county, Iowa, where he took up government land and developed a good farm continuing to reside there until his death, which occurred in December, 1879, his devoted wife entering into eternal rest in 1882. He was first a Whig and later a Republican in politics, and both he and his wife were consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

The subject of this sketch received his early education in the common schools of Pennsylvania, and was about twenty-two years of age at the time when he accompanied his parents on their emigration to Illinois, while later he was associated with his father in the development of the pioneer farm in Iowa. In that state he continued to follow agricultural pursuits until 1879, when he came to what is now the state of South Dakota, arriving in Sanborn county on the 16th of May, and here taking up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres, which he still owns, having made substantial improvements on the same and brought it under effective cultivation, though he had to encounter his full quota of hardships and discouragements in the early days. His confidence in the future prestige of the state never wavered, however, and he does not regret having cast in his lot with South Dakota. Mr. Wise has ever been a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and has done effective work in its cause. In 1900 he was elected county treasurer, being chosen as his own successor in 1902, so that he is now serving his second term. He became treasurer of his school district at the time of its organization and retained this office for ten years, ever showing a deep interest in educational affairs and all else that makes for the well-being of the community. In 1886 he was a member of the territorial legislature, as a representative of the eighth district. He and his wife are, devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

In 1859 Mr. Wise was united in marriage to Miss Nancy H. Drake, and they have six children, all of whom have been afforded good educational advantages, and of them we enter a brief record, as follows: Samuel W. is a resident of Graceville, Minnesota; Laura M. is the wife of George C. Terwilliger, a hardware merchant of Wayne, Nebraska; Flora A. is the wife of William Robinson, a carpenter and contractor of Artesian, South Dakota; Flora A. is the widow of Angus McGilvery, who was a surveyor by profession, and who did much government work through the northwest, his death occurring in Helena, Montana, while his widow now resides in Artesian, South Dakota; Charles E., who married Miss Lena Denton, is a successful farmer of Sanborn county, South Dakota; Clarence remains at the parental home, as does also Sidney A.

JOHN S. FRAZEE, A. M., B. D., president of the State Normal School at Springfield, Bon Homme county, is a native of the old Buckeye state, having been born in Neville, Clermont county, Ohio, and being a son of Richard and Docia (Bogges) Frazee, the former having been a jeweler and civil engineer by avocation. The subject of this review passed his boyhood days in Ohio, and secured his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools, while in 1871 he was matriculated in the State University of Iowa, where he completed the classical course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1878, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts, while later his alma mater conferred upon him the degree of Master of Arts. He also received from the same institution the degree of Bachelor of Didactics. Mr. Frazee began teaching in his youth and has been identified with educational work to a greater or less extent ever since. He was for several years professor of mathematics at the State University at Vermillion. He was called to his present position in 1897 and has accomplished much for the advancement of the interests of the school of which he is the executive head, amplifying and systematizing its work and showing himself to be imbued with a spirit of utmost loyalty and enthusiasm, so that he naturally gains the earnest co-operation of those who labor under his direction, infuses vigor and effectiveness into all departments of the school work. He is honored by both teachers and students, has the faculty of gaining confidence and is a man of scholarly attainments and much initiative force, so that he is especially well qualified for the important office which he holds. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America.

In 1882 Professor Frazee was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Emma Rankin, who is likewise a graduate of the Iowa State University.

HON. LORING E. GAFFY, who is presiding with marked ability on the bench of the sixth judicial circuit, is a native of the old Empire state of the Union, having been born in Clinton county, New York, on the 12th of January, 1850, and being a son of James and Nancy (Dale) Gaffy, who removed to Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, when he was five years of age. He there attended the public schools, completing the curriculum of the high school and also taking a course in a local commercial college. In 1869, when nineteen years of age, he took up the study of the law under the direction of Judge Derry, a distinguished legist and jurist of Fond du Lac, prosecuting his technical reading for two years under this able preceptor, and being admitted to the bar in 1871, in which year he located in Grand Island, Nebraska, where he has successfully engaged in practice until 1877. He then came to the territory of Dakota and became one of the early law practitioners of the Black Hills district, having taken up his residence in Deadwood, where he continued to follow the work of his profession until 1884, when he came to Pierre, which has ever since been the scene of his professional endeavors, while he has gained prestige as one of the most able lawyers of this section of the state and as a jurist of great discrimination and unrivaled technical acumen. In 1888 he was elected state's attorney of Hughes county, and was re-elected in 1890, having thus been incumbent of this office at the time when South Dakota was admitted to the Union, and having made a most creditable record as a public prosecutor. In January, 1894, he was appointed to the bench of the sixth judicial circuit of the state, and at the expiration of his term, in 1898, was elected to succeed himself, while in 1902 he was again elected to the dignified office, so that he is now serving his third term on the bench. The Judge is one of the leaders of the Republican party in the state, being prominent in its councils. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order and Knights of Pythias.

On March 8, 1879, Judge Gaffy married Miss Fannie B. Price, who died October 8, 1897. On the 14th of February, 1900, he was united in marriage to Miss Adelaide Warwick, of Grand Island, Nebraska. They have an adopted son, Floyd W., who is nineteen years of age at the time of this writing and who is attending a commercial college in the city of Aberdeen, this state.

THOMAS P. LEMMON, one of the prominent and influential farmers and stock growers of Day county, was born in Millersburg, Holmes county, Ohio, on the 1st of March, 1853, and is a son of Robert and Elizabeth (Hull) Lemmon, the former of whom was born in Pennsylvania.

and the latter in Connecticut. In 1857 the parents of the subject removed from the old Buckeye state to Iowa and located in Tama county, where the father devoted the remainder of his life to farming. The subject availed himself of the advantages afforded in the public schools of Iowa, and supplemented this discipline by a course of study in a commercial college at Davenport, that state. In February, 1883, he was married, and on the first of the following April he came to what is now the state of South Dakota, taking up a homestead claim in Day county and thus becoming one of the pioneers of this part of the state. He reclaimed his land and added to the area of his estate from time to time, while it is pleasing to record that he still resides on the claim which he originally secured, the farm being one of the best improved and most attractive in the county, while a full measure of success has attended Mr. Lemmon's efforts in connection with farming and stock growing. In politics he accords a staunch allegiance to the Democratic party, and both he and his wife are members of the Baptist church, while he is identified with the Masonic fraternity and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 20th of February, 1883, Mr. Lemmon was united in marriage to Miss Mary Cushing, who was born in the state of New Hampshire, being a daughter of Enoch and Charlotte Cushing. Mr. and Mrs. Lemmon have seven living children, namely: Fredrick E., Nettie, Mabel, Elizabeth, Annie, May and Robert. Their son Fred E. is employed as cashier in the Bank of Pierpont, and their daughter Nettie for the past year has had charge of the primary department in the Pierpont public schools.

HOMER S. SMYTHE, one of the highly honored citizens of Sanborn county, where he is at present serving as deputy county treasurer, is a native of the old Keystone state of the Union, having been born in Center county, Pennsylvania, on the 11th of February, 1843, and being a son of William and Margaret (Watson) Smythe, the former of whom was born in Dauphin county, Pennsylvania, in 1799, while the latter was born in Clinton county, that state, in 1804. The father of the subject received a collegiate education and was a man of marked ability, having been a surveyor by profession and having also been identified with agricultural pursuits. He removed with his family to Illinois in 1863, and there passed the remainder of his long and useful life, his death occurring in the city of Freeport, in 1880, while he had there lived retired for a number of years. His devoted wife passed away in 1856, and he remarried in 1858, his second wife dying in Freeport in 1887. Of their seven children four are living, the subject of this sketch being the only representative of the family in South Dakota. William Smythe was in early life a supporter of the Whig party, but transferred his allegiance to the Republican party at the time of its organization and ever afterward was a stalwart advocate of its principles. He and his wife were devoted members of the Presbyterian church, in which he served as elder for a half century. Fraternally he was identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Homer S. Smythe, the immediate subject of this sketch, received his preliminary educational discipline in the common schools of Pennsylvania. He enlisted as a private in Company E, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, on August 14, 1861, and was discharged December 21, 1864, by reason of expiration of time of service. Was wounded at Spottsylvania Court House, Virginia, May 10, 1864. He was twenty years of age at the time of the family removal to Illinois, and there continued to maintain his home, devoting his attention to the machinist's trade, until 1883, when he came to Sanborn county, South Dakota, where he took up a half section of government land, which he still owns, having made good improvements on the place, of which fifty-seven acres are under cultivation, while the remainder is used in connection with the raising of live stock. Mr. Smythe has been a prominent figure in local affairs of a public nature since coming to this county, and has held official preferment much of the time, having served four years as register of deeds, while for the past five years he has been deputy county treasurer. He is a member of the Presbyterian church, as is also Mrs. Smythe, and fraternally is identified with the Masonic order. In politics he gives an unswerving support to the Republican party and its principles.

On the 21st of December, 1880, Mr. Smythe was married to Mrs. Julia (Rodman) Smythe, widow of W. R. Smythe, of Tiffin, Ohio, and a daughter of Samuel and Mary (Madden) Rodman, of Center county, Pennsylvania, in which state she was born January 1, 1843. No children have been born of this union, but Mrs. Smythe has two children by her first marriage: William R. who is a civil engineer at Canon City, Colorado, and Leon L., who is a clergyman of the Presbyterian church and now pastor of the church at Volga, Brookings county, this state.

JAMES ERNEST PLATT, cashier of the Security Bank of Clark, was born in Decatur, New York, on the 11th of March, 1866, and is a son of Rev. James Nelson Platt and Laura (Sibley) Platt, both of whom were likewise born in the old Empire state. The father of the subject, who is now president of the Security Bank of Clark, which was organized in 1888, came to South Dakota in 1884, having been for twenty years previously a member of the Upper Iowa Methodist Episcopal conference. The subject of this sketch was graduated in the high school at Manchester, Iowa, as a member of the class of 1881, under Superintendent C. D. Clark, now United States senator from Wyoming. Thereafter he continued his studies in Cornell College, at Mount Vernon, Iowa; the Upper Iowa University, at Fayette; and in 1884 he was graduated in Epworth Seminary, at Epworth, Iowa, having taken a three-years classical course. During his vacations in his early youth he worked on various farms, but early manifested a desire to secure a position in a bank. After his graduation, when seventeen years of age, he came to Clark, South Dakota, in 1884, and secured a clerical position in the banking establishment of D. Wayne & Company, who later disposed of their interests in the line to G. C. Griffin, who organized the bank of Clark, Mr. Platt remaining with the new institution about a year, at the expiration of which he engaged in the real-estate and loan business in partnership with his father, and in September, 1888, they organized the Security Bank of Clark, of which he has since been cashier, showing distinctive ability in the handling of the affairs of the institution, which is one of the solid and popular banking concerns of the state. He has large real-estate holdings in the town and county; is treasurer of the Fraternity Gold Mining and Milling Company, operating in the Black Hills, with headquarters at Hill City, and he has been treasurer of the Clark Co-Operative Creamery Company since its organization, in 1898. He was elected cashier of the Security Bank when but twenty years of age, and has been prominently concerned in banking in Clark for a full score of years. In politics Mr. Platt is a stalwart Republican, taking an active interest in forwarding the party cause and having been a delegate to nearly all the state conventions of his party since the admission of South Dakota to the Union. He was for five years incumbent of the dual office of clerk and treasurer of the city of Clark, and for two years gave effective service as its mayor, his administration being marked by a progressive and business-like policy. In 1902 he was appointed major and paymaster of the South Dakota National Guard, his commission to extend over a period of five years. In 1895 he was elected treasurer of the state board of agriculture, of which office he has since remained in tenure. Fraternally he is identified with Clark Lodge, No. 42, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is past worshipful master and present secretary; Olivet Chapter, No. 14, Royal Arch Masons; Watertown Commandery, No. 7, Knights Templar; Aberdeen Consistory, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, in which he attained to the thirty-second degree in January, 1902; El Riad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Sioux Falls; Huron Lodge, No. 144, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; El Kim Ran Temple, Dramatic Order of the Knights of Khorassan, at Watertown; and Myrtle Lodge, No. 43, Knights of Pythias, at Clark. In 1899-1900 he was grand chancellor of the state grand lodge of the last mentioned order, and in 1903 he was elected supreme representative of the order for South Dakota, being a delegate to the general assembly of the same in Louisville, Kentucky, in August, 1904.

On the 19th of June, in the First Methodist Episcopal church of the city of Chicago, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Platt to Miss Katharine A. Boyle, formerly of Jamestown, North Dakota, but a teacher in the public schools of Clark for a few years prior to her marriage.

FRANK D. GOODRICH, one of the representative citizens and merchants of Cavour, Beadle county, is a native of the old Keystone state of the Union, having been born in Dundaff, Susquehanna county, Pennsylvania, on the 19th of April, 1850. He is a son of Dr. Ira and Margaret Goodrich, the former of whom was born in Pennsylvania, of staunch English lineage, his parents having been native of Connecticut and representatives of old and honored colonial families. The mother of the subject was born in Kinderhook, New York, and was of Holland Dutch ancestry. Dr. Goodrich was graduated in Geneva Medical College, in the state of New York, and was a man of high professional attainments. He was engaged in practice in Pennsylvania for a number of years and finally removed thence to Delavan, Wisconsin, in which state both he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives.

The subject of this review secured his early educational discipline in the public schools of Delavan, Wisconsin, and at the age of sixteen years began clerking in a local mercantile establishment. At the age of nineteen he entered upon an apprenticeship at the blacksmith trade, to which he devoted his attention for a long term of years, having owned and operated a shop of his own in Delavan, Wisconsin, for seven years prior to coming to the present state of South Dakota as a pioneer. He came to Beadle county in 1883 and took up government land, being successfully engaged in farming and stock growing for the ensuing fourteen years, while for six years he purchased wheat for a local elevator company. For two years he was stationed on the Yankton Indian reservation, being industrial teacher in the school at that agency and also directing the farming operations of the Indians. In 1901 he located in Cavour and established his present flourishing business, his store having a large and complete stock of general merchandise, while his trade extends throughout the territory tributary to the thriving town. In politics he is an uncompromising advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and his interest in the promotion of its cause has been unflagging.

On the 22d of October, 1874, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Goodrich to Miss Kate A. Hewes, who was born near Racine, Wisconsin, in 1854, being a daughter of George and Mary Hewes. Mr. and Mrs. Goodrich have three children, Florence H., Ella M. and Mary.

JAMES MONTGOMERY JOHNSTON, one of the representative citizens of Clark county, was born at High Point, Moniteau county, Missouri, on the 14th of June, 1867, being a son of Francis and Sarah A. (Montgomery) Johnston, the ancestry in both lines traced back to staunch old Scotch Presbyterian stock, though the subject has no authentic genealogical record of either family. The father of the subject was engaged in farming in Missouri and there died when the latter was a child of but six years, being survived by his widow and six children, while his financial circumstances were such that his family were left in somewhat straitened circumstances. The parents were very strict Presbyterians and reared their children under the most careful and punctilious discipline, the home environment being of the best in this regard. Mr. Johnston early began to assume his share of responsibility, being taught by his devoted mother to be honest and industrious, and assisting as he could in the work of the home farm. The father died in 1873 and

Mr. Johnston thereafter continued to reside on the old homestead with his mother until he had attained the age of fifteen years, and in the meanwhile he attended the local schools. His mother then sold the Missouri farm and in the spring of 1883 immigrated with her children to South Dakota and located in Maydell township, Clark county, where she and her son and daughter elder than our subject filed entry on government land. Here Mr. Johnston continued to assist in the farm work and to attend the public schools as opportunity afforded, while he was later able to supplement this discipline by one year's course of study in the college at Redfield, Spink county. In the intervening years he has acquired a good farm of six hundred and forty acres in Maydell township, this county, and he has been duly prosperous in connection with the development of the agricultural and stock-growing resources of this section of the state. He has made excellent improvements on his place, and his landed estate may be approximately valued at twelve thousand dollars.

In politics Mr. Johnston has ever been a staunch adherent of the Republican party, having cast his first presidential vote in support of Benjamin Harrison after the admission of South Dakota to the Union. He has always taken an active part in the supporting of such reform measures as have promised to result in the moral and social good of the community, and has been specially active in the temperance cause. In the autumn of 1890 he was elected to the state legislature, and was chosen as his own successor in November, 1902, thus serving as a member of the seventh and eighth general assemblies, while in the latter he was chairman of the house committee on engrossed and enrolled bills. On the 23d of June, 1894, Mr. Johnston became a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and in the same has held the office of camp clerk and deputy head consul, while in the latter capacity he had charge of the establishment of twenty-five local camps in the state, and was a delegate from South Dakota to the meeting of the head camp, in St. Paul, Minnesota, in June, 1901. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and has held several positions of trust in connection with church affairs, having been twice a lay delegate to the conference and being a member of the board of trustees of the local church. He is not married.

ORATOR HENRY LACRAFT, the honored and popular postmaster of Clark, was born in Farmington, Washington county, Wisconsin, on the 13th of August, 1850, and is a son of John and Mary E. (Klice) LaCraft, both of whom were born and reared in Ashtabula county, Ohio, being representatives of pioneer families of the old Buckeye state and of French and Puritan lineage respectively. The maiden name of the maternal grandmother of the subject was Emily Kendall, and she was a direct descendant of the progenitors of that name who came to America in the Mayflower, while she was a niece of Amos Kendall, who was at one time postmaster general of the United States. The subject of this review secured his educational discipline in the public schools of Wisconsin, completing a course in the high school. From 1871 to 1873 he was engaged in farming in the vicinity of Scott, Sheboygan county, Wisconsin, in the meanwhile teaching school during the winter months. In 1883 he came to Clark, South Dakota, where he engaged in the general merchandise business, having been one of the first settlers in the town, and he continued to be successfully identified with his line of enterprise until 1891, since which time he has been connected with the executive affairs of the local postoffice, while he also gives his attention to his farming interests, having a well-improved ranch of three hundred and twenty acres ten miles southeast of his home city. In politics he is a stalwart advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and he has served in nearly a consecutive way as justice of the peace since 1875, while he has been a member of the board of education since 1892 and its president for the past four years. He served as postmaster from 1893 to 1896, and was thereafter deputy, while later he was again appointed postmaster and is still incumbent of the office. He served as a member of the state senate in 1900 and is also a member of that body at the time of this writing, 1904. He is identified with the Masonic fraternity, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Degree of Honor, the Knights of the Maccabees and the Modern Brotherhood of America.

On the 16th of April, 1873, Mr. LaCraft was united in marriage to Miss Charlotte R. Haviland, who was born in Scott, Sheboygan county, Wisconsin, on the 20th of July, 1852, and whose death occurred on the 17th of July, 1883. She was a daughter of Edgar and Susan Haviland, and of her two sons one is living—William C., who was born March 1, 1870, and who is now engaged in the lumber business in Clark. O. Merton, who was born on the 4th of January, 1878, died on the 21st of March, 1898. On the 25th of February, 1885, Mr. LaCraft consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Clara M. Smith, who was born on the 30th of July, 1864, being a daughter of Charles and Margaret Smith. Of the children of this union we enter the following data: Walter S. was born August 12, 1886; Delmar B. was born September 19, 1889, and died on the 3d of December, 1892; Osmer H. was born May 16, 1893; Lynn K., October 3, 1895; and Irma R., September 17, 1897.

ALTON E. STEERE, one of the prominent business men and honored citizens of Goodwin, Deuel county, was born in Orland, Steuben county, Indiana, on the 19th of April, 1857, and is a son of Dr. Warren B. and Ellen (Emens) Steere, the former of whom was born in Hartwick, New York, and the latter in Lockport, that state, whence they removed to Indiana in an early day, the father having been an able physician and surgeon, while for a time he was professor of materia medica in a college at Des Moines, Iowa, he having died in the state of Iowa, March 1, 1900. When the subject was about five years of age his parents removed to Iowa and located in

Dewitt, Clinton county, where he attended the public schools until within a year of his completing a course in the high school, when he withdrew and began clerking in a local grocery store, in order to provide for his own maintenance. He was a great reader and invested his surplus earnings largely in good books, while he was fond of out-of-door sports and never had any predilection for such vices as gambling or the use of intoxicating liquors, his ambitions and ideals being too high to permit him to drift into such indulgences. In the spring of 1876 he left Dewitt and went to Dodge Center, Minnesota, where he remained two years, clerking for a portion of the time and also spending several months in the study of dentistry in a local office. In the spring of 1878 he came to South Dakota, where he has since maintained his home, having located in Goodwin, where he has remained. His health was much impaired for a number of years, owing to the results of a sunstroke which he received in June, 1878, and to a severe hemorrhage of the lungs in the winter of 1880, caused by a strain which ruptured an artery. He has been fortunate in recovering completely from both of these disorders. In December, 1889, Mr. Steere entered into partnership with H. B. Veerhusen and engaged in the general merchandise business in Goodwin, their cash capital being represented in the sum of three hundred dollars, so that they were compelled to borrow money to initiate the enterprise. Eleven months after the business had been established the father of our subject furnished him with the capital to purchase his partner's interest, and he has since continued the enterprise individually, after having repaid his father, built up an excellent trade and carries a comprehensive stock, while he retains the unqualified esteem and confidence of all who know him. For the past twelve years he has served as postmaster of the town, save for an interval of about eighteen months under the administration of President Cleveland, when he was retired. He has also served as justice of the peace and town clerk, and as treasurer of the Republican central committee of the county, having no desire for further official preferment, as he prefers to give his time and attention to his private affairs. He is an uncompromising Republican and is well fortified in his convictions as to matters of public policy, believing that the principles of the grand and well-tried old Republican party are best adapted to securing the greatest good to the greatest number in governmental affairs, while the prosperity of his country lies very close to his heart. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and the Independent Order of Good Templars, having been the first deputy or chief templar in the latter in Goodwin, while he was district secretary of the order for several terms. He and his wife are prominent and valued members of the Baptist church, and he is a member of the board of trustees of the local organization of the same. He has much musical taste and ability, playing a number of instruments and being a member of the choir of his church, while his wife is organist of the same.

On the 8th of September, 1882, Mr. Steere was united in marriage to Miss Nellie Smith, the marriage being solemnized at Oakwood, Brookings county, by Rev. Walter Ross. Mrs. Steere was born at St. Charles, Minnesota, her father having been one of the first settlers in that locality, about a half century ago, while she and her husband own nearly the entire interest in the old homestead which her father took up as a pre-emption claim in those early days of hardship and privation. Mr. and Mrs. Steere have two daughters: Fanny Estella, who was born October 7, 1883, was married, on the 4th of November, 1903, to Perry C. Green, son of Hon. David Green, of this county, who was formerly a member of the state senate; and Mabel Ellen, who was born March 22, 1890, is attending the public schools of Goodwin.

WILLIAM HENRY RAMSDELL, a successful farmer in Moody county, was born in Osage, Mitchell county, Iowa, on the 25th of December, 1863, and thus became a Christmas guest in the household, though doubtless no one personally as appreciative of the great Christmas anniversary as he has been in subsequent years. He is a son of William and Mary A. Ramsdell, the former of whom was born in the state of New York and the latter in that of Michigan. The father devoted his time principally to farming and stock raising and his death occurred in the spring of 1896, while the mother now resides at Flandreau. The subject was reared in Iowa and secured his educational training in the public schools of Osage. In 1885 he came to South Dakota and took up his residence in Moody county, where he bought land and began the independent life of a farmer and stock grower. With the passing of the years prosperity has attended him and he now has a good farm, improved with substantial buildings, and showing the unmistakable evidences of thrift and prosperity. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Republican party, and fraternally he is affiliated with the lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen in Flandreau, while he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

On the 18th of January, 1894, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Ramsdell to Miss Lulu J. Roberts, who was born at Redwing, Goodhue county, Minnesota, on the 2d of August, 1860, being a daughter of Asahel D. and Eliza E. Roberts. Mr. and Mrs. Ramsdell have four children, namely: William Lester, Charles Stuart, Eunice Madeline and Donnell Nixon.

JOHN Q. ADAMS, one of the well-known attorneys of Flandreau, Moody county, is a native of the Badger state, having been born in Lafayette county, Wisconsin, on the 8th of November, 1867, and being a son of William T. and Clara (Blackstone) Adams, who are now both living, both being of stanch English genealogy, while both families have been established in America since the colonial epoch in our national history. When the subject was eleven years of age his parents removed to Franklin county, Iowa, and there he was reared to maturity, securing his early educational discipline in the public schools, after which he was for three years a student in the Iowa State Agricultural College, at Ames. He then entered the law department of the Iowa State University, at Iowa City, where he completed the prescribed technical course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1893, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Laws and being admitted to the bar of that state, as was he shortly afterward to that of South Dakota, having taken up his residence in Flandreau, on the 30th of August, 1893, and having since been actively engaged in the practice of his profession here. In 1894 he was elected state's attorney of Moody county, and proved a most careful and able prosecutor, a popular recognition of this fact being given in his retention in this office for three terms. In 1903 he was appointed deputy collector of internal revenue, under Herman Ellerman, collector for this district, and remained in tenure of this position until July 1, 1904. In politics he is a stalwart advocate of the principles and policies for which the Republican party stands sponsor, and in a fraternal way he is affiliated with the lodge, chapter and commandery of the Masonic order in his home city of Flandreau.

On the 28th of May, 1896, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Adams to Miss Cecilia F. Pallansch, a daughter of Peter and Celena Pallansch, well-known residents of Sioux Falls, South Dakota. Of this union has been born one child, Lillian Frances, the date of whose nativity was June 1, 1900.

JOEL FRY, who is now living practically retired in the city of Sioux Falls, is one of the sterling pioneers of the state, with whose industrial development he has been prominently concerned, and the following brief record of his interesting career will be read with pleasure by his many friends. Mr. Fry was born in Lower Windsor township, York county, Pennsylvania, on the 7th of December, 1832, being a son of Frederick and Elizabeth (Tyson) Fry, the former of whom devoted his life to agricultural pursuits. Martin Fry, the paternal great-grandfather of our subject, came to America from Switzerland in 1733, accompanied by his wife and five children, and they settled in what is now York county, Pennsylvania, with whose history the name has been ever since identified. Martin Fry, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was for four years a soldier in the Continental line during the war of the Revolution. The maternal great-grandfather of Mr. Fry also came to this country prior to the middle of the eighteenth century.

Joel Fry was reared on the farm, attending the district schools somewhat irregularly during the winter terms, but finding the major portion of his early discipline that involved in the swinging of the scythe and grain cradle, following the plow and performing the manifold other duties in connection with the home farm. At the age of eighteen years he entered upon an apprenticeship at the carpenter trade, to which he devoted his attention about twelve years. In the spring of 1854 Mr. Fry removed from Pennsylvania to Freeport, Stephenson county, Illinois, where he purchased one-third interest in a sash, door and blind factory and planing mill, the venture proving successful until the interested principles took stock in the company formed for the building of the Racine & Mississippi River Railroad, through which they lost their entire plant. In the spring of 1857 Mr. Fry removed to Waterloo, Iowa, where he was engaged in the drug business until the following fall, when he returned to Freeport, where he worked at his trade until the summer of 1863, when he tendered his services in defense of the Union, enlisting as a member of Company D, Forty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, with which he served until the close of the war, being mustered out in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, and receiving his honorable discharge and his pay in Springfield, Illinois. After the close of his military service Mr. Fry removed to Boscobel, Grant county, Wisconsin, in the spring of 1866, and there engaged in the manufacturing of flour barrels, staves, etc., continuing the enterprise three years, the same then proving a financial failure. On the 21st of May, 1869, Mr. Fry arrived in Yankton, Dakota territory, and for the first six years he was engaged in the work of his trade, as a carpenter and builder, and since that time he has been successfully engaged in farming and stock raising, owning a well-improved ranch of four hundred and eighty acres, in Turner county, and giving a general supervision to the same, though he is now living practically retired from active labor. In 1894 he took up his residence in Irene, Turner county, and on the 1st of July, 1903, came with his family to Sioux Falls, where he now maintains his home.

Mr. Fry has been a supporter of the Republican party from the time of its organization, and has voted for every one of its presidential candidates, casting his first vote for Fremont. He served two years as a member of the village council of Irene and has also been a school officer, while in 1894 he was elected a representative in the state legislature from Turner county, serving through the assembly of 1895. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, and fraternally he was formerly affiliated in an active way with the Odd Fellows and the Union League, having joined the latter in 1861. He is also a member of Phil Kearney Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Yankton.

In Freeport, Illinois, November 4, 1856, Mr. Fry was married to Miss Elizabeth Forry, and of their children we enter the following brief record: Jemima Agnes was born April 20, 1858; Alice Elizabeth, December 23, 1859; Gilmore Grant, June 10, 1863; and Irene May, August 28, 1870. The youngest child was born in Yankton county, this state, while the others are native of Freeport, Illinois.

WILLIAM I. NOBLE, who is successfully established in the real-estate and loan business at Clear Lake, and is one of the representative citizens of Deuel county, was born in the beautiful little city of St. Thomas, province of Ontario, Canada, on the 1st of March, 1865, and is a son of Elnathan and Mary (McBride) Noble, both of whom were likewise born and reared in Ontario, while the latter met her death in a railway accident at St. Thomas, in 1884. The father of the subject was born near St. Thomas and was there identified with the great, basic art of agriculture until 1886, when he came to Clear Lake, South Dakota, where his death occurred in 1888, his remains being laid to rest beside those of his loved and devoted wife, at St. Thomas, Ontario. Isband Noble, the grandfather of the subject, emigrated when a young man from Massachusetts to Canada, in company with the other members of the family, which was early established in New England and which was loyal to the British crown at the time of the Revolution, the lineage being traced back to Scotch derivation. The mother of the subject was a daughter of Malcolm and Catherine (Campbell) McBride, who emigrated to Canada in early days from Campbellford, Argyleshire, Scotland, settling nine miles south of London, Ontario, in Middlesex county, where they passed the residue of their days.

William I. Noble received his early educational discipline in the public schools of Elgin county, Ontario, and then attended the collegiate institute in St. Thomas, where he completed the classical course and then took up the matriculation work of the University of Toronto, where he gave his attention to different courses, making a speciality of mathematics. After the completion of his university work he decided to come to South Dakota, the principal reason for taking this action being that his health had become somewhat impaired. He came to this state in March, 1886, and located in Deuel county, where he gave his attention to farming for the first four years, and thus fully recuperated his physical energies. Thereafter he served two years as deputy county treasurer, and since that time has been engaged in the real-estate and loan business in Clear Lake, having a wide circle of loyal friends in this section of the state and being known as a progressive young business man.

In politics Mr. Noble maintains an independent attitude, and his fraternal relations are here noted in somewhat of detail: Phoenix Lodge, No. 129, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Clear Lake; Watertown Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Clear Lake Lodge, No. 97, Ancient Order of United Workmen, and its auxiliary, Hiawath Lodge, No. 83, Degree of Honor; charter member of Clear Lake Lodge, No. 144, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is past noble grand; Encampment No. 14, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Wattertown; charter member of the Patriarchs Militant, No. 1, at Gary; and New Century Lodge, No. 81, Daughters of Rebekah.

On the 16th of February, 1886, Mr. Noble was united in marriage to Miss Josephine Cook, of St. Thomas, Ontario, who died on the 20th of December, 1897, of pulmonary tuberculosis, being survived by one son, Roy, who is eleven years of age at the time of this writing, in 1904. She was a daughter of Ebenezer and Mary Cook, of Springfield, Ontario. On the 26th of July, 1899, Mr. Noble married Miss Etta M. Liscomb, daughter of I. P. Liscomb, a prominent citizen of Clear Lake, and of this union has been born one son, Perry, who is now three years of age.

TORKEL HANSEN, one of the prosperous farmers and stock growers of Lake county, is a native of Norway, where he was born on the 23d of May, 1838, being a son of Hans and Sarah (Larson) Turkelson, who emigrated from the far Norseland to America in 1858 and took up their residence in Clayton county, Iowa, in which state they passed the remainder of their lives, the father having become a successful farmer and having been one of the honored pioneers of the Hawkeye commonwealth. The subject was reared to maturity in his native land, in whose excellent schools he received his early educational training, while he was about twenty years of age at the time of accompanying his parents on their immigration to the new world. He continued to be identified with agricultural pursuits in Iowa until 1878, in June of which year he came to the present state of South Dakota and took up pre-emption and timber claims in Lake county, where he has ever since maintained his home. He still owns his original claims, to which he has added until he now has a well-improved estate of four hundred and forty acres, of which three hundred and fifty are under cultivation, while he has been successful in the raising of live stock in connection with the agricultural operation of his fine farm. Upon locating on his claim he built a primitive sod house of the type so common in the early days, and in the next year constructed a somewhat better shanty of lumber utilizing sod for filling in the cracks, while about three years later he erected a comfortable house, which is a portion of his present commodious and attractive farm residence, which was erected at a cost of about two thousand and five hundred dollars. In 1895 he built his substantial barn, which is fifty-four by seventy feet in dimensions. He has made other excellent improvements on his ranch, and the well-matured trees which grace the same were planted by him.

Mr. Hansen has ever been faithful to the duties of citizenship and has given his aid and influence in support of all measures for the material, moral and civic advancement of the community, while in politics he is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party. He has served as an official of his school district, and has the unqualified confidence and esteem of all who know him. He and his wife are consistent and zealous members of the Lutheran church.

On the 15th of February, 1867, Mr. Hansen was united in marriage to Miss Julia Hansen, and they have ten children, whose names, with respective years of birth, are here entered: Sarah, 1868; Lizzia, 1870; Margit, 1871; Hannah H., 1873; Bertha G., 1875; Hans, 1878; Otila, 1881; Henry, 1883; Albert, 1887, and George, 1890.

WALTER F. TOMPKINS, of Egan township, Moody county, was born on a farm in Dodge county, Wisconsin, on the 17th of September, 1852, and is a son of Daniel D. and Amelia (Tryon) Tompkins, both of whom were born in the state of New York, of staunch English lineage. The father of our subject was born in Duanesburg, Schenectady county, New York, on the 16th of April, 1827, and was a relative and namesake of Daniel D. Tompkins, who served two terms as vice-president of the United States, under the Monroe administration. In 1846 he married Miss Amelia Tryon, and in the early 'fifties removed with his wife to Wisconsin, becoming one of the pioneer settlers of Dodge county, where he resided for several years and where occurred the death of his devoted wife. Of the two children of this marriage our subject was the youngest, his brother, William H., having died in childhood. In 1856 the father married Miss Catherine Tryon, a sister of his first wife, and in 1862 he removed with his family to Olmsted county, Minnesota, where he became a prosperous farmer and influential citizen. He was one of the leaders in the Republican party in that section, and he served as township supervisor in 1867-8, as assessor for three years, and in 1886 was elected to represent his county in the legislature of the state. He died on the 17th of January, 1899, and is survived by his second wife. They became the parents of four children, namely: Minnie A. (deceased), Samuel Earl, Mary A. and Lafayette.

The subject of this sketch was reared to the sturdy discipline of the home farm and after completing the curriculum of the public schools continued his studies for one year in Wasioga Seminary, in Dodge county, Minnesota. In March, 1878, he came to what is now the state of South Dakota and located in Moody county, where he entered claim to a quarter section of government land, as a homestead, this constituting the nucleus of his present fine landed estate of five hundred and forty acres, in section 9, Egan township. His finances were limited and his early struggles in developing his land were of the most arduous sort. Two years after he located here came the great blizzard of October 15 and 16, 1880, and in the same he was accidentally caught, being for two days without food or fuel. The following winter was a particularly severe one, marked by blizzards and heavy fall of snow. The railroads were blockaded and supplies cut off entirely. Hay and straw were used for fuel, and in many cases the only flour available was that made from wheat ground by hand, usually in the ordinary domestic coffee-mill. Mr. Tompkins trusted and worked on and his reward has not been ill proportioned to his early struggles. Today he is the owner of five hundred and forty acres of the fine land of the Sioux river valley, the property being free from incumbrance, and gives his attention principally to the raising of sheep, having several hundred on his ranch at all times, as well as a number of high-grade cattle and horses, while he has about one hundred and fifty acres of his land under effective cultivation. He is an uncompromising Republican in his political proclivities, and has ever shown a public-spirited interest in local affairs and lent his aid in the furtherance of all enterprises and measures for the general good. He was for two years supervisor of Egan township, three years was incumbent of the office of township treasurer, and for nine years was treasurer of his school district, of which he has also been director. He and his wife are prominent and valued members of the Methodist Episcopal church at Egan, and they have the cordial good will and unqualified esteem of all who know them.

On the 28th of September, 1884, Mr. Tompkins was united in marriage to Miss A. Hodgman, who was born in Bristol, Addison county, Vermont, on the 9th of May, 1855, being a daughter of Harry and Huldah (Spaulding) Hodgman. They have two children, Amelia Mae, who was born on the 15th of March, 1886, and Melba D., who was born on the 12th of April, 1900.

CARL G. SHERWOOD was born on a farm on Connecticut hill, Broome county, New York, near Whitney Point, on the 18th of January, 1855, being a son of George and Mary A. (Jeffords) Sherwood. His father was a farmer by vocation and was a man of no little influence in his section of the Empire state. He was a member of the New York legislature in 1873-4, as a representative of the Binghamton district; was a staunch abolitionist during the crucial epoch leading up to the war of the Rebellion, and supported the Republican party from the time of its organization until his death. He was of English and French extraction, and his ancestors were numbered among the early settlers near Greene, Chenango county, New York. The paternal grandmother of the subject bore the maiden name of Budlong, and her family resided near Utica, New York. The maternal ancestors, the Jeffords, came to Chenango county, New York, from Connecticut and were of English and Irish lineage.

The subject was a farmer's boy, and it was with extraordinary difficulty and under discouraging circumstances that he obtained an ordinary common-school education. He was reared on a rough and stony farm, near Binghamton, New York, and the work of cultivating the land was more than ordinarily arduous. The land was new and he aided in reclaiming quite a portion of the farm from the native forest. His parents were poor, and the members of the family had to work hard and live closely in order to make ends meet. Thus the early educational advantages afforded our subject were very limited, but his alert mentality and his appreciation of the values of life early quickened his ambition to action, his first fixed purpose being to prepare himself for the profession of law. His parents were very devout in their religious life and it was their earnest wish that he should enter the ministry, and it was by reason of their insistency in this regard that he left the high school at Binghamton and came to the west to carve out his own fortunes. Through his personal efforts he had paid the expenses of carrying forward his studies in the high school through the tenth grade. In 1879 he came west, and when he first crossed the Mississippi river his cash capital was represented in the sum of ten cents. He taught in the district schools on the Illinois side of the river for two years, and in the meanwhile borrowed technical books of A. R. McCoy, of Clinton, Iowa, just across the river, and devoted his evenings and other leisure moments to the reading of law, while his vacations were likewise devoted to this work. He continued to live in Whiteside county, Illinois, and in Clinton, Iowa, at intervals, until June, 1881, when he was admitted to the bar of Iowa, in the city mentioned. In the following month he secured admission to the Minnesota bar, at Luverne, while he became a member of the bar of Codington county, Dakota, in 1882. He came to Watertown, this county, in July, 1881, and on the 7th of the following month took up his residence in the village of Clark, where he has ever since maintained his home and been actively and successfully engaged in the practice of his chosen profession. He has been employed by the county in most of its important litigations, including the prosecution of Christ Christianson, who was convicted of murder and sentenced to the penitentiary for life, this being the only murder trial ever held in the county. Mr. Sherwood has been signally prospered in his efforts and the tangible results are seen in his valuable property interests. He is the owner of a well-improved farm of twelve hundred acres and also of considerable other real estate, including his attractive home in Clark. He has one of the best libraries in this section of the state, the same being valued at twenty-five hundred dollars.

Mr. Sherwood has been active in public affairs from the time of taking up his residence here. He served from 1882 until 1887 as register of deeds of the county, and was a member of the constitutional conventions, in Sioux Falls, in 1883 and 1889, while he was a delegate to the national Republican convention which nominated McKinley for the presidency in 1896. He was state senator from the twenty-ninth senatorial district of South Dakota in the first state senate convened, and was temporary and permanent chairman of the first Republican state convention held after the admission of South Dakota into the Union and chairman of the Republican state convention held at Sioux Falls, May 23, 1900, the largest convention ever held in the state. He has been a delegate from his county to every state convention of his party, with one exception, served for nearly a decade as chairman of the county central committee and is at the present time a member of the Republican state central committee. He has been intimately identified with the industrial, political and civic development of Clark county, having been thus associated with its interests from the time of its organization, while his was the distinction of being elected its first register of deeds. Mr. Sherwood has been affiliated with the Masonic fraternity since 1883, being a member of the lodge and chapter in Clark and the commandery of Knights Templar in Watertown. He was initiated in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in 1884, and is a member of the lodge in Clark. He is also identified with the Knights of Pythias, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Modern Brotherhood of America, while in 1902 he became a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks at Watertown. Both he and his wife were reared in the faith of the Baptist church, but they now attend and give support to the Methodist Episcopal church.

On the 10th of February, 1885, at Clark, this state, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Sherwood to Miss Nellie C. Fountain, a daughter of George H. and Dollie A. Fountain, who were pioneers in Nashua, Iowa, whence they later removed to Minneapolis, Minnesota, and from that city to Clark, South Dakota, in 1879, being among the first to settle in the vicinity of this now thriving city, the site being unmarked by a single building at the time of their arrival, while their nearest neighbors were six miles distant. Of the four children born to Mr. and Mrs. Sherwood we enter brief record, the date of birth being given in each respective connection, and the three living still remain at the parental home: George F., May 5, 1887; Harry A., September 15, 1888, died December 1, 1892; Mary Carlton, June 3, 1892; and Dollie Viola, July 2, 1897.

REV. MICHAEL DERMODY is one of the able and honored representatives of the priesthood of the holy Roman Catholic church in South Dakota, being pastor of the parish of St. Simon and Jude, at Flandreau, Moody county. Father Dermody was born in Waterford, Ireland, on the 10th of September, 1860, and is a son of John and Catherine (Kennedy) Dermody, both of whom were likewise born and reared in Waterford, coming of staunch old Irish stock and being folk of intelligence and sterling character, the father of the subject having devoted the major portion of his life to teaching as a vocation. He whose name initiates this sketch received his preliminary educational discipline in the parochial schools of his native place and then continued his studies in the monastery of Mount Zion, in the same town, availing himself fully of the excellent advantages of this old and noble institution. In 1878 Father Dermody came to America and completed his preparation for the priesthood in St. Viator's College, at Kankakee, Illinois, where he was ordained to the priesthood by Rt. Rev. Bishop O'Gorman, bishop of the diocese of Sioux Falls. After holding various pastoral incumbencies he came to South Dakota and since 1898 he has been pastor of the church at Flandreau, where he has given himself with all the devotion and fervent zeal to his sacerdotal and pastoral duties, vitalizing the work of the parish and gaining the earnest co-operation and affectionate regard of his parishioners. His congregation now numbers about one hundred families, and the parish is in a prosperous condition.

PETER O. RASMUSSEN was born in Vernon county, Wisconsin, on the 30th of April, 1859, and is a son of Ole Rasmussen, who was born and reared in Norway, whence he emigrated to the United States as a young man and became one of the pioneer settlers of Vernon county, Wisconsin, where he developed and improved a valuable farm. In that county the subject of this review was reared to maturity, having duly availed himself of the advantages afforded by the public schools and thereafter continuing to be there identified with agricultural pursuits until 1887, in the autumn of which year he came to what is now the state of South Dakota, where he took up a claim of government land in Clark county. In 1888 he returned to his home in Wisconsin for a short sojourn and then came again to his farm in Clark county, developing the same and making excellent improvements on the property, which he still owns, having now one hundred and sixty acres of most arable land. He continued to give his attention to the operating of his farm until 1900, when he was made the candidate on the Republican ticket for the office of register of deeds of Clark county, being elected by a gratifying majority and giving so excellent an administration that he was the natural choice of his party for the office at the expiration of his first term, having been re-elected in the autumn of 1902 and thus being incumbent of the office at the time of this writing, while he has the unqualified confidence and good will of the people of the county. He is a zealous worker in the local ranks of the "grand old party," and takes a lively interest in all that concerns the general welfare and progress of his home town, county and state. He and his wife are members of the Lutheran church.

On the 28th of December, 1888, Mr. Rasmusson was united in marriage to Miss Oliana M. Kolbo, who likewise was born in Vernon county, Wisconsin, being a daughter of Hans A. and Ingeborg Kolbo. Mr. and Mrs. Rasmusson have six children, namely: Henry Otto, Irina Mathilda, Olga Paula, John Magnus, Marvin Julian and Roland Albin.

It is worthy of note that, as the result of a severe attack of fever when three years old, the subject lost the use of his right leg, being compelled ever afterward to use crutches. Nevertheless, while in Wisconsin, he ran a horse-power threshing machine for eight years, and ran a steam thresher in South Dakota for six years, while during 1900 he acted as salesman and expert for the Deering Harvester Company.

EDWIN GRANT COLEMAN, of Flandreau, one of the able and representative members of the bar of the state and at the present time serving as state's attorney for Moody county, is a native of the state of Illinois, having been born in Pilot Grove township, Hancock county, on the 6th of March, 1867, a son of Charles B. and Nancy (Huckins) Coleman, who are now deceased, the father having been a farmer by vocation. Both the parental and maternal grandparents of the subject were numbered among the earliest settlers in Hancock county, whither the former came from Zanesville, Ohio, and the latter from Concord, New Hampshire, while both families trace the ancestral line back to staunch Puritan stock, having been founded in New England in the early colonial epoch.

The subject received excellent educational advantages in his early youth. After completing the curriculum of the common schools he continued his studies in turn in the La Harpe Academy and the Giddings Academy, at La Harpe, Illinois; later attended the Northern Illinois Normal School, at Dixon; and in 1889 was matriculated in the law department of the University of Michigan, where he completed the prescribed course and was graduated on the 28th of June, 1892, having been admitted to the bar of that state on the 3d of the same month. He was admitted to practice before the supreme court of Illinois on the 11th of June, of the same year; and on the 15th of June, 1898, was admitted to practice before the supreme court of South Dakota. In the autumn of 1892 Mr. Coleman formed a professional alliance with J. F. Hamilton and engaged in the practice of law in Galesburg, Illinois, where he remained until the spring of 1898, when he came to South Dakota, locating in Flandreau on the 29th of April and here opening an office. He has since been actively and successfully engaged in the practice of his profession here, retaining a representative clientage and being known as a safe and conservative counselor and as an able trial lawyer. On the 1st of November, 1901, he entered into a professional partnership with John Q. Adams, under the firm name of Adams & Coleman, and this association has since obtained, the firm holding a very high standing at the bar of the state and having the confidence and esteem of the community.

In politics Mr. Coleman is a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, in whose cause he takes an active interest, and he has served since 1902 as state's attorney for Moody county, proving a discriminating and faithful prosecutor, while for the past five years he has been a member of the village council of Flandreau. He was for six years a member of the Sixth Regiment of the Illinois National Guard, with which he was in active service during the labor strikes in Chicago, Pekin, Spring Valley and other places in the state, in 1894. Fraternally he is a Master Mason and also identified with the Modern Woodmen of America, the Order of the Eastern Star, the Royal Neighbors, the Knights of the Maccabees and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On the 12th of June, 1902, Mr. Coleman was united in marriage to Miss Lucy M. Vance, a daughter of Nathan Vance, of Flandreau, she being a native of Minnesota and at the time of her marriage with Mr. Coleman a resident of Flandreau, North Dakota.

LEVI MCGEE, of Rapid City, present judge of the seventh judicial district of South Dakota, was born in Davis county, Iowa, on March 12, 1858. After acquiring a preliminary education in the public schools of his native place, he pursued the higher studies for some time in a normal institute, which course being completed he devoted two or three years to the work of teaching. His father being a farmer young McGee was reared to agricultural pursuits and the outdoor experience and excellent discipline thus received had a marked influence in fostering habits of industry, shaping his character and materially affecting his future course of life. Having decided to make the legal profession his life work, Mr. McGee, at the age of twenty-two, entered a law office in Bedford, Iowa, and devoted the greater part of the ensuing three years to close, painstaking study, supporting himself by clerking in a store at odd times. In 1883 he became greatly interested in the Black Hills country, and his desire to seek his fortune in that promising field finally led him to purchase a wagon and a yoke of oxen with which to make the journey thither. Starting the above year he drove through over the old Pierre trail and, arriving at Rapid City in the month of September, at once entered the office of Nowlin & Wood, the leading law firm of the place, where he prosecuted his studies until his admission to the bar in 1886, defraying his expenses as formerly by doing office work and assisting his preceptors in various ways.

Mr. McGee brought to his profession a mind well disciplined by hard study and laborious research and in due time became one of the rising members of the Rapid City bar. The same year in which he opened his office he was nominated by the local Democracy for county judge and, defeating his competitor in the ensuing election, entered upon the duties of an office in which he achieved an eminently creditable and honorable record. After six years on the bench Mr. McGee resumed the practice and the large volume of business which soon came to him and his connection with the most important litigation in Pennington and neighboring counties attest the high rank he achieved among the most distinguished members of the South Dakota bar.

As already indicated, Judge McGee is a Democrat, and since coming west he has been an influential force in the party. Yielding to the repeated solicitation of his party friends, he accepted, in 1894, the nomination for the upper house of the general assembly and was elected by an overwhelming majority. Owing to the pressing claims of his large and constantly increasing legal business, which he could not afford to neglect for legislative honors, Judge McGee, after serving one term, refused a renomination, although his record in the senate was a distinguished one. He continued uninterruptedly the practice of his profession until the fall of 1897, when his name was again placed upon the Democratic ticket, but for a higher order of public service than any which he had previously been honored, to-wit, the district judgeship. His eminent qualifications for the position, together with his recognized integrity and great personal popularity paved the way for an easy election and he has held the responsible and exacting office continuously to the present time, having been chosen his own successor in the year 1901. Judge McGee's judicial career has more than realized the high expectations of his friends and the public, his thorough professional training, his familiarity with the principles of jurisprudence and his long and successful experience in every branch of the law in the town and higher courts of the state eminently fitting him for the duties of the dignified office which he so ably fills.

Aside from his profession, Judge McGee has achieved enviable standing as a citizen and his name has been closely identified with whatever makes for the social, educational and moral welfare of the community in which he resides. He belongs to the ancient and honorable Masonic brotherhood, in addition to which organization he is active and liberal in his benevolences, both public and private. The Judge owns a commodious and attractive home in Rapid City, and has gathered around him many of the comforts, conveniences and luxuries of life, which are shared by his estimable companion and helpmeet, to whom he was happily married on the 18th of December, 1887. Mrs. McGee, who was formerly Miss Gertrude S. Richards, was born in Delaware, but a considerable portion of her life has been spent in Rapid City, South Dakota.

GEORGE MOREHOUSE, deceased, late of Brookings, was one of the representative bankers and capitalists of the state and one of its most honored citizens, while the lesson of his career is a valuable one, showing a particular mastering of expedients, a strong mental grasp and a rare power of initiative, through which forces he has attained a high degree of success and won the proud American title of self-made man.

Mr. Morehouse was a native of the old Empire state, having been born in the town of Holley, Orleans county, New York, on the 23d of December, 1839, being a son of Carlton Morehouse, born in Galloway, Saratoga county, New York, on the 11th of December, 1797. The latter was a son of Caleb and Abigail Morehouse, the former of whom was born in the western part of Connecticut, whence he removed to Saratoga county, New York, immediately after the war of the Revolution, and there for many years was engaged in agricultural pursuits. His children were as follows: Erastus, Ransom, Carlton, Henry and William. The father of Caleb Morehouse was the original progenitor of the family in America, whither he emigrated from England in the colonial epoch of our national history, taking up his abode in the western part of Connecticut. During the war of the Revolution his live stock was confiscated by the British soldiers, among the animals taken being a yoke of oxen, which, after a few days, returned to the home farm, much to the surprise and gratification of the owners. In 1846 Caleb Morehouse came west to Kane county, Illinois, in company with his son Carlton, father of the subject, and he died at the home of his son Henry, in Plato township, Kane county, Illinois, said son having been a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal church and a circuit rider in Illinois from 1848 to 1853. The wife of Caleb Morehouse died in Saratoga county, New York, prior to his removal to the west. Each of their sons was married in Saratoga county, and the son Henry, who was a local preacher and a farmer, was the first of the family to locate in the west, having resided for a time in Kane county, Illinois, whence he removed to Janesville, Bremer county, Iowa, where he passed the remainder of his life. He was the father of two children, Bertha and Hattie. Erastus, the eldest of the sons of Caleb Morehouse, passed his entire life in Saratoga county, New York; Ransom died when a young man; and William, the youngest, became a resident of Janesville, Iowa, about 1866, and there he was engaged in the meat-market business during the remainder of his active business life, retaining his home there until his death.

Carlton Morehouse, the father of the subject, was reared and educated in Saratoga county, New York, growing up on the pioneer farm and in his early youth securing employment as clerk in a local mercantile establishment. On the 7th of December, 1825, was solemnized his marriage to Miss Eliza Cornell, who was born on the 12th of March, 1806, and whose death occurred on the 2d of July, 1863, she being a daughter of William Cornell, of Saratoga county, New York, the Cornell family having been of English lineage and the name having long been identified with the annals of American history. William, Sr., had only two children, and his son and namesake removed to Illinois and took up his abode on a farm at Pleasant Ridge, where he passed the remainder of his life. After his marriage Carlton Morehouse removed to Orleans county, New York, about 1838, and there he was engaged in general merchandise business until 1846, when he removed with his family to Plato township, Kane county, Illinois, where he engaged in farming, later becoming a traveling salesman for Ezra Wood & Company, of Chicago, manufacturers of agricultural implements, remaining thus engaged until his death. His health had been somewhat impaired during the winter of 1854-5 but he had recuperated sufficiently so that he felt himself able to resume his work, and he went to Chicago and died very suddenly, of a congestive chill, while in the office of his employers, his demise occurring on the 6th of April, 1855. He was a Democrat in his political proclivities and served as supervisor of his township after his removal to Illinois. He and his wife were members of the Baptist church and were folk of sterling character, ever commanding the respect of all who knew them. Carlton Morehouse was a man of fine intellectual gifts and marked ability, and his early death alone prevented his rising to a position of prominence in connection with the public and civic affairs of the state of Illinois, of which he was an honored pioneer. Carlton and Eliza (Cornell) Morehouse became the parents of six sons, concerning whom we enter the following brief record: Ransom, who was born in Saratoga county, New York, on the 23d of March, 1827, married Margaret Brown, and he died in Denver, Colorado. Frederick D., who was born in Galloway, Saratoga county, on the 5th of June, 1829, died in Orleans county, New York, on the 16th of July, 1845. William Henry, who was born in Galloway, Saratoga county, on the 10th of January, 1832, married Minerva A. McArthur, and devoted his life to farming and merchandising, his death resulting as the result of an operation performed in the city of Chicago, where he passed away on the 17th of June, 1901. Charles, who was born in Saratoga county, March 13, 1835, died the following year. George is the immediate subject of this sketch. Ezra Wilson, who was born in Saratoga county, April 13, 1845, was a soldier in the Union army during the war of the Rebellion and died on the transport "Spread Eagle" on the Mississippi river, near Napoleon, Arkansas, on the 19th of January, 1863, his body being interred with military honors at Milliken's Bend, Mississippi. The subject of this sketch has little knowledge in regard to his maternal grandmother, but after her death her husband, William Cornell, married Katherine De Forrest Fox, of the old Holland stock of the Mohawk valley of New York. He was born December 31, 1788, and died on the 1st of July, 1859.

George Morehouse passed the first twenty years of his life on the home farm, while he attended the district schools until he had attained the age of sixteen years. At the age of nineteen he left the farm and entered the Bryant & Stratton Business College, in the city of Chicago, where he completed a six-months course. In the following autumn he secured a position in the Racine County Bank, at Racine, Wisconsin, and in the following spring, that of 1861, he manifested the intrinsic loyalty and patriotism of his nature by tendering his services in defense of the Union, in response to the first call for volunteers. He enlisted as a member of Company F, Second Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, but was later rejected on account of physical disability. In order to recuperate his health he then made a fishing expedition along the coast of the gulf of St. Lawrence, and in the autumn of 1861 returned to Wisconsin and assumed the position of bookkeeper in the office of the Racine Advocate. In the spring of 1863 he was made chief accountant for Captain J. M. Tillapaugh, who had charge of the enumerating of men eligible for military service, superintending the drafting of soldiers, etc., and thus the subject was located in the city of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, until the spring of 1864, when he went to Brazier City, Louisiana, as bookkeeper in the employ of Captain C. H. Upham, a brother of ex-Governor William H. Upham, of Wisconsin, and there he remained until the close of the war, when he returned to the north and located in Janesville, Iowa, where he was employed as bookkeeper in the flouring mill of his brother Ransom until 1872, when he was elected treasurer of Bremer county, retaining this incumbency three terms and having had no opposing candidate on the occasion of his second and third elections, the different parties each placing his name on its ticket. He thus served from 1872 until 1878, and during the last two years of this period he also held the position of cashier of the Bremer County Bank, in Waverly. On the first of January, 1880, he resigned this latter executive office and in the spring of the same year came to Dakota and settled in Brookings, where he took up his abode on the 27th of February, forthwith directing his efforts to the establishing of a private banking institution, in which the interested principals were himself and his brother William H., of Burlington, Iowa. In 1884 the bank was incorporated with a capital of fifty thousand dollars, and of the same, known as the Bank of Brookings, the subject continued as cashier until the 1st of January, 1901, since which time he has served as president. In the meanwhile, in 1883, the two brothers also established a private bank at Estelline, this state, the same being afterward incorporated as the Bank of Estelline, and of this institution the subject was vice-president, while he was also one of the incorporators of the First National Bank of Volga, Brookings county, in the spring of 1902, being president of this institution. Mr. Morehouse was a man of rare business ability, public-spirited, upright and straightforward in all the relations of life, and he not only contributed in a material way to the advancement of the interests of the great state of South Dakota but also held at all times the unequivocal confidence and regard of those with whom he came in contact, being one of the honored and distinctively representative citizens of the state. He served for eight years as a member of the board of regents of the State Agricultural College, in Brookings, and also was a valued member of the board of education for a number of years. He was from the time of its organization a director and treasurer of the Brookings Land and Trust Company and was also financially interested in numerous other corporations in the city, ever lending his aid and influence to furthering all enterprises which make for the progress and well being of the community. His political allegiance was given to the Republican party, and his religious faith was that of the Baptist church, of which he was a zealous member and to which his widow belongs. He held the office of clerk of the local church from the time of its organization, in 1880. His devotion to the work of the church may be better understood when we state that for eighteen years, or until the church debt was liquidated, he gave his services as janitor, sparing no pains in attending to the work which he thus assumed and arising at five o'clock Sunday mornings to attend to the building of fires in the church and otherwise providing for the comfort of the worshippers. He was known as a man of liberality in the support of all good works, but used proper discrimination in the extension of charity and in other benevolences, while he was ever ready to aid all churches, being tolerant and kindly at all times, and believing that Christianity represents the bulwarks of our national prosperity and spiritual welfare. He manifested particular interest in the success of the Baptist college at Sioux Falls, and this interest was timely and helpful. Fraternally he was a charter member of Lodge No. 21, Free and Accepted Masons, in Brookings. The family residence is the finest in the city and is a center of gracious and refined hospitality. He was the artificer of his own fortunes and his noteworthy success represents the results of industry, integrity and wise economy. He died November 2, 1903, at his home in Brookings, the cause of his death being cancer of the stomach.

On the 26th of August, 1867, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Morehouse to Miss Anna B. Crosby, who was born in Belvidere, Illinois, on the 23d of January, 1845, a daughter of Henry L. Crosby, who was born in Fredonia, Chautauqua county, New York, on the 29th of October, 1819, while his wife, whose maiden name was Mary E. King, was born in Delphi, Onondaga county, that state, on the 30th of January, 1819, their marriage having occurred at Fairfield, Kane county, Illinois, on the 10th of March, 1842, while the officiating clergyman was Rev. John S. King, father of the bride. Henry L. Crosby was a son of Nathaniel, who was born in Thompson, Connecticut, February 18, 1786, while the latter's wife, whose maiden name was Sallie Merrill Larned, was born in the same place, December 6, 1793. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Morehouse was born in Arlington, Bennington county, Vermont, January 16, 1787, and his wife, Anna, nee Bristol, was born in Cornwall, Litchfield county, Connecticut, July 23, 1783. John S. King was a clergyman of the Baptist church and was also a physician. Henry L. and Mary E. (King) Crosby became the parents of seven children, concerning whom we offer the following brief record: Sarah L. was born in Boone county, Illinois, April 7, 1843; Anna B. became the wife of the subject of this review; Elsie, who was born September 1, 1846, died in September, 1871; Lucy, who was born May 29, 1848, died in infancy; William H., who was born September 12, 1849, died in March, 1903, at San Antonio, Texas; Ernest, born December 15, 1852, is a resident of Brookings, and Lucia E., who was born September 19, 1857, is a resident of Oakland, California.

Mr. and Mrs. Morehouse became the parents of two children. Mary Eliza, who was born in Janesville, Iowa, on the 25th of September, 1870, died on the 13th of January, 1875. Henry Carlton, who was born in Waverly, Iowa, September 17, 1877, still remains at the parental home. He was graduated in the Brookings high school, as a member of the class of 1896, and thereafter continued his studies for three years in the State Agricultural College, in this place, while later he completed a commercial course in the same institution. After leaving college he made a trip through Europe and through the Pacific coast states of the Union. He is at present engaged in the real-estate business at Willow City, North Dakota, though, as before stated, he makes his home with his mother in Brookings.

J. FRANKLIN AVANT is a native of Clinton county, Illinois, and the son of John V. and Mary (Trout) Avant, both parents born in the state of Ohio. He was born January 15, 1863, grew to maturity on a farm and received his education in the district school. He assisted his father in cultivating the farm until reaching the years of manhood, also helped the latter ship cattle to St. Louis, driving them from that city to Hastings, Nebraska. In the spring of 1885 Mr. Avant went, via Kearney and Broken Bow, to the Black Hills, and for some time thereafter was engaged with his father in buying cattle, the two finally locating ranches about six miles from the town of Hermosa. Mr. Avant has been engaged in stock raising ever since coming to South Dakota, and now owns one of the finest and best improved ranches in Custer county, the land being situated in one of the best grazing districts in the southwestern part of the state. While making this place his home, he has carried on his business in various parts of the country, and at intervals from 1893 to 1897 he was engaged in running cattle about one hundred miles northeast of Rapid City, disposing of his interests there in the latter year.

In addition to his home place Mr. Avant owns a valuable ranch in the foot hills about six and a half miles southwest of Hermosa, the same well stocked, besides containing a number of substantial improvements. In December, 1903, with his brother George, he bought the Glendale hotel at Hermosa and since they have conducted the same. In politics Mr. Avant is a Republican, but not a partisan, and beyond voting for the regular nominees and defending the soundness of his principles, he takes no active interest in party affairs, being first of all a business man, and making every other consideration secondary thereto. He holds membership with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America, in all of which organizations he has been honored with official positions, and in the deliberations of which he takes an active and influential part. The domestic life of Mr. Avant dates from the 7th day of January, 1893, at which time he entered the marriage relation with Miss Kate Hanlon, of Illinois, the union being blessed with one child, a son who answers to the name of Leonard Avant.

D. D. BALDWIN, engaged in the real-estate business at Carthage, is a contributor to the growing commonwealth of South Dakota from New England. Among the residents of Vermont during the earlier decades of the nineteenth century were E. B. and Lucia (Brown) Baldwin, whose marriage was unusually fruitful, in as much as it resulted in the birth of eleven children, whose names in order of birth were Willard H., Marcella, Francelia, George W., Eleazer B., Enrico H., Adella L., Emma B., D. D., William A. and Rufus C.

D. D. Baldwin was born at Sharon, Vermont, February 16, 1857, and was educated in the public schools of his native place. After thus acquiring a thorough elementary groundwork he entered as a student at the famous Dartmouth College and spent two years in that historic seat of learning. Thus equipped with a good and practical education, the young Vermonter turned his face resolutely westward in search of fame and fortune. New countries have no terrors for such men, but they rather delight in meeting and overcoming obstacles, and it was in this spirit that Mr. Baldwin appeared on his new theater of operations in 1881. His first location was in Union county, South Dakota, and his first occupation there was in the capacity of school teacher. For two years he had charge of a class at Jefferson, but not intending to make this a life work he went at the end of his term to Miner county and located at what is now the town of Carthage. Having purchased a tract of land in this neighborhood he was engaged for some time in farming, but subsequently was in the banking business. This enterprise, however, was surrendered in 1890 as a result of his election to the county judgeship, in which office he served for one term of two years. At a late period he embarked in the real-estate business in connection with Mr. Lyons.

Mr. Baldwin was married in North Dakota to Miss Josie Dewey, who died in 1887, leaving an only son named J. Dewey. Mr. Baldwin contracted a second matrimonial alliance with Miss Jennie P. Eaton, of Massachusetts, and as a result of this union the following children have been born, Richard, Ruth, Dorothy and Kenneth. Mr. Baldwin's political affiliations are with the Democratic party and he takes a lively interest in public affairs of county, state and nation. He was brought up in the Episcopal church and has always given his allegiance to the doctrines taught by that historic religious denomination. His fraternal connections are with the Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

F. B. WARD is a son of James and Levina (Barber) Ward, old residents of Jefferson county, in the Empire state. They lived at Carthage and there, in 1838. F. B. Ward was born, his early education being obtained in the schools of his native place. At a later period he had the benefit of a course in a normal school at Albany, where he was graduated in 1859. Shortly after this event he engaged in the mercantile business and in 1874 returned to the place of his nativity at Carthage, where his parents were still living. In 1882 he decided to cast his lot with the rapidly rising commonwealth of the west and obtaining a position as surveyor with the Northwestern Railroad Company, he assisted in the survey of that line from Hawarden, Iowa, to Iroquois, South Dakota. He filed a claim on a quarter section of land in Miner county, planned a town site and named the embryonic city Carthage, in honor of the old home in New York state, where he had spent his boyhood days. The growth of the place was rapid and its development was largely due to the enterprise and business foresight of Mr. Ward. He it was who built the Palmer House and established the Bank of Carthage, the latter important event in the town's early career occurring in 1883. This bank is the oldest in Miner county and enjoys the distinction of having weathered all the financial storms occurring during the formation period of the Dakotas, which wrecked so many other struggling financial institutions. Mr. Ward has always been an ardent Republican in politics, but, while ever ready to help along the cause by word of mouth and timely work, he has never sought political rewards and kept aloof from office seeking. Mr. Ward's fraternal connections are with the Masonic fraternity, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

In 1860 Mr. Ward was united in marriage with Miss Harris, of Harrisville, New York, who shared his fortunes in the west until claimed by death, in 1892. Subsequently Mr. Ward was married to Miss Langley and has one child named Francis B.

ARTHUR J. COLGAN, one of the leading business men of Edgemont, was born in Burlington, Iowa, on the 25th day of July, 1856. When he was a child his parents moved from the above city to Ottumwa and it was at the latter place that he grew to manhood's estate and received his education, remaining there variously employed until his twenty-second year. In 1878 he went to southwestern Nebraska, thence after a brief period to Colorado, where he engaged in railroading, to which kind of work he devoted his attention until the year 1880, when he came to Valentine, Nebraska, the terminus of the railroad at that time. Valentine being an important point and the center of trade for a large area of country, Mr. Colgan at once opened a restaurant and hotel in the town, which were well patronized, and he continued in this line of business until 1886, when he sold out and changed his location to Oelrichs, Fall River county, near which place he took up land and engaged in cattle raising. After spending two years in the live-stock industry, he opened, in 1888, a general store at Oelrichs, which from the beginning proved very profitable, and in due time he commanded the bulk of the mercantile trade in that town. The business continuing to increase with each succeeding year, he was induced, in 1897, to start a branch store in Edgemont, but three years later the two establishments were combined at the latter place, where, as already indicated, Mr. Colgan is now the leading merchant in the various lines of goods which he handles. He has a large and well-appointed store, carries a full and complete stock of general merchandise and commands a lucrative patronage, his establishment being taxed to its utmost capacity to meet the constantly increasing demands of his numerous customers.

Mr. Colgan not only stands high in commercial circles, but enjoys worthy prestige as one of Edgemont's representative citizens. He has justly earned the American title of self-made man, having from his boyhood relied upon his own exertions for a livelihood, and that too in spite of many obstacles calculated to discourage and deter. Mr. Colgan is a zealous supporter of the Democratic party, but has persistently refused to accept office at the hands of his fellow citizens, having little taste for partisan politics and still less for public honors. He enjoys the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens and is well deserving of mention among the representative citizens of his adopted county and state.

On January 22, 1882, in the town of Montrose, Kansas, Mr. Colgan entered the marriage relation with Miss Ellen Stack, of Iowa, the union being blessed with six children, whose names are as follows: Thomas, Nellie, Edward, Charlie, Mary and Leonard.

THOMAS F. STECHER, D. D., was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, December 20, 1852, his parents being Thomas and Caroline Stecher. At an early age the subject was sent to the parochial school of his native city, where he was well grounded in the ancient classics and the humanities, after which he took a course in mechanical engineering, which he followed as an occupation until the completion of his twenty-fifth year. Having decided to take holy orders, he abandoned secular pursuits and entered earnestly upon his studies for the priesthood. Having finished his studies in Cincinnati, he came to Sioux Falls in July, 1901, where he received his subdeaconship August 15, 1901. After his ordination as priest in Jefferson, South Dakota, by Rt. Rev. Bishop M. Marty, November 22, 1901, he was assigned to the Catholic congregation at Howard, of which he has since had charge. Under his pastorate and chiefly owing to his energy and persistence, a beautiful church and pastorage have been erected. In addition to this, Father Stecher built churches at Carthage and Brishine, of which he has pastoral supervision in connection with his duties at the county seat. When Father Stecher came to this section the Catholic communicants were comparatively few and the church accommodations quite limited. By his indefatigable efforts a pleasing change has been brought about and he now has seventy-five families under his ministrations. But the good he has done in a public way is surpassed by his private services, his charities and his earnest work for every good cause. The needy never approach him in vain for help, the heavy-laden have their burdens lightened by his sympathetic advice and the despairing are braced for braver struggles with the worries of the world. Father Stecher's popularity is not confined to his own parishioners, but he enjoys the general good will and kindly consideration of all classes at Howard.

MRS. ATLANTA H. KING.—The life of this estimable lady illustrates very forcibly the fact that under certain conditions women may succeed as well as men in conducting the stern practical affairs of life and achieve as great success as their brothers in a domain which from time immemorial has been considered the latter's special province. Atlanta Smith, daughter of David and Samantha (Warner) Smith, was born in Cleveland, Ohio, and spent the first eleven years of her life in that city, being left an orphan at that age, after which she became an inmate of her grandmother's home. She accompanied the latter to Illinois, where she lived three years, attending school the meanwhile and at the expiration of that time, went to Iowa, thence after one year to Albert Lea, Minnesota, where she made her home for several succeeding years and where she also met a gentleman by the name of William Robinson, who subsequently became her husband.

Mr. Robinson owned a ranch near the town of Albert Lea, and it was on this place that the subject spent the first seven years of her wedded life. In the spring of 1867 the couple disposed of their interests in Minnesota and with a party of friends and acquaintances came to Dakota territory and took up land near the little town of Bon Homme, twenty miles from Yankton, building their house on the bank of the Missouri river. Mr. Robinson developed a farm and in the matter of cultivating the soil was ably assisted by his wife, who assisted in the work of the fields when not attending to the domestic duties of the household. Mrs. Robinson lived about fifteen years on the Missouri, where she originally settled, during which time she was left a widow and later she entered the marriage relation with James F. King, a well-known farmer and stock raiser of eastern Dakota, the nuptials being celebrated in the month of October, 1880.

In the spring of 1882 Mr. and Mrs. King moved to the Black Hills and purchased a ranch on Squaw creek, one and a half miles from Hermosa, at once began the work of its improvement. Mr. King was an industrious, hard-working man, a good manager and he soon reduced the greater part of his land to cultivation and had it well stocked with cattle and other domestic animals. He conducted his affairs quite successfully, accumulated a comfortable competency and became widely and favorably known as an energetic business man and upright, law-abiding citizen. He was machinist and mining engineer by profession and served the government several years on Indian reservations. While in Bon Homme county he served as sheriff one term. He departed this life on October 13, 1890, from which time until a recent date, his widow managed the ranch, conducted the business affairs of the same, reared her family and provided for their intellectual training as well as for their material support, giving them the best educational advantages obtainable. As her oldest son by her first marriage, Eli C. Robinson, grew to maturity he gradually assumed the burdens and responsibilities of the place, and being intelligent and naturally inclined to business, he soon grasped the details of cattle raising and at this time is one of the most enterprising and progressive live-stock men in his part of the county.

Mrs. King deserves great credit for the business-like manner in which she managed the ranch and looked after the varied interests of her children, all of whom acknowledge their great indebtedness to her for her untiring activity in their behalf. By her second marriage she had two children, a son, James B., and a daughter by the name of Pearl. Mrs. King's first marriage was blessed with four children, namely: Mrs. Emily Beadle, Mrs. Etna M. Beach, Eli C., a successful live-stock man residing on Spring creek, and Mrs. Lennie L. Beatty, all living in South Dakota and greatly esteemed in their respective communities.

GEORGE T. PAINE is of New England birth and inherits many of the sterling characteristics for which the people of that section of the Union have long been distinguished. He was born January 8, 1861, in Providencetown, Massachusetts, but when a child of seven years was taken by his parents to Champaign, Illinois, where he grew to maturity, received his educational discipline and began his life work. His father being an enterprising contractor and builder, young George was early instructed in brick masonry, and after becoming an efficient workman he followed the trade in different parts of Illinois until 1884, the two or three years prior to that date being devoted to contracting upon his own responsibility. In the fall of 1884 he took a government contract to do certain masonry work in Fort Robinson, South Dakota, which being completed, he was similarly engaged the following years on Fort Niobrara. Finishing these contracts, Mr. Paine, in the latter part of 1885, went to Buffalo Gap, preceding the railroad to that point and located a ranch on Chilsin creek, thirteen miles west of Hot Springs, to which the next spring he brought a large number of cattle with the object in view of making the raising of live stock his principal business. He made many improvements on this ranch and devoted his attention exclusively to cattle raising until 1891, when he was attracted to the newly settled town of Edgemont, where he found abundant opportunity for the exercise of his trade, builders of all kinds having been in great demand at that time. He at once took contracts to erect a number of business blocks, private residences and other kinds of work, and in due time had his various edifices under headway, giving employment to a considerable force of men, who under his leadership soon transformed the place from a wild waste into a beautiful and by no means unpretentious city of large expectations.

The year of his arrival Mr. Paine opened a feed and grain store in Edgemont which early became the chief source of supplies for the farmers of the surrounding country, and he has maintained an establishment of this kind ever since, the meanwhile building up the extensive business which he still commands. In addition to flour, grain, feed, etc., he handles large quantities of coal, being the heaviest dealer in these lines of merchandise in this part of the country.

In 1901 Mr. Paine organized the Bank of Edgemont, a state institution of which he is president, George Highly, vice-president, and H. H. Thompson, cashier, all three business men of recognized ability and high standing. Mr. Paine's brother-in-law, E. L. Arnold, is interested with him in his various business enterprises, the latter looking after the ranch and giving personal attention to the live stock, while the subject manages the bank and store, besides devoting considerable time to contracting, which he still carries on. From the foregoing brief career it will not be difficult to assign Mr. Paine his proper place in the history of Fall River county and the city of Edgemont. In addition to his connection with the general welfare of Fall River county, in the different spheres of endeavor, Mr. Paine proved of great benefit to Edgemont by his activity in behalf of the Burlington & Missouri Railroad and he still has a large contract to furnish the company with sand to be used on the line through this part of the country, thus giving employment to a large force of men who live in the town and who derive their entire income from this source. By good management the subject has come into possession of an ample fortune and is now accounted one of the wealthiest men in the county of Fall River, owning in addition to his various business interests, a large amount of land in different parts of the country, and valuable city property, being one of the heaviest real-estate holders in this section of Dakota. Fraternally Mr. Payne belongs to the Pythian lodge at Edgemont, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, at Lead, and is an influential member of the Modern Woodmen of America and the Woodmen of the World organizations, which meet in the former place. Politically a staunch Democrat, he has repeatedly and persistently declined public office, being first of all a business man to whom the plain title of citizen is much more desirable than any honor within the power of the people to confer. Mr. Paine has a beautiful modern residence in Edgemont, and is the head of a family which is highly esteemed not only in the best social circles of the city, but by all classes and conditions of people in the community.

FRANK SEARS, a leading member of the bar of Day county, and a prominent citizen of Webster, the county seat, was born July 18, 1856, at Moscow, Livingston county, New York. He is the son of William and Margaret A. (Poorman) Sears, both natives of New York state, the former born in Livingston county in 1828, and the latter in Seneca county in 1833. The Sears are of English descent. The grandparents (paternal) were Franklin and Elizabeth (Shadders) Sears, the former born in Massachusetts and the latter in Hagerstown, Maryland. William Sears, the father, removed from Livingston county, New York, to Woodford county, Illinois, in 1857, and from there he removed to Chatworth, Livingston, Illinois, in 1866. He is a lawyer by profession and has held local public office for many years. He and wife are still living. The mother of the subject is the daughter of Jacob Poorman. Frank Sears was reared in Chatsworth, Illinois. He graduated from the Chatsworth high school in 1875, following which he attended German school for three years, becoming a fluent writer and talker in that language. Following his schooling, he spent four years in the service of the Illinois Midland Railroad Company. In 1884 he came to Andover, Day county, South Dakota, where he took up the study of law. In November, 1888, he was admitted to the bar, and in 1890 he was elected state's attorney for Day county, while living at Andover. He removed to Webster, where he assumed the duties of his office. He was re-elected state's attorney in 1892. In April, 1895, he was elected the first mayor of Webster. In 1904 he was renominated for state's attorney by the Republican party. He has been prominent in legal circles for fifteen years, and has been connected with the most important cases in this section of the state. He makes a specialty of criminal practice. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Improved Order of Red Men and Dramatic Order Knights of Khorassan. He is a self-made man in every respect.

In June, 1881, Mr. Sears was married, at Pekin, Tazewell county, Illinois, to Isabell Hammond, the daughter of Daniel Hammond. The following four children were born to that union: Mayme, married to Frank J. O'Regan, of St. Paul; William Wallace, now of St. Paul; Frank, Jr., now of St. Paul; Madaline, of St. Paul. On October 27, 1901, Mr. Sears was married to Miss Alice Cavanaugh, who was born at McComb, Illinois, the daughter of John Cavanaugh. To them two children have been born, Barnabus and a daughter, unnamed.

Fran Sears.

THEODORE HESNARD is an American by adoption and has been a citizen of the United States but a short time, his residence in this country covering a period of only twenty-three years. He was born April 17, 1843, in Flers, Normandy, France, and grew to maturity in that city, receiving an excellent scholastic training the meanwhile, and while still young he began earning his own livelihood in the woolen mills of his native place. He became quite proficient in this line of work, which he followed as long as he remained in France, and by industry and thrift, not only provided comfortably for himself and those dependent upon him, but succeeded in laying up a surplus by means of which he was afterward enabled to emigrate to a country of greater advantages and larger opportunities than obtained in the land of his birth. Mr. Hesnard married and practically reared his family in Flers, and made that city his home until 1881, in the spring of which year he came to America and proceeded as far west as Pierre, South Dakota, where his wife and children stopped temporarily, while he went further looking for a favorable place in which to locate. Staging it through to the Black Hills the same season, he took up land where Hermosa now stands, but through the dishonesty of a would-be friend he was cheated out of his valuable real estate. He then settled on a ranch about five miles east of the town to which he brought his family the following spring, and turned his attention to agriculture and cattle raising, in both of which pursuits he was totally inexperienced, his previous mode of life in a large city having been in an entirely different direction. He soon accustomed himself to the new conditions, however, and addressing himself manfully to the task before him, made much better progress as a tiller of the soil than many who have devoted their lives to the pursuit. Mr. Hesnard improved his ranch by erecting a comfortable dwelling and good out-buildings, and with such assistance as his older sons could render, succeeded in due time in getting a substantial start. He managed his affairs in a systematic and business-like manner, and by continued toil and perseverance, in the course of a few years, had one of the best ranches in the locality. In 1889 he purchased several mining claims on Battle creek, in which he put flumes, preparatory to working the same, but receiving a flattering offer for the property, he sold it and resumed agriculture and stock raising, prosecuting the same with good success until 1898, when he disposed of his home place and bought the ranch five miles west of Hermosa on which he has since lived and prospered. Mr. Hesnard's success as a farmer and stock raiser has been marked and he now occupies a prominent position among the leading men of Custer county, similarly engaged. Mr. Hesnard is a man of wide intelligence and practical ideas, is well informed, not only on matters coming within his sphere of endeavor, but on public affairs and current events, and as a citizen commands the respect and confidence of all with whom he mingles. Emil E., the oldest son, is engaged in mining at Keystone, this state, and is one of the rising young men of that city. Arsene T., the second in order of birth, after finishing the common schools, attended the State Normal, at Spearfish, and later took a course in the college at Fremont, Nebraska, graduating from the latter institution. On finishing his education he engaged in teaching, in which he achieved distinguished success, and in the year 1899 he was elected, on the Democratic ticket, superintendent of the Custer county public schools, filling the position one term with a very creditable record. In 1903 he accepted a professorship in the Colorado State Normal School, at Saguache, and at this time ranks with the able instructors in that institution. The other sons, Edward and Theodore, assist their father on the ranch. Two daughters complete the family circle, namely: Amelia and Matilda.

ALLEN W. CAREY, one of the enterprising farmers and stock raisers of Custer county, has been an honored resident of South Dakota since the year 1877. He was born September 27, 1831, in Indianapolis, Indiana, and grew to maturity on a farm near that city, receiving a fair education. On attaining his majority he engaged in agriculture upon his own responsibility and continued the same in his native state until 1856, when he disposed of his interests there and went to Des Moines, Iowa, near which place he also turned his attention to tilling the soil. When the great Rebellion broke out he tendered his services to the government, enlisting in 1861 in Company B, Thirteenth Iowa Infantry, with which he served with an honorable record until the close of the war, being mustered out in 1865.

Immediately after his discharge, Mr. Carey returned to his Iowa farm, where he remained until the year 1876, when he sold out and, moving to Nebraska, took up a homestead near the city of Lincoln. His residence in the latter state was of short duration, however, for in February of the following year he sold his land and came to South Dakota, where for some time thereafter he gave his attention to prospecting and mining in various parts of the Black Hills. Later, in April, 1880, he went to Battle creek and took up a ranch about six miles from the town of Hermosa, and on this place he has since lived and prospered as a farmer and cattle raiser, meeting with marked success in both pursuits. Mr. Carey has labored hard to improve his place, and made a comfortable home for his declining years, and by good management and thrift he is now the possessor of a sufficiency of this world's goods to render his future from care or anxiety.

Mr. Carey, on November 23, 1854, was married, in the city of Indianapolis, to Miss Mary Miller, of Indiana, the union being blessed with five children: Mrs. Sarah Perry, Mrs. Frances Alley, Mrs. Alice Chevront, Mrs. Ella Prouty and James H. Carey.

JOHN E. REDDICK, farmer, stock raiser and one of the representative citizens of Custer county, South Dakota, was born in Crockett county, Tennessee, on the first day of May, 1857. Owing to unfavorable environment while young, he had no school privileges and while a mere lad he was thrown upon his own resources. In the fall of 1876 Mr. Reddick went to Memphis, thence via the Mississippi and Missouri rivers to southwestern Iowa, where he worked for two years as a farm hand. Discontinuing that kind of labor, he secured the position of janitor of a school building in the town of Atlantic and while discharging the duties of the same attended school. Although a full grown man, he was not ashamed to take his place in classes composed of children, ranging in age from eight to twelve years, and so anxious was he to learn that he spent all of his leisure time and the greater part of each night poring over his books. In his laudable ambition to acquire an education, he was greatly helped by the principal of the school, J. J. McConnell, now of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, who at odd times gave him much assistance and encouragement. Mr. Reddick attended this school three years, supporting himself the meanwhile and paying his tuition by janitor work, and at the end of that period he was a fairly good scholar. Leaving Iowa in the spring of 1882, Mr. Reddick went to Nebraska, where he spent about one year riding the range, and the following spring found him on the way to the Black Hills. He went by rail as far as O'Neil, and from that place made the rest of the trip on foot. Reaching Battle creek, he took up land about fourteen miles from Hermosa, which he at once proceeded to improve, and when not thus engaged he worked on neighboring ranches until earning sufficient money to purchase a tolerably respectable outfit. His progress at first was slow and considerably hampered, but he gradually improved his condition until within the course of a few years he found himself the owner of a comfortable home, a good supply of farming utensils, besides horses and a respectable number of cattle. He enlarged the area of cultivated land, added to his live stock with each succeeding year, until in due time he forged to the front as one of the largest cattle raisers and most successful farmers in his part of the county, which reputation he still sustains.

Mr. Reddick's ranch contains one thousand three hundred acres of land, three hundred acres irrigated and from one hundred and sixty acres in cultivation, he raises abundant crops of all the grains, vegetables and fruits grown in this part of the country.

Mr. Reddick was married in Rapid City, South Dakota, July 5, 1886, to Miss Rose A. McMahon, of Wisconsin, and is the father of seven children, viz: Benjamin, James, John, Theophilus, Mary, Martha and Rosa, all living except the oldest son, who met with a tragic death some years ago by the turning over of a loaded wagon, being crushed beneath the same.

JOHN W. STRATER was born in Germany, November 11, 1845. When a child he was brought to the United States by his parents and spent his early life on a farm in Jasper county, Iowa, remaining at home until his seventeenth year. In 1863 he left the parental roof and went to New Mexico, where he remained several years engaged in prospecting and mining, and later traveled over the greater part of that territory, Colorado and other mining districts of the southwest, meeting with fair success at times, but failing to realize the fortunes which he set out to seek. When gold was discovered in the Black Hills Mr. Strater, with three companions, at once started for the new Eldorado, leaving Denver in the spring of 1875 for Fort Laramie, thence to Custer Park, reaching the latter place on May 20th of that year. At the time of Mr. Strater's arrival there were only four or five men in the Black Hills, and they went there despite the orders of the government to the contrary. Locating temporarily on Castle creek, the subject and his companions continued prospecting until the following August, when they were arrested by a detachment of soldiers and taken to Fort Laramie, where they were turned loose. They retraced their steps to the Hills and in due time arrived at their diggings on Castle creek. Resuming mining, the little party worked with might and main, determined if possible to make a lucky find, but they appear to have reckoned without their host, for only ten days passed until they again fell into the hands of the soldiers, who took them to Custer City, where they were imprisoned in what was known as the "Bull Pen," a rude corral made of rough logs and devoid of everything in the shape of comfort or convenience.

After being detained a little over a week they were taken to Cheyenne and soon after the marshal gave the prisoners their freedom, admonishing them, as they left, against repeating their former offenses, unless they wished to incur the severe displeasure of the government. Nothing daunted, however, the men immediately returned to their camp, and again began digging and were never thereafter interfered with. After remaining at the original camp on Castle creek until April, 1876, Mr. Strater went to Custer City, thence a little later to Spring creek, where he prospected during the summer months, and in the fall located at Haywood, where he continued prospecting and mining until 1880. In the latter year he engaged in mercantile business at Hayward, purchasing his goods in Rapid City, and he soon had a lucrative trade, his establishment being the first of the kind in the town. After doing a successful business until 1882, he moved his store to his ranch on Battle creek, ten miles from Hayward, where he continued to sell goods about three years, in connection with which he also raised cattle, besides farming on a limited scale. At the expiration of the period noted he changed the location of the store to a point on the Sidney road, south of Battle creek, where a postoffice was established and named, in compliment of himself, Strater, he being the first postmaster. Mr. Strater's business experience at the latter place lasted until 1887, at which time he moved to Hermosa, a new town, which was settled in the spring of that year. The subject has been very closely identified with the business interests and general prosperity of Hermosa, and he is now not only the oldest merchant in the place, but also one of its most enterprising and public-spirited citizens. He carried a full line of general merchandise, commanded the bulk of the trade, and had one of the largest and most successfully conducted stores in the Black Hills. He sold his interest in this business in January, 1904. Mr. Strater's ranch, on which he still makes his home, contains about six hundred and forty acres of fine grazing land, and being situated only one mile from Hermosa, he experiences little difficulty in its management. His live-stock business is extensive and successful and in the main he has been quite prosperous in his various undertakings, being at this time one of the financially strong and reliable men of his part of the state. In addition to his career as a prosperous miner, pioneer and business man, he also has a military record, having served about one year in the late Civil war, as private in a Colorado regiment, enlisting in 1864. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Hermosa, belongs to the Grand Army post at the same place, and manifests a lively interest in the deliberations of both organizations.

JOHN J. BEATTY, farmer and stock raiser, living on a fine ranch two and a half miles from Hermosa, is a native of Winnebago county, Illinois, where his birth occurred on September 25, 1857. His father was a farmer and to this useful calling the subject was reared. He enjoyed the best educational advantages the common schools of his neighborhood afforded, devoting the summer seasons to farm labor until twenty-one years of age. On attaining his majority, Mr. Beatty left home and in January, 1879, went to western Kansas, where he spent the greater part of the following summer with a cattle outfit. In the fall he helped drive a herd to western Dakota and for some time thereafter was employed by different parties, riding the range along the Cheyenne river and other parts of the country. While thus engaged he several times returned to Kansas and Nebraska to buy cattle and from those states he drove them through to the Black Hills, continuing this free cowboy life until 1887, when he took up a ranch about two and a half miles north of Fairburn, and turned his attention to farming. Mr. Beatty spent the greater part of four years on this place, and in the main met with good success, but an intensely dry season coming on at the expiration of that time, he was obliged to discontinue agricultural pursuits in that locality and seek a more favorable location elsewhere. The next season he rented the old Slater ranch, on Battle creek, which was well irrigated, but after spending three years on the same with fairly profitable results, he purchased a ranch of his own, making a judicious selection on Battle creek, about two and a half miles from Hermosa, where, since 1896, he has been quite extensively engaged in agriculture and stock raising. When Mr. Beatty took possession of his ranch it contained but little in the way of improvements. He at once addressed himself to the matter and within a comparatively brief period a large part of the place was irrigated and in a high state of cultivation, a comfortable dwelling was prepared for the reception of his family, suitable outbuildings made their appearance at intervals, and in due time he had one of the most beautiful and desirable homes on the creek. He has continued his improvements ever since, and in addition to cultivating the soil and raising abundant crops of grains, vegetables and fruits, his herds have steadily increased until he now ranks with the leading live-stock men in his part of the state.

Mr. Beatty was married, on November 24, 1890, to Miss Lena L. Robinson, who was born and reared in South Dakota, the union being blessed with two children, Cora and Archie. Since coming west Mr. Beatty has contributed his share to the material development of the county of which he is an honored citizen, and achieved distinctive success in his business affairs.

LOOMIS S. CULL, who is not only one of the leading members of the Fall River county bar, but enjoys honorable distinction in legal circles throughout the state, is a native of New England and dates his birth from the 24th day of July, 1860, having first seen the light of day in the village of Waterville, Lamoille county, Vermont. He spent his childhood and youth at the place of his birth and after finishing the public-school course, prosecuted his studies for some time at Norwich University, at Northfield. When twenty years of age, Mr. Cull went to Marshalltown, Iowa, where he studied law in the office of a prominent local attorney and in due time was admitted to the bar, following which he came to Dakota, locating in April, 1882, at Plankinton, where he opened an office and began the practice of his profession under favorable auspices. He built up a lucrative business in that town and made it his place of residence until 1886, in September of which year he located at Hot Springs, where, as already indicated, he soon won recognition at the local bar, besides earning the reputation of one of the ablest lawyers in the Black Hills. In addition to his general practice, he was frequently employed to try important cases in the United States courts, and in 1891 was appointed by Judge Edgerton United States commissioner, which position he filled with marked ability during the five years following, retiring from the office in 1896.

The same year in which he entered upon his duties as commissioner Mr. Cull was appointed county judge, to fill out the unexpired term of Judge Wood, and the next year was chosen his own successor by the votes of the people, having been the Republican nominee for the office. His career on the bench was creditable to himself and eminently satisfactory to the public, as he discharged the duties of the position ably and impartially and by the uniform fairness of his rulings and decisions gained the confidence of all who had business to transact in his court. In 1897 Mr. Cull removed to Lead and a little later was appointed city attorney, but after a brief residence at that place he returned to Hot Springs and resumed the practice of his profession. In the spring of 1900 he was appointed to the office of city attorney of Hot Springs, and the following fall was further honored by being elected, on the Republican ticket, state's attorney, holding the latter position two terms, having been re-elected in 1902. In addition to the offices enumerated, Mr. Cull has served the people in several other public capacities, besides being identified with various important enterprises for the advancement of the different interests of the community. As already indicated, he has achieved a distinguished record as a lawyer and stands today among the foremost practitioners in his part of the country. In the trial of suits he has been uniformly successful. The careful preparation of his cases, his watchfulness over the just interests of his clients, his knowledge of authorities and his ability to see and utilize the strong points in his cause, combined with his earnestness and well-known integrity make him a strong advocate before court and jury, as well as a formidable antagonist in matters involving legal acumen and technical knowledge of the law. Mr. Cull has long been recognized as one of the Republican leaders in southwestern Dakota, being firm and decided in his political opinions, and earnest in their support.

Mr. Cull was married at Buffalo Gap, South Dakota, in the year 1887, to Miss Carrie M. Holp, a native of Ohio and a sister of Col. P. E. Holp, formerly of Sioux Falls, later a prominent citizen of Watertown, this state. Mr. and Mrs. Cull have one child, a son by the name of George C.

HON. CHAUNCEY L. WOOD, of Rapid City, was born on April 20, 1851, in Jones county, Iowa, and there received his early education, meanwhile working with his father on the farm. He continued his scholastic training at Cornell College at Mount Vernon, and secured his professional preparation at the Iowa State University, where he was graduated from the law department in 1875. After his graduation he remained on the farm one year, and in 1877 began the practice of law at Anamosa, the county seat of his native county. In April, 1878, he arrived at Rapid City in this state, and there met Hon. J. W. Nowlin, a member of his class who had come to the Black Hills in 1877, and who was afterward the first circuit judge in this part of the state. They formed a partnership for the practice of law and opened an office in Rapid City. The firm was very successful and rose rapidly to prominence, the partnership continuing until Mr. Nowlin was elected judge of the seventh circuit court of South Dakota in the fall of 1889. After that Mr. Wood practiced alone for some time, then formed a partnership with C. J. Buell which lasted twelve years. Since February, 1902, Mr. Wood has again been alone in professional work and has built up an extensive and representative practice in all departments of the law. He has been connected in a leading way with many of the most important cases that have been tried in this section of the country and has won high distinction as an able and adroit trial lawyer, an eloquent and effective advocate, and a jurist of great learning and breadth of view. He practices in the United States court also and has considerable business before that tribunal. From 1895 to 1900 he was special assistant United States attorney, and as such had full control of all timber cases in which the interests of the government were involved. As a member of the territorial constitutional convention in 1883 he displayed a wide and accurate knowledge of affairs and great power in presenting and enforcing his views; and as a member of the convention that met in 1889 and formulated the present state constitution, he was of great service to his county and the state at large in securing the insertion of wise provisions in the organic law and the elimination of unwise ones therefrom. Being an ardent Democrat in political faith and warmly devoted to the welfare of his party, Mr. Wood has never shirked a duty in connection with its progress and vitality. In 1893 he led the forlorn hope of his party as its candidate for judge of the state supreme court after having made a similar race the year before as a candidate for the United States house of representatives, he being the most prominent man in the party in this portion of the state. He was, however, elected mayor of Rapid City in 1894 and again in 1899, and in 1898 was chosen state's attorney for Pennington county. In this position he has had some remarkable cases to try, and in conducting them has so borne himself that all the opposers have been wary of him. One of the most celebrated cases with which he has been connected was that of the Jacob Reid Heirs v. the Holy Terror Mining Company in 1895, which he conducted to a successful conclusion for his side and received as his fee two-ninths of the stock of the company. In addition to his professional interests Mr. Wood has extensive cattle properties in Wyoming and considerable real estate of value in Rapid City, the latter comprising both business and residence property; and he also has real estate in Seattle, Washington. He is an active member of the Masonic order and stands high in its councils, having served as worshipful master of his lodge at Rapid City and held other offices of importance.

AUGUST C. WITTE, president of the Witte Hardware Company, and one of Aberdeen's prominent citizens, was born in the city of Pein, Hanover, Germany, on July 6, 1857. His parents were August and Anna (Mueller) Witte, both natives of Germany, the former of whom died in 1875. The subject was educated in the public schools and in Hildesheim College, completing the three-years course in the latter and being graduated in 1874. He then became an apprentice in a wholesale hardware store with the purpose of preparing himself for a commercial career. He spent four years in the above establishment, and then entered the German army as a one-year volunteer, being stationed in the city of Hanover. At the end of his term of one year he was commissioned a second lieutenant. In November, 1879, he arrived in America, and proceeding to Faribault, Minnesota, he entered a hardware store, where he was employed for one year. In 1880 he engaged in the same line of business in Faribault, associating himself as a partner with A. W. Mueller, under the firm name as Mueller & Witte. This firm continued in business at Faribault until 1883, when they closed out, in order to give all their attention to their hardware business in Aberdeen which they had previously established in 1881. This co-partnership continued until the death of Mr. Mueller, in 1893, and from that time on until 1902 the subject carried on the business by himself. In the last named year the Witte Hardware Company was organized, the subject taking in his two stepsons as active partners. The company have one of the largest and best equipped hardwere establishments in South Dakota, and do a large and increasing business.

Mr. Witte has been a Republican in politics since coming to America, and during his residence in Aberdeen has been active and prominent in public affairs. In 1885 he was elected to the board of aldermen, and, with the exception of two years, has continued a member of the board, being at the present time a member from the fourth ward. His worth as a faithful city official was recognized by the people in 1902, when he was elected mayor of the city for a term of two years. His administration of the affairs of the office during the term was most satisfactory to all concerned.

Mr. Witte is a member of the Masonic fraternity, in which he has attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, and the honor of K. C. C. H., which was bestowed upon him by the supreme council; he is at the present time commander of Albert Pike Council, No. 4, Knights of Kadosh, in this division of the order. He is also a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he was grand patriarch of South Dakota in 1893, having represented the grand encampment of South Dakota in the sovereign grand lodge for two years.

On April 30, 1895, Mr. Witte married Mrs. Carole W. Mueller, widow of his late partner. Mrs. Witte, by her former marriage, became the mother of three children: Arthur L., Otto E. and Alma. The sons are members of the Witte Hardware Company.

VEST P. SHOUN was born in Johnson county, Tennessee, on July 18, 1837, and received his early education in the place of his nativity, remaining at home until he reached the age of eighteen. In the spring of 1856 he crossed the Missouri into Kansas and Nebraska, a section of the country which was then in the throes of a border war over the question of slavery, and which was therefore an uninviting place to live. Accordingly, in 1857, he joined a party of mining men who were getting up an outfit at Springfield, Missouri, wherewith to cross the plains to California. They were well equipped for the journey and had nine hundred cattle with them. The trip consumed nine months of weary travel, but was otherwise uneventful until the party reached Humboldt river in what is now Nevada, where they had a skirmish with the Indians in which they lost a few of their cattle, but escaped without loss of human life. On reaching California Mr. Shoun left the party and went into Jackson, Amadore county, California, and there passed a year working in the mines. From there he went into Oregon prospecting until 1859, then proceeded to British Columbia where he prospected about five months in the Frazer river country, but with indifferent success. The next year was passed at Salem, Oregon, and in the spring of 1861, having heard of the discovery of gold by a party of prospectors in the Boise Basin, now a part of Idaho, he went to that region among the first of the miners to arrive there, and was at Elk City when the territory was organized. He remained there until 1865 and took an active part in all the exciting incidents of the early history of the section, among them being with Jeff Stanford and other miners when they attacked and killed a number of hostile Indians on Owyhee river in 1862. In 1865 he went to Virginia City, Montana, then a new mining camp. There he secured an outfit and began freighting from that place, Helena, Fort Benton and other points in Montana to Salt Lake City. In 1868 he joined the workmen on the Union Pacific, which was then built to Green river, and during the next year he worked on that great highway of commerce and travel, at the end of that period taking an outfit into Nevada and from then until 1871 being engaged in freighting through all portions of that state and Arizona. Selling out then he made an extended trip through the West and Southwest to New Orleans, and from there north to Minnesota. Here he did contract work on the construction of the Northern Pacific until the fall of 1873. The love of travel and adventure was still strong with him, and at this time he determined to make another trip to Iowa and thence to New Orleans and Texas and back to Iowa. In March, 1875, he joined a large party comprising one hundred and seventy-six men and two women who outfitted at Sioux City to go into the Black Hills. This was known as the John B. Gordon expedition, Mr. Gordon being its captain. They crossed the Missouri at Sioux City on April 5th, and when they reached a point sixty miles from the Spotted Tail agency and twenty from the present town of Gordon they were taken prisoners by United States troops who burned all their wagons and supplies and conducted the entire party to Fort Randall on the Missouri. There, giving them three days' rations of flour, coffee, and beans, the commander at the fort started them east with orders to never come on the reservation again. Mr. Shoun and half a dozen others remained at the fort and he secured employment with the Platt & Ferriss Freighting Company, with which he remained until September. He then organized an expedition into the Black Hills on his own account, which started from the Spotted Tail agency, and an account of which is given in the historical part of this work. He was one of the first men at Deadwood and helped to organize that town, locating on claim No. 11 there and No. 1 at Black Tail. He opened mines and got them running, then sold his interest. Being an expert marksman, he passed the winter of 1875-6 hunting deer, at which he was very successful, clearing one thousand dollars on the meat and having three hundred and twenty hides to sell in the spring. He then engaged in freighting between Pierre and Sidney at one end and Deadwood and Rapid City at the other, continuing his operations in this line until the completion of the railroad through this region. In 1879 he located on his present ranch on Elk creek about thirty-five miles from Rapid City, on the old Pierre and Deadwood freight trail, taking up the land while he was yet engaged in freighting; and from the time when he settled there until his freighting operations ceased he conducted a road ranch. Since then he has devoted his entire time to raising stock of high grade. He has a large body of land and his ranch is one of the finest on Elk creek.

SILAS E. MORRIS, one of the representative bankers of the state and president of the city council of Redfield, Spink county, was born in Mount Carroll, Carroll county, Illinois, on the 27th of November, 1861, and is a son of Joseph P. and Jemima (Barrett) Morris, both of whom were born in Ohio, whence they removed to Illinois in an early day, the lineage on the paternal side being of Welsh extraction and on the maternal of English.

The subject of this sketch was reared in his native state, and after completing the curriculum of the public schools he entered the Northern Illinois College, at Fulton, in which institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1882. In 1884 he engaged in the clothing business at Darlington, Wisconsin, where he remained until 1886, when he came to South Dakota and became cashier of the First National Bank of Doland, Spink county, of which he became president in 1888, since which time he has been incumbent of this executive office, while he is also president of the Merchants' Bank, of Redfield, and of banking houses at Faulkton, Faulk county, and Frankfort, Spink county. He took up his residence in Redfield in 1895 and has ever since been prominently identified with its business and civic affairs. In politics he is a stalwart advocate of the principles and policies for which the Republican party stands sponsor, and though he has never sought official preferment he has been called upon to serve in various local positions of public trust, while he has been a delegate to state and other conventions of his party, in whose success he maintains a lively interest. He was a member of the board of education of Redfield for several years, and has been a valued member of the city council, of which he was elected president in 1902, since which time he has presided with ability and discrimination as the chief executive of the municipal government. In a fraternal way we find him identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Modern Woodmen of America. He and his wife are influential and zealous members of the First Methodist Episcopal church of Redfield, of which he has been steward for the past nine years, while in 1900 he served as delegate to the general conference of the church held in the city of Chicago, being one of the lay representatives of the state of South Dakota. He is also a member of the board of trustees of Dakota University, at Mitchell, this institution being conducted under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal church, and for the past eight years he has rendered most effective service as superintendent of the Sunday school of his home church.

On the 22d of May, 1884, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Morris to Miss Estella May Hall, who was born in the city of Dixon, Illinois, in the year 1863, being a daughter of Warren and Catherine Hall, well-known residents of that place. The names of the four children of Mr. and Mrs. Morris are here entered, with respective ages at the time of this writing, in 1904: Florence, eighteen years; LeRoy, sixteen years; Stanley, twelve years, and Whitney, nine years.

HAVILAH C. JUDSON is a native of Port Washington, Wisconsin, born on September 23, 1853. While he was yet a child his parents moved to Winnebago county in that state, and there he remained until he was about twelve years old and received his early education. The family at this time moved to Houston county, Minnesota, where the son Havilah continued his schooling, assisting between terms on the farm. He remained at home until the fall of 1870, then in company with his brother Lucius came to Vermillion, in this state, where his brother took up land, but he not being of age and therefore not qualified to do so, found employment in various sawmill, being so occupied for a period of four years. In the spring of 1878 he went to Pierre and engaged in freighting between that town and Rapid City and Deadwood in the employ of a large firm. Later he secured outfits of his own and followed this business on his own account, continuing his operations until 1886, when he took up a ranch on Elk creek twenty-seven miles from Rapid City, and settling on the place began a stock industry which he has continued ever since. In 1901 his dwelling was destroyed by fire, and since then he has been living on a ranch which he manages for an eastern company and which is located about eight miles from his own. Mr. Judson has been very successful in the stock business and is regarded as one of the progressive and representative men of this section of the state. He is well known and universally esteemed.

On January 19, 1886, Mr. Judson was married to Miss Lois Oliver at Sturgis. She is a native of Wisconsin. They have two children, Alcega and Mabel. Mr. Judson is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, belonging to the lodge of the order at Sturgis.

BENJAMIN N. OLIVER, postmaster of Viewfield, in Meade county, was born at Berkshire, Franklin county, Vermont, on June 16, 1840. When he was ten years old his parents moved the family to Winnebago county, Wisconsin, where he grew to manhood and was educated. After lumbering in that region a few years, in the fall of 1870 he came to Dakota and settled in Clay county where he took up land and began farming. During the first five years of his residence in that county grasshoppers destroyed all the fruits of his labors; but with characteristic courage and determination he faced the adversity and continued his work, and in time was victorious over every pest and won a substantial success, remaining there twelve years. During the next two years he conducted a hotel at Lodi, but in 1884 he disposed of his interests in that part of the state and moved across the country to the Black Hills, taking with him horses and cattle. He took up a ranch on Elk creek, about twenty-six miles from Rapid City and twenty-eight from the mouth of the creek, on which he settled and again engaged in raising stock. The freight road between Pierre and Rapid City passed his ranch and the traffic over it was enormous. During the first few years after he located on the property he frequently saw as many as two hundred teams pass in a day, and could hear the snap of the bull-whacker's whip at all times of the night. In 1892 he took up a tree claim on the Divide, one mile north of his ranch, and before the year was ended built a dwelling on it which has since then been his home. The next year he erected a storehouse and opened a general store on the ranch which he has carried on ever since; and when a postoffice was established near by he was appointed postmaster, a position he is still holding. In politics he is an ardent Democrat, and was elected a member of the legislature in 1895 and was re-elected in 1897.

On October 29, 1861, Mr. Oliver was married at Fremont, Wisconsin, to Miss Deborah Hickman, a native of Ohio. They have eight children, John B., Lois (Mrs. Judson), Albert, Harlo, Willis, Arthur, Bert and Clarence.

WILLIAM F. BRUELL, of Redfield, one of the representative members of the bar of Spink county, was born in Earlville, La Salle county, Illinois, on the 1st of January, 1872, and is a son of Gustav and Martha (Myers) Bruell, the former of whom was born in Prussia, the family having been members of the German nobility several generations back, but the estates having been confiscated during one of the German wars. He came to America as a young man and in Illinois married his wife, who was born in that state, and it was his to render valiant service to his adopted country as a soldier in the Union army during the war of the Rebellion. He is now one of the extensive farmers and landowners of Spink county, whither he came from Illinois in 1880. He came to what is now South Dakota with very little means, and he and his family endured many hardships and privations in the early years, but they plodded on and finally their industry and integrity were rewarded.

The subject of this review was a lad of eight years at the time of his parents' removal from Illinois to South Dakota, and it was his to experience all the bitter and grinding poverty of the early pioneer life here. The greatest ambition of the subject was to secure an education, but the hot winds blighted the crops and his hopes were deferred for many years, but in time were at least partially realized. From early youth he had an ambition to enter the legal profession, and after a desperate struggle with poverty and the burning of much midnight oil, he finally finished his college course. From the age of twelve to that of sixteen years, he attended school only three months each year, and yet managed to keep pace with the members of his class who attended nine months. While attending college he had the care of fourteen horses, then walked two miles to his school and seldom arrived late, and he found the discipline of value, for it is ever true that adversity has its beneficent uses. After attending the public schools of Redfield Mr. Bruell entered Redfield College, in which he completed a thorough course, being graduated as a member of the class of 1895 and receiving the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy. He has also taken special post-graduate college work in higher English and sociology. He has distinctive and appreciative literary tastes, has accumulated a fine private library and enjoys nothing better than a few quiet hours among his books or in digging among the flowers of his garden. In 1896-7 Mr. Bruell read law in the office of Howard & Walsh, of Redfield, and was admitted to practice before the supreme court in 1897, and a short time afterward to the federal courts. His professional life has been a busy one and one of signal devotion to its work, and today he enjoys one of the best paying practices in his section of the state. He has just completed the erection of a new residence in Redfield, which is one of the most modern and attractive in this section. He is a member of the directorate of one of the leading banks of the town, and has other capitalistic and real-estate interests. He has never held any important political offices, in fact has been too busy to accept candidacy. He has been a staunch supporter of the Republican party from the time of attaining his majority, and he has rendered effective service in the cause, having had charge of several local campaigns, while in the various conventions he is always on hand to further the interests of his friends. He is identified with the Masonic fraternity and several other orders, is a member of the board of trustees of Redfield College and also of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which both he and his wife are valued members. Prior to her marriage Mrs. Bruell had charge of the primary department of the Redfield graded schools and she has always been prominently identified with social, religious and educational affairs in the city.

On the 20th of September, 1900, Mr. Bruell was united in marriage to Miss Carol Riggs, a daughter of Samuel H. and Eliza Riggs, who still reside in this county. Mr. Riggs was one of the early pioneers of this section and was one of the first to advocate irrigation by means of artesian wells.

HARLAN P. PACKARD, executive head of the Merchants' Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and a representative citizen of Redfield, Spink county, was born in Madrid, St. Lawrence county, New York, on the 2d of June, 1845, and is a son of Hiram and Caroline (Dimick) Packard, the former of whom was born in Massachusetts and the latter in Vermont, while both were representative of staunch old Puritan stock. Hiram Packard was a son of Abisha Packard, who was a valiant soldier in the Continental line during the war of the Revolution, and who was a great-grandson of Zaccheus Packard, who landed in North Bridgewater, Massachusetts, in 1638. Zaccheus Packard married Mercy Alden, a granddaughter of Priscilla Alden, whose gentle fame has been so beautifully perpetuated by the great New England bard, Longfellow, in his poem of "Miles Standish."

Mr. Packard completed his educational discipline in the Potsdam Academy, at Potsdam, New York, and in the early part of the year 1864 tendered his services in defense of the Union by enlisting as a member of the Fiftieth New York Engineers, with which he served until the close of the war. He then came to the west and located in Janesville, Minnesota, in 1871, being there engaged in the mercantile business for the ensuing decade, at the expiration of which, in 1881, he came to Redfield, Spink county, South Dakota, where he has ever since maintained his home and where he was for a number of years prominently identified with general merchandising, while since 1895 he has been at the head of the well-known and exceptionally popular and prosperous insurance company mentioned in the initial paragraph of this sketch. He is a stalwart Republican in his political proclivities and has served his county as representative in the state legislature for three terms. He is identified with the Masonic fraternity, the Grand Army of the Republic and the Knights of Pythias, while both he and his wife are communicants of the Protestant Episcopal church.

In 1872 Mr. Packard was united in marriage to Miss Hattie B. Lee, who died within the same year, and in 1874 was solemnized his marriage to Miss Mary E. Wentworth, who was born in Michigan, being a daughter of Virginia Wentworth. Mr. and Mrs. Packard have five children, namely: Harlan C., Frank H., Lillian G., M. Hazel and Clayton W.

MRS. DELIA (HEALY) OWENS was born in Ireland and came to United States when she was a young girl in company with an aunt. After a residence of a few years in Brooklyn, New York, she came west to Denver, Colorado, and there made her home with a cousin until her marriage, on May 16, 1869, to Michael Owens, also a native of Ireland who came to this country in his childhood. They were married at Cheyenne, Wyoming, but lived at Denver until the spring of 1877. While yet a boy Mr. Owens was a mail carrier on the overland route, and after his marriage he engaged in the stock industry. In the spring of 1877 he disposed of his interests in Colorado and moved to the Black Hills, stopping for a short time at Deadwood and settling later at Central City, where he remained about a year prospecting and mining. In 1878 they moved to Sturgis where he conducted a profitable livery business for more than two years, and in 1881 they came to Elk creek and located the ranch on which Mrs. Owens now lives, which is twenty-five miles from Rapid City. The land was unsurveyed at the time, and after remaining on it long enough to make the necessary improvements they returned to Sturgis, and early in 1882 Mr. Owens was taken ill, and on February 15th he died, his remains being buried in the Catholic cemetery at Rapid City. In June of that year Mrs. Owens moved back to the ranch with her children, and here she has since made her home. She has four children, Margaretta, Thomas, Frances and Mamie (Mrs. Duhamel.) When they moved to the ranch after the death of the father Thomas was but eight years old, and the mother and oldest daughter managed the farming operations. Mrs. Owens bought a small herd of cattle to start with and hired men to do her work while she superintended the business. The place soon showed the vigor and capacity of her management, rising steadily in improvement and value, and her cattle kept increasing in numbers and improving in quality. In the course of time she replaced her first rude dwelling with a comfortable and commodious residence, and in all other respects made her place more homelike and attractive. When her son Thomas reached a proper age he took charge of the property for her, and since then he has remained at home working with her and for their common welfare. The family all belong to the Catholic church and are prominent among its members.

FRANK B. LOCKWOOD, who for more than a decade past has held the office of postmaster at Humboldt, Minnehaha county, is a native of the Empire state of the Union, having been born in the village of Cross River, Westchester county, New York, on the 15th of March, 1839, and being a son of John P. and Jane A. (Barnhart) Lockwood, who passed the closing years of their lives in Huron county, Ohio, the father having been a school teacher by vocation. When the subject was a child of three years his parents removed to Huron county, Ohio, where he was reared to maturity, securing a common-school education and being there engaged in farming at the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion, when he promptly manifested his intrinsic loyalty by tendering his services in the defense of the Union.

In June, 1861, at the age of twenty-two years, he enlisted as a private in Company D, Twenty-fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he proceeded to the front, the command being assigned to the Army of West Virginia. In May, 1862, the entire company was transferred and given the title of Twelfth Ohio Independent Battery of Light Artillery, and under these conditions Mr. Lockwood continued to serve until the close of the war. Among the more notable battles in which he participated may be mentioned the following: Cheat Mountain, West Virginia, Summit of Alleghany Mountain, Cedar Mountain, second Bull Run, Fredericksburg, and numerous other small engagements.

After the close of his long and gallant service as a soldier of the republic Mr. Lockwood returned to Ohio, where he remained a short time and then removed to Rockland, Illinois, where he was engaged in clerking for one year, and thereafter was engaged in the lumber business for intervals of varying length in Minnesota, Wisconsin and Iowa, until 1879, when he came to South Dakota and located as a pioneer in McCook county, taking up a homestead claim and initiating the work of improving the same and bringing it under cultivation. He there continued to reside until 1884, when he removed to the vicinity of Humboldt, Minnehaha county, where he became the owner of a farm of one hundred and sixty acres, in Humboldt township. He here continued to be actively engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1892, when he took up his abode in the village mentioned, and has ever since resided here, a prominent and honored citizen. In January, 1893, he was appointed postmaster at Humboldt, of which office he has ever since been incumbent, while he has served for six years as notary public, and has been township clerk since 1893. He is a man of sterling character and has the high esteem of all who know him. In politics he has given his support to the Republican party from practically the time of its organization to the present, and fraternally he is a member of Jo Hooker Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Sioux Falls.

On Christmas day, 1883, at Salem, South Dakota, Mr. Lockwood was united in marriage to Mrs. Celestia A. (Dodge) Royce, widow of Daniel D. Royce, of Ohio, of which state she is a native, having been born in 1840, in Ashtabula county, and being a daughter of Gilead Dodge. Mr. and Mrs. Lockwood have no children.

JOSEPH P. GALLAGHER, one of the prominent and successful farmers of Humboldt township, Minnehaha county, is a native of the old Keystone state, having been born in Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, on the 2d of March, 1856, and being a son of Michael and Kate (Leonard) Gallagher, both of whom were born in Ireland. This worthy couple continued to reside in Pennsylvania until 1857, when they came west and located in Winona county, Minnesota, where the father of our subject engaged in farming, developing a good farm from the forest wilds. Both he and his wife passed the closing years of their lives in the same place, and they ever commanded the unqualified esteem of all who knew them, having been devoted communicants of the Catholic church, while in politics the father was a staunch and uncompromising Democrat. Of their nine children, seven are living, the subject of this sketch having been the third in order of birth.

Joseph P. Gallagher was an infant in arms at the time of his parents' removal to Minnesota, and there he was reared to maturity on the farm, while his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the common schools of the locality. He there continued to maintain his home until 1878, when, at the age of twenty-two years, he came to what is now the state of South Dakota, locating in Minnehaha county, where, on the 10th of May, of that year, he entered homestead and timber-culture claims in Humboldt township, about one and one-half miles south of the present village of the same name. He began operations in a primitive way, his original dwelling being rudely constructed of lumber, and through energy, perseverance and good management during the long intervening years he has accumulated a valuable property, while his ranch is equipped with the best improvements. He still retains his two original claims, to which he has since added an adjoining half section, so that the area of his landed estate at the present time is six hundred and forty acres, nearly all of which is available for cultivation, yielding large returns for the labor expended. Mr. Gallagher's religious faith is that of the Catholic church, in which he was reared; politically he gives an unwavering allegiance to the Democratic party, and fraternally is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 27th of July, 1885, Mr. Gallagher was united in marriage to Miss Maggie Kelly, who was born and reared in Minnesota, and who was a resident of Minnehaha county at the time of her marriage. Of this union have been born two children, George, who is associated with his father in the management of the home place, and Mamie, who likewise remains beneath the parental roof.

HERBERT D. OAKS, dealer in hardware and farm machinery, Hartford, South Dakota, is native of Olmsted county, Minnesota, born in the town of Viola, on the 21st day of July, 1858. When a youth of twelve he accompanied his parents, D. W. and Loraine (Waite) Oaks, on their removal to South Dakota and during the ensuing nine years lived with them on a farm twelve miles west of Sioux Falls, attending school the meanwhile and assisting his father in developing the latter's land. On attaining his majority, he entered the employ of the Peavey Elevator Company, at Montrose, conducting the business of the company in an able and satisfactory manner and becoming familiar in the meantime with every phase of the grain trade. Resigning the above position in 1883, Mr. Oaks came to Hartford and accepted a clerkship in the mercantile house of John Mundt, continuing to sell goods during the five years following. At the expiration of that time he became a member of the mercantile firm of Shimmech, Oaks & Company, which partnership lasted three years, when Mr. Shimmech disposed of his interest in the business, this change resulting in the organization of the well-known firm of John Mundt & Company, with which the subject was identified until 1897. In the latter year Mr. Oaks severed his connection with the firm and began handling hardware and farm machinery, in which he soon built up an extensive business, being at this time one of the leading dealers in these lines in Hartford. Mr. Oaks carries a large and carefully selected stock of hardware, represents a number of the leading implement firms of the United States, and the steady growth of his establishment in public favor bears evidence to his ability, tact and resourcefulness as a business man. In politics he was originally a Republican, but of recent years he has affiliated with the Bryan wing of the Democratic party, and is now one of its earnest advocates and active supporters in the county of Minnehaha. Mr. Oaks is identified with the Odd Fellows fraternity, and stands high in the local lodge to which he belongs. He was married on March 23, 1883, to Miss Ida G. Marson, of Sioux Falls, and has a family of children whose names are as follows: Mabel, Cliff, Elma, Elsie, Marcene, Loraine, Lelia, Dorothea and Mildred.

WILEY V. LOWE.—We are pleased to make specific mention of the East Sioux Falls granite quarries, of which the firm of Lowe & Handley are the proprietors, the subject of this sketch being the senior member of the firm. They conduct a large and important business, as contractors for the celebrated Sioux Falls granite and make a specialty of paving blocks, building and dimension stone, etc., and are contractors for street paving and architectural work.

Mr. Lowe is a native of the beautiful city of Wheeling, West Virginia, where he was born on the 13th of August, 1865, the family name having been identified with the annals of the southern section of the Union for many years. He is a son of Wiley V. and Margaret (Miller) Lowe, and his father was engaged in farming near Wheeling until 1867, when he removed with his family to Wenona, Marshall county, Illinois, where he engaged in farming until 1873, when he removed to Gaylord, Smith county, Kansas, while about 1879 he located in Creston, Iowa, where he engaged in farming, becoming one of the prominent farmers of that section. He died in 1890, and the mother is now living at Creston, Iowa.

The subject of this sketch was but two years of age at the time of his parents' removal to Illinois, and in the public schools of Wenona he secured his rudimentary educational training, while later he continued to attend the public schools in Kansas and Iowa. At the age of seventeen years Mr. Lowe entered the Northwestern Commercial College at Stanberry, Missouri, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1885, after which he returned to his home, in Creston, Iowa, where he secured a position as bookkeeper in the local office of a mining company, while later he was similarly engaged for a short time at Chariton, that state. In the fall of 1889 he came to East Sioux Falls as bookkeeper for the East Sioux Falls Granite Company, the predecessor of the firm of which he is now a member, and in 1895 he became associated with William Handley in the purchase of the business, organizing at the time the present firm of Lowe & Handley, and having since continued to successfully operate their valuable quarries, while the business has shown a continual increase in scope and importance during the intervening years.

Mr. Lowe gives an unequivocal allegiance to the Republican party, and in 1892 he was appointed postmaster of East Sioux Falls, by Hon. John Wannamaker, who was then postmaster-general, while during the intervening years the subject has continued to fill this office. He has held various local offices, including that of city auditor and member of the board of education, while he is also a notary public. Fraternally he holds membership in Sioux Falls Lodge, No. 262, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in Sioux Falls.

The marriage of Mr. Lowe was solemnized in Stanberry, Missouri, on the 1st of July, 1887, when he was united to Miss Oma I. Shisler, who was born in Stanberry, Missouri, being a daughter of T. J. and Vassie Shisler, who are now residents of Stanberry. Mr. and Mrs. Lowe have two children, Delmer C. and J. Virgil.

EDWIN E. BUCK, a prominent and successful business man of Hartford, Minnehaha county, is a native of the old Empire state of the Union, having been born on the homestead farm, in St. Lawrence county, New York, on the 29th of July, 1866, and being a son of Epaphroditus and Phoebe (Russ) Buck, both of whom are still living and each of whom is ninety years of age at the time of this writing, the father having always followed the vocation of farming and having lived a significantly long and useful life. The subject passed his boyhood days on the home farm and early began to aid in its cultivation, while his educational discipline was somewhat limited, being confined to a few years' attendance in the public schools. He initiated his independent career when a lad of but twelve years, coming west to Wisconsin at that age, in 1878, and there being engaged in work on various farms until 1888, when he came to what is now the state of South Dakota and prepared to gain the fullest measure of success possible by the application of the forces at his command. He took up a homestead claim near Hartford, duly perfecting his title to the property and there engaging in farming about six years, at the expiration of which he took up his residence in Hartford and entered the employ of the J. W. Tuttle Lumber Company, with which he was connected until 1892, when he engaged in the real-estate business, associating himself with I. C. Kingsbury, under the firm name of Buck & Kingsbury. He continued operations in this line for a period of three years and thereafter was variously engaged until 1900, when he became a member of the present firm of Buck, Evans & Company, dealers in hardware, farming implements and machinery, furniture, etc., the owners taking rank among the leading business houses of the town and controlling a large and representative trade. Mr. Buck has "hewed close to the line" and has made every effort count, being known as one of the progressive and public-spirited citizens of Hartford. In politics he was formerly aligned with the Republican party, but the Kansas City platform of the Democracy met with his approval and in 1898 he gave his support to William J. Bryan for the presidency, as did he also in the campaign of 1900. Fraternally he is identified with the local lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On the 25th of March, 1883, Mr. Buck was united in marriage to Miss Millie Thrall, who was born and reared in Wisconsin, and they have two children, Grace and Retta E.

CHARLES FEYDER has been an honored resident of Minnehaha county ever since 1881 and from 1884 to 1902 he was actively identified with the growth and business interests of the town of Hartford, where he still makes his home. Charles Feyder, son of Nicholas and Rosa (Nicholas) Feyder, was born at Port Washington, Wisconsin, on the 2d day of March, 1850, and spent his early life in his native town. He attended the public schools of that place until his seventeenth year, and then left the parental roof to make his own way, his first experience being on the great lakes, which he plied in different capacities during the ten years following. He entered the maritime service in a humble position, but by faithfully discharging his duties was gradually advanced until at the early age of twenty he received a pilot's commission, being one of the youngest men ever intrusted with such an honorable and responsible post. During the greater part of his experience on the lakes Mr. Feyder was in the employ of the Goodrich Transportation Company, which fact attests his ability as a pilot, as none but men of the highest efficiency were intrusted with the guidance of the company's vessels, and when he resigned his position he received from his employers flattering testimonials as to his faithfulness in looking after their interests.

On quitting the lake service, Mr. Feyder returned home and engaged in the grain trade at Port Washington, but after spending about four years there he disposed of the business and in 1881 came to Minnehaha county, South Dakota, and settled on a tree claim in Humboldt township, which had been taken up in his name the year previous. He at once began improving his land and in due time had a considerable part of it in cultivation. A good dwelling and other buildings were erected, fences were put up and it was not long until his place became one of the most beautiful and attractive country homes in the township of Humboldt. Mr. Feyder devoted his attention exclusively to agricultural pursuits and stock raising until the year 1884, when he abandoned rural life and, moving to Hartford, opened a hardware store, which line of business he conducted with encouraging success during the ensuing seven years, disposing of the establishment in 1901. Two years after changing his residence to the town he took charge of the Plavey Grain Elevator, which he managed in connection with the hardware trade, building up an extensive business, buying and shipping grain and continuing the same until 1902, when he turned it over to his son and retired from active life.

Mr. Feyder's business enterprises proved quite successful, and he is now the possessor of a sufficiency of this world's goods to place him in independent circumstances, besides rendering unnecessary any care or anxiety as far as the future is concerned. His career has been characterized by great activity and devotion to duty, and whether laboring for others or looking after his own interests, his industry was untiring, his management able and judicious and his rewards always liberal and certain. A strong Republican and at all times standing for the principles of his party and laboring earnestly for its success, he has persistently refrained from office seeking and leaves to others the honors and emoluments of public position. Mr. Feyder, on January 21, 1875, was happily married, at Port Washington, Wisconsin, to an estimable young lady of that place, by the name of Elizabeth Beck. Five children have been the fruits of this union, viz: Nicholas J., Rose, William, Charles and Theodore.

ALEXANDER MADILL was born in Ogdensburg, St. Lawrence county, New York, on January 29, 1843. He was reared to agricultural pursuits in his native county, attended the public schools at intervals during his minority, and at the age of twenty-three left New York and went to Waupaca county, Wisconsin, where he engaged in the lumber business. After remaining in the latter state until the spring of 1877, Mr. Madill came to South Dakota and during the greater part of the next year and a half devoted his attention to prospecting in the Black Hills, with Deadwood as his headquarters. In the fall of 1878 he went to Custer City and began prospecting on French creek, but the following year changed his location to the site of the present city of Keystone, where he purchased a number of mining claims, which have since increased in value. In 1880, with Dr. Hope, he located the Bullion mine, in which Benjamin Mitchell subsequently acquired an interest, Mr. Madill and the latter gentleman being principal owners of the property at the present time. This mine, which is bonded to eastern capitalists, shows great value and promises, when fully developed, to become one of the largest and richest mining properties in the Black Hills.

In addition to the above, Mr. Madill has located a number of other valuable claims in different parts of the country, several of which he sold at liberal prices, and he was also interested for some time in the Ida Florence mine, a mine of great promise, which he helped promote and develop. Mr. Madill lived at Keystone until the spring of 1891, when he came to Squaw creek and took up his present ranch, five miles from Hermosa, where, in addition to looking after his mining interests, he has since been engaged in farming and stock raising. He has a fine place which is admirably suited to agriculture and grazing, and has spared neither pains nor expense in developing and improving the property and providing his family with the conveniences and comforts and not a few of the luxuries of life. Mr. Madill is one of the progressive men of the Black Hills and manifests commendable zeal in whatever makes for the growth and development of this section of the state. Always a staunch Republican, he persistently refused to accept office from his party until the fall of 1900, when he was induced, much against his will, to consent to run for the legislature. His election followed as a matter of course and he represented the county in a very creditable manner, proving an able and indefatigable worker for the interests of his constituency, and earning an honorable reputation as a law maker. In all that constitutes intelligent and aggressive citizenship, Mr. Madill is easily the peer of any of his contemporaries, and as a kind and obliging neighbor, with the good of his fellow men at heart, he enjoys the esteem and confidence not only of the community in which he resides, but of the people of the county as well. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, at Keystone, and in addition thereto gives his support to all public and private benevolences, being charitable and ever ready to assist the deserving poor wherever they may be found.

On January 20, 1873, Mr. Madill was united in marriage with Miss Emma Kelley, a native of Maine, but at that time living in Waupaca county, Wisconsin, where the ceremony took place. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Madill, namely: George, Gertrude, Roy, Earl and Olive.

CHARLES LEMUEL EAKIN, the owner of a finely improved ranch of sixteen hundred acres, near Blunt, Hughes county, is a native of Illinois, having been born in Indianola, Vermilion county, on the 2d of August, 1865, and being a son of Edmond W. and Ellen M. Eakin. He was afforded the advantages of the excellent public schools of his native state, completing his specific scholastic discipline in the high school at Danville. He continued to reside in Illinois until 1883, when he came to what was then the territory of Dakota, and here he has achieved prosperity and independence and gained prestige as one of the able business men and influential citizens of his home county, where he is held in high esteem by all who know him. In politics

Mr. Eakin is a stalwart adherent of the Republican party, and in a social way he is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Knights of the Macca-bees.

On the 11th of November, 1891, Mr. Eakin was united in marriage to Miss Etta J. Sheldon, who was born in Eyota, Olmsted county, Minnesota, in 1865, and whose death occurred on the 14th of May, 1892. She was a daughter of Porter G. and Caroline Sheldon, who were numbered among the pioneers of Minnesota. On the 8th of July, 1895, the subject consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Lelia Bailey, who was born in Rochester, Illinois, on the 8th of March, 1870, being a daughter of Emory and Lucinda Bailey. Mr. Eakin has three children, one of whom was born of the first marriage, and two of the second, namely: Etta S., Russell L. and Muriel.

PETER LYNUM, the leading contractor and building of Hartford, South Dakota, and the son of Peter and Lena (Jacobson) Lynum, was born in Menominee, Wisconsin, on the 23d day of June, 1876, but grew to maturity in the town of Baldwin, that state, to which place his parents removed when he was a child. After attending the public schools of Baldwin until acquiring a good practical education he turned his attention to mechanical work, for which he early manifested a decided liking, and in due time became an efficient carpenter, which trade he followed at different places in his native state until 1897. In that year he came to South Dakota and, locating at Hartford, worked for other parties until 1901, when he began contracting upon his own responsibility, since which time he has erected many of the finest residences in the city, also a number of business blocks and public edifices, besides doing considerable building in other towns and throughout the country districts. Mr. Lynum is a skilled mechanic and a master of his trade; he has devoted much attention to the study of architecture, is prepared to furnish all kinds of plans and specifications, and in addition thereto makes a specialty of fine cabinet work, in which he is without a rival in the city of his residence. Since engaging in business for himself his advancement has been rapid and at this time he furnishes steady employment to quite a force of skilled workmen, having on hand a number of important contracts which when completed will add greatly to the growth and beauty of the city and surrounding country.

Politically Mr. Lynum has always been steadfast in his allegiance to the Republican party, but he is by no means narrow or illiberal in his opinions. He is a married man, having contracted a matrimonial alliance, on January 1, 1901, with Miss Gail Sarah Scott, of Hartford, South Dakota, daughter of Joseph and Ella (Banton) Scott, the union being blessed with one child, Allen LeRoy.

ALBION THORNE, who maintains his home in the pleasant little city of Hartford, Minnehaha county, is a native of the old Pine Tree state, having been born in Canton, Oxford county, Maine, on the 19th of October, 1836, and being a son of John Owen Thorne, a farmer by vocation, who was born at Lisbon, Maine, in 1804, and who died in Dell Rapids, South Dakota, in 1874. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Hall Billings, was born at Temple, New Hampshire, on the 24th of September, 1810, and died in Sioux Falls, South Dakota, on the 6th of April, 1901, both of these sterling pioneers having been numbered among the earliest permanent settlers in Minnehaha county. Both families were established in New England in the colonial era, and Thomas Thorne, grandfather of our subject, was an active participant in the war of 1812, and a pioneer settler in the state of Maine. Albion Thorne, to whom this sketch is dedicated, completed the curriculum of the common schools in his native county, and thereafter continued his educational discipline in Westbrook Seminary and the Maine State Seminary, now known as Bates College, while in September, 1858, he was matriculated in Tufts College, at Somerville, Massachusetts, where he pursued a classical and scientific course of study.

On the 9th of September, 1862, he enlisted as a member of Company C, Twenty-third Maine Volunteer Infantry, in which he was made first lieutenant, remaining in the service for ten months and then receiving his honorable discharge. Thereafter he was engaged in the mercantile business for one year at Canton, Maine, in the meanwhile taking up the study of law and making such progress that he secured admission to the bar of Oxford county in 1866, and began the practice of his profession after closing out his mercantile interests. In 1864-5 he served as superintendent of schools in his native county, and was also justice of the peace for a time. In 1868 he removed to Waterloo, Iowa, where he held the superintendency of the East Side school from 1869 to 1871, in which latter year he came to the territory of Dakota and located in Dell Rapids, and he was superintendent of schools for Minnehaha county from 1872 to 1874, inclusive, while from 1872 to 1878 he also served as district attorney for the county. From 1881 to 1891 he was secretary of the board of education of Dell Rapids, and thereafter was clerk of the county courts, with residence in Sioux Falls, until 1895. In 1881 he represented his county in the territorial legislature, and he has been otherwise prominent in public and civic affairs, while he has attained precedence as an able lawyer. He has maintained his home in Hartford. In politics Mr. Thorne gave his allegiance to the Democratic party up to the time when the Confederacy fired upon the walls of old Fort Sumter, and thereafter he supported the Republican party until he became convinced that it was bowing down to false gods, and he has since opposed its policies in the upholding of trusts, expansion of territory, etc., while he holds himself aloof from any political affiliation at the present time. On the 7th of September, 1862, Mr. Thorne was initiated in Oriental Star Lodge, No. 21, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Livermore, Maine, and was master of the same in 1868. He became a member of Dell Rapids Lodge, No. 8, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in 1876, and has held all the principal offices, including that of chief patriarch of Occidental Encampment, Patriarchs Militant. He attended the Universalist church and one of its colleges in Maine, and is favorably inclined to the same, but is tolerant in his attitude.

On the 18th of July, 1868, at Canton, Maine, Mr. Thorne was united in marriage to Miss Clara Maria Bolster, of Dixfield, that state, and of their children we here enter the names and respective dates of birth; Bina May, February 19, 1870; Alice Cynthia, July 15, 1873; Mabel Marth, July 7, 1875; Otis Albion, May 1, 1879; Arthur Albion, May 7, 1883; Grace Clara, August 29, 1886; and William Bolster, January 27, 1886

M. A. BUTTERFIELD, attorney and counsellor at law, Montrose, South Dakota, was born April 20, 1847, in Chautauqua county, New York, the son of Orville K. and Nancy J. (Bemus) Butterfield, both natives of the Empire state. When about six years of age he was taken by these parents to Spring Creek, Pennsylvania, at which place he grew to young manhood, receiving the meanwhile a public-school education, and as soon as old enough assisting his father by working at different pursuits. When the great Rebellion war broke out, he was one of the first in his community to tender his services to the government, although but a mere youth at the time, being not quite fourteen years and four months old when he entered the army, and experienced in full the vicissitudes and terrible realities of warfare. Mr. Butterfield enlisted August 7, 1861, in Company I, Eighty-third Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, with which he served until 1864, when he re-enlisted, joining on January 4th of that year the Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry and remaining with the same until honorably discharged, on the 17th day of August, 1865. Shortly after re-enlisting he was promoted quartermaster sergeant and subsequently was made first sergeant of his company, filling the latter office while in the cavalry service. During the four years in which he upheld the honor of the flag in the southland, Mr. Butterfield took part in a number of the most noted campaigns of the war, principally in Virginia, where his command was frequently engaged in battles, which made that state truly historic ground. Among the more important actions in which he participated were the seven days' fight in front of Richmond, second Bull Run, battle of the Wilderness, Sheridan's great raid through the Shenandoah valley, and others, sixteen in all, in each of which he bore himself bravely and gallantly, shirked no responsibility and never hesitated at danger or death, while in the discharge of his duty. He was three times wounded, at Bull Run very severely, and his escape under many trying circumstances was little less than marvelous.

For some time after Lee's surrender Mr. Butterfield served on provost marshal duty, but on leaving the army he returned to Pennsylvania and for a number of years thereafter taught school in that state. Later he took up the study of law and in August, 1880, came to Montrose, South Dakota, where he opened an office and soon won a lucrative practice in the courts of McCook and neighboring counties. Mr. Butterfield's professional experience includes a wide range, and for a number of years his name has appeared in connection with the majority of important cases in the city and county in which he resides, besides commanding a lucrative office business, to say nothing of extensive litigation in other parts of the state and before higher courts. He is well-grounded in the principles of the law, being not only recognized as one of the most successful attorneys of the McCook county bar, but also as one of the most honorable and trustworthy practitioners in his part of the state.

Mr. Butterfield was formerly a Republican, but of recent years he has acted with the Peoples' party and is now one of its leaders in Montrose and McCook county. He served two terms as state's attorney, was at one time superintendent of the public schools of the above county, and his interest in matters educational led him some years ago to accept the secretaryship of the Montrose school board, which position he still holds. He is an enthusiastic member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and has held several important offices in the organizations. He served two years as aid with the rank of captain on the staff of General Free, took an active interest in organizing the Union Veterans' Union of Sioux Falls, and was honored by being made major of John A. Logan Regiment, No. 2, in Sioux Falls. He also served six years as adjutant of the McCook County Veterans' Association, was commander of the same in 1903, and in 1904 was appointed on the Union Veterans' Union department executive committee, with rank as colonel. Mr. Butterfield stands high in military circles, is a loyal friend of the old soldiers and spares no pains in looking after their interests and if necessary spends his means freely for their comfort and support, realizing that the country is under a debt of gratitude to the veterans which it can never sufficiently repay.

Mr. Butterfield, on October 14, 1882, entered the marriage relation with Miss Edith A. Fowler, of Olmsted county, Minnesota, the union being blessed with four children, whose names are as follows: Jennie E., Ethel M., Irl M. and Claude E.

GEORGE W. BLISS, M. D., of Valley Springs, was born in Cambria, Columbia county, Wisconsin, March 27, 1868. He is the son of John and Emma (Hodkinson) Bliss and at the age of twelve years accompanied these parents to South Dakota, where he grew to manhood and received his educational training. After attending the public schools of Minnehaha county until completing the elementary branches, he entered Sioux Falls College, where he pursued his studies until finishing the prescribed course, being graduated with a creditable record in the year 1900. During the ensuing two years he devoted his attention to teaching, spending one year as principal of the East Sioux Falls schools, and at the expiration of that time took up the study of medicine, which he had formerly decided upon as his life work. After his usual course of preliminary reading, he entered the medical department of the Minneapolis University, where he was graduated in 1895, immediately following which he served six months in the hospitals at that place, and then located at Valley Springs,

South Dakota, where he in due time built up the large and lucrative practice which he still commands. Dr. Bliss easily ranks with the leading men of his profession in South Dakota and his professional services both as a physician and surgeon have gained him a reputation far beyond the limits of the field to which his practice is principally confined. He is a member of the Sioux Valley Medical Association, the American Medical Association and other societies for the advancement of professional knowledge and efficiency, and takes an active interest in the deliberations of these bodies.

While making every other consideration subordinate to his professional duties, the Doctor is a public-spirited citizen, and as such has been interested in various enterprises, notable among which is the local telephone system, organized in the year 1902. He was one of the chief promoters of the company, invested considerable of his means and devoted much of his time to make it a success, and as president he has managed its affairs in a safe and business-like manner, making it one of the best local systems in the state. Being an educated man and appreciating the value of knowledge, he has been untiring in his efforts to promote the cause of education in Valley Springs, and as president of the board of education he has been instrumental in advancing the interests of the schools of the city until they now compare favorably with those in any other part of the state. In addition to the official relations already referred to, he is treasurer of the Inter-state Ginseng Association, which is now attracting attention throughout the country. They are the largest growers in the northwest and are meeting with the greatest encouragement.

Doctor Bliss has been a consistent member of the Democratic party ever since old enough to exercise the rights and privileges of citizenship, and since locating at Valley Springs his influence has been felt in political circles as an organizer and successful campaigner.

The Doctor, on March 24, 1897, was happily married to Miss Lucy Udell and at this time his home circle includes, besides himself and amiable wife, one child, a daughter by the name of Rowena. Doctor Bliss is a man of strict business principles and his regard for professional courtesy has given him high standing among the leading physicians of the state in which he resides, also with the general public.

VALE P. THIELMAN, who, though now a resident of Iowa, still retains large capitalistic and real-estate interests in South Dakota, is a native of Prussia, where he was born on the 10th of October, 1843, being a son of Peter and Margaret Thielman, who emigrated thence to America in 1846, so that he has passed essentially his entire life in the United States. His parents located in Erie county, New York, where the father turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, and there both passed the remainder of their lives. Peter Thielman passed away at the age of sixty-five years, while his devoted wife lived to attain the age of seventy-three years. The early educational advantages of the subject were limited in scope to six months and he early learned to know what is implied in the term hard work. He attended the common schools of his home county as opportunity offered and has effectually supplemented this meager discipline by that gained in the practical school of a busy and useful life. In 1861, at the age of seventeen years, Mr. Thielman tendered his services in defense of the Union, enlisting as a private in Company H, Third New York Volunteer Infantry, and with this command he participated in many hotly contested battles. He received a wound in the second battle of Bull Run and also in the memorable battle of Gettysburg. At the expiration of his three years term of enlistment he received an honorable discharge, and in November, 1864, re-enlisted, becoming a member of Company D, One Hundred and Forty-seventh Illinois Infantry, with which he served until the close of the war, being first lieutenant of his company at the time of receiving his discharge, while his record was that of a valiant and loyal son of the republic.

After the close of the war Mr. Thielman located in Crawford county, Wisconsin, in which state he continued to be identified with agricultural pursuits until the first of June, 1867, when he took up his residence in what is now the state of South Dakota, residing in Todd county until 1869, when he came to what is now Turner county, being one of its earliest settlers and having been intimately concerned in its development and upbuilding, and also with the founding of the town of Parker, the thriving county seat. In 1870 he started the first set of abstracts of titles in this county and in connection with his abstract business also began dealing in real estate and extended financial loans. In these lines of enterprise he successfully continued until 1895, when he disposed of his interests to the firm of W. R. Wood & Company, who still continue the business, having at the present time the only complete set of abstracts in the county. Mr. Thielman has ever been arrayed as an uncompromising advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party and has been active in the promotion of its cause, both under the territorial and state regimes. The confidence and esteem reposed in him by the people of Turner county has been manifested in no uncertain way, as is evident when we advert to the various official positions in which he has been called upon to serve. He was the second register of deeds of the county, served as county clerk for a period of eight years; was clerk of the district court for fifteen and one-half years; and has also held the offices of secretary of the board of immigration, chairman of the first board of county commissioners, deputy county treasurer, member of the legislature, postmaster at Swan Lake, mayor of Parker, etc., while further distinction came to him in being chosen as the first state senator from Turner county. He has maintained his home in LeMars, Iowa, since 1899, but passes a considerable portion of his time in travel. He has not lost interest in Turner county and its people and still retains large real-estate interests here. Fraternally Mr. Thielman is identified with the Grand Army of the Republic, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He has a host of friends in Turner county and all will read with satisfaction this brief review of his career. On the 11th of October, 1873, Mr. Thielman was united in marriage to Miss Sarah J. Black, who was born and reared in Jo Daviess county, Illinois, being a daughter of Daniel and Maria Black. Of this union no children have been born, but Mr. and Mrs. Thielman adopted a daughter, Nora M., whom they reared from infancy, and who is now the wife of Professor Morris H. Leitner, principal of the Morningside schools of Sioux City, Iowa.

THOMAS W. LANE, one of the popular citizens and prominent and successful farmers and stock growers of Jerauld county, is a native of the state of Illinois, having been born in the city of Freeport, Stephenson county, on the 16th of May, 1857, and being a son of Thomas and Bridget Lane, the former of whom was born in England and the latter in Ireland. His father was for many years engaged in the grocery business in Freeport, he being now deceased. The wife is now living in Chicago, being about eighty-five years old. The subject of this sketch attended the public schools of his native city until he was thirteen years of age. He began to shift for himself when nine years old, working on a farm until thirteen years old, when he secured a position as brakeman on the Western Union Railroad, out of Freeport. He came to the territory of Dakota as conductor on a construction train on the Iowa & Dakota division of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, in 1879, and was conductor on the first regular train with the coaches out of Mitchell, in May, 1880. He was identified with the line until the road reached Woonsocket, in May, 1883, and then conducted trains from Sanborn, Iowa, to Chamberlain, South Dakota, until 1886, when he went to Minneapolis, Minnesota, and followed the same occupation until 1892. Then, on account of his wife's ill health, he went to his present ranch which land he secured from the government. Here he has ever since maintained his home, while he has purchased additional land and now has a finely improved ranch of twenty-six hundred acres, where he devotes his attention principally to the raising of high-grade live stock, conducting operations on an extensive scale and being one of the leading citizens of the county.

Mr. Lane is a staunch Republican in his political proclivities and has been an active worker in its cause, while in 1902 he served with marked acceptability as a member of the state senate from the nineteenth senatorial and sixteenth representative district; he has been incumbent of various township offices, in some one of which he has served ever since coming to the state. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, in which he passed the commandery degrees in 1881, being now identified with Crusade Commandery, No. 39, at Cherokee, Iowa, and to the Shrine at Sioux Falls, South Dakota, while he is also affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Order of Railway Conductors. He and his wife are members of the Baptist church.

On the 14th of October, 1880, Mr. Lane was united in marriage, at La Crosse, Wisconsin, to Miss Lina A. Harrington, who was born in Cambria, Columbia county, that state, being a daughter of James A. and Charlotte J. Harrington. Mr. and Mrs. Lane have no children.

The town of Lane, in this county, was named in honor of the subject, who lived here sixteen years. He owns a half interest in a section of land adjoining Grove Valley and a fourth interest in the quarter section on which the town is located.

MARION LEONIDAS FOX, who was the organizer of the Security Trust Company, of Sioux Falls, and who has been its secretary and manager from the time of inception, is one of the able newspaper men of the state, having been prominently identified with several enterprises of this line in South Dakota. He is a native of Buncombe county, North Carolina, where he was born on the 25th of October, 1865, being a son of John Jacob and Elizabeth (Roberts) Fox, native of North Carolina and both of whom are dead, the former having been for many years engaged in agriculture and having served in the senate of North Carolina from 1884 to 1888. After completing the curriculum of the public schools the subject entered Greenville and Tusculum College, at Tusculum, Tennessee, where he completed the scientific course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1889. Thereafter he was identified with the newspaper business in Asheville, North Carolina, until he was appointed to a clerkship in the department of the interior in the national capital. He retained this incumbency until 1893, when he resigned to accept a position on the staff of the Washington News, then recently established, and he afterward held a reportorial position in Washington with the United Press Association, and later was employed on the Washington Post. In 1895 Mr. Fox came to South Dakota and became editor of the Sioux Falls Daily Press in the fall of the following year. He retained this position until August, 1898, when he accepted the editorial charge of the Deadwood Independent. In 1900 he again became editor of the Sioux Falls Press and continued in tenure of the position until the paper was sold to its present proprietors, the firm of Dotson & Bowen. In January, 1901, he organized the Security Trust Company, of Sioux Falls, for the purchase and sale of cheap lands, and since that time has been actively and successfully identified with the real-estate business, the company mentioned controlling extensive and valuable landed interests in various sections of the state. He is a Democrat in politics, a member of the Masonic order and is identified with the Presbyterian church.

On the 7th of June, 1900, Mr. Fox was united in marriage to Miss Jessamine Lee, the only child of Governor Andrew E. Lee, of South Dakota.

HON. EBEN WEVER MARTIN, one of the representative lawyers of South Dakota, maintaining his residence in the city of Deadwood, is a native of Maquoketa, Jackson county, Iowa, where he was born on the 12th of April, 1855, being a son of James W. and Lois Hyde (Wever) Martin, the former of whom was born in Vermont and the latter in the state of New York. The father of the subject was numbered among the pioneers of the Hawkeye state and was prominently identified with its industrial and commercial development, while during the war of the Rebellion he rendered valiant service in defense of the Union, being captain of Company I, Twenty-fourth Iowa Volunteer Infantry. His grandfather, John Martin, was a soldier under General Washington in the war of the Revolution. The agnatic ancestry traces back to staunch Scotch-Irish stock, while the maternal genealogy is of English derivation.

Eben W. Martin received his early educational discipline in the public schools of his native town, and after completing a course in the high school in Mount Pleasant, Iowa, he went to the city of St. Louis, where he was employed as bookkeeper for four years. He then entered Cornell College, at Mount Vernon, Iowa, where he completed the classical course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1879, while in 1882 his alma mater conferred upon him the degree of Master of Arts. He had in the meanwhile determined to adopt the profession of law as his vocation in life and with this end in view was matriculated in the law department of the Michigan State University, at Ann Arbor, where he continued his technical studies during the years 1879-80. In March of the latter year he was admitted to the bar of the state of Iowa and in August established himself in Deadwood, Dakota territory, and entered upon the active practice of his profession. His ability and his devotion to his work soon gained him marked prestige and he stands today in the front rank of the active law practitioners of the state, while he has taken an active part in public and civic affairs and is one of the honored citizens of Deadwood. He has ever given a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, and in 1884-5 served as a member of the territorial legislature. He was for several years a member of the board of trustees of South Dakota State Normal School at Spearfish, and for three terms rendered effective service as president of the board of education of his home city. In 1900 Mr. Martin was elected to represent his district in the halls of congress, where his record has been a most creditable one, as may be inferred from the fact that he was chosen as his own successor in the election of November, 1902, and nominated again by acclamation in 1904. Mr. Martin has been signally loyal to the state of his adoption and has manifested an abiding faith in its future, while he has accumulated financial and real-estate interests of importance in Lawrence, Pennington, Custer and Fall River counties. Fraternally he is identified with the Sons of the American Revolution and the Iowa Commandery of the Loyal Legion. Cornell College conferred upon Mr. Martin the degree of Doctor of Laws in June, 1904. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

At Cedar Falls, Iowa, on the 13th of June, 1883, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Martin to Miss Jessie Arvilla Miner, who was born in the same city, being a daughter of George N. and Artemisia G. Miner, who were residents of Cedar Falls at the time of her marriage but who later took up their abode in Hot Springs, South Dakota. Following are the names of the children of the subject, together with respective dates of birth: George M., January 14, 1885; Lois W., January 31, 1887; Paul E., December 28, 1889; Charles E., October 21, 1892, and Jessie A., May 26, 1896.

RICHARD OLSEN RICHARDS, one of the representative citizens of Huron, Beadle county, was born in Sandefjord, Norway, on the 2d of January, 1866, and is a son of Richard Martin and Maren Sebille, his surname being derived from the Christian name of his father, according to the Norseland custom. Richard Martin was a prominent shipbuilder and vessel owner, the family having been long identified with maritime interests in the same line,—in fact, for as many generations as the history is authentically traced. The family has resided for generations at Sandefjord and on landed estates in that vicinity; the names of some of these estates where its ancestors have been established during the various generations for several centuries are Kamfjord, Gogstad, Bogen and Stanum, their ship-building yards having been located on the estates of Kamfjord and Bogen. The subject was educated in an excellent private school in Sandefjord, and was graduated in 1880, after which he became clerk in the establishment of his uncle, Richard Andersen, who conducted a ship-chandler's store and export lumber business in Sandefjord. Shortly afterward he went to London, England, whence he came to America, landing at New York city in May, 1881, where he secured employment as interpreter at Castle Garden for the State Steamship Company, and later accepted a clerical position in the company's office, at 53 Broadway, where he remained until 1883, in November of which year he came to the west and identified himself with South Dakota. He was engaged in common labor during the spring and summer of 1884 and then secured a position as bookkeeper in the banking house of Ormsby, Clute & Company, at Mitchell, retaining this incumbency until the summer of 1885, when he was tendered and accepted the position of farm examiner of loans for the American Investment Company, of Emmetsburg, Iowa, later becoming manager of its extensive business in South Dakota, where its farm loans reached the notable aggregate of approximately three millions of dollars. Mr. Richards was thus engaged until November, 1888, when he organized the National Land and Trust Company, of Huron, and later effected the merging of the same into the Consolidated Land and Irrigation Company and finally into the Richards Trust Company, of Huron, of which he has since been president. The company is capitalized for one hundred thousand dollars and conducts a general brokerage business in connection with its functions in the making of loans upon approved real-estate securities and in the handling of trust funds, etc., the concern being one of the important and solid financial institutions of the state and controlling a large business. The Consolidated Land and Irrigation Company, of which Mr. Richards was the organizer, as already noted, had under its care and exclusive management seven thousand farms in South Dakota at one time, and all of these were located east of the Missouri river and taken in on farm mortgages by eighteen different non-resident mortgage-lending companies during the long prevailing drouth and financial depression from 1888 to 1896. The Consolidated Company, of which Mr. Richards was president and manager, succeeded in merging the management of the landed interests of all these non-resident companies in South Dakota and held the same until 1896, when finally all of these companies failed, there being no sale for the land acquired and a general scarcity of money, which made it impossible for them to meet the interest on their debenture bonds and guaranteed mortgages. Mr. Richards has proved his powers of organization in a significant way, and is typically persistent and determined in carrying forward to success any enterprise with which he identifies himself, while his course is always straightforward and marked by integrity of purpose, so that he commands at all times the confidence, respect and esteem of those with whom he comes in contact, while he is essentially progressive and public-spirited. He has always exercised his franchise in support of the principles and policies of the Republican party save in 1896, when he cast his ballot for William J. Bryan for president. His religious faith is that of the Lutheran church, in which he was reared, and in 1892 he became fraternally identified with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in Sioux Falls.

At Hudson, Wisconsin, on the 8th of January, 1891, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Richards to Miss Grace May Durell, who was born in Laconia, New Hampshire, of stanch old colonial ancestry. Her paternal great-great-grandfather was Eliphalet Durell, a French Huguenot, who fled from his native land to America to escape the religious persecutions entailed by the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, in 1685, settling in historic old Salem, Massachusetts. Anna (Weed) Hutchinson, the maternal grandmother of Mrs. Richards, was a daughter of Levi Hutchinson, who was a member of a New Hampshire regiment during the war of the Revolution, as is shown in the records of that commonwealth as well as in those pertaining to the war. Her mother was a member of the well-known Sargent family of New England. Following are the names of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Richards, the respective dates of birth being entered in connection: Blanche Alma, December 20, 1891; Maren Grace, November 12, 1896; Josephine Helena, August 25, 1898; Thelma Dakota ~~1899~~, August 9, 1900; and Richard Olsen, Jr., February 24, 1903. Durell Bogen Sept 16th 1905.

JOHN H. WILLIAMSON, a member of the state senate, from Lake county, is a native of the old Pine Tree state, having been born in the town of Stark, Somerset county, on the 30th of July, 1859, and being a son of Hon. Henry and Temperance (Boardman) Williamson, both of whom were born and reared in that same county, being scions of prominent old families of New England. The paternal grandfather of the subject was Rev. Stephen Williamson, who was born in Siasconset, Nantucket county, Massachusetts, and was a clergyman of the Freewill Baptist church and was long active in the work of the ministry. The original progenitors of the family in America came hither from England in the colonial days, and the great-grandfather of the Senator was a valiant soldier in the Continental line during the war of the Revolution, while the Rev. Stephen Williamson was in active service during the war of 1812, in which he was an officer. Patriotism and loyalty have been distinctive traits in the several generations, and the father of the subject was a stanch abolitionist in the crucial epoch culminating in the war of the Rebellion. He was physically disqualified for active service in the field but took a prominent part in recruiting work and in sustaining those who went to the front. He was a farmer by vocation, owning and operating a large homestead in his native county, where he was held in the highest esteem and confidence. He was graduated in Hamilton College, at Clinton, New York, as a member of the class of 1847. He was a member of the state senate of Maine and also of the lower house of the legislature, was chairman of the board of selectmen of his county for fifteen years, while he served for four years as county judge and for a time as a member of the governor's council, all of which preferments indicate the influential position which was his. He was twice married, the two children of the first union being John H., the immediate subject of this review, and Horace B., who died April 10, 1900, at Madison, South Dakota. The honored father died in 1892, at the advanced age of seventy-five years.

John H. Williamson received his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools of Stark, Maine, and then entered the Eaton School, at Norridgewock, Maine, and later the Maine Central Institute, at Pittsfield, where he completed his preparatory collegiate work, being graduated in the institution as a member of the class of 1882. He was shortly afterward matriculated in Bates College, at Lewiston, Maine, where he completed the classical course and was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, in 1886, with special honors in mathematics. In October of the same year he came to South Dakota and took up his abode in Madison, where he entered the law office of Judge William E. Howe, under whose direction he prosecuted his technical study of the law for one year, at the expiration of which he entered the law department of the University of Wisconsin, at Madison, where he took up the work in both the junior and senior classes, this being the first attempt of the sort made by any student in that celebrated institution, being graduated as a member of the class of 1888 and receiving the degree of Bachelor of Laws and being simultaneously admitted to the bar of Wisconsin by the supreme court of the state. He then went to Anoka, Minnesota, where he was for six months associated in practice with George Wyman, and at the expiration of the period noted he returned to Madison, South Dakota, where he has ever since been actively and prominently identified with the work of his profession. He served two years as police or city justice, and in 1892 was elected to the bench of the county court, retaining the office four years. In 1900 he was elected to the state senate, of which he was an active working member during the ensuing general assembly, while he was chosen as his own successor in the election of November, 1902. He is a stalwart advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and a voucher of his ability and personal popularity was that offered at the time of his first election to the senate, since he was the first Republican to have secured this preferment in the district for a decade. He was one of the organizers of the Lake Madison Chautauqua Association, of which he was the first president, holding this office eight consecutive years, and being at the present time a member of the directorate of the organization. He is vice-president of the Madison State Bank and is the owner of residence property in the town of Madison. The Senator is identified with the Masonic fraternity, the Knights of Pythias, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Modern Woodmen of America. He has taken a specially active interest in the State Normal School, in Madison, and both in the senate and in a private way has done much to foster the same. It should also be noted in the connection that during the general assembly of the legislature of 1902 he received the special honor of being elected president pro tem. of the senate, his intimate knowledge of parliamentary rules making him a specially capable presiding officer.

On the 9th of June, 1891, Senator Williamson was united in marriage to Miss Stella L. Storms, daughter of Elisha C. and Mary (Tuttle) Storms, of Anoka, Minnesota, while she was born in Waukesha county, Wisconsin. Of this union have been born four children: Lura M., Henry S., Frank E. and J. Horace.

WILLIAM WALLACE GIRTON, secretary of the State Normal School, at Madison, was born in Lincolnshire, England, on the 10th of April, 1850, being a son of John and Mary (Hubbard) Girtton, both of whom were likewise born in England, of stanch old English lineage. The father of the subject there devoted his attention to farming until 1850, when he came with his family to America, locating in Florence, Michigan, where he engaged in farming, and in that state he passed the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1851, while his wife moved to Wisconsin with her two orphan boys, both of whom are living, the subject of this sketch being the younger in order of birth. The mother died at the home of her eldest son in Winchester, Tennessee, November 3, 1893, at the age of seventy-one years.

William W. Girton received his rudimentary education in the public schools of Wisconsin, attending the district schools of Sauk county during the winter terms until he had attained the age of eighteen years, when, in 1868, he entered an academy at Spring Green, that state, where he continued his studies for two terms, while during the winter of 1869 he was a student in the academy at Sextonville, Wisconsin. That he had duly profited by the advantages thus afforded him is evident when we revert to the fact that in the fall of 1870 he initiated his career as a teacher, having charge of a district school near Reedsburg, Sauk county, and being thus employed during the winter of 1870-71. In April, 1871, he entered the State Normal School at Platteville, Wisconsin, where he completed a thorough course, being there graduated in June, 1874. In 1875-6 he was incumbent of the position of principal of the graded schools at Muscoda, Wisconsin, and then went to Vinton, Iowa, where he held the office of assistant superintendent of the State School for the Blind for one year, at the expiration of which he became principal of the public schools at Harlan, that state, where he rendered most effective service until November, 1880, when he entered upon his duties as superintendent of the schools of Shelby county, Iowa, to which office he had been elected to fill a vacancy, while he remained incumbent of the same for four years, proving a most able and discriminating executive and showing great facility in organization and systemization. In 1883 he founded the Shelby County Republican, at Harlan, Iowa, and continued as editor and publisher of the same until 1886, in September of which year he came to South Dakota, having disposed of his newspaper property. In December, 1886, Mr. Girton organized the Vilas Banking Company, at Vilas, Miner county, South Dakota, and was president of the same for the ensuing three years, while he also established the Miner County Farmer, which he conducted simultaneously during the period mentioned. In 1892 he was elected county superintendent of schools for Miner county, in which capacity he served two terms, doing much to forward educational interests in that section of the state. In 1889 he served as deputy territorial auditor, and in the same year was chief clerk of the joint commission which had in charge the settlement of accounts between the new states of North and South Dakota. In 1896 he was elected to the chair of geography and civics in the State Normal School, at Madison, of which office he has since remained incumbent, while he has served as secretary of the institution for the regents of education, during the same time, enjoying the respect and esteem of his confreres and also of the students of the school, while he has here added materially to his prestige as a capable and enthusiastic worker in the field of education. He has been particularly successful and prominent in normal institute work in the state during the past fifteen years, and it may be said without fear of contradiction that he has conducted more teachers' institutes in that period than has any other man in the state, while in the connection he has accomplished a work of unequivocal value and one of which he may justly be proud. In the year 1901-2, in the absence of the president, Mr. Girton was appointed acting president of the State Normal School, which position he filled to the entire satisfaction of the regents. It may be farther noted that he served as chief engrossing clerk of the last territorial legislature, in 1889, and while clerk of the joint commission of North and South Dakota shipped the territorial library, records and other property, having an aggregate weight of nearly sixty tons, down the Missouri river from Bismarck to Pierre, the new capital of South Dakota, while he also made copies of the territorial records for this commonwealth, a work of no little magnitude and difficulty.

In politics Mr. Girtan has ever given a staunch allegiance to the Republican party in the promotion of whose cause he has taken an active interest, while as candidate on its ticket he was elected to the office of county superintendent of schools in Shelby county, Iowa, and later in Miner county, South Dakota. In 1878 he became a member of the First Baptist church at Harlan, Iowa, and holds a letter from the same at the present time. He has advanced to high degree in the Masonic fraternity, of which noble order he is an appreciative member, having reached the Royal Arch degree of the York-rite bodies, while he is now serving his fifth consecutive year as master of Evergreen Lodge, No. 17, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Madison, South Dakota, and he has attained the thirty-second degree in the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, being affiliated with Yankton Consistory, Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret, in the city of Yankton. He also holds membership in Madison Lodge, No. 20, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Howard Lodge, No. 62, Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 1st of August, 1877, Mr. Girtan was united in marriage to Miss Frances Richmond, who was born in Belturbel, County Cavan, Ireland, on the 10th of May, 1851, being a daughter of Francis and Susan (Moore) Richmond, who came to America in 1860 and located in Green county, Wisconsin, where Mrs. Girtan was reared and educated. The subject and his wife have six children, whose names are here entered, with respective dates of birth: Lee Richmond, August 13, 1878; Daisy M., April 8, 1880; Susan M., May 17, 1882; Edith A., January 27, 1884; William T., July 6, 1886, and John F., September 21, 1891.

The State Normal School at Madison was established by act of the territorial legislature in March, 1881, and commenced its work in December, 1883. It is situated on elevated ground in the north part of the city of Madison on a nearly level campus of twenty acres, which has been artistically laid out and set with trees.

The main school building was erected in 1886. It is constructed of red quartzite, obtained at Dell Rapids, South Dakota, and trimmed with white cut stone from La Crosse and with Milwaukee pressed brick. This building is seventy-six by eighty-four feet, four stories in height, the lower one being half basement. It is finished throughout with oak and Georgia pine. It cost thirty-five thousand dollars. It is situated near the center of the campus. The oldest dormitory, called West Hall, situated near the southwest corner of the campus, is a frame brick-veneered building, thirty-six by eighty-six feet, four stories in height and contains rooms for the accommodation of sixty-five students. It is occupied by the young men. This building cost eleven thousand dollars.

East Hall is a four-story, massive structure, built of Sioux Falls stone and trimmed with the same. It is ninety by one hundred and ten feet and was erected in 1900, at a cost of twenty-two thousand dollars. Eighty young women make their home in this building and more than one hundred assemble in the spacious dining room in the basement for meals. The faculty is at present composed of twelve members as follows: W. W. Girtan, acting president, psychology, bookkeeping; J. W. Goff, English, rhetoric, literature; W. H. Dempster, mathematics, physical geography; Cora M. Rawlins, Latin, English grammar; Mirza French, drawing, arithmetic, librarian; Louise A. Wilkinson, elocution, physical culture; Olga B. Forsyth, history, vocal music, elementary algebra; Isabel Larsen, zoology, botany, physiology, general history; Winifred K. Buck, elementary English, geography, civil government; Anna B. Herrig, principal training department, methods; Susan W. Norton, grammar critic; Nellie Collins, primary critic.

RT. REV. THOMAS A. FLYNN, the honored priest in charge of St. Thomas church and parish in Madison, Lake county, is at the present time vicar general of the diocese of Sioux Falls, and also has the distinction of being domestic prelate to the noble head of the church, Pope Pius X.

Father Flynn is a native of Milwaukee county,

Wisconsin, where he was born on the 16th of May, 1854, being a son of John and Sarah (Cavenny) Flynn, both of whom were born and reared in County Mayo, Ireland, whence they came to America more than sixty years ago, being numbered among the pioneers of Milwaukee county, Wisconsin. They located near the present city of Milwaukee, and there passed the remainder of their long and useful lives, the father having been a farmer by vocation, while both were devoted and consistent communicants of the Holy Mother church, which their son is honoring by his earnest and self-abnegating services. They became the parents of four children, two sons and two daughters, all dead except the subject of this sketch.

Father Flynn received his preliminary educational discipline in the common and parochial schools of his native county and hereafter completed his classical course in the Jesuit college in Milwaukee. At the age of eighteen years he entered the Seminary of St. Francis de Sales, near that city, where he prepared himself for holy orders, continuing his theological and philosophical studies in that institution for several years. He early became identified with the missionary work of the church in what is now South Dakota, and at Yankton, this state, was ordained to the priesthood, by the late Bishop Marty, on the 29th of June, 1881, having the distinction of being the first priest ordained in the state. He was forthwith assigned to the missionary parishes in Lake and Moody counties, taking up his permanent abode in Madison, and forthwith entering with vigor and zeal into the labors assigned him. In 1883 he had completed the erection of St. Thomas church, in Madison, having personally organized the parish, and within the present year (1904) he has here completed a new and attractive church edifice, the former having proved inadequate to properly accommodate the enlarged congregation. When he assumed the pastorate here the congregation of his parish was represented by forty families, while at the present time there are more than one hundred and fifty families represented in the parish membership. Father Flynn has not only exercised his sacerdotal functions most earnestly and effectively, infusing spiritual zeal into all parts of the parish work and securing the affectionate regard and hearty co-operation of his flock, but he has also proved a specially able executive and has brought the temporal affairs of his parish into a most prosperous and gratifying condition. In 1900 Father Flynn was appointed vicar general of the diocese, in which capacity he acts for the bishop when the latter is absent from his jurisdiction, and in 1902 he was appointed domestic prelate to the late pope. In 1900 he made a trip to Rome, and in the "eternal city" had the extreme gratification of being granted an audience with Pope Leo, the noble patriarch and gracious head of the church at that time.

CHARLES B. KENNEDY.—Among the names of the honored pioneers of the territory of Dakota and the state of South Dakota there are few that stand forth with more prominence or that are representative of more distinctive public spirit than that which initiates this paragraph. Mr. Kennedy has accomplished much in forwarding the upbuilding of the great commonwealth, is well known throughout the state and is an exemplar of the highest type of citizenship. In a prefatory way we can not do better than to incorporate an appreciative estimate of the man written by one who has known him long and well, the same being an extract from an article published not long since: "There are two things which Hon. Charles B. Kennedy did for Lake county in the early days which will make him prominent while he lives and cause his name to be remembered after death. One was the founding of Madison upon its present site, while the other consists in the aid, both moral and financial, which he gave to the State Normal School, being virtually its organizer. Mr. Kennedy's history is closely linked with that of Lake county, and, as a local paragrapher aptly put it: 'If you want to know about Lake county, look up Kennedy; and if you want Kennedy, just look up Lake county.'"

Charles B. Kennedy comes of stanch old

New England stock and the far distant Pine Tree state figures as the place of his nativity. He was born in Moscow, Somerset county, Maine, on the 28th of March, 1850, being a son of Bartholomew C. and Olivia (Smith) Kennedy, both of whom were born in Maine, the former being of Scotch-Irish extraction and the latter of English lineage. Bartholomew C. Kennedy was a farmer by vocation, and his death occurred in July, 1902, at the age of eighty-three years, while his widow still resides in Madison, South Dakota, having attained the age of eighty-five years, her ancestors having been numbered among the early settlers of Maine. The paternal grandfather of the subject was William Kennedy, who was born in Massachusetts, whence he emigrated to Maine as a young man and there passed the residue of his life.

The subject of this review was reared to the sturdy discipline of the farm and secured his early educational training in the common schools of his native state, supplementing the same by a course in the Maine Central Institute, at Pittsfield, after which he took a partial course in the Maine State College, at Orono, his health becoming so impaired as to render it impossible for him to complete the full course. The self-reliance and ambitious spirit which have been dominant characteristics of the man throughout his life were exemplified in these early days, when he was putting forth every effort to secure an education, depending upon his own resources for the securing of the necessary funds. He worked on farms during the summer months, taught in the country schools during the winter terms and set his hand to such other work as he could secure, and thus he defrayed, unassisted, the expenses of his school and college courses. In 1864 Mr. Kennedy accompanied his parents on their removal to a farm in Herman township, Penobscot county, Maine, the place being a few miles distant from the city of Bangor. After leaving college Mr. Kennedy devoted his attention to teaching school, and when but twenty-one years of age he was elected superintendent of schools of a portion of Penobscot county, while two years later, in 1873, he removed to

Leroy, Minnesota, where he was elected principal of the village schools and appointed deputy superintendent of schools for the county, retaining this dual incumbency one year, at the expiration of which he turned his attention to the real-estate business, with which he has ever since continued to be identified, his operations in the line having eventually become of wide scope and importance. In 1874 Mr. Kennedy established, in Leroy, a weekly newspaper, the Leroy Independent, of which he continued editor and publisher for the ensuing four years, when he sold the property and business.

In March, 1878, Mr. Kennedy came to the territory of Dakota, making his way to Lake county, there being not more than twelve families within its borders at the time. He secured from the government a homestead and a timber claim, aggregating three hundred and twenty acres, and forthwith started a stock farm. Two years later the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company constructed a line across this land and Mr. Kennedy secured thereon the location of a town site, which he duly platted, while the name of Madison was given to the embryo village by its founder. The main street of the present city runs through the center of his original farm, and it is needless to say that the land rapidly appreciated in value with the development and substantial upbuilding of the town. In 1884 Mr. Kennedy was primarily instrumental in effecting the organization of the First National Bank of Madison, of which he was chosen the first president. The following year he established the Kennedy Brothers' Bank, of which he became president, and this institution continued business until 1889, when it was absorbed by a company which was organized and incorporated by Mr. Kennedy, under the title of the Northwestern Loan and Banking Company, of which he was chosen president. This corporation did a large business in the extending of real-estate loans, while the banking departments also represented a flourishing and well-conducted enterprise. In 1891 the subject organized the Madison State Bank and was made its president, and this institution succeeded to the banking business of the company previously mentioned, the undertaking having grown to such an extent as to render it expedient to segregate the two departments. In 1882 Mr. Kennedy engaged in the raising of live stock upon an extensive scale, entering into partnership with Horace B. Williamson, under the firm name of Kennedy & Williamson. The firm had a stock farm of two thousand one hundred and sixty acres in the western part of Lake county, and the enterprise was successfully continued until about 1898, when Mr. Kennedy withdrew from the same, his other capitalistic interests demanding his entire time and attention. In this connection it should be noted that this firm brought the first large band of sheep into the territory of Dakota,—about two thousand head. Mr. Kennedy has shown himself to be an energetic and practical business man and his administrative talent has been brought into evidence in connection with the important and varied enterprises with which he has been identified. He has always been a firm believer in and advocate of the great possibilities and future development of the state of South Dakota, and has become thoroughly familiar with all sections of the commonwealth and with its varied resources, so that his judgment is practically ultimate. As a believer in the broadening effect of travel and its value as a means of recreation and health preservation, Mr. Kennedy has not failed to amply avail himself of the privileges afforded, and with his family has traveled over practically all sections of the Union, as well as through parts of Mexico and the Dominion of Canada.

In politics Mr. Kennedy is known as one of the leaders in the ranks of the Republican party in South Dakota. In November, 1880, he was elected as a representative of Lake county in the territorial legislature, and within the succeeding session introduced and secured the enactment of a bill locating the State Normal School at Madison, while his generosity and public spirit were further shown in his donating to the state the twenty acres of land upon which all the buildings of this excellent and valued institution are located. He was a member and secretary of the board of trustees of this school for a period of eight years and has ever maintained a lively interest in its welfare. From 1880 to 1889 he served as a member of the board of aldermen of Madison,—a term of nine consecutive years,—and during 1891-2 he was mayor of the city, giving a most able and progressive administration of municipal affairs. During the period leading up to the division of the territory of Dakota Mr. Kennedy passed considerable time in the national capital, in the interest of such division and the admission of South Dakota to the Union. Fraternally Mr. Kennedy is identified with the following Masonic bodies: Evergreen Lodge, No. 17, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Cyprus Chapter, No. 26, Royal Arch Masons, at Madison; Cyrene Commandery, No. 2, Knights Templar, at Sioux Falls; Oriental Consistory, No. 1, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, at Yankton; El Riad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Sioux Falls; Madison Chapter, No. 6, Order of the Eastern Star, at Madison, while he also holds membership in Madison Lodge, No. 20, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

At Pittsfield, Maine, on the 21st of May, 1873, Mr. Kennedy was united in marriage to Miss May Ella Williamson, who was born in that state, being a daughter of Hon. Henry Williamson, of Starks, Somerset county, Maine. Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy have two children, C. Leroy, who was born on the 10th of January, 1878, and Dean M., who was born January 3, 1887.

JACOB L. KEHM, one of the representative business men of Harrisburg, Lincoln county, is a native of the state of Illinois and a scion of one of its pioneer families, having been born in Shannon, Carroll county, on the 13th of January, 1864, a son of Jacob and Katherine Kehm, both of whom are still living. The father was engaged in the lumber business in that place until 1892 and is at present a resident of Canton, South Dakota. The subject completed the curriculum of the public schools in his native town, having been graduated in the high school as a member of the class of 1880, after which he took a course in the commercial department of the Northwestern University, at Naperville, Illinois, being graduated in 1882. After leaving school Mr. Kehm initiated his practical business career by entering the employ of the lumbering firm of Kelly, Weeks & Company, at Racine, Wisconsin, with whom he remained about one and one-half years. In 1885 he went to Hastings, Nebraska, where he was engaged in the lumbering trade for several years. In 1892 he came to Harrisburg, South Dakota, where he entered into partnership with L. P. Meinger in the lumber and hardware business, under the title of Meinger & Kehm, the firm being the first merchants in the town, and here they have ever since continued operations in these lines, having built up a prosperous and extensive business and having gained unqualified confidence and esteem in the community.

In politics Mr. Kehm has ever been an uncompromising advocate of the principles of the Republican party, in whose cause he has rendered most effective service. He has manifested no political ambition in a personal way, but in November, 1902, a distinctive mark of the hold which he has upon popular regard and confidence in Lincoln county was given when he was elected a representative in the state legislature, receiving a gratifying majority. Externally he is identified with Hastings Lodge, No. 28, Knights of Pythias, in Hastings, Nebraska.

On the 17th of October, 1888, in his native town of Shannon, Illinois, was consummated the marriage of Mr. Kehm to Miss Lillie McDowell, who was born in Freeport, that state, a daughter of E. R. McDowell, a prominent citizen of that city. Of this union have been born two sons, Harry and Arthur.

RUDOLPH D. JENNINGS, M. D., of Hot Springs, has not only achieved worthy prestige in the line of his profession, but for many years has been prominent in the business circles of his adopted state, being one of the founders and chief promoters of the thriving city in which he now resides. Dr. Jennings was born November 21, 1853, in Fremont, Ohio, and grew to young manhood and received his literary education in Mt. Vernon, Iowa, to which place his parents removed when he was a mere youth. His father being a physician, he early took up the study of medicine and continued to prosecute the same in Mt. Vernon until 1872, when he came to Bismarck, Dakota territory.

Shortly after locating at Bismarck, Dr. Jennings entered the employ of the Puget Sound Land Company, and later was appointed deputy collector of internal revenue, in which capacity he served for a number of years, the meanwhile becoming identified with various enterprises for the development of Dakota and the opening of its resources. After remaining at Bismarck until 1876, he went to the Black Hills, locating first at Crook City, subsequently removing to Deadwood, with the growth and development of which he soon became actively interested. While a resident of Crook City he served as deputy collector of internal revenue for the Black Hills country, and to him also belongs the unique honor of being the first judge before whom a murder case was tried in the city, having been chosen to the position by practically the unanimous voice of the citizens of the place. In addition to his duties as collector, he also dealt quite extensively in real estate and as opportunities afforded continued the study of medicine with the object in view of ultimately making the profession his life work.

Dr. Jennings remained at Deadwood until the year 1881, when he came to the present site of Hot Springs for the purpose of looking over the country, having heard many favorable reports of the locality and of the advantages it possessed for becoming, under judicious management, the center of a thriving populace. Realizing these advantages he at once purchased a squatter right from a "squaw man" and took up a homestead where the city of Hot Springs was afterwards located, taking possession of the same in the summer of 1882. The same year he was instrumental in organizing the Dakota Hot Springs Company, with the object in view of developing this highly avored section and attracting attention to the springs, which already had become widely known for the purity and wonderful curative properties of their waters. Later Fred T. Evans, E. G. Dudley, L. R. Graves and Dr. Stewart, all of Deadwood, took stock in the company and under their joint management the town of Hot Springs was in due time laid out and a number of substantial buildings erected, among them being the Evans Hotel and Bath House, the Mankate House, the Big Plunge, besides several business blocks, and not a few private residences. The city thus founded soon met the high expectations of the proprietors, for it was not long until a thrifty class of people was attracted to the place and within a comparatively brief period Hot Springs not only became a favorite watering place and pleasure resort, but the center of population and the chief trading point for a large area of territory.

Dr. Jennings was untiring in his efforts to promote the varied interests of the town, took an active part in pushing its different enterprises to successful completion and to him more perhaps than to any one individual is due the credit of inducing the Burlington and Elkhorn railroad companies to extend their respective lines to the city. He was an influential factor in the Hot Springs Company as long as it existed, served for several years as its secretary, also as a director, and when it had accomplished its purposes, assisted to wind up its affairs to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Actuated by a laudable desire to finish his medical education and engage in the practice of medicine, Dr. Jennings, in 1885, entered a medical college at Chicago, and after his graduation, two years later, opened an office in Hot Springs, where in due time he built up a large and lucrative professional business. He was medical director of the Hot Springs Company for a period of ten years and his private practice during that time and since assumed large proportions and won for him much more than local reputation as an able physician and skillful surgeon.

Believing in taking advantage of every opportunity to add to his professional knowledge and efficiency, the Doctor, in 1890, went to London, England, where he took special courses under some of the most distinguished medical men of the age, thus by careful study and thorough research fitting himself for the most exacting duties of his chosen calling.

Dr. Jennings has not only been highly successful in his profession, but in business matters his advancement has also been rapid, being at this time one of the largest real-estate holders in Hot Springs, besides owning other valuable property in the city and elsewhere, all of which came to him through legitimate means and superior business management. He is a public-spirited citizen, deeply interested in the development of this thriving city, with the founding and growth of which he has had so much to do, and his influence and material support are also given to all progressive measures for the social, educational and moral advancement of the community. He served five years as a member of the state board of health, during three of which he was its chairman, and his labors in that capacity were productive of great and lasting results to every part of the commonwealth. In politics the Doctor is a Republican, but he has always declined public position, the claims of his profession and his large business interests having more attraction for him than the honors or emoluments of office.

Dr. Jennings is a thirty-second-degree Scottish-rite Mason, also a member of the Mystic Shrine, and is prominent in all branches of the ancient and honorable fraternity to which he belongs. He is also identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Master Workmen of America, Ancient Order of United Workmen and Improved Order of Red Men, in all of which he has not only been an active and influential worker, but an honored official, whose untiring efforts have made the organization realize the objects for which intended.

GABRIEL W. ABELL, who is in charge of the South Dakota business of the extensive investment, banking and real-estate firm of Trevett, Mattis & Abell, of which he is an interested principal and which is one of the oldest and most solid and popular concerns of the sort in the Union, having had its inception in 1861 and having continued business consecutively since that time, with but few changes in the personnel of its principals, is established with headquarters in the city of Huron, Beadle county, while he controls a business extending throughout the entire eastern section of the state. He has at all times most attractive properties listed on his books and special attention is also given to the negotiation of financial loans on farm realty. Mr. Abell is an authority on land values in the northwest and elsewhere and stands as the local head of the firm of which he is a member, while he is known as one of the representative citizens of the state and as one worthy of the confidence and esteem in which he is so uniformly held.

Mr. Abell was born in Harding county, Kentucky, on the 7th of June, 1844, and is a son of Washington and Eleanor (Overall) Abell, who were likewise born and reared in that state, being representatives of old and prominent families of that favored section of the Union. Samuel Abell, the grandfather of the subject, was likewise born in Kentucky. The original American progenitors were three brothers of the name who emigrated hither from Wales in the colonial epoch, and the Kentucky branch of the family has been principally identified with agricultural pursuits during the several generations. The father of the subject followed this vocation and both he and his wife passed their entire lives in Kentucky. They became the parents of ten children, of whom three are living, while two of the number still maintain their home in Kentucky.

Gabriel W. Abell passed his youthful years on the homestead farm and received his educational discipline in the common schools of that section. At the age of seventeen years he removed to central Illinois, locating in Shelbyville, where he eventually engaged in the mercantile business and later in the farm, mortgage and bond business, becoming one of the prominent citizens of that section. There he continued his residence until November 11, 1882, when he came to South Dakota and located in Huron, which has since been his home and base of business operations. He had previously become associated with the real-estate firm of Burnham, Trevett & Mattis, a large concern, with headquarters in Champaign, Illinois, and he came to Dakota territory as the representative of this firm, which already controlled an extensive business in the middle and western states. The firm was established in 1861, as before noted, and at this time stands as one of the oldest banking and farm-loan concerns in the west, while the history of its business has since continued without interruption. On the death of Mr. Burnham, in 1897, the firm name was changed to its present form, and Mr. Abell continued in charge of the South Dakota branch of the business, having greatly expanded the interests of the firm in this section of the Union. He not only has jurisdiction in this state, but from the headquarters in Huron also controlled the business of the firm in a portion of North Dakota and the northern section of Nebraska. The business controlled now runs into the millions, and the subject has gained a high reputation as an executive, having ably and successfully protected the interests of his concern and those of its patrons in this section during the dark days of financial depression from 1893 to 1896, passing through the ordeal with flying colors and gaining new prestige for the old and reliable firm, whose entire history has been one of unqualified business integrity and honor. They own and control a large amount of valuable farming land in the state, as well as in Nebraska and North Dakota, while the Huron headquarters are established in a fine modern building of brick and stone, the same having been erected by the firm for the purpose, while in the structure are found the best of office accommodations for other business concerns and professional men. In politics Mr. Abell is a staunch supporter of the cause of Democracy, and he received the distinction of being nominated for governor of the state on the party ticket in 1902, but declined to make the campaign or to accept the nomination, feeling that his business interests would not permit him to give the requisite time to either the preliminary canvass or to the duties of the office in event of his election. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, in which he has attained the Knights Templar degrees, and is distinctively popular in both business and social circles as well as in the coteries of public men in the state. He and his wife are identified with the regular Baptist church.

On the 22d of September, 1868, Mr. Abell was united in marriage to Miss Louisa Hughey, who was born and reared in Bracken county, Kentucky, being a daughter of Richard J. and Elizabeth (Fallin) Hughey. Of their children we incorporate the following brief record: Clara Elenor is now the wife of John L. Trinchler, of Danville, Illinois; Pearl Louise is the wife of Rev. Marshall F. Montgomery, rector of St. John's church, in Aberdeen, who contributes the interesting chapter on the history of the Protestant Episcopal church to this work, being also chaplain of the First Regiment of the National Guard of the state.

STEPHEN V. JONES, one of the honored pioneer members of the bar of Turner county, was born in the township of Union, Rock county, Wisconsin, and is a son of Ira and Sarah J. (Lemon) Jones, both of whom were born and reared in Ohio. The Jones family came originally from Wales, the progenitors in the new world locating in Pennsylvania prior to the war of the Revolution, in which representatives of the name were active participants, aiding in the securing of the independence of the colonies, while those of later generations showed their patriotism by taking part in the war of 1812, the Mexican war and that of the Rebellion, while members also served in connection with the early Indian wars in Ohio, being contemporaries and companions of Allen Poe and other noted Indian fighters. The Lemon family came from England to Virginia and became prominently identified with the early history of the patrician Old Dominion, where the name stood for loyalty and patriotism, members of the family taking part in the early French and Indian wars and also in the Revolution, one, at least, of the name having been a member of Harry Lee's famous light horse cavalry. The Lemons became numbered among the early pioneers of Ohio, and were associated with Simon Kenton and other celebrated Indian fighters. Representatives of this staunch old stock have been found in every war in which the nation has been involved, from the Revolution up to and including that with Spain.

Immediately after their marriage Ira and Sarah J. Jones removed from Ohio to central Illinois, where they located about 1835, thus becoming pioneers of the state. They later removed to the northern part of the state and then to Rock county, Wisconsin, where they settled upon a pioneer farmstead in 1840, there being but few white settlers in that section at the time, while the Indians were much in evidence. There the honored parents of the subject passed the remainder of their lives, being persons of sterling character and ever commanding the unqualified esteem of all who knew them.

The subject of this review was reared to the sturdy discipline of the home farm, and his early educational training was secured in the public schools and under the direction of private tutors. He early put his scholastic acquirements to practical use by engaging in teaching, through which means and through soliciting for insurance companies he obtained the funds which enabled him to further prosecute his studies. He was ever ready to turn himself to any honest labor which presented and has retained the most wholesome respect for the dignity of honest toil and endeavor. He studied surveying, and for a time followed work along this line, in 1870, 1871 and 1872. He was a member of what was known as the Colorado river exploring expedition, under command of Major J. W. Powell, and in this connection has the distinction of being one of the seven men who have ever gone through the magnificent canons of the Green and Colorado rivers. The trip was made in open boats and was attended with much peril. The party started at Green River Station, in southeastern Wyoming, and after a year and a half left the Colorado river near the southeastern line of Nevada.

Mr. Jones was admitted to the bar of the state of Illinois, after careful preliminary study, and he was for a short time engaged in practice in Wichita, Kansas, coming to the present state of South Dakota, arriving at his present home town of Parker, on the 19th of September, 1883, and having ever since been actively and successfully established in the practice of his profession here. He has served several terms as state's attorney of Turner county, and in 1896 was the Republican candidate for attorney general of the state, but met the defeat which attended the party ticket in general in the state election of that year. He has ever been an uncompromising and ardent advocate of the principles and policies for which the "grand old party" stands sponsor and has been an active worker in its cause. He has been for many years identified with the Masonic fraternity and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, while his two elder sons are likewise Freemasons, his wife a member of the Woman's Relief Corps and the Daughters of Rebekah, and his daughter is affiliated with the Royal Neighbors. Mrs. Jones is a communicant of the Methodist Episcopal church, and all the other members of the family incline toward the faith of the same.

On the 22d of January, 1883, Mr. Jones was united in marriage to Miss Jennie R. Boys, who was born in Stroudsburg, Pennsylvania, being a daughter of Samuel and Catherine (Andre) Boys, who removed to central Illinois when she was young, her educational training having been secured in the public schools of Pennsylvania and Illinois, including a course in the high school at Lacon, latter state, and in Quincy College, Illinois. Concerning the children of Mr. and Mrs. Jones we incorporate the following brief record: Claude L. was graduated in the Parker high school and the Iowa College of Law, at Des Moines. In October, 1897, he was admitted to practice in the supreme court of South Dakota and in May, 1899, to that of Iowa. Since June 1, 1899, he has been associated with his father in practice, under the firm name of Jones & Jones. In November, 1902, he was elected state's attorney of Turner county, just sixteen years after his father's first election to that office, and had the distinction of receiving the largest majority ever given any candidate in the county. Ethel, the only daughter of the subject, is a graduate of the Parker high school and the Northwestern University, at Evanston, Illinois. Carl R. is a graduate of the home high school and the Iowa College of Law, having been admitted to the bar in 1902, and is now engaged in the practice of his profession. Ira A. was graduated in the Parker high school as a member of the class of 1904.

GEORGE W. MILLER, formerly representative of the thirty-third district in the state senate, and one of the honored pioneers and influential citizens of Brown county, is a native of the Wolverine state, having been born on a farm in Montcalm county, Michigan, on the 10th of February, 1852, and being a son of Lester R. and Louisa (Kent) Miller, both of whom were born in the state of New York, while both were scions of stanch old colonial stock, the Millers tracing back to William Miller, who settled at Northampton, Massachusetts, in 1654. Isaac D. Miller, the grandfather of the subject, was one of the pioneers of Michigan, having there taken up his residence when it was still a territory. In 1830 he removed with his family from New York to Michigan and took up his residence in the city of Detroit. Five years later he removed to Oakland county, there giving his attention principally to farming, and having reclaimed his land from the virgin forests. He sold out in 1853 and moved to Montcalm county, where he lived until his death. The father of the subject was born on the 27th of August, 1827, and was thus a mere child at the time of the family removal to Michigan, where he was reared to maturity, being one of ten children. At the age of twenty years he inaugurated his independent career, and in 1850 located in Montcalm county, where he passed the residue of his life, having been one of the prominent farmers and influential citizens of that section of the Peninsular state and having ever held the implicit confidence and esteem of all who knew him until death, which occurred June 10, 1901. His devoted wife also died in that county in October, 1857. By this union there were two children, George W. and Della. Mr. Miller was again married to Sarah L. Cole, to whom three children were given, John C., Agnes S. and Mabel, who died in infancy.

George W. Miller was reared to the sturdy and invigorating discipline of the farm upon which he was born, and completed his specific educational training in the excellent public schools of the city of Greenville, of his native county. He continued to assist in the management of the home farm until 1873, when he engaged in the same line of enterprise on his own responsibility, continuing his residence in Montcalm county until August, 1882, when he came to South Dakota and took up homestead, pre-emption and tree claims in Claremont township, Brown county, a portion of the village of Claremont being located on his pre-emption. He still retains this valuable property, to which he has added from time to time, and, as before stated, he is now the owner of a finely improved farm of seven hundred and twenty acres. He gives his attention to diversified agriculture and to the raising of live stock, making a specialty of sheep growing, usually having an average of eight hundred head, while he also raises high-grade cattle and horses, and has for some time conducted a profitable dairying business. In politics Mr. Miller gives his allegiance to the Republican party, and he has served in various offices of local trust, while in 1889 he was elected to represent his district in the state senate, in which body he made an excellent record, doing all in his power to promote wise and effective legislation and to stand sponsor for his constituency.

On the 21st of December, 1875, Mr. Miller was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Barnes, who was born in Short Tract, New York, being a daughter of Charles and Dr. Cordelia (Dibben) Barnes, both of whom were born in Dorsetshire, England. At the age of fifteen Mr. Barnes determined to seek his fortune in America, and took passage in a sailing vessel, and was three months in crossing the Atlantic. He resided in the state of New York until 1856 and then removed to Montcalm county, Michigan, where he died in November, 1892. Mrs. Barnes was born December 12, 1831, in Deanlane, Dorsetshire, and was the youngest of ten children. She came to America when but fifteen years of age to visit a sister and eventually took up the study of medicine and was admitted to practice, being one of the pioneer women physicians of the Union and thus encountering the opposition and criticism which marked the advent of her sex into the new domain, but she was a woman of superior ability, courage and determination, and eventually won high recognition, having been successfully engaged in the practice of her profession in Montcalm county for thirty years. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have one son, M. Hugh, who was born on the 27th of September, 1880, in Montcalm county, Michigan, and who is now engaged in farming in Brown county. He completed his education in the State Agricultural College, at Brookings, and is one of the popular young men of Brown county. November 25, 1903, he was united in marriage to Miss Maud J. Weaver, who was born in Michigan, and came to South Dakota in 1885, where she has since lived, being a daughter of John R. Weaver, one of the prominent farmers and merchants of Brown county.

JOHN H. BROOKS, the popular and capable proprietor of the Commercial Hotel in Britton, Marshall county, comes of stanch old Quaker stock, the original American ancestors, in both the paternal and maternal lines, having first settled in Vermont, while later they removed to Pennsylvania, where the respective families have resided for several generations. The subject was born in York county, Pennsylvania, on the 11th of June, 1852, and was reared to manhood in the famous old Keystone state of the Union. His father, John Brooks, was born in that state, on the 1st of January, 1812, and there both he and his wife, whose maiden name was Eliza Harry, passed their entire lives, being persons of sterling character and ever commanding uniform respect and esteem. They became the parents of five children, of whom three are living, the subject of this review being the youngest. Mr. Brooks received his educational training in York, the capital of his native county, where he attended the public schools until he had attained the age of eighteen years. In 1870 he went to the city of Baltimore, Maryland, where he learned the machine-moulder's trade, continuing his residence in the "Monument City" until 1875, when he removed to Ogle county, Illinois, where he remained for three years, engaged in farming and also teaching school for a time. He thence went to Wichita, Kansas, where he was engaged in the buying and selling of cattle about three years, making trips to Texas and other points for the purpose of securing stock for shipment. In 1881 he went to Pierce City, Missouri, where he remained until the spring of 1883, when he came to the present state of South Dakota and numbered himself among the pioneers of Marshall county. In May of that year he filed entry on a pre-emption claim in the immediate vicinity of the present village of Newark, being one of the first settlers in that locality and remaining on his claim one year, duly perfecting his title. He also took up a homestead and a tree claim after proving on his original claim, and to the two latter tracts he proved title in 1886. In that year he engaged in the livery and draying business in Newark, successfully continuing operations in the line until 1893, when he was elected sheriff of the county and forthwith removed to Britton, the county seat, in the meanwhile disposing of his business interests in Newark. After the expiration of his official term he engaged in farming and trading, thus continuing until November, 1899, when he purchased the Commercial Hotel, which he has since conducted most successfully, having doubled the capacity of the house and made it modern and attractive in all respects. The building is three stories in height and has forty sleeping rooms, while its appointments are first-class throughout and its cuisine exceptionally excellent. He spares no pains in catering to the wants of his patrons, and is ably seconded by his wife, both being genial and hospitable and having the esteem of all who know them. It may be stated at this point that

Mrs. Brooks also has the distinction of being a pioneer of the county, having been the first woman to permanently settle in Newark township. In politics Mr. Brooks is a stalwart Republican, and has taken an active part in public affairs, though he has not held other important official preferment than that of sheriff, in which capacity he made a most creditable record. He is a member of Benevolent Lodge, No. 98, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

On the 21st of December, 1880, Mr. Brooks was united in marriage to Miss Adella Tarbert, who was born and reared in Maryland, as were also her parents, Andrew and Amelia Tarbert. Mr. and Mrs. Brooks have no children.

RICHARD R. JONES, M. D., who is successfully established in the practice of his profession in Britton, Marshall county, is a native of the Badger state, having been born in Cambria, Columbia county, Wisconsin, on the 19th of September, 1861, and being a son of Hugh R. and Laura (Williams) Jones, both scions of stanch old Welsh stock and both natives of Wales. The father of the Doctor came to America in the 'fifties and took up his residence in Wisconsin. The maternal ancestors of the subject were the first settlers of Cambria, that state, and through their influence others of their countrymen were induced to locate in that locality, the name of the town having been given in honor of the original name of their native land. Hugh R. Jones remained in Wisconsin until the discovery of gold in Colorado, when he joined in the memorable stampede to Pike's Peak. He remained a short time and then returned to Wisconsin, where he devoted his attention to farming until 1890, when he returned to Colorado and has since maintained his home in the city of Denver, having there followed his trade, that of stone-mason, and having been a successful contractor and builder. He and his estimable wife have three children, the Doctor being the eldest.

Dr. Jones passed his boyhood days in his native county and received his early educational discipline in the public schools of Cambria, later supplementing this by a course of study in Downer College, at Fox Lake, that state. In 1885 he was matriculated in that celebrated institution, Rush Medical College, in the city of Chicago, where he completed the prescribed technical course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1888, receiving his degree of Doctor, of Medicine. He began the practice of his profession in his native town, where he remained six months, at the expiration of which he came to South Dakota and took up his residence in Britton, where he has built up a large and representative practice and gained the highest confidence and regard of the people of the community, while he has been in practice here for a longer period than any other physician in the county, while it may be said without fear of contradiction that there are few in the northern part of the state who can lay credit to as many years of continuous practice here as can he. In the early days his labors were of the most arduous and exacting nature, and called for much self-abnegation, devotion and courage, as he was often called to attend those distant from thirty to fifty miles, traversing the prairies in all kinds of weather and sparing himself no effort or personal discomfort in thus ministering to those in affliction. In 1898 the Doctor opened a drug store in Britton, and he has since conducted this enterprise in connection with his active professional work. He is a member of the state medical society and other professional organizations, and is medical examiner for nearly all the leading life-insurance companies doing business in this section of the state, while he is also incumbent of the office of coroner. In politics Dr. Jones is a stanch advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and fraternally he is affiliated with the Masonic order, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and its Degree of Honor; the Daughters of Rebekah, and the Knights of the Maccabees.

On the 21st of November, 1890, was solemnized the marriage of Dr. Jones to Miss Florence Thayer, who was born in the state of New York, and they have three children,—Floyd, Gracene and Marion. A twin brother of the eldest died aged three months.

JAMES MADDEN, of Worthing, who has been a resident of Lincoln county for more than thirty years, was born near Newcastle, Schuylkill county, Pennsylvania, on the 9th of November, 1847, and is a son of Owen and Ellen (Tulley) Madden, both of whom were born in County Galway, Ireland, whence they came to America when young, their marriage having been solemnized at Pottsville, Pennsylvania. They were descended from stanch old Irish stock, identified with the annals of the province of Connaught for many generations. The father of the subject was employed in the mines in Pennsylvania, and met his death as the result of an accident while thus working, our subject being but eighteen months old at the time; while his mother died when he was but nine years of age, so that he was early thrown upon his resources and is to be considered as essentially the architect of his own fortunes. He attended the common schools of Pennsylvania until the death of his mother and later contrived to effectively supplement this training by doing farm work in summer and various chores in winter, during which latter period he had the privilege of attending school, receiving his board in compensation for his services in the line noted. In 1856, wishing to find some other occupation than that which had cost his father his life, he accompanied an unmarried uncle to McHenry county, Illinois, where he worked on a farm for several years, in the meanwhile attending school, as before stated. In 1864 he signalized his patriotism by enlisting in the defense of the Union, becoming a private in Company A, Ninety-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, with which he proceeded to the front, taking part in the battle of Nashville, Tennessee, and the engagement at Spanish Fort, Alabama, which was captured by the Sixteenth Army Corps, on the evening of April 8, 1865. General A. J. Smith commanding the corps. Mr. Madden continued in active service until the close of the war, when he received his honorable discharge and returned to Illinois, where he remained until 1868, when he removed to Steele county, Minnesota, where he was engaged in farm work during the summer of that year and employed in the lumbering woods during the ensuing winter. In the spring of 1869 he returned to Illinois, and with the money saved from his earnings he purchased a team of horses, with which he returned to Minnesota, where he was associated with a friend in farming for one season, disaster attending their enterprise, as their crops were destroyed by a severe hailstorm. Mr. Madden then abandoned agricultural pursuits and passed the winter of 1871-2 in the south, and in the spring of the latter year he came as a pioneer to what is now South Dakota and filed on a homestead claim in Lincoln county, and on this place he has ever since maintained his home, while he has added to his holdings until he now has a valuable and finely improved landed estate of one hundred acres, being part of the town site, continuing to devote his attention to diversified agriculture and to the raising of stock, while for the past twelve years he has also controlled a prosperous business in the buying and shipping of grain. He held for several terms the office of chairman of the official board of Lynn township, and has also been a valued member of the board of trustees of the village of Worthing, which is located on his old homestead. He gave his allegiance to the Republican party until its repudiation of bimetallic monetary system, and since that time he endeavors to support the men and measures which seem most fully American and make for the perpetuation of the principles on which our republic is founded. Fraternally he is an appreciative member of the time-honored Masonic order, with which he has been identified since 1882, having at the time of this writing attained to the thirty-second degree in the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite and being affiliated with Oriental Consistory, No. 1, of the valley of Yankton. He has also been a member of the Grand Army of the Republic since 1885, and takes a deep interest in his old comrades in arms. He is liberal and tolerant in his religious views and recognizes the good accomplished by all denominations. He is straightforward and sincere in all the relations of life, his integrity is beyond question, and thus he has gained a wide circle of loyal friends, and ever holds this friendship inviolable.

On the 12th of December, 1876, at Canton, this county, Mr. Madden was united in marriage to Miss Mary Gerber, a daughter of Frederick and Augustine Gerber, the former of whom was born and reared in Switzerland, while the latter was born in Germany. The following record is entered concerning the children of Mr. and Mrs. Madden, the respective dates of birth being given in the connection: Ernest, December 13, 1877; Cora, May 29, 1882; Maud, May 18, 1885; Frederick, July 2, 1886; Mary Ellen, July 3, 1894; June, October 18, 1896; and Edwin Tulley, September 25, 1903.

LOUIS H. CLYBORNE, one of the representative and highly honored citizens of Herreid, Campbell county, is a native of the state of Illinois, having been born in Cameron, Warren county, on the 5th of October, 1861, and being a son of Archibald and Jennie E. (Leeder) Clyborne, the former of whom is now a resident of the city of Chicago. The original representatives of the Clyborne family in America were numbered among the first settlers of the patrician old state of Virginia, where the family became one of prominence and influence, the lineage of our subject being traced back to William Clyborne, who established his home in the Old Dominion state in the early colonial epoch of our national history. William L. Clyborne, the grandfather of the subject, was one of the early settlers in Cass county, Michigan, in which state Archibald Clyborne was born and reared. In 1860 he removed to Illinois and located near Galesburg, where he continued to reside until 1876, when he removed to the city of Chicago, where he has ever since maintained his home and where he is engaged in the live-stock commission business. Of the four children the subject of this sketch is the eldest.

Mr. Clyborne was reared in Illinois and secured his education in the public schools of Galesburg and Chicago. He continued to reside in Illinois until 1883, when he came to South Dakota, arriving in Aberdeen, Brown county, on the 27th of March. After passing a few months in Aberdeen he removed to Lagrace, Campbell county, in which locality he was engaged in farming and stock growing until 1890, having been very successful in his efforts and having contributed materially to the development of the industrial resources of this attractive section of the state. In the year mentioned he was elected register of deeds of the county, and took up his residence in Mound City, the county seat. He was re-elected in 1892, and thus remained incumbent of this office for four successive years. Upon retiring from office Mr. Clyborne engaged in the real-estate and abstract business in Mound City, and in 1895 formed a partnership with C. E. Eckert, which association has ever since continued. In 1897 they purchased the bank of Campbell & Johnston, in Mound City, which they conducted until 1903, when they moved to Herreid, and on the 1st of May, 1903, they purchased the Herreid State Bank, which they reorganized as the Campbell County State Bank, of which they still remain in control. The bank is capitalized for twenty thousand dollars, has deposits of fifty thousand dollars. The institution is a solid and reliable one, being ably and carefully managed and controlling an excellent business. Mr. Clayborne has extensive real-estate interests in the county, being associated with Mr. Eckert in the ownership of five thousand acres of valuable farming lands, while he is also interested in various manufacturing and industrial enterprises. He has an attractive modern residence in Herreid, and the same is a center of gracious hospitality. In politics the subject accords a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, and fraternally he is identified with Acacia Lodge, No. 108, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. He has been an earnest and zealous factor in church and Sunday school and is one of the prominent and valued members of the Methodist Episcopal church in his home town. He was for thirteen years superintendent of a Sunday school in Mound City.

On the 19th of November, 1889, Mr. Clyborne was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth N. Stuart, who was born in Fillmore county, Minnesota, being a daughter of Charles Stuart, who there continued to reside until his death. Mr. and Mrs. Clyborne have four children, namely: Helen V., Robert A., Gladys Ramona and Mildred Ruth.

D. G. STOKES, one of the leading farmers and stock growers of Marshall county, was born in Wright county, Minnesota, on the 8th of January, 1859, and is a son of Frederick and Mary (Hogue) Stokes, both of whom were born and reared in England. The father of the subject came to America in the early 'fifties and remained for some time in the state of New York, whence he came to the west and settled thirty miles north of the city of Minneapolis, Minnesota, where both he and his wife still reside. They became the parents of twelve children, of whom the subject was the sixth in order of birth.

D. G. Stokes secured his early educational training in the public schools of Minnesota, duly availing himself of the advantages thus afforded and thus laying the foundation for a successful career in connection with the active duties and responsibilities of life. He was identified with the saw milling business in Minnesota until 1888, when he came to the present state of South Dakota, which was admitted to the Union about two years later, and he joined his brother, H. L., at Burch, Marshall county, the latter having located here in 1886. They continued to be associated in the carrying on of a general merchandise business in Burch until 1896, when they removed their stock of goods to Britton, where the enterprise has since been continued and where the firm have built up a large and representative business, having a well-appointed store and carrying a select and comprehensive stock. They are also the owners of sixteen hundred acres of fine farming and grazing land in the county, the homestead ranch being located four miles northwest of Britton. The subject resides on the farm and has direct supervision of its operation, while his brother has charge of the mercantile business and is also president of the Marshall County Bank, in Britton. The ranch is chiefly devoted to the raising of high-grade live stock upon an extensive scale, and on the same is to be found one of the finest herds of registered Galloway cattle in this section of the state. The subject also buys and ships grain upon a large scale, having his headquarters at Burch and controlling an important business in the line. The ranch is supplied with an abundance of pure water, a fine artesian well of six-inch piping having been sunk to a depth of nine hundred and thirty-five feet, and having a flow which affords a twenty-five horse power, said power being utilized in the grinding of feed and also for other purposes.

In his political proclivities Mr. Stokes is an uncompromising advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and he has taken a lively interest in the promotion of its cause, while he has held various county and township offices, and in 1902 was elected to represent his county in the state legislature, where he made an excellent record as a zealous working member of the lower house. He is identified with the Masonic fraternity and also with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which latter he has served as noble grand of his lodge.

On the 28th of November, 1882, Mr. Stokes was united in marriage to Miss Rosamond Eastor, who was born and reared in Minnesota, and they have two sons, Guy L. and Max G.

JAMES SOLBERG, president of the Merchants' Exchange Bank of Lake Preston, is a native of Norway, where his birth occurred on February 17, 1852. His parents, Peter and Georgiana Solberg, also of Norwegian birth, came to America in 1853, and located at Buffalo, New York, moving from there to London, Ontario, and later to Winona, Minnesota, where the father followed his trade of shoemaking until 1876, when he moved to Le Seuer county, Minnesota, and engaged in farming. He departed this life in the latter state, July 2, 1903, leaving to mourn his loss a widow and six children, the former still on the home farm in the county of Le Seuer.

Until thirteen years of age the subject of this review spent the greater part of his life in London, Canada, and received his preliminary education in the schools of that place. He remained with his parents until about the age of twenty-two and then went to Chicago, Illinois, where he spent two years as clerk in a boot and shoe house. Resigning his position at the expiration of the time noted, he went to St. Paul, Minnesota, and during the ensuing two years represented the interests of the Schaffer & Rossum Saddlery Hardware Company, of that city, as a traveling salesman. Severing his connection with this firm, Mr. Solberg embarked in merchandising at Lake Crystal, Minnesota, and after spending nine prosperous years in that town, disposed of his business and in the spring of 1893 came to South Dakota and purchased an interest in the Merchants' Exchange Bank of Lake Preston, with the career of which institution he has since been identified. Mr. Solberg served the bank several years as vice-president, but in 1900 was elected president and in the latter capacity he still continues, filling the position in an able and satisfactory manner and by his energy and progressive business methods adding greatly to the prestige and influence of the institution. As a financier he is familiar with monetary questions, and their relation to commercial and industrial life, and occupies a prominent place among his compeers. In connection with banking he deals quite extensively in real estate, and now owns a large body of fine land in Kingsbury county, also a beautiful residence property in the town of Lake Preston, in addition to his financial interests represented by the bank of which he is chief executive.

On January 16, 1879, Mr. Solberg was united in marriage with Miss Carrie I. Gutterson, of Winona county, Minnesota, the daughter of Egel and Magla Gutterson, natives of Norway, the union being terminated by the death of the loving and faithful wife on the 17th day of March, 1901.

Fraternally Mr. Solberg is a member of the Masonic brotherhood, belonging to the blue lodge at Lake Preston, the chapter at Arlington and the commandery at Brookings. He is also identified with the Eastern Star lodge, of which his wife was a charter member and the first matron, and his name has long adorned the records of the Ancient Order of United Workmen in the place where he resides. In politics he always has been staunchly Republican, and stood firmly by the party during all of its trials, caused by the wave of Populism, which a few years ago spread throughout the entire west.

CHARLES S. WHITING, judge of the circuit court of the ninth judicial circuit of the state, maintaining his residence and professional headquarters in DeSmet, the capital of Kingsbury county, is a native of the state of Minnesota, having been born on a farm in Olmsted county, on the 25th of May, 1863, and being a son of Ammi N. and Mariette (Rice) Whiting, both of whom were born in the state of New York, while their marriage was solemnized in Wisconsin. The father of our subject accompanied his parents on their removal to Wisconsin, about 1850, being a young man at the time, and they settled on a farm in Green county, while later he became identified with mercantile pursuits, in St. Marie, that state. In 1858 he removed to Olmsted county, Minnesota, where he became the owner of a farm upon which he continued to reside until 1902, when he came to DeSmet, South Dakota, where he has since lived practically retired, being seventy-one years of age at the time of this writing, in 1904. His wife died at the time of the birth of the subject of this sketch. After the death of his mother Judge Whiting was taken to the home of his paternal grandparents, Ellis F. and Laura (Rice) Whiting, with whom he remained until he had attained the age of sixteen years, in Rochester, Minnesota, where he completed the curriculum of the public schools, being graduated in the high school as a member of the class of 1879. He then spent three years with his father on the farm, and at the expiration of this period began teaching, to which vocation he continued to devote his attention for the ensuing five years, passing the vacations on the home farm. For three years he was principal of the village school at Elgin and Eyota, Minnesota, and he proved a successful and popular teacher. In 1887 Judge Whiting was matriculated in the law department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, where he continued his studies until 1888, when he entered the law department of the State University in the city of Minneapolis, where he completed his professional course and was graduated as a member of the first class to thus go forth from this now prominent institution, in 1889, there having been but three members in the class. He was admitted to the bar of Minnesota at the time of his graduation, and in July of the same year came to DeSmet, being duly admitted to the bar of South Dakota. When the Judge came to this state his financial resources were at the lowest possible ebb, but he was fortified by a thorough knowledge of the law, by a determination and courage which recognized no such thing as failure, with the logical consequence that he now stands at the present time in the front rank of the members of his profession in this section of the state. In 1892 he was elected state's attorney of Kingsbury county, in which office he served four terms, and an indication of the esteem in which he is held in the county was afforded in the first two elections, for he was the candidate on the Republican ticket and overcame the very considerable majority represented in the combined forces of the Democracy and Populists in the county. In 1897 he was the candidate of his party for the office of circuit judge of the third circuit, but was unable to overcome the large opposing majority in the district, though he carried his own county, being the first Republican candidate to do this in connection with any office aside from those of purely a county order. In March, 1903, he was appointed to the bench of the ninth circuit upon the creation of said circuit, and his term will expire in December, 1904. His circuit comprises the counties of Spink, Beadle, Miner, and Kingsbury, and he is making a most enviable record in his judicial capacity, while there is little doubt he will be chosen as his own successor at the next election, having at the time of this article been unanimously nominated by his party as his own successor. The Judge is a staunch and uncompromising advocate of the principles of the Republican party and has been an active and effective worker in the party cause since coming to the state. Fraternally the subject is affiliated with DeSmet Lodge, No. 58, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and with the encampment of the order at DeSmet, while he is also a member of the Modern Woodmen of America.

On the 4th of November, 1891, Judge Whiting was united in marriage to Miss Mary G. Mitchell, of Dover, Minnesota, she being a daughter of William Mitchell, a prominent citizen of that place. Mrs. Whiting was summoned into eternal rest on the 29th of October, 1897, and was not long survived by her only child, Ruth, who died on the 7th of April, 1899. On the 21st of July, 1900, Judge Whiting consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Eleanor Hilton, who was born in Detroit, Michigan, being a daughter of Thomas and Julia A. Hilton, the former of whom died in 1889, while the latter now resides in the home of the subject. Judge and Mrs. Whiting have one daughter, Mariette, who was born on the 11th of April, 1901, and one son, Fred N., born March 1, 1904.

FRANCIS H. SCHOONMAKER, M. D., of Arlington, was born in Gardner, Illinois, September 24, 1858, being the oldest in a family of four children, whose parents were W. H. and M. E. (Hall) Schoonmaker. The father, a native of New York and of German-English descent, went to Illinois when a young man and engaged in merchandising in the town of Gardner, to which line of business he devoted the greater part of his life. He spent some twelve or fifteen years in Joliet, Illinois, where he also conducted a mercantile establishment and finished his life work in that city, dying about 1891. Mrs. Schoonmaker still makes her home in the above place, and of her four children there are still living Francis H., Charles F. and Lorise M., the deceased member of the family dying in infancy.

Doctor Schoonmaker was reared to manhood in his native state, attended the schools of Gardner and other places until the age of seventeen, spending his vacations the meantime on a farm, where he early learned the lessons of industry, which had so much to do in shaping his future course of life. Having decided to enter the medical profession, he spent one and a half years in preliminary study under the direction of Dr. C. B. Alford, of Odell, Illinois, now of Huron, South Dakota, and in 1884, at the age of twenty-six, entered the Chicago Medical College of Northwestern University, from which he was graduated three years later. In the spring of 1887 Doctor Schoonmaker located in Beloit, Kansas, but not finding a favorable opening at that place, he returned to Illinois in September of the same year and the following December came to Arlington, South Dakota, where he has since been actively engaged in the practice of his profession.

Doctor Schoonmaker, in 1892, entered the marriage relation with Miss Frances A. Searles, of Joliet, Illinois, daughter of M. E. and J. M. Searles, the father for many years a leading grocer of that city, also deputy postmaster. One child has been born to this union, a son who answers to the name of William F.

The Doctor is a member of the Masonic fraternity, belonging to the blue lodge and chapter at Arlington, and the commandery at Brookings. He is also identified with the Ancient Order of United Woodmen, the Woodmen and the Degree of Honor, being at this time grand medical examiner of the first named order. He acts in the capacity of medical examiner for the leading life insurance companies represented in this part of the state, and for some time past has been serving as coroner of Kingsbury county, to which office he was elected by the Republican party. Although a Republican in principle, he generally votes as his judgment dictates, especially in local affairs, where politics should cut but little figure. Mrs. Schoonmaker is a member of the Baptist church of Arlington; she is also a member of the Eastern Star and Degree of Honor. While not subscribing to any creed or statement of faith, the Doctor has a profound regard for religion and the church, being a liberal contributor to the congregation with which his wife is identified.

JOHN BALDRIDGE.—The distinction accorded the subject of this review of being one of the progressive business men and representative citizens of South Dakota has been honorably earned and is cheerfully conceded by all who know him or have come within the range of his influence. Coming west during the formation period of this state and experiencing in full measure the difficulties and hardships incident to pioneer life, he perseveringly pursued his course until in due time he surmounted unfavorable environment and rose from obscurity to the commanding position he now occupies in business circles and the world of affairs. John Baldrige, president of the Farmers and Merchants' Bank of Iroquois, is descended from two old families, one of which originated in Ireland, the other in England. Hervey Baldrige, the subject's father, was a native of Seneca county, New York, and in his veins flowed the blood of a long line of sturdy ancestors. Eliza Wilkinson, the mother, was born and grew to womanhood in Seneca county, Ohio, and traced her lineage in this country to the original "Mayflower" pilgrims, thence to a much remoter period in England, where her family name has been known for generations beyond the memory of man. Hervey was reared in Seneca county, New York, where from the age of twenty-one to twenty-seven he was engaged in teaching, in connection with which calling he also devoted considerable attention to agricultural pursuits, giving particular attention to horticulture. He purchased land in the above county and his farm was for years considered one of the finest grain and fruit farms in western New York. At the age of thirty-five he was united in marriage with Eliza Wilkinson, from which event until his death, in 1897, he lived the life of a prosperous and contented tiller of the soil, his wife departing this life in 1885. They reared a large family of ten children in all, of whom the following survive; John, whose name introduces this sketch; Mrs. Suessa Blaine, of Washington, D. C.; Belle, now Mrs. C. G. Birdsall, also a resident of that city; Raymond W., who lives in Geneva, New York, and Harrison A., whose home is also in the Empire state.

John Baldrige was born November 24, 1862, in Seneca county, New York, spent his childhood and youth on the family homestead, and after attending the district schools until the age of sixteen, entered the Geneva Classical and Union School, an educational institution of high grade, where he pursued his studies for two years, standing at the head of his classes in mathematics and other branches. Later, at the age of nineteen, he successfully passed the state regents' examination and was granted a diploma from the University of the State of New York. In the spring of 1883, at the age of twenty, with his elder brother Willis, he came to Kingsbury county, South Dakota, where the two took up claims, Willis filing on his land at once and John later on when he reached his majority. Willis died November 24, 1884, the result of an accidental fall from a mule which he was riding a few days previous. By a strange coincidence his death occurred on John's birthday and also on the day on which he was to make final proof on his claim. Subsequently his father completed the final proof on the land and afterwards deeded it to John, in accordance with the wish expressed by Willis before his death and the mutual agreement between the two brothers that in case of the death of either the survivor was to receive the other's claim.

The subject experienced, during the first three or four years on his claim, many of the hardships and privations of pioneer life, but in due season he reduced his land to cultivation, made a number of substantial improvements, and on leaving it, in 1891, was in comfortable financial circumstances. Renting his farm that year and changing his abode to Iroquois, he accepted the position of cashier in the Farmers and Merchants' Bank, and continued in that capacity until January 1, 1903, when he largely increased his interests in the institution and became its president. He is still serving in this responsible position, and to his correct business methods and superior executive ability the bank is indebted for a large measure of the success and prosperity which has characterized its career since he assumed the management and previously. What Mr. Baldrige has achieved in the business world has been entirely through his own efforts, as he came west with but limited capital, but with a first-class credit which enabled him to embark in enterprises which in the course of time yielded him large returns on his investments and made him not only one of the well-to-do men of his community but also one of the wide-awake, representative business men of Kingsbury county. In addition to city property and his banking interests, he now owns over eight hundred acres of valuable land in South Dakota and is also quite extensively engaged in stock raising.

On the 11th day of March, 1886, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Baldrige and Miss Flora Adelaide Purinton, daughter of Orin S. and Mary A. Purinton, who were among the early pioneers of Kingsbury county, the mother still living in the city of DeSmet. The three children born of this union are Clarence L., aged seventeen, Grace, sixteen years old, and Blanche, whose birth occurred eleven years ago. Mr. Baldrige is a member of the Ancient Order of United Woodmen, also of the Degree of Honor, and has represented the former in the grand lodge, besides taking an active interest in all the local work of the orders. Mrs. Baldrige is also identified with the Degree of Honor, and has been the representative of the Iroquois lodge in the grand lodge of the state. Religiously both are members of the Congregational church and have been for a number of years, Mr. Baldrige being deacon and treasurer of the Iroquois Congregational church at the present time.

In politics the subject has always been steadfast in his allegiance to the Republican party and never swerved from his principles when so many of his friends and associates were carried away by the great Populist movement, which a few years ago threatened to disrupt the two great parties throughout the west. He served as township clerk and treasurer before moving to Iroquois and since taking up his residence in the town has repeatedly been elected to the office of school treasurer, in addition to which office he has also rendered valuable service as a member of the school board, besides being identified with the State and National Bankers' Associations.

Mr. Baldrige possesses talent as a musician, and has cultivated the same under the direction of some of the most accomplished artists in the country, among whom was the distinguished pianist, Madam Towler, a pupil of Moscheles, for a number of years musical instructor of Queen Victoria. Amid the pressing claims of his various business interests he finds time to devote to this his favorite pastime. For the last eleven years he has been organist of the First Congregational church of Iroquois, and in many ways has taken an active interest in musical affairs throughout the state.

Mr. Baldrige is an admirer of the German language and literature and has formed the habit of doing a portion of his regular reading in that tongue.

CHARLES T. LIDDLE, son of John T. and Mary Liddle, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in these pages, was born in Hastings county, Minnesota, on October 5, 1865. When about five years old he was taken by his parents to Lansing, that state, and there entered the district schools, which he attended until the age of sixteen, the meanwhile assising his father in cultivating the farm. In November, 1881, he accompanied the family to Kingsbury county, South Dakota, and until attaining his majority remained under the parental roof, contributing his share to the development of the claim his father entered, and during the greater part of two years continuing his studies in the public schools.

Shortly after his twenty-first year Mr. Liddle purchased the relinquishment on a quarter section of land south of Iroquois, and addressing himself to its improvement soon had a good farm developed and in successful cultivation. After tilling it one year, he sold out and, returning to Minnesota, spent one summer and fall in a grocery store in the city of Minneapolis. Meantime, however, he further added to his scholastic training by spending the falls and winters of 1886-7 in the Agricultural College of South Dakota, at Brookings, and in this way fitted himself for the duties of the active and successful business life upon which he was soon to enter. Returning to Kingsbury county in September, 1888, Mr. Liddle bought out the flour and feed store of C. O. Bortle, at Iroquois, and, forming a partnership with Perry Lawton, greatly enlarged the business, the firm soon becoming one of the most prosperous of the kind in the place. In March, 1891, the subject purchased his associate's interest, and has since been sole proprietor of an establishment which has steadily grown in magnitude and importance. The same year in which he became sole owner Mr. Liddle added a full line of furniture to his business and one year later farm implements and machinery were included, subsequently buggies, wagons and all kinds of vehicles being added to the stock.

Mr. Liddle was married December 25, 1889, to Miss Anna Williams, of Iroquois, a union terminated by the death of the wife in October, 1891. Later, September, 1895, he again entered the marriage relation, choosing for a wife Miss Kate Bradly, of Pierre, South Dakota, who has proved a faithful and devoted companion and helpmeet. Fraternally Mr. Liddle is member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, being active in both fraternities. Mrs. Liddle is one of the leading spirits in the Rebekah degree lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and has filled various offices in the same; she is also a zealous worker in the Methodist Episcopal church of Iroquois, to which religious body her husband belongs, the latter having been a trustee of the congregation for a number of years, also one of its most liberal financial supporters. Politically

Mr. Liddle has always been a staunch Republican. He was one of the first of his party in Iroquois to advocate the gold standard and labored unceasingly for the measure, standing firm and unwavering for the time-honored principle of sound money. He has been a delegate to a number of conventions, is a power in local politics, a successful organizer and leader, but has never aspired to office or any kind of public distinction.

JOHN T. LIDDLE was born June 30, 1832, in Dearborn county, Indiana, the son of Stephen and Sarah Liddle, natives of England. These parents were married in the land of their birth and after living there a number of years came to the United States and settled in Dearborn county, Indiana, where they spent the remainder of their days on a farm. Stephen Liddle always followed agriculture for a livelihood and in addition thereto devoted considerable time to the public ministry. His wife bore him ten children, namely: Bessie, Stephen, Sarah, Ann, James, Martha, Isaac, Hannah, Mary and John T., all deceased but the subject of this review and James, the latter living in Dearborn county, Indiana, at the age of seventy-nine years.

John T. Liddle was reared on the family homestead in Miller township, Dearborn county, Indiana, attended the indifferent subscription schools of the early day, and at the age of twenty-one began working for himself as a farm hand, continuing this line of labor for a period of about two years. He then returned home and took charge of the farm which he cultivated successfully in his own and his parents' interests as long as the latter lived, besides looking after their support and comfort in many other ways. When a young man he married Miss Mary Barkuloo, of Logan township, Dearborn county, after which he continued to farm the homestead for three or four years and then moved to Minneapolis, where he purchased land and followed the pursuit of agriculture until disposing of his possessions in that state and migrating to South Dakota a few years later. Mr. Liddle entered a quarter section of land in Kingsbury county and developed the same, but after cultivating his place several years sold out to good advantage and changed his abode to Iroquois, where he has since resided, devoting his attention the meanwhile to the business enterprises in which himself and son are engaged.

Mr. Liddle served one year and three months in the latter part of the Civil war as a member of Company C, Hotchkiss Battalion Volunteers, enlisting at St. Paul and remaining with his command until the cessation of hostilities. His company was stationed for some time at Alexandria, Minnesota, and was transferred thence to Fort Duty to protect the settlers of a large area of territory against the hostile Indians. He rendered valuable assistance and retired from the army with an honorable record, since which time he has been as zealous in promoting the interests of civil life as he was brave and loyal in upholding the integrity of the national union.

Mr. and Mrs. Liddle became the parents of eleven children, only five of whom are living, namely: Charles, who is in business at Iroquois; Harmon, also a resident of Iroquois and a farmer by occupation; Latimer, buttermaker of the Iroquois Creamery; Walter, who is engaged in the railroad business, and Mrs. Esther Bangs. Mr. Liddle is and always has been a pronounced Republican, and is an active member of the Grand Army of the Republic post at Iroquois, and with his wife belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church, both being faithful and consistent members and zealous in all lines of religious and charitable work.

ALVA N. ALDRICH, mayor of the city of Aberdeen, South Dakota, where he is also proprietor and manager of the Wisconsin House, one of the leading hotels of the city, was born at Ionia, Michigan, on August 29, 1866, the son of William E. Aldrich, who was born near Buffalo, New York, February 23, 1840, the son of Warren and Sarah Aldrich, both born near Buffalo, New York. William E. Aldrich went to Indiana in 1856, where he followed farming. He served ten months as a member of Company E, Thirtieth Regiment Indiana Infantry, as a private. He removed to Michigan in the fall of 1857, and his death occurred February 2, 1877. He married Amelia E. Stedman, who was born at Spencer, Medina county, Ohio, in 1848, the daughter of Nelson and Roxana (Parrent) Stedman, natives of New York state, the former born in 1809, the later in 1810.

The subject was reared to manhood in and about his native place, and attended the public schools. In 1887 he came to South Dakota and took up a homestead in Frederick, Brown county, which he at once proceeded to improve and upon which he resided for the following two years. Owing to the stringency of the times and the difficulty experienced in obtaining a livelihood from his land, he disposed of the same at the expiration of the above period, being obliged to sell at such a low figure as to cause the loss of nearly all of his labor and improvements. For some time after disposing of his homestead Mr. Aldrich clerked in a clothing store in Aberdeen, and it was while thus engaged that he decided to go into the hotel business, and in May, 1896, with borrowed capital, he purchased the Wisconsin House, which he at once remodeled and refurnished throughout, making of it one of the leading hotels of the city. The hotel contains forty commodious rooms, with accommodations for a hundred guests, is modern in its appointments, and supplied with all the comforts and conveniences found in any first-class hotel. Mr. Aldrich has proven a model landlord, his companionable and congenial nature having won him a host of friends among the traveling public. Not only is he popular with his guests, but he stands high with his fellow citizens who esteem him highly as a man and citizen, and have honored him in electing him to important places in the city government. In April, 1898, he was elected as a Republican to the board of aldermen at Aberdeen, and was re-elected to that body in 1900 and 1902. In 1898 he was made chairman of the committee on fire department, and remained at the head of that important committee as long as he was alderman. During that period the Gamewell fire alarm system was installed. In 1902 the board of aldermen honored him by electing him acting mayor. In March, 1904, Mr. Aldrich was nominated by the Republicans for the office of mayor, and in April, following, he was elected. His administration began with the inauguration of needed reforms, among which was the strict closing of all saloons on Sunday, and causing the proprietors to comply with the law forbidding them to obstruct the public view of their bars by the placing of palms, signs, etc., in the front windows. He also closed all the gambling houses, and began the vigorous enforcement of other ordinances, among the same being the one forbidding spitting upon pavements and sidewalks. And those who know the mayor feel certain the public can rest assured that these reforms are not spasmodic, but will continue as long as he remains at the head of the city's government. Mr. Aldrich is a member of the Masonic fraternity, belong to the blue lodge, the chapter and commandery at Aberdeen. He is also a member of the Knights of Pythias order.

ALVA N. ALDRICH

On June 5, 1895, Mayor Aldrich was married to Miss Louise Wylie, of Aberdeen, and to this union one son has been born: Louis Wylie, who is now in his sixth year.

I. A. KEITH, the leading druggist of Lake Preston and a man of state reputation by reason of his connection with important public enterprises, was born in Rock county, Wisconsin, on September 20, 1847. His parents, Alonzo A. and Julia M. (McFarland) Keith, were natives of New York, and there lived until about the year 1845, when they moved to Rock county, Wisconsin, where the father entered land, developed a farm and became successful in agricultural pursuits. In 1882 he disposed of his interests in that state and came to South Dakota, locating at Lake Preston, near which place he took up a homestead and retired from active life. He died at his home in Lake Preston in the year 1895, leaving a widow and three children, the former still living at the advanced age of eighty-one. Alonzo Keith was a man of strict integrity and high repute, popular with all who knew him, and for many years lived an earnest, consistent Christian life, as a member of the Congregational church, to which denomination his good wife also belongs. Of the four children born to this excellent couple, three are living, Irwin A., the subject of this sketch, Edgar P., a prominent real-estate dealer and large landowner of Algonia, Iowa, and Charles W., who is connected with a Chicago business enterprise; Herbert, the third in order of birth, died at the age of fourteen years.

The subject of this review was reared in Rock county, Wisconsin, grew to manhood on his father's farm and attended the public schools until fifteen years old, the training thus received being supplemented by a course of study in an academy at Allen's Grove and a commercial college at Janesville, Wisconsin. At the age of twenty he entered a drug store in Janesville, and after remaining four years in that city and becoming a proficient pharmacist, came west, stopping one year in Iowa, and in 1882 settled with his family at Lake Preston, South Dakota. In March of the latter year he purchased a small pioneer stock of drugs, representing a value of two hundred and sixty-five dollars, and soon built up a lucrative business. Meanwhile, in 1882, Mr. Keith took up a tree claim, and later located a homestead, on both of which he proved up, and from which he has since received no small part of his income. He owns one tract of real estate, amounting to one hundred and sixty acres, adjoining Lake Preston, its proximity to the town adding greatly to its value, and he now has a beautiful and in every respect desirable home on this property.

Mr. Keith devoted his attention very closely to the drug trade until recently, since which time his son Herbert, a professional pharmacist and a graduate from the pharmaceutical department of State Agricultural College of South Dakota, has managed the business. Mr. Keith has been officially identified with the South Dakota Pharmaceutical Association since its organization, in 1886, and for ten years served as secretary of that organization and the state board of pharmacy, and for six years he has been a member of the state board of pharmacy, being at this time its president. In 1895 he assisted in organizing the Druggists' Mutual Fire Insurance Company of South Dakota, and has served as secretary of the same since that date, the success of the enterprise being largely attributable to his interest and able management. This company was organized by the leading druggists of the state and has its headquarters at Lake Preston, and carries all classes of commercial risks, having a large and well-distributed business in nearly every city and town in the state. It has saved its policy holders approximately seventy-five thousand dollars in premiums refunded, and has paid fire losses amounting to thirty thousand dollars. The cost to its members has been about fifty per cent. of existing insurance schedules.

The domestic life of Mr. Keith dates from 1872, on June 4th of which year he was wedded to Miss Addie C. Burke, of Rochester, New York, daughter of P. Y. and Miranda Burke, old and respected residents of that city. To Mr. and Mrs. Keith three children have been born, Minnie, Herbert, who has charge of his father's drug business, and Grace, all three at home.

Mr. Keith belongs to the Masonic fraternity and Ancient Order of United Workmen, and is a charter member of the Odd Fellows lodge at Lake Preston, which he has served in the highest official capacity within the gift of the organization. Religiously he is a Congregationalist, as is also his wife, both being members of the church at Lake Preston, besides being most liberal contributors. He has for many years been a member of the board of education and in 1897 represented the twenty-first senatorial district in the upper house of the state legislature, in which body he made an honorable record, serving as chairman of the senate appropriation committee and as a member of the committees on insurance and banking, education, cities and municipal corporations and public health, besides taking an active part in the general deliberations on the floor. In politics he is a Republican, casting his maiden vote for U. S. Grant in 1868. He was, however, identified with the Populist party for several years, being led to this action by reason of his views upon the financial question and other reform measures of that party. He is a political leader in Kingsbury county, and is not only a power in local politics, but his influence as an organizer and campaigner is felt throughout a large section of the state.

GEORGE W. LATTIN, one of the leading lawyers and jurists of Kingsbury county, claims the old Empire state of the Union as the place of his nativity, having been born in Dutchess county, New York, on the 23d of April, 1858, and being a scion of old and honored families of that state. The original American ancestors in both the paternal and maternal lines came from England to the new world in the colonial epoch of our national history, locating in New England, from which cradle of history representatives of both have gone forth to diverse sections of the Union. The subject is a son of E. C. and Ruth (Mosher) Lattin, both of whom were likewise born and reared in Dutchess county. The father of the subject was a miller by vocation and his death occurred, in Nassau, New York, in 1865. Judge Lattin was a lad of seven years at the time of his father's death, and in 1869 he accompanied his widowed mother on her removal to DeKalb county, Illinois, where his mother purchased land, continuing to reside on this homestead farm until her children had been reared to maturity. In 1882 she removed to Franklin, Nebraska, where her death occurred in the spring of 1889. Of her four children we enter the following record: Stephen is a resident of Glyndon, Minnesota, where he is engaged in business; George W. is the subject of this review; Alma is the wife of Samuel Chriswell, of Charleston, Oklahoma; and Ella is the wife of William Mercer, of Aurora, Illinois.

George W. Lattin received his rudimentary education in the public schools of Poughkeepsie, New York, and was eleven years of age at the time of his mother's removal to Illinois, where he was reared to maturity on the homestead farm. In the meanwhile he completed the curriculum of the public schools, and in 1876 he entered the Classical Seminary at East Pawpaw, Illinois, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1880, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Science. In 1880 he was matriculated in the law department of the Northwestern University, in Chicago, where he completed the prescribed course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1882, William J. Bryan having been a member of the junior class at the time of the subject's graduation. Mr. Lattin secured the highest honors in his class, and upon his examination prior to graduation made the mark of one hundred per cent.

In the spring of 1882 Judge Lattin came to Kingsbury county, South Dakota, and took up a claim near the present village of Iroquois, and thereafter he lived upon his farm for eight years, making good improvements and bringing a goodly portion under a high state of cultivation. In 1890 he was elected judge of the county court, whereupon he took up his residence in DeSmet, where he has since made his home. He served on the bench until 1898, and made a most enviable record, very few of his decisions meeting with reversal in the higher courts. In 1892 he purchased the Kingsbury County Independent, a weekly paper, and retained entire control of the same until 1898, when he disposed of his interests in the enterprise. In April of that year he was appointed captain of Company E, First South Dakota Volunteer Infantry, and preliminary to entering active service with his command he resigned his position on the bench. He accompanied his regiment to the Philippines, where he remained in command of his company during the entire term of service, participating in all the engagements in which his regiment was involved, and returning to his home in October, 1899, having received his honorable discharge on the 5th of October of that year. Since his return Judge Lattin has been actively engaged in the practice of law in DeSmet, while he makes his home on his fine farm, of one hundred and sixty acres, which lies contiguous to the town. He has attained a high degree of success in temporal affairs, and the same stands as the result of his own efforts, for through his own exertions he made his way through college, having been practically dependent upon his own resources from the age of sixteen years. In politics he was formerly arrayed with the Republican party, but upon the organization of the Populist party he identified himself with the same, and has since been a staunch advocate of its principles. Fraternally he holds membership in DeSmet Lodge, No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and in DeSmet Lodge, No. 25, Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 11th of July, 1881, Judge Lattin was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Van Patten, of Lee county, Illinois, in which state she was born and reared, being a daughter of C. F. Van Patten, who was one of the pioneers of Lee county. To Judge and Mrs. Lattin have been born eight children, namely: Mary, who is a successful teacher, is a member of the class of 1903 in the State Normal School, at Madison; William, who was graduated in the DeSmet high school, is now engaged in teaching; and Herbert, Lois, Homer, Ralph, Mark and Sidney are all at the parental home.

HON. THOMAS REED is a native of Scotland, born in the town of Auchleblest on the 1st day of October, 1839. His parents were Robert Reed and Agnes Farley, both born and reared in Scotland, and their marriage also occurred in that country. Robert Reed farmed in his native land until 1841, when he came to America and after following the pursuit of agriculture for a few years in the state of New York moved to Ogle county, Illinois, where he continued his chosen vocation until his death, in 1894. Mrs. Reed died in New York in 1842, leaving four motherless children to be cared for by her husband, and right nobly did he discharge this loving duty. Mr. Reed never remarried, but kept his family together until each child was grown and able to care for himself. He possessed more than ordinary powers of mind, was a close student, and ardent friend of high education and at the age of fifty-five took up the study of astronomy, in which he became quite proficient. The following are the names of his children: John, Michael, Agnes, who married Henry Earl, and Thomas, all deceased but the subject of this sketch.

Thomas Reed was quite small when his parents came to the United States and after spending a short time in New York he was taken to Ogle county, Illinois, where he remained until his eighteenth year. He attended school of winter seasons until that age, but began earning his own livelihood when a youth of fourteen by working at different kinds of labor. In 1857 he went to California, via New York city and the isthmus of Panama, and after spending three years mining in Placer county, that state, enlisted in August, 1861, in Company E, First California Infantry, for service in the Civil war. This command marched to Santiago, thence to Fort Yuma, and from there through Arizona, New Mexico and a part of Texas, retaking the government forts and posts that had been captured by the Confederates, finally returning to Santa Fe, where Mr. Reed was mustered out in the year 1864. After a brief rest he re-entered the army, joining Hancock's Veteran Corps, which he accompanied throughout its various experiences, until 1866, in September of which year he received his final discharge at the national capital.

Returning to Illinois at the expiration of his period of enlistment, Mr. Reed settled down to farming in Ogle county, and there remained until 1881, when he came to Kingsbury county, South Dakota, and purchased eight hundred and sixty acres of land, on which he lived during the nine years following. At the end of that time he changed his abode to Arlington and opened a real-estate office to which line of business and money loaning he has since devoted his attention.

Mr. Reed's financial success has been commensurate with the energy displayed in all of his undertakings and in addition to a large amount of valuable property in Arlington, he now owns three thousand acres of fine land in the counties of Kingsbury and Brookings, all under cultivation and yielding him a liberal income; also two hundred acres of valuable farm land in Ogle county, Illinois, besides the ample fortune represented by personal property and private capital.

He has other than his business standing and financial success to recommend him to the favorable consideration of his fellow citizens, as he has long been deeply interested in the public affairs of this city, county and state. Since coming to South Dakota he has been actively identified with the Republican party, in local and state politics, has been honored with a number of responsible official positions, prominent among which was that of state senator, having been elected to represent his district in the upper house of the legislature in 1892. He served the district very acceptably for a period of two years and refused a renomination, although importuned by his constituents to accept the honor, as his record as a law-maker was eminently satisfactory, not only to his own party but to the people of his jurisdiction, irrespective of political ties.

Mr. Reed is a member of the Masonic brotherhood, belonging to the blue lodge and chapter at Arlington, the commandery at Brookings, and it was through his individual efforts that the charter for the second named organization was procured, this being the first chapter instituted in South Dakota after its admission to the Union as a state. He is also identified with the Odd Fellows lodge at Arlington, and for over twenty years has been an active worker in the Grand Army of the Republic, being a charter member of the post in the city of his residence and a leader in all of its deliberations. He stands high in Grand Army circles throughout South Dakota, and at the present time is commander of the order in this state, to which honorable position he was elected on June 24, 1903. In August of the same year he attended the national encampment at San Francisco, the place where he enlisted forty-one years before, and also revisited many of the scenes made interesting by reason of his thrilling experiences as a miner. Mr. Reed was married November 22, 1871, to Miss Margaret A. Knapp, daughter of Jarrald and Harriett Knapp, of Ogle county, Illinois, the union being blessed with two children, Robert W. and George P. Mrs. Reed comes of a very old English family, the history of which is traceable to an early date in this country, and to a much remoter period in the land of her forefathers. Among the relics of her ancestry still in her possession is an old chair, which has been in the family and in constant use for over one hundred and fifty years, a piece of furniture not only interesting on account of its great age, but highly prized as an heirloom by reason of its associations.

Mr. Reed and family belong to the Disciple church of Arlington, and are among its active and much respected members. He finds time from the pressing claims of his business affairs to devote to church work and as a faithful and consistent Christian never allows his secular interests to interfere with his religious duties.

BOETIUS H. SULLIVAN, one of the influential citizens of Plankinton, Aurora county maintaining his residence in the attractive village of Plankinton, was born in Harvard, McHenry county, Illinois, on the 23d of August, 1859, and is a son of Eugene and Mary (Sullivan) Sullivan, to whom were born nine children. The parents were born in County Kerry, Ireland, whence the father emigrated to the United States when sixteen years of age, settling in Illinois, where he became a successful merchant, there continuing in business until his death, at the age of forty-six years. He was city collector for several years and was a man who commanded unqualified esteem in his home community. His wife came to America as a girl of fourteen years, and joined her brother, who had previously taken up his abode in Illinois. She died in 1893, at the age of fifty-two years.

The subject of this review received an academic education in Belvidere, Illinois, and Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and in the spring of 1880 he came to the territory of Dakota, remaining for a few months in Huron and passing the winter of 1880-81 in Sioux Falls, while in the following spring he took up his residence in Plankinton, where he has since maintained his home. Prior to coming to the west he had read law under the preceptorship of Judge Charles

E. Fuller, of Belvidere, Illinois, and in the spring of 1881, at Canton, he was admitted to the bar of the territory of Dakota. He established himself in the practice of his profession in Plankinton, and in the intervening years has become one of the successful and prominent attorneys of the state, while he has also conducted a large business in the handling of real estate. In 1881 he was appointed clerk of the courts of Aurora county, holding the office for six years, and in 1886 he was elected to represent his district in the territorial legislature, while in 1888 he was a delegate to the Republican national convention, in Chicago, which nominated Harrison for the presidency. In the following year he was appointed surveyor general of the territory of Dakota, to succeed General Maris Taylor, and upon the division of the territory and the admission of South Dakota to the Union he was reappointed as surveyor general of the new state, serving in this capacity for a total of five years. He is the owner of about four thousand acres of valuable land in Aurora county, and is prominently identified with agricultural pursuits and stock growing, while his residence in Plankinton is one of the handsomest of the many attractive homes in the town. He is a stalwart advocate of the principles of the Republican party and both he and his wife are communicants of the Catholic church. Mr. Sullivan is a member of Aurora Lodge, No. 32, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Sioux Falls Lodge, No. 262, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Plankinton Camp, No. 5558, Modern Woodmen of America; and Plankinton Lodge, No. 77, Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 30th of November, 1882, Mr. Sullivan was united in marriage to Miss Mary H. Comerford, of Chamberlain, this state, she being a native of Morris, Illinois, and they have one daughter, Clare.

L. L. LOSTUTTER was born October 15, 1863, in Switzerland county, Indiana, and is the third in a family of four children, whose parents were W. C. and Avarilla Lostutter, both natives of the Hoosier state. After farming for a number of years in Indiana, W. C. Lostutter moved to Illinois, where he also followed agricultural pursuits, subsequently engaging in the mercantile business. In the fall of 1880 he changed his abode to Hand county, South Dakota, locating at St. Lawrence, of which he was one of the first settlers and until the spring of 1883 ran a lumber yard in that town. He then removed to Iroquois, where he also engaged in the lumber business in partnership with his son, to whom he subsequently sold out, and in 1884 established a bank which soon became one of the successful and popular institutions of the kind in the county of Kingsbury. He departed this life September 13, 1885, deeply lamented by all who knew him, leaving to mourn his loss a widow and three children, the names of the latter being as follows: Mrs. Addie Frederick, Mrs. Fannie Pinkerton and L. L., the subject of this review.

The early life of L. L. Lostutter was spent in Clarence, Illinois, and he received his education in the public schools and Paxton Normal Institute. When a mere lad he became his father's assistant in the store, and after the family moved to South Dakota he remained one and a half years in charge of the business, closing the establishment out at the expiration of that time and re-joining his parents at St. Lawrence. Later, in partnership with his father, he engaged in the lumber business. When the father died, L. L. took charge of the banking and lumbering interests and managed the same with success and profit until 1887, when he bought out the other heirs and from that time until 1903 was sole proprietor of the Farmers and Merchants' Bank of Iroquois. In January of the latter year he sold out and retired from banking and since then has devoted his attention mainly to the handling of real estate, in which business he had previously been engaged, and in which he built up a large and lucrative patronage in connection with his other enterprises. He now deals extensively in all kinds of realty, city and country, is also identified with other lines of activity and occupies a commanding position in business circles, locally and throughout the state. Mr. Lostutter is one of the prominent Odd Fellows of South Dakota, and has filled all the chairs in the local lodge to which he belongs, besides being high in the councils of the grand lodge, in which body he has also been honored with exalted official station. He served five years as grand treasurer, was grand warden for a considerable length of time, held the office of deputy grand master for a term and later rose to the honorable position of grand master, the highest office within the gift of the order. For a series of years he was chosen representative to the sovereign grand lodge, in which exalted assemblage his activity and influence brought him to the favorable notice of the leaders of the fraternity throughout the Union, among whom he is now numbered. In addition to his deep interest in Odd Fellowship, Mr. Lostutter is also a zealous Mason, in which ancient and honorable brotherhood he has held offices of high rank, serving two years as treasurer of the grand lodge, being the only man in South Dakota ever re-elected to that responsible position.

Politically Mr. Lostutter is a Republican and has always been an unswerving supporter of the party and judicious advisor in its councils, also a splendid organizer and successful campaigner. For years he has been a delegate to city, county, district and state conventions, has served several terms as chairman of his delegations to the latter and in 1896 was alternate to the national convention, which met in St. Louis, Missouri, also attended as a delegate the national convention at Philadelphia in 1900.

Mr. Lostutter was appointed receiver of the Huron National Bank in 1891, and in due time wound up the business of the institution to the satisfaction of all concerned. He is a safe, reliable business man of sound judgment, prudent and resourceful in his dealings, but at all times honorable, and his integrity is unstained by the slightest suspicion of anything savoring of disrepute.

In March, 1887, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Lostutter with Miss Minnie Hall, daughter of Jackson Hall, an old settler of Kingsbury county, who now lives in the state of California. Mrs. Lostutter has been a true helpmeet to her husband, presiding over his home with true wifely dignity, and sympathizing with him in all of his aspirations and endeavors. She is a leader in the Rebekah lodge of Odd Fellows at Iroquois, has attended a number of high assemblages of the order, besides holding important official positions; and is a faithful and consistent member of the Congregational church. Mr. Lostutter also subscribes to this faith, and for a period of seven or eight years has been a trustee of the Iroquois congregation. He is fond of travel and in addition to visiting nearly every state of the Union, has made a trip to Mexico, in which he was accompanied by his wife. Recently, 1903, the two went upon an extensive and pleasant sea voyage, during which they visited Porto Rico; Venezuela, South America; stopping at St. Pierre, Martinique, and the Spanish Island of St. Thomas and many other interesting places, spending nearly a hundred days making the trip.

ORLANDO T. GRATTAN was born in Mount Carroll, Carroll county, Illinois, on the 8th of May, 1853, being a son of H. G. and Phoebe (Tisdell) Grattan, the former of whom was born in Connecticut. The paternal grandfather of the subject was Amos Grattan, who was a blacksmith by trade and who came of stanch old New England stock. As a young man H. G. Grattan learned the printer's trade, becoming one of the pioneer newspaper men of Illinois, and having been identified with the publication of papers at Mount Carroll, Freeport and Sterling. He later became general agent for the McCormick Harvesting Machine Company, and finally removed to Waukon, Allamakee county, Iowa, where he died in 1896, his wife having passed away in 1866, at Sterling, Illinois. The subject attended the schools of Sterling, Illinois, until he had attained the age of thirteen years, and then accompanied his father on his removal to Waukon, Iowa, where he worked on his father's farm until he had attained the age of eighteen years, in the meanwhile attending school as opportunity afforded. He then entered the employ of the McCormick Harvesting Machine Company as traveling salesman, and was thus engaged about seven years. In December, 1880, he came to Elkton, South Dakota, and here engaged in the hardware business, beginning operations with a capital of only two hundred dollars of his own. Upon coming to the state it was his intention to locate in Pierre, but at Tracy he met a traveling salesman for the house of Hibbard, Spencer, Bartlett & Company, of Chicago, who advised him to look over the field at Elkton, which was then known as Ivanhoe. He arrived in the embryonic village at ten o'clock at night, and his first impression could not have been very favorable, for he found entertainment, so called, in the only hotel, which was connected with the local blacksmith shop. The interior was not plastered, and the second story had a floor of loose boards, while the roof was of most flimsy construction. There were five beds in the room which was assigned to him, and during the early days of his sojourn in the town blizzards raged every day, while he states that the snow was drifted so deep in some places that one might, if desired, sit on top of the telegraph poles and view the prospect o'er. This memorable winter of 1880-1 was one of the worst ever experienced since the settlement of this section, but the subject was not dismayed by the outlook and determined to establish a business here. About the middle of January he began the erection of his two-story "business block," the same being a most primitive structure. He secured a portion of the lumber from Flandreau, eighteen miles distant, and the remainder from Lake Benton. Twice within that winter he made his way on foot to and from Flandreau, and when the roof was placed on his building those engaged in shingling the same could walk about on the snow drifts and prosecute their work, though the building was of two stories. On the 15th of April, 1881, Mr. Grattan equipped himself with snow-shoes, on which he started for Gary, thirty-five miles distant, to meet a friend. The journey required two days. The first night he stopped at the home of Henry Kienast, ten miles out, and there found that the only supply of food was that secured by grinding wheat in an ordinary coffee-mill and then baking the same into bread. He finally had to hire a team to take him to his destination, having become snow-blind, so that it was unsafe for him to continue alone. He then returned to Waukon, Iowa, where his wife and two children had remained in the meanwhile, and as soon as the railroad was opened in the spring, he brought his family to the new home, and for the first week after their arrival they slept on improvised beds laid on the floor of the local railway station, a small and rude building. Thereafter the family resided in the rooms over the store for seven years, when they took possession of the present attractive and commodious modern residence, which is valued at about five thousand dollars, and which is one of the best in the town.

During the first year of business in Elkton, Mr. Grattan made expenses and cleared sixteen dollars, and from this nucleus he has built up his present extensive and flourishing enterprise and has gained precedence as one of the leading business men and capitalists of the town. In 1897 his place of business was destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of four thousand dollars, but he promptly erected his present substantial brick and stone block, of two stories, which is one of the best in the town, being valued at ten thousand dollars, while his stock of hardware reaches a valuation of four thousand dollars. He formerly handled farm machinery, but has now dropped this branch of his enterprise. He controls a large and representative trade, and in addition to his hardware business does a large loan and insurance business. In politics he supported the Republican party until 1896, when he became convinced of the legitimacy of the financial policy adopted by the Democratic party in its platform, and showed the courage of his convictions by transferring his allegiance to the latter, whose principles he has since advocated. He is not formally identified with any religious organization, but gives his support to the Baptist church, of which his wife is a devoted member. He is identified with the lodge and chapter of the Masonic fraternity in Elkton, with the commandery of Knights Templar at Brookings, and with the temple of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine at Sioux Falls.

On the 18th of May, 1874, Mr. Grattan was united in marriage to Miss Eva Hersey, who was born and reared in Waukon, Iowa, being a daughter of Adaniram J. and Mary (Reed) Hersey, who came to that state from Massachusetts. Mr. and Mrs. Grattan have three children, concerning whom we offer the following data: Paul H., who was graduated in the South Dakota State Agricultural College in 1896, and in the law department of the Iowa State University in 1899, is now a traveling salesman; Ray J. is associated with his father in the conducting of the store; and Edna G., who is now prosecuting her musical studies in the city of Buffalo, New York, where she will complete a two-years course in 1903, was previously a student in the Francis Shimer Musical Academy of the University of Chicago, and is a specially skilled pianist, having gained a high reputation in Buffalo, where she is now studying.

GEORGE C. KNICKERBOCKER.—All who are familiar with the delightful writings of Washington Irving, and particularly with his "Knickerbocker's New York," will understand that the name borne by the subject has through this source become almost a generic term as designating the sturdy and aristocratic division of the old Holland families who settled in New Amsterdam, the nucleus of the present national metropolis, and also became prominent in connection with the settlement of other sections of the Empire state. The lineage of Colonel Knickerbocker is traced in an unbroken way back to the original American progenitors whom Irving thus singled out in giving title to one of his most interesting works, and the genealogical record is one in which he may well take pride. The Colonel is one of the honored pioneers and popular citizens of McPherson county and has been the owner of a hotel in Eureka since the founding of the town.

COLONEL AND MRS. GEORGE C. KNICKERBOCKER AND GRANDCHILDREN.

having, in fact, purchased the first lot and erected the first building in the place save for those put up in a preliminary way by the railroad company.

The genealogical record is traced back to John VanBerghen Knickerbocker, of Brabant, who was captain in the navy of the Netherlands, and whose son, Harmon Jansen Knickerbocker, born in Friesland, in 1648, was the original progenitor in America. He came from Holland to the new world in 1678, and through his second son, Lawrence, who married Catherine Van Horn, the line of direct descent is traced to the subject of this review. Harmon, son of Lawrence, married Rebecca Wandelar, and their second son, Harmon Jansen, who married Susannah Basson, was the great-grandfather of our subject. Peter Knickerbocker, grandfather of the Colonel, married Jane Montrose, and they became the parents of eighteen children, of whom seven are yet living, the average age of the number being four score years, which venerable age is that of our subject's father, William, who now resides in Aurora, Illinois, the family being notable for longevity. William Knickerbocker was born and reared in Dutchess county, New York, as was also his wife, whose maiden name was Helen M. Crouse and who is still living, as are two of their four children, of whom the subject was the first in order of birth.

About the year 1848 William Knickerbocker took up his residence in Illinois, becoming one of the pioneers of that state, where he followed the vocation of contractor and builder for many years. In Aurora, Illinois, on the 11th of October, 1850, George C. Knickerbocker was ushered into the world, and there passed his boyhood days, securing such educational advantages as were afforded in the common schools. He acquired the mason's trade in his youth and as a young man was successfully engaged in contracting and building in Illinois and adjoining states. At the age of twenty-seven years he located in the city of Minneapolis, Minnesota, where he engaged in the furniture business. In the early 'eighties he conducted the largest establishment of the sort in the city mentioned, but his place was destroyed by fire in 1882, entailing a total loss of sixty-five thousand dollars. In 1885 the Colonel came to South Dakota and located in McPherson county, being one of the first settlers in the western part of the county. At the time of the inception of the town of Eureka and before the railroad company, owning the site, had granted permission for anyone to build on the ground, Colonel Knickerbocker "took time by the forelock" and succeeded in erecting a hotel building in the town, quickly perfecting the plans and bringing his force of workmen on the spot selected. This was on Sunday, and by putting forth every effort the building was raised during the day and to a large extent the exterior was finished by Monday, when the railroad officials put in an appearance and sized up the situation. Perhaps admiring the enterprise and courage of the subject, they made no serious protest and thus he gained the credit of being the first to erect a building on the site of the present thriving and attractive town, save those, as noted, which have been put up by the railroad company. He has ever since continued his residence in Eureka, is well known throughout this section of the state, and his circle of friends is bounded only by that of his acquaintances, while he has at all times shown himself ready to aid to the utmost of his ability in the furthering of all undertakings and enterprises tending to enhance the general welfare and promote the development of the country and the material prosperity of his town. He takes a deep interest in public affairs, particularly those of a local nature, while he has been and continues an active worker in politics in the county, wielding no little influence, though never resorting to spectacular methods. He served for five years as a member of the board of county commissioners, was a member of the first board of aldermen, and has held other offices of local trust. On the 23d of February, 1901, he was appointed colonel on the staff of Governor Herreid and remains incumbent of this office at the time of this writing. He is a prominent and popular affiliate of the Knights of Pythias, and a member of the grand lodge of the order in the state.

On the 16th of February, 1871, Colonel Knickerbocker was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Ellen Jones, who was born and reared in Cook county, Illinois, being a daughter of Samuel Jones, who came of stanch Welsh lineage. Mrs. Knickerbocker bears the distinction of having been the first woman in Eureka. Of this union were born two children, Gertrude B. and Harry M. The daughter became the wife of John E. Regan, of Eureka, and her death occurred in 1898. She is survived by three daughters, namely: Georgia, Grace and Genevieve. The son of the subject is now engaged in music teaching and is a natural musician, having inherited his talents. He performs on almost any instrument, but the violin is his specialty, and of this instrument he is considered almost a master. He is now a resident of Harvey, North Dakota, where he is engaged in organizing and teaching orchestras and bands, at which he meets with great success. In 1900 he married Alma Thorhaug, who was born in Wisconsin. To this union a son has been born, George Stanley Knickerbocker.

J. L. HALL, a prominent and influential business man of Volga, Brookings county, and president of the First State Bank of that place, is a native of Illinois, having been born in the beautiful city of Rockford, on the 25th of November, 1856, and being a son of Charles A. and Margaret (Dixon) Hall, the former of whom was born in Massachusetts and the latter in New York. Charles A. Hall was reared and educated in his native state, and as a young man came west to Illinois, where he was engaged in farming for a number of years, after which he established himself in the livery business in Rockford, continuing this enterprise until his death in 1859, at which time the subject was but two years of age.

J. L. Hall, the immediate subject of this sketch, was reared to maturity in the city of his birth, and there prosecuted his studies in the public schools until he had attained the age of seventeen years, when he entered upon an apprenticeship at the tinner's trade, becoming an expert workman, and continuing to follow his trade in Rockford for a period of five years. In 1880 he removed to Tyler, Minnesota, where he was engaged in the hardware business for the ensuing two years, at the expiration of which, in the spring of 1882, he came to South Dakota and cast in his lot with the embryonic village of Volga. He brought with him about two thousand dollars' worth of tinware and hardware, and with this as a nucleus he engaged in business in the new town. With the settling up of the surrounding country Volga increased in population and commercial importance, and Mr. Hall succeeded in building up a most profitable enterprise, thus having continued in the hardware business for more than twenty years, and now controlling a large and representative trade in the line, and having a commodious and well-equipped establishment, in which he handles full lines of heavy and shelf hardware, tinware, stoves, ranges, agricultural implements, machinery, etc. In 1892 Mr. Hall purchased the lumber business of J. H. Anderson, and has since continued the enterprise, which is a most prosperous one. He is one of the three stockholders in the First State Bank, which was organized and incorporated in 1901, and he has been president of the institution since that time. Mr. Hall has served as a member of the board of village trustees, and also as village treasurer, and is one of the popular and highly esteemed citizens of the town of which he may well be considered one of the founders and builders. Mr. Hall has an abiding faith in the legitimacy of the principles of the Democratic party as exemplified by Jefferson and Jackson, but is maintains an independent attitude in politics. adopted in the platform of 1896, so that he now maintains an independent attitude in politics. He is affiliated with Volga Lodge, No. 98, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in Volga, having passed the various official chairs in the same, and having represented it in the grand lodge of the state. He also holds membership in the Concatenated Order of Hoo-Hoos, an organization of the lumbermen throughout the Union.

JOHN H. CARROLL, one of the leading citizens of DeSmet, Kingsbury county, is a native of the city of Philadelphia, being a son of T. N. and Hannah (Clarke) Carroll, both of whom were born in England. The father of the subject came to America in 1846 and settled in Philadelphia, where he engaged in cotton manufacturing, and he passed practically the remainder of his life in that fine old city of the Keystone state, having been for a few years a resident of Iowa, whence he returned to the "City of Brotherly Love," where both he and his wife died. They became the parents of nine children, of whom seven are living. The father was a Republican in politics, and both he and his wife were members of the Congregational church.

The subject of this review was reared to maturity in his native city, and after completing the curriculum of the public schools continued his studies in the Philadelphia central high school, which is virtually a college, and one in which many of the nation's eminent men have been students. He was graduated as a member of the class of 1869 and received the degree of Bachelor of Arts, while he secured third honors in his class, which had about fifteen members. After his graduation Mr. Carroll engaged in teaching in the graded schools of Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania, where he remained one year. In August, 1870, he was elected principal in Waukon, Allamakee county, Iowa, of the public schools, continuing to teach in the schools of that section of the Hawkeye state for a period of eight years, at the expiration of which he came to the territory of Dakota, locating in Fountain, Brookings county, in July, 1878, before the present city of Brookings was founded, while Kingsbury county was then known as Wood county. He engaged in the general merchandise business in Fountain, and later identified himself with the real-estate business, and he continued his residence there until the spring of 1880, when he came to Kingsbury county, where he was appointed clerk of the court, by United States Judge J. P. Kidder, serving in this capacity until 1884, when he resigned. In 1880, soon after coming to the county, he established the postoffice of DeSmet, the village being named in honor of the heroic and venerated missionary of the early days, Father DeSmet, who labored among the Indians throughout the northwest before civilization had gained a foothold. Mr. Carroll became the first postmaster of the embryonic town, and was appointed to the office under the administration of President Arthur, resigning in 1887, under the regime of President Cleveland. In 1889 he was elected the first mayor of the city of DeSmet. In 1882 he established the Bank of DeSmet, which is now one of the solid and popular financial institutions of this section of the state and one of which he still has full control, while his real-estate operations have been of extensive scope.

In politics Mr. Carroll has long been recognized as one of the leaders of the Republican party in the state, having been frequently a delegate to county, congressional and state conventions, and having on a number of occasions served as chairman of the county conventions. He has been in no sense a seeker of official preferment, but the confidence and esteem reposed in him by the people of his district were signalized in a significant way in his election to the legislature in 1902. He served during the eighth general assembly, and in the connection manifested the same dominating public spirit and loyalty which have marked his course since coming to the state. He was assigned to a number of important committees, notably the committee on appropriations and those on banking, enrollment and engrossment of bills, public libraries, and the committee on the State Historical Society. Fraternally he is one of the prominent members of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being affiliated with DeSmet Lodge, No. 58, in DeSmet, of which he is the representative in the grand lodge of the state at the time of this writing, while both he and his wife are charter members of the auxiliary lodge of the Daughters of Rebekah. He also holds membership in the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Knights of the Macabees, having represented his lodge of the former order in the grand lodge of the state, in which he was elected grand receiver. Mr. and Mrs. Carroll are communicants of the Protestant Episcopal church and are prominent in the work of both the parish and diocese. In the connection it may be noted that he is a member of the Chapter of Calvary Cathedral, of the diocese, which has charge of all church property in the diocese of South Dakota, while he is also a senior warden of St. Stephen's church, in DeSmet.

On Christmas day, 1876, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Carroll to Miss Sara R. Imus, of Corunna, Indiana, a daughter of Charles and Lucy Imus, the former of whom was born in the state of New York and the latter in Vermont. They were numbered among the early settlers in Calhoun county, Michigan, and Mr. Imus was for many years engaged in business in Corunna. They are both now deceased.

PHILETUS CLARK TRUMAN, who died at his home in Volga, on the 27th of October, 1901, as the result of an attack of pneumonia, was born in Preston, Chenango county, New York, on the 20th of December, 1841, being a son of Clark and Clarissa Truman. His father was born on Long Island, New York, and his ancestors were numbered among the early settlers in Connecticut, whether they came from England in the colonial era of our national history. Representatives of the name later removed to Long Island, New York, locating at Little Falls, and thence the father of the subject removed to Chenango county, New York, where they remained for a number of years, finally coming west to Magnolia, Iowa, where the parents passed the remainder of their lives.

Mr. Truman received his rudimentary education in the district schools of his native county where he was reared on the home farm, and later he continued his studies in the institution at DeRuyter, New York. He effectually supplemented this early discipline during later years, being a close observer and student and becoming a man of broad and liberal information and distinctive intellectuality. In 1856 he left the parental home and went to Wisconsin, where he devoted several years to teaching, in the schools of Rock, Dane and Green counties, while he simultaneously gave special attention to the reading of law. In July, 1862, he went to Magnolia, Iowa, where he married Miss Eunice Truman, whose death occurred in November, 1873. She is survived by one daughter, Alice M., who is now the wife of John C. Jenkins, of Brookings, this state. After his marriage Mr. Truman continued his residence in Iowa, where he was engaged in teaching school for several terms, while for several years he served as superintendent of schools in Shelby county and also as county surveyor. In 1873 he was admitted to the bar of that state, and thereafter was successfully engaged in the practice of his profession at Harlan, Iowa, until 1881, when he came to Brookings county, South Dakota, and took up a pre-emption claim in Lake, Sinai township, upon which he resided until he had perfected his title. He then located in the village of Volga, where he resumed the practice of his profession, entering into partnership with Arthur S. Mitchell, with whom he continued in practice until 1891, from which time forward until his death he conducted an individual and independent practice of general order, gaining marked prestige. In 1893-4 he served as county judge, and in the fall of the latter year was elected to represent Brookings county in the state legislature, in which he proved a valuable and conscientious working member. In politics he gave an unwavering allegiance to the Republican party, of whose principles he was an able and effective advocate, taking an active part in forwarding the party cause. He was reared in the faith of the Seventh-day Baptist church, but upon coming to Volga enrolled himself as a member of the Presbyterian church, ordering his life in harmony with the faith which he professed. He was one of the prominent members of the Masonic fraternity in this county, having been identified with Mystic Lodge, No. 89, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he was past-master; Chapter No. 17, Royal Arch Masons, at Arlington; and Golden Rod Chapter, No. 58, Order of the Eastern Star, of which his widow is also a valued member. At the time of his death Mr. Truman was the owner of sixteen hundred and forty acres of farming land, in Brookings and Kingsbury counties, and also of a considerable amount of property in Volga. He was a naturalist of marked ability and enthusiasm, and in this line held a high reputation for his intimate and comprehensive knowledge, while he had the finest collection of lepidoptera and coleoptera in the northwest, and having given much of his time in the later years of his life to study and investigation along this line and to the perfecting of his fine collection. He retired from the active practice of his profession in 1900, and thereafter gave his attention to his capitalistic and landed interests.

On the 12th of January, 1892, Mr. Truman was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Dickerson, who was born in Jordan, Minnesota, being a daughter of David D. and Emeline (Edgerton) Dickerson, natives of Oneida and Madison county, New York, respectively. The mother of Mrs. Truman was summoned into eternal rest on the 27th of December, 1900, at the age of seventy-three years, and Mr. Dickerson made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Truman, having attained the venerable age of seventy-nine years at the time of his death, December 25, 1903.

Mrs. Truman is a lady of culture and gracious personality, and is prominent in the social life of the community, while her beautiful home is a center of refined hospitality. She was educated in the seminary at Whitestown, New York, and in the Agricultural College, at Brookings, South Dakota, and was a popular teacher in the public schools of this state for several years prior to her marriage. She is a musician and also possesses much literary ability, while she and her husband passed many grateful hours in their fine library and in the arranging of his collection of specimens to which reference has been made, and which she still retains. She is an active worker in the local chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star, of which she is past worthy matron, while she has also served as grand conductress in the grand chapter of this state. She is a member of the Presbyterian church, and active in forwarding the work in its different departments. She was made administratrix of her husband's estate, and still retains a personal supervision of her various properties.

The following obituary notice of Mrs. Truman's father appeared in print at the time of his demise and will be of undoubted interest in the connection:

DIED.—David Dickerson, at Volga, on Friday, December 25, 1903, aged seventy-nine years, eleven months and three days. Mr. Dickerson was born in Lee, Oneida county, New York, January 21, 1824. He was the sixth child of John and Phoebe Dickerson. When he was one year old his parents moved to Mexico, Oswego county, where they lived for eight years. They then moved to Lee Center, Oneida county. His education was obtained in the common schools, the Gilbertville high school and the Rensselaer Academy, at Mexico, New York. He afterwards taught twelve terms of school. August 4, 1852, he was married to Emeline Edgerton, of Ava, New York, and they immediately moved to Portland, Illinois, where they resided until 1856. On account of failing health they moved to Jordan, Minnesota. In 1857 he was a member of the constitutional convention of Minnesota, representing Scott county. He was a prominent member of this convention, being on the finance, public debt and tax committees. He first came to Volga in 1881 to visit with a sick daughter, Mrs. J. S. Bandy, who died on Christmas day,—just twenty-two years prior to his death. His health has gradually failed since the death of his wife three years ago last Sunday. He was brought up in the Baptist faith, but was not a member of any denominational church. The only member of his immediate family surviving him is Mrs. M. E. Truman, of this city. For twenty years Mr. Dickerson lived in this community, first settling in Windsor township, where he lived for a few years, but later moved to Volga, where he has since resided. He still retained his land interests in Windsor, but at different times had business interests in the city, he having owned and edited the Tribune in 1885. The deceased was a wonderfully well preserved man for a person of his age. He had a jovial disposition and was always cheerful and full of sunshine.

HUBERT BERTON MATHEWS, one of the able and popular members of the faculty of the State Agricultural College of South Dakota, at Brookings, was born at Eagle Corners, Richland county, Wisconsin, on the 10th of April, 1868. His father, Louis A. Mathews, was born in Ohio, a son of Hubert and Mary Mathews, who were born near the famed old city of Strassburg, Germany, which was at that time included in the province of Alsace-Lorraine, France. Shortly after his marriage Hubert Mathews emigrated with his wife to America and settled in Ohio, where he was engaged in farming for a number of years, eventually removing thence to Eagle Corners, Wisconsin. He enlisted as a Union soldier in the war of the Rebellion, was wounded in action and taken captive by the enemy, being incarcerated in Andersonville prison and dying after exchange from the effects of captivity, his body being thrown into the gulf of Mexico while homeward bound. His widow is still living, having attained the venerable age of eighty-one years and residing in Muscoda, Wisconsin. Louis Mathews was reared to maturity in the state of Wisconsin, and there was solemnized his marriage to Miss Mary Newburn, a daughter of Jeremiah and Catherine Newburn, who were numbered among the early settlers of the Badger state, the former having been a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Maine. After his marriage the father of our subject settled on a farm in Richland county, Wisconsin, whence he finally removed to the city of Detroit, Michigan, where he remained two years, at the expiration of which he returned to his farm. He there continued in agricultural pursuits until 1882, when he came to what is now South Dakota and secured a tract of land near Willow Lake, Clark county, where he continued to reside until 1889, when he removed to Seattle, Washington, where he has since been identified with mining enterprises. After locating on his homestead in South Dakota his humble sod house served not only as the family domicile, but also as a place of worship, a school house and a place of public meeting for the settlers of this section, the house having been erected two years previously to his bringing his family to the farm. Louis and Mary Mathews became the parents of eleven children, of whom nine are yet living, while of the number five were graduated in the State Agricultural College of South Dakota, while a sixth is now a student in the institution, being a member of the class of 1905. Of the children we enter a brief record, as follows: Hubert B. is the immediate subject of this review; Sarah died at the age of four years; Emma is the wife of Professor Howard H. Hoy, of the State Agricultural College; Alta is the wife of Perry Smith, of Bisbee, Arizona; Alice is a successful teacher in the public schools of Brookings county; Roscoe A. is a resident of Great Falls, Montana, where he is identified with mining enterprises; Harry is a student in the South Dakota Agricultural College and is a leader in its athletics, having been the winner of the pole-vaulting contest in the state in the season of 1903; Leroy is on a farm in Illinois; Arthur is a student in the high school at Brookings; Oscar graduates in the class of 1904 in the same school, and Minnie, who was the sixth in order of birth, died at Willow Lake, at the age of sixteen years.

Professor Mathews entered the district school at Willow Corners, Wisconsin, when but four years of age, and was there enrolled as a pupil until he had attained the age of thirteen, after which he attended the high school at Muscoda for two terms, coming then to South Dakota and continuing his studies for one term in the school at Willow Lake. In October, 1885, he began teaching in Clark county, this state, devoting his attention to pedagogic work during the winter terms, while he was employed on the farm during the intervening summer. In 1889 he was matriculated in the State Agricultural College, where he continued his studies two terms, when he again began teaching during the winter terms at Willow Lake, in order to earn the funds with which to continue his college work during the summers. While in the college he also availed himself of every opportunity to add to his financial resources, never swerving from the course which he had defined and finally being able to realize his ambition, in the completion of the prescribed course, and he was graduated in the college as a member of the class of 1892, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Science. During his college days he was prominent in the athletic sports and in society work, having been a member of the college ball team and an enthusiastic devotee of all manly sports. He was also president of his class and editor of the college paper. During the summer which witnessed his graduation he also worked with a threshing-machine outfit, thus accumulating a reserve fund which enabled him to enter, in the autumn, the Nebraska State University, at Lincoln, and in that institution he continued his studies until the holiday vacation, when he accepted the principalship of the public schools at Clark City, South Dakota, retaining this incumbency until the following March, when he was appointed an instructor in physics and meteorology in the Agricultural College, whose sessions are held during the summer months, and he was thus enabled to do post-graduate work during the winters, availing himself of the advantages afforded in the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, and later of those of the University of Wisconsin, at Madison. In 1896 he was made active professor in the department of physics, being given the full professorship in July of that year, and he has ever since retained this important office, in which his effective and indefatigable efforts have justified the wisdom of his being chosen. At the time when he became connected with the department of physics and electrical engineering no laboratories had been provided for said department, and it is gratifying to note that the college now has supplied for this important department one of the best equipped laboratories to be found in the northwest. In 1898 the degree of Master of Science was conferred upon Professor Mathews by the South Dakota Agricultural College. He is prominently identified with the Masonic fraternity, being a member of the blue lodge, chapter and commandery at Brookings and of El Riad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Sioux Falls. He is also affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Modern Woodmen of the World. Mrs. Mathews is also a member of the Ladies' Club of Brookings.

On the 12th of November, 1894, Professor Mathews was united in marriage to Miss Eva E. Plocker, who was born near Plainfield, Wisconsin, being a daughter of James and Fannie Plocker, the former of whom was born in the city of Amsterdam, Holland, and the latter in the state of Maine. The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Mathews was Cornelius Plocker, who was a sea captain, identified with the Dutch East India Company. After his marriage James Plocker settled in the southern part of Wisconsin, where he was engaged in farming for several years, eventually removing to Plainfield, that state, where he died in the year 1884. In the same year his widow and her daughter, Eva E., wife of the subject, came to South Dakota, locating in Elkton, in which vicinity the son, Henry, and daughters, Fannie, Anna and Aura, had previously located and taken up tracts of land, which they were then holding preliminary to proving title. Of the other children of Mrs. Plocker it may be said that her daughter, Olive, was then residing in Nebraska; Edward and Frank at Bancroft; and Lucinda in Arizona. Mrs. Mathews became a student in the State Agricultural College in the autumn of 1887, thus being a classmate of her future husband. She was graduated in 1892, having previously been a successful and popular teacher in the district schools, while after her graduation she taught in the Brookings city schools. In 1894 the degree of Master of Science was conferred upon her by her alma mater, while in 1891 she completed a course in pharmacy. She was for two years in charge of the art department of the college. Professor and Mrs. Mathews have three children, Hubert, who was born on the 4th of January, 1897; Hermine, who was born on the 4th of October, 1901, and Baby, who was born at St. Petersburg, Florida, February 24, 1904.

GEORGE W. MENTCH, a leading citizen of Pennington county, is a native of Indiana county, Pennsylvania, born on September 11, 1847, and remained in his native county until he reached the age of twenty-three, being educated there and afterward following farming for a livelihood. In 1870 he moved to the neighborhood of Winfield, in southwestern Kansas, and during the next seven years was occupied in farming there. In 1877 he came to the Black Hills, arriving at Rapid City on May 17th. In December of the same year he went to the mining district around Rockerville, where he remained until the ensuing fall, when he returned to Rapid City and took up a homestead on Rapid creek, ten miles from the town. Here he engaged in farming and raising stock. He was one of the first men in this part of the state to take an active part in organizing Sunday-school and church work, and during the whole period of his residence here he has been zealous and energetic in all forms of religious enterprise. For a few years lately he has been partially retired from active business pursuits, but he still retains an interest in the stock industry. From his advent into this country he has been active and forceful in local public affairs, and is regarded as one of the leading citizens of Pennington county. In politics he is a loyal and devoted Republican, and to the service of his party he has ever been a willing and helpful contributor. His first vote was cast for General Grant for President, and since casting it he has never faltered in the support of the party's principles and candidates. Although essentially a man of peace, he has always been ready for military service when the best interests of the country demanded it. He served in defense of the Union during the closing year of the Civil war in an independent company organized in Pennsylvania, and here in the west he has never failed to take his place in the ranks against savage fury and treachery.

MAJOR JOHN A. PICKLER is a native of Washington county, Indiana, where he was born on the 24th of January, 1844, being a son of George and Emily (Martin) Pickler, the former of whom was born in Indiana and the latter in Kentucky, while both families early settled in the Hoosier state, in the pioneer epoch. The father of the subject was for many years engaged in agricultural pursuits, finally removing to Davis county, Iowa, where he engaged in merchandising, as did he later in Kirksville, Missouri, where both he and his wife passed the closing years of their earnest and useful lives. Major Pickler passed his boyhood days on the old Indiana homestead and secured his preliminary educational discipline in the district schools, after which he completed a course of study in the high school at Bloomfield, Iowa, where his parents had taken up their abode. He was later matriculated in the Iowa State University, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1870, with the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy. Shortly afterwards he entered the law department of the celebrated University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, where he completed the prescribed course and was graduated in 1872, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Laws. After thus fortifying himself for the work of his exacting profession he engaged in the practice of law in Kirksville, Missouri, whence, in 1875, he removed to Muscatine, Iowa, where he entered into a professional alliance as a member of the law firm of Hoffman, Pickler & Brown, which held high prestige at the bar of the Hawkeye state, and he continued to be thus associated until coming to South Dakota, in 1882, since which year he has retained his home in Faulk county. He possesses one of the largest and best selected libraries in the state.

Prompted by intrinsic loyalty and patriotism, Major Pickler early offered his services in defense of the Union when "grim-visaged war reared its horrid front." In 1862 he enlisted in Company D, Third Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, in which he became a non-commissioned officer. During his period of service with this command he was granted a furlough of thirty days in order that he might attend, in Philadelphia, a military training school for applicants for command in colored troops. He was later examined, in the city of St. Louis, and passed for captaincy, and there rejoining his regiment to await developments. He continued in active service with the Third Iowa Cavalry until 1864, when he veteranized and rejoined the same company and regiment, being promoted to second lieutenant, first lieutenant and finally captain of Company D, in the meanwhile having declined to be mustered in as captain in the One Hundred and Twenty-second Regiment of the United States Colored Infantry. Upon being mustered out of the Third Cavalry he was made major of the One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Regiment of United States Colored Infantry, at the age of twenty-one years, and commanded this regiment for several months at Atlanta, Georgia. This regiment was mustered out in January, 1866, and Major Pickler then received his honorable discharge. He participated in a number of the notable engagements of the great internecine conflict and made an enviable record as a faithful and valiant soldier and able commanding officer. He retains a deep interest in his old comrades in arms and is an honored member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

In September, 1882, Major Pickler came from Iowa by railroad to Mitchell, South Dakota, and thence by stage to Huron, at which point he joined a party of gentlemen who were going to the center of Faulk county to locate a town, which they hoped to make the county seat. The party proceeded by rail to Miller, Hand county, where the subject and others of the company procured lumber for claim shanties, the material being loaded with other lumber belonging to others of the party and designed for the construction of a hotel in the new town. In the procession that finally proceeded northward over the untrampled prairies there were thirteen wagons, each being well loaded. For eight miles out of Miller they followed a somewhat beaten track, but thereafter proceeded across the prairies without a trail, placing lath on various high points as they traveled, in order that they might find their way back by the same route. On sunfall of the second day they arrived on the present site of Faulkton, locating that town on the south bank of the Nixon river. The next day Major Pickler settled upon a pre-emption claim adjoining the town, and his pleasant home is located on this property, a considerable portion of which is now platted into town lots. He was active in assisting in the organization and development of Faulk county, being one of the pioneers of this part of the state, and one of the most prominent members of the bar of this section.

In politics he has ever given an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party and has long been known as one of its leaders in the state. He served as state's attorney of Adair county, Missouri, and while engaged in practice in Iowa was a Garfield elector from the second district of that state. He served as a member of the legislature of Iowa, and in 1885 was elected to the territorial legislature of South Dakota. By his old colonel of the Third Iowa Cavalry, General John W. Noble, secretary of the interior under President Harrison, he was appointed an inspector in the public-land service, in which capacity he served until his election to congress in 1889. Upon the admission of South Dakota to the Union Major Pickler was elected at large as one of the first members of congress from the state, the fifty-first congress. He was re-elected at large to the fifty-second, fifty-third and fifty-fourth congresses, and thus was a representative of his state in the lower house of the federal legislature for four successive congresses, within which he accomplished much for the furtherance of the best interests of South Dakota. He served as a member of the committees of public land, Indian affairs, invalid pensions, irrigation of arid lands, alcoholic-liquor traffic and that of claims. He was chairman of the committee on invalid pensions in the fifty-fourth congress. He was not a candidate for re-election to the fifty-fifth congress, but was a candidate for nomination for the United States senate. He received the Republican legislative caucus nomination and the unanimous vote of the caucus for more than thirty days, but the Republicans were lacking five votes of a majority and as it was deemed improbable that a Republican could be elected, the representatives of the party, with one exception, voted for Hon. James H. Kyle to succeed himself as senator, and he was duly elected. The senate succeeding President McKinley's first election was known to be very equally divided between the Republicans and the opposition, and the national Republican committee was very desirous, and so expressed itself to Major Pickler, that in case it became apparent that a Republican could not be elected, the Republican strength in South Dakota be thrown to a man who would, if necessary, vote for the tariff and financial policies of the Republican party. In accordance with this expressed desire of the national leaders, and after protracted support by the caucus, Major Pickler advised the change of vote from himself to Senator Kyle, who could be relied upon to support the measures desired. The Major is identified with the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, the Knights of Pythias and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He and his wife are prominent and valued members of the Methodist Episcopal church in their home city.

On the 16th of November, 1870, was solemnized the marriage of Major Pickler to Miss Alice M. Alt, who was born in Johnson county, Iowa, in 1848, being a daughter of Joseph A. Alt, one of the sterling pioneers of that state. They have four children, Lulu A., Madge E., Alfred A. and Dale Alice.

ALICE M. A. PICKLER is the daughter of Joseph and Eliza Alt. She was born in Johnson county, Iowa, near Iowa City, in 1848. She comes of a family very old in America. A paternal ancestor, Michel Drew by name, left the service of the king a few years prior to the outbreak of the Revolution, came to America, and enlisted and served in the Continental army. An ancestor on her mother's side, Frederick Kepford, was with Washington at Valley Forge. A family tradition has it that upon one occasion, as he slept one winter night at his accustomed place under a baggage wagon, his cue froze fast to the ground. The names of these ancestors still survive among the Christian names of the family. Mrs. Pickler's father was born near Harper's Ferry, Virginia, and when a few weeks old was taken by his family to Springfield, Ohio, where he lived until 1840. He then came to Johnson county, Iowa, and resided on land which he obtained from the government, until his death, in January, 1904, a period of sixty-four years. Her mother, Eliza Kepford, removed with her people from Pennsylvania to the same county in the 'forties, where she married Mr. Alt and where they had their home together for fifty-six years. She died February 5, 1904, one week after the death of her husband. They were the last of the early Iowa pioneers in that vicinity.

The subject of this sketch lived with her parents upon the farm, attending the district school and engaging in the duties devolving upon a girl living in the country at that time. She attended the Iowa State University for a period of six years, commencing when at the age of fourteen. She was one of the early students of that institution and is a member of the Elder Daughters of the University. She taught school a portion of the time during her attendance at the university, a part of the time in the model school of that institution. While attending the university she became acquainted with her future husband, J. A. Pickler, who was attending at the same time. They were married November 16, 1870. She accompanied her husband during his law course at Ann Arbor, Michigan; afterwards they resided at Kirksville, Missouri, two years and at Muscatine, Iowa, seven years, from whence they came as pioneers to Faulkton, Faulk county, South Dakota, their present home. She was accompanied to Dakota by her two younger sisters, Kate E. and Nellie Alt, the wives respectively of W. G. Faulkner, county auditor, and D. H. Latham, state's attorney of Faulk county, both Mrs. Pickler's nearest neighbors.

Mrs. Pickler's parents were quiet, but aggressive and positive, people, who loved good principles as their own lives, and in this atmosphere their oldest daughter, Alice, grew to womanhood. The church and the temperance reform found in her parents warm friends. During the great Civil war eight of their immediate relatives had a part, serving with fidelity and distinction. Mr. Alt was a Whig and cast his vote for John C. Fremont for President. So intense was their loyalty that it was deeply impressed on the minds of the children who were old enough to understand the editorials in the New York Tribune, which was the standard paper in the family. The enthusiasm that sent hospital supplies to the army at the front was shared by the children and young people. When the war ended a number of the younger soldiers attended school at the Iowa State University, among them Major J. A. Pickler, then twenty-two years old. A four-years acquaintance in this pleasant college ended in the marriage of Alice M. Alt to him.

Up to the time of their removal to Dakota, Mrs. Pickler's field of work was most and first of all, her family of three children, the Methodist church and a membership in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. When she, with others in that great territory of Dakota, began to make homes and "plant the roots of states," a desire for the same happy environments in the new state that had been left in the old, led her into more active work along broader lines. Her husband was a member of the territorial legislature of 1885, which gave her a wide acquaintance with many of the best and most active men and women of the two Dakotas. This friendship she cherishes at the present time. Her sphere of opportunity was still more widened upon the accession of statehood and during the eight years following she became acquainted with a number of representatives of the western states, who made their home for a time at the national capital.

Mrs. Pickler has been a member of the executive board of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in her state for many years. Also was honored as the unanimous choice for president of the State Relief Corps. She was also national chaplain of that body in 1900. She was one of the first trustees of the Methodist Episcopal church at Faulkton. She is at present president of the State Suffrage Association. She is also a grand officer of the Order of the Eastern Star. In all of these organizations she is an earnest member, but to her family she is most devoted. The children, Lulu A., wife of W. J. Frad, late editor of the Mitchell (South Dakota) Gazette; Madge E., Alfred A. and Dale A., have all done honor to themselves and parents in their college work and in assuming other responsibilities.

In their pioneer home a large lamp always hung in the window to guide the lost traveller on the great prairies to a place of shelter. The home has grown to one of ample size, of the colonial type. The light still shines and friend or caller there finds the same open-handed hospitality which helped in the early 'eighties to weave the ties that bind in unbroken friendship those pioneers who have made the history of the state of South Dakota.

CAREY W. SMITH, who is cashier of the First National Bank of Volga, Brookings county, was born in Parkersburg, Butler county, Iowa, on the 21st of March, 1869, and is a son of Henry and Emily (Marston) Smith, both of whom were born and reared in Cattaraugus county, New York, being representatives of old and honored families of the Empire state. Soon after their marriage they came to the west and located in Clayton county, Iowa, where Mr. Smith took up one hundred and sixty acres of government land, to whose cultivation he gave his attention for a few years and then removed to Butler county and purchased land near Parkersburg, where he continued to be engaged in agricultural pursuits for a score of years. In 1881 he came to South Dakota and purchased a farm in Lake county, near Madison, in which attractive little city he is now living retired, having sold his farm a number of years ago. Of their four children one died at the age of nine years and of the other three we enter the following data: Eugene L. is a grain buyer at Bryant, Hamlin county; Ida M. is the wife of Henry J. Hopley, of Bryant; and Carey W. is the immediate subject of this sketch.

Carey W. Smith received his early educational training near Parkersburg, Iowa, where he attended the public schools until he had attained the age of thirteen years, when he accompanied his parents on their removal to South Dakota, completing his studies in the public schools of Madison, Lake county, and then, in 1883, entering the State Normal School, in that place, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1888, having in the meanwhile been a successful teacher in the country schools of Lake county. After his graduation he was in turn principal of the schools at Hudson, Wentworth and Bryant, continuing to follow the pedagogic profession for four years, and proving a valuable factor in the educational field. In 1892 he was matriculated in Cornell College, at Mount Vernon, Iowa, where he completed the scientific course, being graduated as a member of the class of 1895 and receiving the degree of Bachelor of Science. In the spring of the following year Mr. Smith came to Volga and became bookkeeper in the Bank of Volga, of which he was soon afterward chosen cashier, and was also elected secretary of the Equitable Loan and Trust Company, retaining these positions for the ensuing six years. When the First National Bank was organized, in the spring of 1902, he was elected cashier of the new institution, and has thus presided over its counting room from the start, while he has gained a high reputation for his executive and administrative ability and has done much to further the interests of the bank, which is capitalized for twenty-five thousand dollars and which is one of the solid financial institutions of Brookings county. In January, 1904, the Equitable Loan and Trust Company was reorganized with Mr. Smith as president. Mr. Smith is the owner of five hundred and eighty acres of land in Brookings county, three hundred and twenty acres in McPherson county, one hundred and sixty acres in Clark county, one hundred and sixty acres in Grove county, three hundred and twenty acres in Nebraska, and one hundred and sixty acres in McLean county, North Dakota, and is making the best of improvements on the property, whose value is constantly increasing. For the past three years he has given no little attention to dealing in real estate, and his investments have invariably been judicious, while he has unbounded confidence in the still more splendid future in store for South Dakota. He was two hundred dollars in debt when he came to Volga, and it stands to his credit that he has gained so distinctive success. He is the owner of one of the finest homes in Volga, his attractive and modern residence having been erected at a cost of over two thousand dollars. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Prohibition party, so far as national issues are involved, and fraternally he is affiliated with the local lodges of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen of America. Both he and his wife are accomplished musicians, and as vocalists they are much in demand in connection with social and public entertainments, as well as in connection with church work. Mrs. Smith was engaged as a vocalist in connection with evangelical work in various states prior to her marriage, and is the possessor of a soprano voice of excellent timbre and range and also of thorough cultivation. Mr. Smith is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and his wife of the Baptist church, but as neither of these denominations have organizations in Volga they attend the Presbyterian church and take an active part in various departments of its work. He is a teacher in the Sunday school, of which he is superintendent at the time of this writing, while he is also president of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. Both he and his wife are members of the choir.

On the 10th of April, 1899, Mr. Smith was united in marriage to Miss Caroline (Porter) Runk, of McKeesport, Pennsylvania, where she was born and reared, being a daughter of Edward Winfield and Margaret (Gillmen) Runk. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have a winsome little daughter, Dorothy, who was born on the 24th of March, 1900.

ROBERT F. KERR, the able and popular librarian of the State Agricultural College of South Dakota, at Brookings, is a native of the state of Indiana, having been born at Sugar Grove, Tippecanoe county, on the 12th of April, 1850, a son of Andrew J. and Nancy (Sayers) Kerr. His father was born in Franklin county, Ohio, and was a son of Samuel Kerr, who was a native of Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, being the sixth son of John Kerr, who was born in northern Ireland, whence he emigrated to the United States in the colonial epoch of our national history, while he was a valiant soldier in the Continental line during the war of the Revolution, and he was numbered among the sterling pioneers of the old Keystone state, the family having been principally engaged in agricultural pursuits during the various generations. Andrew J. Kerr removed from Ohio to Tippecanoe county, Indiana, in company with an elder brother, being a lad of eleven years at the time, and he forthwith initiated his independent career and began to depend upon his own resources. He continued to work by the month until his marriage to Miss Eliza Ward, two children being born of this union,—Jesse, who is a resident of Sioux Falls, South Dakota; and Josephine, who became the wife of John Sprague, her death occurring in Tippecanoe county, Indiana. After the death of his first wife Andrew J. Kerr married Miss Nancy Sayers, whose father was Robert Sayers, while the maiden name of her mother was McMillan. Robert Sayers was a native of Virginia, and the family name has been identified with the history of Indiana from the early pioneer days. The McMillan family is of Scotch-Irish extraction, and representatives of the same were patriot soldiers in the war of the Revolution. The mother of the subject died in 1864, and his father subsequently consummated a third marriage, having devoted his active life to agricultural pursuits in Tippecanoe county, Indiana, while he is now living retired in New Richmond, that state, having attained the venerable age of eighty-four years, while he still retains possession of his old homestead farm, which he purchased in 1848. Of his second marriage were born six children, concerning whom we incorporate brief record, as follows: Robert F. is the immediate subject of this review; Clara is the wife of James D. Thomas, who resides near Wingate, Indiana; Martha is the wife of William Bennett, who resides near New Richmond, that state; Susan H., who is a maiden, resides in Wingate, Indiana; Mary E. is the wife of J. L. Hayes, of Newtown, Indiana; and Emma died in early childhood. Of the third marriage were born three children, namely: Thomas L., who resides near Otterbein, Indiana; Hattie F., who is the wife of Daniel E. Storms, now secretary of state of Indiana; and Nettie, who is the wife of John Rust, residing near Otterbein, that state.

Robert F. Kerr received his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools in the vicinity of his home, continuing his studies in this way until he had attained the age of nineteen years, while during the summer vacations he gave his attention to farm work. At the age noted he began teaching school in Warren county, Indiana, being thus engaged during one winter term and then entering Wabash College, at Crawfordsville, Indiana, where he continued his studies one term, after which he again taught a term in the same school as before. In the spring of 1872 he was matriculated in Asbury College, now known as DePauw University, at Greencastle, Indiana, while he thereafter continued to teach and attend college at intervening periods, depending upon his pedagogic efforts for the securing of the funds to defray his college expenses. He was a student in the college mentioned during the entire sessions of the years 1876-7, completing the classical course and being graduated as a member of the class of 1877, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He then secured a position as a teacher in the public schools at Kentland, Indiana, and in the spring of 1878 was chosen county superintendent of the schools of Newton county, that state. In April, 1878, he went to Japan, where he was for eighteen months employed as a teacher in the provincial school at Hir Osaki, returning to the United States in October, 1880, and during the year 1881 and a part of 1882 he was an assistant in the surveying of the route of the Clover Leaf Railroad through Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, knowing nothing of the details of the business at the time he joined the surveying party, but so rapidly accumulating technical knowledge that within nine months he was placed in charge of a corps of men. Thereafter he was assistant principal in schools at Blair, Nebraska, until 1885, when he came to Brookings, South Dakota, as principal of the preparatory department and teacher of history in the State Agricultural College. The school had been organized but one year previously, and he has thus been intimately identified with the work and history of this now flourishing and important institution, having known in a personal way every student who has been graduated in the college. In 1892 he went out of the institution, which was placed under different executive control at the time, but in January, 1899, he was recalled, assuming the principalship of the preparatory department and also being placed in charge of the library of the college, while for the past year he has had the supervision of the library and the college extension work. After leaving the college in 1892 Professor Kerr was for one year traveling representative of a leading book-publishing concern, while in 1894 he was elected county superintendent of schools for Brookings county, of which position he continued incumbent until he was again called to official duty in the college as noted. He received the degree of Master of Arts from DePauw University in 1880. In politics he has always given an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party, in whose cause he has taken a lively interest. He is a member of the directorate of the State Historical Society of South Dakota, and has made valuable contributions to the literature pertaining to the annals of the state. Professor Kerr is an appreciative member of the Masonic fraternity, with which he has been identified since 1874, being identified with the lodge, chapter and commandery in Brookings and also with the El Riad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, in Sioux Falls. He also holds membership in the local chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star, of which he is the past grand patron of the grand chapter of the state, while at the present time he is worshipful master of Brookings Lodge, No. 24, Free and Accepted Masons. He is now preparing to follow through the circle of the Scottish-rite degrees of Masonry. He is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and was also a member of the Knights of Pythias until the lapse of the lodge organization in Brookings, while he is affiliated with the Beta Theta Pi college fraternity. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, and he is a steward of the local congregation and also a member of the board of trustees, taking an active interest in the various departments of the church work.

E. E. HEMINGWAY.—Some wise man has well said that "A country is largely measured by the kind of men it turns out"; another has said that "Some men are born great, some achieve greatness, and that some have greatness thrust upon them". The subject of this sketch, Hon. E. E. Hemingway, has come to his present eminence by worthy achievement and the nobility of hard and persistent labor. He was born in the township of Marathon, in Lapeer county, Michigan, on the 16th day of December, 1861. His father was Hon. H. L. Hemingway, who was a son of Needham Hemingway, a native of Canandaigua, New York. The Hemingway family came to this county originally from Wales. The grandfather, Needham Hemingway, was a contractor of mills, and at the same time was also engaged to a considerable extent in farming. He came to the state of Michigan in an early day, braving the rigors of a new country, and there spent the remainder of his sturdy life in the above occupation.

Hon. H. L. Hemingway first saw the light of day on a farm where he was afterward reared, having received by nature and hard manual labor a strong constitution. He early in life became engaged in the lumber business and the fruitful occupation of farming. While thus gaining an honorable livelihood, he was chosen by the people of Lapeer county, Michigan, to fill many important offices in the township and county.

He was united in marriage to Lydia E. Tower, whose family came from the state of New York, from the same vicinity that the Hemingway family had previously emigrated. Mrs. Lydia Hemingway departed this life March 31, 1876. In the course of time H. L. Hemingway was again united in marriage, this time to Susan C. Tower. He was the father of nine children, four of whom still survive him. Sarah (deceased) was the wife of William Larkin, of Otter Lake, Michigan. Ernest is a resident of Otter Lake, Michigan. Laura (deceased) was the wife of James A. Tompkins, of Oxford, Michigan. Ella J. is the wife of W. S. Cook, of Pontiac, Michigan. Eugene died in young manhood. Ida, the sixth child of the family, died in infancy. E. E., the subject, was the seventh child of this excellent family. The eighth child, Ada, died at the tender age of thirteen years. The ninth child, Bruce W., now resides at Otter Lake, Michigan, on the old Hemingway homestead. Hon. H. L. Hemingway passed away upon the 11th day of April, 1903.

While the subject of this interesting sketch applied himself industriously in the mill and on the farm, he managed to receive his primary schooling in Marathon township, Lapeer county, Michigan, until he was fifteen years of age, at which time he entered college at Oxford, Michigan, and there spent three years, from which institution he graduated. He afterward took a commercial course in the Pontiac International Business College, which is situated in the same state. Thus amply fitted, he was called to take a position in the bank of William Peter, of Columbiaville, Michigan, which position he ably filled for five years. Upon August 17, 1887, he removed to Watertown, South Dakota, where he at once engaged with the Dakota Loan and Trust Company, and at the same time he assisted the Watertown National Bank, filled the office of city clerk of Watertown for three years and for two years was the manager of the electric light plant. Mr. Hemingway continued actively in business in Watertown for five years. During the last half of 1892 he was employed by the W. H. Stokes Milling Company, of Watertown, as collector and salesman, making extensive trips into South Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois and Missouri. In October, 1892, he removed to Brookings, South Dakota, and engaged in the retail boot and shoe trade, and continued successfully in this business until December, 1894. In 1895 he was appointed public examiner of South Dakota, by Governor Sheldon, in which position he ably and efficiently served his term of two years, which expired March 6, 1897. He then engaged with the Minneapolis Journal until May, 1898. After the expiration of this work he engaged with the George D. Barnard Company, of St. Louis, Missouri, as traveling salesman for the space of two years. On May 1, 1900, he engaged with the C. Ross Coal Company, of Sheboygan, Wisconsin, and traveled for them in North and South Dakota, Minnesota and Iowa. Upon December 15, 1902, he was again appointed public examiner for the state of South Dakota, to fill an unexpired term, and was again reappointed in January, 1903, to hold until March, 1905.

Believing that it was not good for man to be alone, Mr. Hemingway was married on the 29th day of June, 1892, to Miss Jennie E. Wing, of Brookings, who was a daughter of O. C. and Elizabeth Wing, who came to Brookings in 1882. Her father still resides there, the mother having passed away on May 14, 1900. These sturdy people were of English descent. Mr. Hemingway's family consists of four children, three sons and one daughter: Charles, ten years of age; Robert, aged eight years; Grace, aged five, and Frank, but five months old.

Mr. Hemingway has always been to an eminent degree a public-spirited man, actively engaged in the promotion of any and all worthy causes. He is a member of the Masonic order, and has attained the degree of the Royal Arch and Temple. He also belongs to the Eastern Star, of Brookings, and El Riad Temple, of the Mystic Shrine, at Sioux Falls. He is a charter member of the Woodmen at Brookings, and was the first worthy advisor. The Watertown Knights of Pythias lodge still claims him as a member in good and regular standing, as also does the lodge of Royal Neighbors, to which Mrs. Hemingway belongs. In politics he is a stanch Republican and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

JOHN H. FIREY, one of the representative business men of the city of Aberdeen, is a native of the state of Illinois, having been born in Edinburg, Christian county, on the 13th of November, 1859, and being a son of Henry and Minerva (Lord) Firey, the former of whom was born in Maryland and the latter in Ohio, the paternal grandfather, Joseph F. Firey, having been likewise born in Maryland. Joseph Tilden Lord, the maternal grandfather, who was an early pioneer in Ohio, was born in Vermont, and migrated to Ohio, and was a soldier in the war of 1812, in which connection he served under General William Henry Harrison, having been present at the battle of Tippecanoe, and also that of the Thames, where the famous Indian warrior, Tecumseh, met his death. Joseph F. Firey was a pioneer of Illinois. He removed to Sangamon county, and settled near the site of the present city of Springfield, the capital of that state. The old homestead still remains in the possession of the family, and there the grandfather died when seventy years of age. The maternal grandfather of the subject likewise became a pioneer of Illinois, and was there accidentally killed shortly after locating in the state, in the later 'thirties. The father of the subject of this sketch continued to follow the vocation to which he had been reared, becoming a successful and influential farmer of Sangamon county, where both he and his wife passed the closing years of their lives. Of their eight children seven are living, John H. having been the youngest of the family.

John H. Firey was reared on the old homestead farm and received his preliminary educational training in the district schools, after which he continued his studies in Carthage College, at Carthage, Illinois, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1882. On the 17th of August of that year he made his advent in what is now the city of Aberdeen, South Dakota, the place having been at that time scarcely more than a frontier village. He had previously become a registered pharmacist in Illinois and upon locating in Aberdeen he at once established himself in the retail drug business. His enterprise proved successful from its initiation and with the rapid settling of the surrounding country and the development and substantial upbuilding of Aberdeen the business rapidly increased in scope and importance, so that he gradually developed a manufacturing and jobbing department, and it was this feature that led to his becoming one of the organizers and incorporators of the Jewett Drug Company, in 1903, while he is one of the stockholders in the concern and in the same holds the office of manager. The company utilize a fine building, one hundred by one hundred and fifty feet in dimensions, four stories in height, besides basement, and constructed of light-colored pressed brick, with granite trimmings, and the wholesale and jobbing business already built up far surpasses the most sanguinary expectations of the interested principals, while the enterprise is a distinctive acquisition to the jobbing interests of the city. Mr. Firey is the general manager of the business and is handling its affairs with marked discrimination, being straightforward in his methods, forming his plans readily and carrying them to proper execution, and thus proving an able administrative officer and a business man who commands unqualified confidence and esteem. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Democratic party, and he has held various local offices, including that of postmaster of Aberdeen, to which position he was appointed in 1885, serving four years. Fraternally he is identified with the lodge, chapter and commandery of the Masonic order and also with the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 25th of January, 1883, Mr. Firey was united in marriage to Miss Sue A. Mack, of Carthage, Illinois, she being a daughter of David Mack, a leading member of the bar of that section and president of the Hancock National Bank of Carthage. Of this union have been born two children, Carl R., who is an assistant in the drug establishment of which his father is manager, and Margaret, who is still attending school.

JAMES HENRY McLAUGHLIN, who is now conducting a trading store at the Oak Creek sub-issue station of the Standing Rock Indian reservation, was born in Faribault, Minnesota, on the 15th of January, 1868, being a son of Major James McLaughlin, who was born in the province of Ontario, Canada, of staunch Scottish ancestry. He was educated in the Dominion of Canada, where he was reared to maturity, and as a young man he removed to Minnesota, having been engaged in blacksmithing at Faribault for several years, and having removed thence to the territory of Dakota in 1871, in company with his family. He located at Fort Totten, Devil's Lake Indian agency, in what is now North Dakota, where he remained ten years, having been there engaged as agency blacksmith and head farmer on the reservation. Upon the death of Major Forbes he was appointed government agent, about 1881, and was transferred to the Standing Rock agency, North Dakota, where he still remains incumbent of this responsible office.

The subject of this sketch passed his youthful years at the Devil's Lake agency, and there received fair educational advantages. About 1886 he secured a clerkship in the trading store of the firm of Perkins & Roberts, at the agency, and in the following year went to St. John's College, at Collegeville, Minnesota, where he continued his educational work during the ensuing year. He thereafter worked for different traders at the Standing Rock agency, and finally passed another term in college, thus effectually rounding out his education. For three years thereafter he was in the employ of M. H. Angevine, on the Standing Rock reservation, and then engaged in ranching on the Cannon Ball river, giving his attention principally to the raising of cattle, while he gave his place the title of Circle M ranch. He there continued operations until 1891, when he entered the employ of Parkin Brothers, leading Indian traders, with whom he remained, under most pleasant and favorable relations, for the following seven years. In 1885 he made a tour with the famous Sitting Bull combination, under Colonel Allen, acting as interpreter. In 1893, while still in the employ of Parkin Brothers, he visited the World's Columbian Exposition, in Chicago, and the following season was passed at the famous eastern resort, Coney Island, where he had on exhibition Rain-in-the-Face and other Indians, who were there exploited by his employers, the Parkin Brothers. In 1897, when the elder of the brothers died, Mr. McLaughlin purchased their trading business at the Standing Rock agency, conducting the same two years and then selling out to Mr. Parkin, in whose employ he had formerly been retained. About three months later he went to the national capital and there secured from the department on Indian affairs a license to trade at the Oak Creek sub-issue station, where he has since been located, and where he controls a large and profitable business. In addition to his trading post he also has a large number of cattle on the range, as well as horses, and conducts a successful enterprise in this line.

In 1882 Mr. McLaughlin went out on a buffalo chase, in company with about five hundred Indians and five other white men, and they were out about one week, within which time they killed about five thousand of the great animals, which are now practically extinct, this having been next to the last big chase in the history of slaughtering the bison on the great plains of the west. In politics Mr. McLaughlin is a staunch advocate of the principles of the party in power.

On the 28th of January, 1891, Mr. McLaughlin was united in marriage to Miss Annie Goudreau, of Grand River Indian agency, South Dakota, she being a daughter of Robert Goudreau, who has been identified with the government Indian service for a number of years. Mr. and Mrs. McLaughlin have four children, namely: Sidney, Louisa, Henry and Imelda.

JOHN CURTIS SIMMONS, the able and popular cashier of the Bank of Frederick, at Frederick, Brown county, was born in Grangeville, Saratoga county, New York, in the year 1857, and is a son of William Simmons, who was born and reared in Ireland, whence he emigrated to the United States and took up his residence in Saratoga county, New York, where he died when our subject was but eighteen months of age, so that the latter has very meager data in regard to his family genealogy. The subject was reared in his native county, in whose public schools he secured excellent educational advantages, so that he became eligible for pedagogic honors, having there been successfully engaged in teaching for about three years. In 1882 he came as a pioneer to the present state of South Dakota and located in Aberdeen, in which place he arrived on the 18th of May. He entered the employ of C. A. Bliss, merchant and banker, with whom he remained until 1886, when he came to Frederick and, with others, purchased the Dow Brothers' Bank, organizing then the Bank of Frederick, in which institution he has ever since been incumbent of the office of cashier, handling his executive duties with marked discrimination and ability and having thus done much to maintain the bank on a firm foundation and to gain to it high popularity. The institution controls a large and successful business, being capitalized for fifteen thousand dollars and having a surplus fund of half that amount. During the financial depression of 1893-4 the bank was one of the few which, through careful and conservative management, successfully weathered the storm and added to its prestige and solidity, no assessment having been levied on its stockholders during that critical period. In addition to his banking interests Mr. Simmons is the owner of a large amount of valuable real estate in the county and also has important interests in live stock. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Republican party, and fraternally has attained to the thirty-second degree of Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite Masonry, being also affiliated with the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He has shown much interest in public affairs and in the promotion of all objects tending to conserve the general welfare and progress. He was a member of the first legislature of the state, having been elected to represent his district in 1889.

On the 3d of December, 1891, Mr. Simmons was united in marriage to Miss Emma Burton, who was born in Wisconsin, being a daughter of William Burton, who came to South Dakota in 1882, becoming one of the honored and influential pioneers of Brown county. Mr. and Mrs. Simmons have one child, Ruth.

CHALKLEY H. DERR has the distinction of having been elected the first judge of the courts of Faulk county, while he continued on the bench for the long period of twelve successive years, and is still engaged in the practice of his profession in Faulkton. He is a native of the old Buckeye state and a son of one of its pioneer families. He was born near the village of Salem, Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 14th of April, 1840, and is a son of Charles and Rebecca (Elliott) Derr, both of whom were likewise native of that state. The paternal great-grandfather of the Judge was a patriot soldier in the Continental line during the war of the Revolution, and his great-grandfather took part in the war of 1812, while the subject himself upheld the military prestige of the name by his valiant service in the Civil war. Frederick Derr, grandfather of the Judge, was born in Pennsylvania, whither his father had come from Germany prior to the war of the Revolution. He removed to Ohio when a young man and located four miles south of Salem, Columbiana county, being one of the early settlers in that section of the state, where he engaged in farming and also in the work of his trade, that of cooper, while he and his good wife there made their home until they were called from the scenes of life's activities. The father of the subject was a millwright by trade and also owned a good farm in Columbiana county, his death occurring when the future judge was but thirteen years of age, so that the latter was soon thrown on his own resources, having been in the fullest sense the artificer of his own fortunes and having accumulated a competency through his own efforts.

Judge Derr secured his early educational discipline in the district and select schools of his native county, where he was reared to maturity. In September, 1861, as a young man of twenty-one years, he gave significant evidence of his patriotism by enlisting in defense of the Union, in response to President Lincoln's first call. He became a private in Company I, Nineteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, commanded by Colonel Samuel Bailey, and was mustered in at Alliance, Ohio, as orderly sergeant, whence he proceeded with his regiment to Cincinnati, where they were equipped, and went forward to Louisville and then to Columbia, Kentucky, where they passed the winter. The regiment thence proceeded into Tennessee in the spring and was actively engaged in the battle of Shiloh, in April, as well as the battle of Perryville, Kentucky, and the siege of Corinth, from which city it went to Holly Springs, Mississippi, and to Florence and to Battle Creek, and thence over the mountains with General Buell's forces, reaching Louisville after having had daily skirmishes with General Bragg's forces. Thence they went to Stone river, where, owing to a severe attack of rheumatism and the results of an injury received in the battle of Shiloh, the subject became incapacitated for active service and was given a three-months sick furlough, passing the time in Ohio and then being assigned to the quartermaster's department and being stationed at Nashville, Tennessee, for two years, having taken part in the last battle in that city, and having been honorably discharged, on the 1st of June, 1865, so that he served during practically the entire period of the war. He returned home in July and was shortly afterward married, after which he removed to Jones county, Iowa, where he purchased a large tract of land and became also interested in a large grain, stock and hardware business, with which he was identified for two years. In the meanwhile he had continued to devote much attention to a careful study of the law, and had served six years in the office of justice of the peace. Owing to impaired health he came to Faulk county, South Dakota, in 1882, taking up his residence here before the county was organized, and here he has ever since maintained his home, having taken a prominent part in public affairs and in the upbuilding of the city of Faulkton, while he was admitted to the bar of the district court in 1888 and to the supreme court in 1899. He was elected the first judge of the courts of the county upon its organization, in 1884, and was retained in the office, by successive re-elections, for the consecutive period of twelve years, making a most admirable record for his fair and impartial rulings, based on the law and the evidence in the various cases, while it should be noted in the connection that he never had one of his decisions reversed by the higher tribunals. In politics the Judge is a stalwart Republican, and is thoroughly well fortified in his convictions as to governmental policies, and fraternally he is identified with the Grand Army of the Republic and the Masonic order, in which latter he has attained the Knights Templar degrees and also become a member of Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He is one of the strong, true, public-spirited men of Faulk county, and is held in the utmost confidence and esteem in the community.

On the 23d of August, 1865, was solemnized the marriage of Judge Derr to Miss Eliza J. Camp, who was born and reared in Ohio, being a daughter of Levi Camp. She was summoned into eternal rest on the 31st of April, 1891, and is survived by three children, namely: Kate May, who is the wife of I. Allen Cornwell, of Faulkton; C. W., who is a resident of Turton, Spink county; and Inez, who is the wife of J. F. Armstrong, of Faulkton. On the 21st of December, 1868, Judge Derr was united in marriage to Mrs. V. C. (Stewart) Coffee, who was born in Beaver, Pennsylvania, being a daughter of Samuel Stewart and the widow of Dr. J. L. Coffee.

JAMES W. WILSON.—The State Agricultural College of South Dakota, at Brookings, is signally fortunate in having secured the subject of this sketch as a member of its faculty, and his efforts in the connection have not failed of due appreciation on the part of those interested in this valued institution. Professor Wilson was born on a farm near Traer, Tama county, Iowa, on the 12th of February, 1871, and his is the distinction of being a son of the present able incumbent of the office of secretary of the United States department of agriculture, James Wilson, while the maiden name of his mother was Esther Wilbur, the ancestry in the agnatic line tracing back to Scotch origin, while on the maternal side the lineage is of German extraction, the Wilburs having early become identified with the history of the state of New York. James Wilson was numbered among the pioneers of Iowa, and so familiar to the public is the record of his life and services that a recapitulation is not demanded in this connection.

The subject of this review passed his boyhood days on the homestead farm, while his early educational discipline was secured in the district schools, which he continued to attend until he had attained the age of fifteen years, when he entered the high school at Traer, Iowa, where he continued his studies for two years, after which he returned to the home farm, where he was engaged in the caring for the live stock until he had attained his legal majority. He then, in 1893, was matriculated in the State Agricultural College of Iowa, at Ames, where he completed the prescribed four-years course in science and agriculture, being graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Science as a member of the class of 1896, while two years later his alma mater conferred upon him the degree of Master of Science. For one year he was assistant professor of animal husbandry in the same institution, and he then went to the national capital in the capacity of private secretary to his father, who had been chosen secretary of agriculture. This incumbency Professor Wilson retained for three years, during the last two of which he was a student in the law department of Georgetown University, where he attended the evening sessions. After leaving Washington he passed a year in the law office of the firm of Hubbard, Dawley & Wheeler, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and during the succeeding year he had charge of a farm of eight hundred acres in that state. On the 22d of May, 1902, he was chosen director of the state experiment station established at the State Agricultural College of South Dakota and was simultaneously made professor of agricultural and animal husbandry at the college and placed in charge of the farm and the college dairy. He has proved an able, discriminating and enthusiastic worker in these important capacities, and has done much to increase the prestige of the institution, while within the year 1903 will have been completed on the farm a fine barn for experimental work in his line, the building representing an expenditure of twelve thousand dollars. Professor Wilson will thus have excellent facilities for carrying on his work, including original research and experimentation, and he is certain to make his department one of great value to not only the students of the college, but to the farmers of the entire state. He is a close observer and indefatigable student, and has had the advantages of wide travel, having visited every state in the Union with the exception of two or three in New England, and having also made trips to Cuba and Jamaica. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Republican party; his religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church, and fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, being affiliated with lodge and chapter in Washington, D. C., and the commandery in Brookings, South Dakota.

JOHN W. HESTON.—The state of South Dakota has realized a development and progress almost unprecedented in the lines of civic and material advancement of a comparatively new commonwealth, and it is gratifying to note that a proper estimate has been placed upon the educational facilities demanded within its borders. As the state represents an essentially agricultural section it is most consistent that we find maintained here that most excellent institution, the State Agricultural College, which is located at Brookings, Brookings county, while the same is favored in having as its executive head the subject of this sketch, who is president of the college.

John William Heston was born in Bellefonte, Center county, Pennsylvania, on the 1st of February, 1854, being a son of Elisha B. and Catherine (Eckel) Heston, both of whom were likewise born in the old Keystone state. Elisha B. Heston was a son of John W. Heston, who was born in Hestonville, a suburb of the city of Philadelphia, and the name was given to the village in honor of the family, the name having been prominently identified with the annals of the history of Pennsylvania for several generations, while the lineage is traced back to Scottish and English origin. The paternal grandfather of the subject devoted his active business life to mercantile pursuits. Elisha B. Heston, who was a successful manufacturer of carriages for many years, removed with his family to Kansas in 1879, becoming one of the honored pioneers of Plainville, Rooks county, where he passed the residue of his life, his death resulting from an injury received in a runaway accident. He passed away in 1896, at the age of sixty-seven years, his wife having died in the preceding year, from a sunstroke, being sixty-five years of age at the time. Both were devoted members of the Presbyterian church, and the father was a staunch Republican in his political proclivities, being a man of highest integrity and excellent business ability. Of the six children of this estimable couple we enter brief record as follows: Mary, who became the wife of William Henderson, is now deceased; John W. is the immediate subject of this review; Daniel died at the age of seven years; Emma C. passed away in childhood; Robert H. is a resident of Seattle, Washington, and is interested in the gold-mining industry; and Sallie is the wife of William L. Clark, of Salina, Kansas.

John W. Heston, to whom this sketch is dedicated, passed his youthful days in Boalsburg, Pennsylvania, where he attended the public schools until he had attained the age of eighteen years, when he became a student in the Center Hall Normal School, at Center Hall, that state, remaining two years in that institution, after which he was engaged in teaching for one year, at the expiration of which he was matriculated in the State Agricultural College of Pennsylvania, at Bellefonte, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1879. Shortly afterward he was made a member of the faculty of his alma mater, where he continued to teach for eleven years, having been principal of the preparatory department for seven years and assistant in agriculture, while for three years he was professor of the science and art of teaching. After leaving the college in Pennsylvania Professor Heston, who had received from the institution the degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Master of Arts, removed to the city of Seattle, Washington, where he was incumbent of the position of principal of the high school for the ensuing three years, resigning this incumbency to accept the presidency of the State Agricultural College of Washington, at Pullman, remaining in tenure of this executive office for two years, within which he further augmented his prestige as an able educator and administrative factor. He was then called to his present position at the head of the South Dakota Agricultural College, over whose affairs he has thus presided, and with signal ability and discrimination, since 1896, having done much to further the precedence of the institution in all departments of its work and to raise the standard of scholarship to a point which places the college in the front rank among similar institutions of the sort in the Union. He has brought about a marked amplification of the courses of study, introduced the elective system of work and made the requirements for graduation notably higher, while during his regime the facilities and accessories of the college have been materially augmented. The college was established in 1883, almost a decade before the admission of the state to the Union, and at the time when President Heston assumed his present office the enrollment of students showed but one hundred and thirty-five names. The appreciative estimate now placed upon the college is shown in the fact that during the year 1903 the enrollment has reached six hundred names, while the finances of the college have increased in like proportion, so that the future of the institution is most gratifying to contemplate, as is, indeed, its present status.

President Heston takes the deepest interest in his students, being thoroughly appreciative of the value of education and sparing no pains to aid those who are striving to broaden their sphere of knowledge. It is not strange that his sympathy and timely aid are thus extended, for he gained his own education through personal effort, having worked his way through college and earned the funds for his maintenance during the period of his collegiate course. He received from his alma mater the degrees of Bachelor and Master of Arts, while the degrees of Doctor of Philosophy and of Laws were conferred upon him by the University of Seattle. He was president of the State Teachers' Association of South Dakota in 1902, and is a member of the American Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations, of which he was a vice-president during 1902. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Republican party, and both he and his wife are prominent and zealous members of the Baptist church, while fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. During his college days he was affiliated with the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity.

On the 16th of August, 1881, was solemnized the marriage of Dr. Heston to Miss Mary E. Calder, who was born in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, a daughter of Dr. James and Eliza D. Calder, the former of whom was for a decade president of the State Agricultural College of Pennsylvania. He is now deceased, and his widow resides in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Heston received her education in the public schools of Harrisburg and the State College of Pennsylvania, being an accomplished musician and a woman of gracious refinement. Dr. and Mrs. Heston are the parents of two children: Charles, who was born on the 9th of February, 1883, is a member of the junior class in the University of Wisconsin, where he is completing a course in electrical engineering, and Edward, who was born on the 20th of September, 1884, was graduated in pharmacy in the State Agricultural College of South Dakota, as a member of the class of 1903, and is now engaged in the drug business in Aberdeen, South Dakota, having formed a partnership with D. E. Crowley.

THOMAS QUINBY LOVELAND, one of the honored pioneers of Brookings county, is a native of the state of Ohio, having been born in Trumbull county, on the 14th of January, 1820, and being a son of Azhel and Emily (Newell) Loveland, both of whom were born in the state of Connecticut, their marriage being solemnized in Ohio, where Mr. Loveland was engaged in farming and followed the trade of carpenter until his son Thomas, subject of this review, attained such age as to make it possible for him to assume the management of the farm. When the subject was sixteen years of age his parents removed to the northern part of Trumbull county, locating near the town of Bristol, where the father turned his attention to lumbering, having owned and operated a sawmill, in which Thomas was actively employed for some time. Azhel Loveland died in the year 1851, his death resulting from an accident,—a slight cut in the knee developing into blood poisoning, from which he died nine days after receiving the injury, being survived by his wife and five children, concerning the latter of whom we incorporate the following brief record: Thomas Q. is the immediate subject of this review; Emily, who is deceased, was the wife of Hiram Williams, of Trumbull county, Ohio; Martha is the wife of Smith Travis, of Bristol, that county; Mary, the widow of John Russell, is a resident of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; and Sidney A. is a resident of Ellsworth, Minnesota. The devoted mother was summoned into eternal rest in 1881, her death occurring in Bristol, Ohio.

Thomas Q. Loveland continued to be associated with his father in business until the death of the latter, and continued the enterprise one year thereafter in the interest of the family. On the 2d of April, 1850, he was united in marriage to Miss Roana House, a daughter of Alvin and Sallie (Meibe) House, who came to Ohio from Stanestead, Canada, passing the remainder of their lives in the old Buckeye state. Our subject and his wife walked side by side on the journey of life for more than half a century, strong in mutual love and confidence, and the silver cord was finally loosened when the devoted wife and helpmeet was summoned to the land of the leal, on the 19th of March, 1901, at the age of sixty-nine years. She was a woman of noble and gracious character and was loved by all who came within the sphere of her influence. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Loveland were born nine children, of whom two died in infancy. Of those who attained maturity we enter data as follows: Rozelia, the widow of Enos M. Hunt, is a resident of Alexandria, Minnesota; Ella is the wife of Dr. James L. Colegrove, of Brookings, South Dakota; Edna is the wife of Austin Maxwell, of Kanaranzi, Minnesota; Emma is the wife of George Thayer, of Brookings; Quinby A. resides in Fairfield, Wisconsin; Susie is the wife of Herman M. Harden, editor and publisher of the Huron Democrat, at Huron, South Dakota; and Addie is the wife of Judson R. Towne, a teacher in the high school at Duluth, Minnesota.

After retiring from the lumbering business the subject conducted a hotel at Bristol, Ohio, about two years, at the expiration of which he removed to Baraboo, Sauk county, Wisconsin, in which locality he rented a farm, to whose cultivation he devoted his attention for the ensuing year, and he thereafter was in the hotel business in Baraboo for two years. This was about the time of the discovery of gold at Pike's Peak, Colorado, and Mr. Loveland was among those who set forth to seek fortune in the new Eldorado. He set forth for the gold fields and the company proceeded as far as Fort Carney, where they encountered persons returning from Pike's Peak, their reports being so unfavorable as to cause many of the outgoing party to abandon the trip and return home, among the number being the subject. He was thereafter engaged in farming in Sauk county, Wisconsin, for two years, within which time the dark clouds of civil war obscured the national horizon. In 1863 he tendered his services in defense of the Union, enlisting as a private in Company F, Third Wisconsin Cavalry, with which he continued in active service until December, 1865, when he received his honorable discharge, at Madison, Wisconsin. It was his good fortune to receive no wound while fighting for the integrity of the nation, nor was he ill at any time during his term of service. He was discharged as second lieutenant and brevetted first lieutenant of his company, having been promoted to this office within a year after his enlistment, while he proved a valiant and faithful soldier of the republic. In the spring of 1866, with money which he had saved from his pay as a soldier, he purchased sixteen acres of land at Russell's Corners, Sauk county, Wisconsin, and there began raising hops. He continued this enterprise one year, disposing of his property after gathering his first crop, for which he secured sixty cents a pound. From this source he realized sufficient money to purchase a farm of fifty-five acres, in the same township. He remained on this farm until 1872, when he sold the property and started for the west, his financial resources at the time being represented in the sum of one thousand dollars. He proceeded to Rock county, Minnesota, where he entered claim to a homestead, proving on the same and there continuing to follow agricultural pursuits until he found that his efforts were rendered futile by conditions over which he had no control. In 1878 the grasshoppers destroyed his crops, and for five years their depredations were such that he was not able to even raise seed for planting, being compelled to mortgage his farm and eventually losing the property. In 1878 he determined to try his fortunes in South Dakota, whither he came with a team, a small supply of farming implements and seven or eight head of cattle, the only vestiges of his years of toil and endeavor. He settled near the little village of Fountain, in Aurora township, Brookings county, where he took up pre-emption and tree claims, thus coming into possession of a half section of land. His first effort was to bring about the required improvement of his tree claim, which he did by the setting out of ten acres of trees, and he bent himself earnestly to the work before him and soon a definite success attended his efforts. In time he erected on his farm a commodious and substantial house, good barn and other buildings, while he brought two hundred and forty acres of the tract under a high state of cultivation, developing one of the valuable farms of this section of the state. In 1900 he disposed of his farm, having become the owner of an entire section, and from this sale he realized eleven thousand dollars,—a fact which stands in evidence of the prosperity which had been gained through his indefatigable energy and his availing himself of the excellent opportunities presented. After disposing of his farm Mr. Loveland took up his residence in the city of Brookings, where he has since maintained his home, being now the owner of four houses and lots in the city and having other excellent investments. He is now living retired and is enjoying the just rewards of his many years of honest and earnest toil. Fraternally he is a member of the Masonic order, but is not affiliated with any of its bodies in an active way at the present time. He was reared in the faith of the Democratic party, to which he gave his allegiance until the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion, since which time he has been a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party. In 1894 he was elected a member of the board of county commissioners of Brookings county, serving three years, within which term the county jail and sheriff's residence were erected.

THOMAS SWEENEY, of Rapid City, Pennington county, was born at Booneville, New York, on October 20, 1856, and received his early education in a little log schoolhouse in the adjoining county of Lewis, about fifteen miles from his home. When he reached the age of thirteen he began the battle of life for himself, working on railroads in different parts of the state. After a few years of this sort of employment he apprenticed himself to a carriage trimmer and learned the business thoroughly at Watertown, New York. In 1878, while living at Watertown, he hired to a stage line, engaging to come to Cheyenne and drive stage between that town and Deadwood. He came to Sparta, Wisconsin, where he got an outfit together, and from there proceeded to Napoleon's ranch, where Pierre is now located. Learning at that place that the stage line had changed hands, he determined to retire from his engagement, and opened a barber shop which he conducted for a time at Fort Pierre and then came to Rapid City. Here he went to work for Evans & Loveline, leading grocers, he having met Mr. Evans at Fort Pierre. He remained with this firm about six months, then started in business for himself. He was successful from the beginning, his line being hardware and machinery and his place of business a little one-story building on Main street. The business rapidly increased in magnitude and importance under his vigorous and progressive management.

and from the little beginning already described, which was born into commercial life on November 7, 1880, it has grown to be one of the largest enterprises of its kind in the Black Hills, and expanded from a new and second-hand hardware store into an immense general or department store, carrying almost every kind of commodity needed in his community. In 1886 he built the building he now occupies, which has more floor space than any other business house in Rapid City, and since then he has kept it filled with the most extensive and varied stock to be found in this part of the state. In 1892 he bought the adjoining building. The firm, which is the Tom Sweeney Hardware Company, is known all over the west and is as widely esteemed as it is known. It employs fourteen men, including plumbers, tinners, saddlers, harness makers, blacksmiths and wagon makers. One article in the stock of which Mr. Sweeney is justly proud is a "Round-Up Stove," which was invented and is manufactured by him and which finds a ready and rapid sale from Texas to the Canadian line, it being considered the most complete and convenient stove of its kind on the market. In addition to his mercantile business, Mr. Sweeney also has extensive interests in the stock industry in this state and Wyoming, being among the largest cattle men in the Hills.

On May 17, 1883, at Rapid City, Mr. Sweeney was united in marriage with Miss Mary A. Wells, a native of Missouri and daughter of George Wells, a pioneer of 1877 in the Black Hills and a prominent stock man of this section. Mr. Sweeney belongs to the Knights of Pythias at Rapid City and the Elks at Deadwood and takes an active interest in the proceedings of his lodge.

ANDREW P. McMILLAN is one of the leading merchants of Spink county, having a large and well-equipped general store in Conde, and is vice-president of the State Bank of Doland and the owner of a fine landed estate in the county where he has maintained his home since 1887. He is a native of Minnesota, having been born on the homestead farm, in Harmony township, Fillmore county, on the 7th of November, 1859, and being a son of Arthur C. and Rebecca (Cheever) McMillan, both of whom were born in Ohio, of Scotch descent. The paternal grandfather of our subject came from Scotland to America in the latter part of the eighteenth century, in company with his two brothers, and their descendants are now to be found in divers sections of the Union. The parents of the subject removed to Fillmore county, Minnesota, where his father became a successful farmer and stock grower. His present residence in Cresco, Iowa, the mother having died in December, 1893.

The subject was reared to the sturdy discipline of the farm, and was about ten years of age at the time of his parents' removal to Iowa, where he secured his early educational discipline in the public schools of Cresco. In 1878 he secured a position as clerk in the mercantile establishment of White & Moon, in Cresco, Iowa, and continued to be employed as a salesman until coming to South Dakota, having in the meanwhile given careful attention to acquiring an intimate knowledge of the various details of the business, familiarizing himself with the values of different lines of goods and thus fortifying himself for an independent career as a merchant. In 1887 he came to Conde, South Dakota, and opened a general merchandise store, one of the first in the town. He began operations upon a modest scale, and by good management and fair dealing his business constantly expanded in scope and importance with the settlement and upbuilding of the surrounding districts and the village, and he now has a large and well-appointed establishment. He handles dry goods, groceries, clothing, shoes, millinery, etc., and his store is one which would do credit to a much more populous town. In 1887 he erected his present business block, which is twenty-four by eighty feet in dimensions and two stories in height. In 1892 Mr. McMillan erected his fine modern residence, at a cost of about three thousand five hundred dollars, the same being one of the most attractive homes in the county, and he is the owner of a valuable farm of three hundred and twenty acres, eight miles southwest of Conde, this county, the same being under a high state of cultivation and yielding good returns. He is one of the principal stockholders in the State Bank of Doland, of which he has been vice-president since 1895. In politics Mr. McMillan is a stalwart Garfield and Bryan man, and although he is essentially public-spirited and progressive he has never sought office of any description. He and his wife are prominent and valued members of the Baptist church in their home town, and he has been superintendent of its Sunday school from the time of organization to the present, covering a period of ten years, while Mrs. McMillan is a popular teacher in the same. Fraternally Mr. McMillan is identified with the Masonic order, in which he has attained to the chapter degrees; with the lodge and encampment of the Independent Order, of Odd Fellows, as well as the Daughters of Rebekah; and with the Knights of Pythias and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 22d of April, 1884, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. McMillan to Miss Stella K. Hard, who was born and reared in Decorah, Winneshiek county, Iowa, being a daughter of John and Jane (Austin) Hard. Mr. and Mrs. McMillan have the following children: Arthur Edwin, Calla Maude, James Wesley, Leone Dunbar and Lloyd Fountain. Arthur finishes his commercial course at Brookings College in June, 1904, when he will enter into business with his father at Conde.

MILTON FREASE was born in Luzerne county, Pennsylvania, on January 27, 1846, and in that county was reared and educated, remaining there until he was twenty years old. In 1866 he moved to Ohio, where he remained five months, then went to work on the Northwestern Railroad in Iowa. After working on that enterprise for a period he went into the service of the government, teaming to Fort McPherson and Fort Sedgwick. In 1867 he accepted employment on the Union Pacific Railroad, which was then building through Nebraska. Two years later he returned to Colorado and until 1876 was engaged in herding and riding the range in the neighborhood of Denver. At the end of this time he went to southwestern Nebraska and started a cattle industry for himself, remaining there four years. In the spring of 1880 he brought his cattle to the Black Hills and placed them at the mouth of Elk creek and on the Belle Fourche river, making his home at Rapid City. In 1888 he took up the ranch he now occupies on Box Elder creek eighteen miles from Rapid, and in 1890 he moved his family to the place where they have since made their home. He has been continuously engaged in the cattle business since his arrival in the state and has a fine ranch which is devoted exclusively to the use of his stock and raising hay for their support. In political affiliation he is an ardent Republican, and to the welfare of his party he is zealously devoted, being county commissioner in 1883 and county treasurer in 1884. For a number of years he was also a stockholder in the First National Bank of Rapid City. He is a member of the Masonic order, belonging to the lodge of the order at his home town. On September 5, 1886, he was married at Rapid City to Miss Hattie S. Ryan, a native of Indiana. They have four children, Paul, Hazel, Kate and Helen.

JOSEPH BEEM was born in Belmont county, Ohio, on September 27, 1847, and was educated there, remaining until the spring of 1865. He then, in company with his brother Isaac, moved to Jefferson county, Iowa, and for a few years was engaged in farming there. From that locality he came over the Union Pacific to Fort Steele, Wyoming, and remained there a year in the employ of the government as officers' cook. The story of his wanderings from that time until 1884 is told in the sketch of his brother Isaac, elsewhere in this volume, for they were together during almost the whole of the time. In the fall of 1884 they brought cattle to the Box Elder and settled on land on that serviceable and fructifying stream. He looked after the land and stock interests and his brother engaged in freighting for a number of years. They were the first settlers on this creek, and during the first years of his residence here Mr. Beem's nearest neighbor was eight miles distant. He began improving his land, devoting all his time and energy to this and his stock industry, and as the reward of his labors he now has the finest cattle ranch on the creek, with natural protection against severe weather for his cattle, and prolific yields of both the wild and the cultivated products of the soil. He and his brother were in partnership until 1891. They then dissolved and since that time have conducted their business separately. Mr. Beem is one of the unyielding Democrats of this portion of the state, and has always been forceful and potent in behalf of every interest of his party.

At Bismarck, on December 8, 1880, Mr. Beem was married to Miss Sarah A. Davis, a native of Minnesota. They have four children, Mattie E., Edwin A., Angie and Grover C.

HUGH L. BROWN, of near Vesta, is a native of Fulton county, Illinois, born on January 23, 1840, and while he was yet a child the family moved to Bond county, the same state, where he received his early education. Later another move was made to the vicinity of Rockford, and soon afterward another to Monroe, Wisconsin, where the father engaged in farming. Here the son completed his education and on leaving school worked with his father on the farm. In January, 1862, when the Civil war was drenching our country with blood, he enlisted in the Thirty-first Wisconsin Infantry, and in that regiment he served to the close of the war. He then returned to Wisconsin and again engaged in farming near Monroe, continuing his operations there until 1872, when he settled in Sac county, Iowa, where he was occupied in farming until the spring of 1885. At that time he came to South Dakota and located at Pierre, then a fort or military post. There during the summer he conducted a feed store, handling hay and grain. In the fall he moved to Rapid City, and the next spring took up a pre-emption claim on Box Elder creek. While improving his land and making it habitable he continued to live at Rapid City, conducting a hotel there. Early in 1888 he settled on his land on the creek, thirty-five miles from Rapid City, and began pushing its development with vigor, subsequently increasing his acreage by taking up a timber and a homestead claim, the three properties adjoining. Since then he has continued to live on this land and has devoted his energies to its cultivation and the rearing of stock. In both he has been very successful, winning a competence by the systematic application of intelligence and enterprise, and he has also risen to prominence and influence among his fellow men by his breadth of view and ardent devotion to the welfare and advancement of his community. In political faith he is an earnest supporter of the Republican party, but he is not an office seeker, nor does he subordinate the general weal to any personal or factional interest.

On March 30, 1867, Mr. Brown was united in marriage with Miss Eliza Michael, a native of New York, who moved with her parents to the neighborhood of Baraboo, Wisconsin, when she was but five years old. In that region she was reared and educated, and at Baraboo was married. They have two children, Carrie P., now the wife of Joseph Waterson, and Dora E., who is married to Jeremiah Crowley.

MAHLON WELSH, of near Vesta, Pennington county, was born in Franklin county, Ohio, on December 28, 1847, and there he reached the age of seventeen and received a district school education. His father died when he was ten years old and in 1864 the family moved to Paulding county in his native state. Mr. Welsh took charge of the homestead and conducted its operations, continuing to be so employed until 1876. He then passed a year in Story county, Iowa, and in 1877 came to Pierre and soon afterward to Deadwood. He did not linger long here, however, but went to Bismarck, where he went to work teaming for the Beem Brothers. He remained with them three years working on railroad construction and freighting into Deadwood, also going with them to Montana and wrought in their interest there. On his return to this state he was employed, with a team he bought, on the Union Pacific Railroad until 1884, when he came with the Beem brothers to Rapid City, and from there moved out to Belcher creek near Box Elder. Here he took up land and put it in the way of improvement, but kept on freighting between Pierre and Deadwood and Rapid City three years longer. In 1887 he bought cattle and settled on his ranch, to the improvement of which he has since sedulously devoted himself. He has four hundred acres of fine land, with good buildings and other necessary appliances, and raises on it large crops of hay with some grain and other products. The ranch adjoins that of Isaac Beem and is thirty-five miles from Rapid City. Mr. Welsh is a staunch believer in the principles of the Democratic party, and ever yields to its policies and candidates a loyal and serviceable support.

CHARLES W. BROWN, a leader of the bar in Pennington county, was born on May 8, 1859, at Winchester, Illinois, and there grew to manhood and received his scholastic training, being graduated from Blackburn College in 1881. He then entered the law department at Yale and in 1883 was graduated therefrom with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Returning to his home at Carlinville, he passed a year in a law office. At the end of that time he came to South Dakota and began the practice of his profession at Columbia, Brown county, where he remained until July, 1885, shortly after which he moved to Rapid City. Here he has since maintained his home and been active in legal work, rising rapidly through merit to prominence and public esteem, and winning high commendation in every contest in which he has engaged professionally. His practice has grown to great magnitude and now takes him to almost all parts of the country. He is a member of the United States supreme court bar and before that elevated tribunal has conducted a number of important causes, managing them in a way that established him in the esteem of the legal profession as one of the brainiest men in the country. In politics he is an active and ardent Republican, and in the fall of 1888 and again in 1890 was elected state's attorney of Pennington county as the candidate of that party. He was also mayor of Rapid City from 1900 to 1902. He has served his party twice as chairman of its county central committee and also as a member of its state central committee.

On June 1, 1884, Mr. Brown was married to Miss Adella Gore, a native of Illinois and daughter of David Gore, a prominent man and once state auditor of that state, the marriage being solemnized at Carlinville. They have three children, Helen G., Fanny C. and Wellington G. Mr. Brown belongs to the Knights of Pythias and the Odd Fellows, with membership in the lodges of these orders at Rapid City.

JAMES M. WOODS, of near Rapid City, was born on April 24, 1835, in Boone county, Missouri, the family having moved to that county a short time previous from Madison county, Kentucky. His father had a store at Columbia in that county and one at Independence also. The son grew to manhood in that state and received his early education in its district schools, afterward entering the State University when it was a very small college. After attending this institution two terms he moved to Colorado in 1851. There he was engaged in mercantile business in partnership with his brother several years, then passed some time near Salt Lake City, after which he began freighting between Cheyenne and points in Montana and also conducted mercantile houses at Wausage and Bear river in Montana. He continued these enterprises until 1870, when he went to Nebraska City where he had a large farm, and where he remained until 1876. He then organized a train at Nebraska City for an expedition to the Black Hills by way of Kearney. For this enterprise he recruited one hundred and sixty men and brought the train through without mishap. This was the first train to enter the hills for settlement, and arrived where Custer City now stands on April 26th, and from there went on to Deadwood, which it reached early in May. There were no roads through this country at that time and they were obliged to cut their way through with great difficulty. About May 10th they started from Deadwood for Rapid City, then a hamlet of about one hundred inhabitants. Establishing himself here, he returned to Nebraska City and from there went to St. Louis and bought goods which he freighted from Pierre to Deadwood, among his purchases being the first safe brought into the Hills. He then opened the first monetary institution at Deadwood, which was known as the Miners and Mechanics' Bank. The properties and franchises of this were afterward sold to the First National Bank when that was organized, the safe being bought by the United States government for use in the land office at Deadwood. Here he made his home and until 1883 freighted and carried on other business between that place and Nebraska City, having contracts to furnish timber to the Homestake and other mines. He was besides prominent and active in the public life of the place and aided largely in its development. In the spring of 1883 he came to Rapid City and bought land in different localities, purchasing with other tracts about five thousand acres on Elk creek. He at once engaged in the cattle industry, bringing large herds from Texas, often as many as twenty thousand in one season. From that time on he has been one of the most extensive cattle growers in the state. Until 1890 his brother and another gentleman were associated with him, the firm name being Woods, White & Woods. Since the year last named he has been alone in his stock business. In 1891 he bought his present home ranch on Rapid creek, five miles from Rapid City, which is one of the finest properties in the valley. The land is all under irrigation and much of it is in an advanced state of tillage and productiveness; and the improvements are in keeping with its character and the enterprise of the proprietor. Mr. Woods was one of the founders of the Pennington County Bank and for a number of years was a heavy stockholder in the First National Bank of Rapid City. In political faith he is an unwavering Democrat and for long has been a leader of his party and a man of great influence in local public affairs. He was the first Democrat elected mayor of Rapid City, a position in which he served two terms. He was at one time the nominee of his party for the United States house of representatives, and although there was a large majority in the district against his side, he made a gallant race and succeeded in cutting down the majority considerably, his being the best run ever known here. He was a member of Governor Lee's staff, with the rank of colonel, for four years, and was national committeeman for the territory during Cleveland's first term as president. In this position he served eight years with great usefulness and acceptability. In 1902 he was nominated for the state senate, but declined the nomination, and every state and county convention for years has offered him some nomination, he being the most widely known Democrat in this part of the country. Mr. Woods has an elegant city home at Rapid where he has lived for a number of years, although during this time he has passed a large portion of his time at Des Moines, Iowa, where he has extensive land interests, owning some of the finest tracts in the vicinity of the city, with some also near Omaha, Nebraska. He is president of the Western Dakota Land and Horse Company, of which he and his family are the principal stockholders.

In 1857, in Boone county, Missouri, Mr. Woods was married to Miss Matilda Stone, a native of that state. They have seven children, Madison D., Annie E. (Mrs. Garth), Frances J., Edward C., Paul S., Matilda and Martha. Paul is cashier and principal stockholder of the First National Bank at Kingman, Kansas. Charles E. is cashier and principal stockholder of the First National Bank at Liberal, in the same state, Frances J. is a graduate of the Pennsylvania Female Medical College. During the Spanish-American war she was attached to the Oregon Corps and spent a year in the Philippines. Since her return she has attained prominence as a lecturer and organizer in the interest of woman suffrage. Matilda is a graduate of Wellesley College and is now an instructor in the State School of Mines, at Rapid City.

GEORGE C. HUNT, manager of the Hunt Abstract and Investment Company, of Rapid City, is a native of Boston, Massachusetts, where he was born on March 30, 1850, and is the son of George and Charlotte (Belcher) Hunt, who were also natives of Massachusetts and were reared and educated in that state. The father was in the grain business there until 1854, when he moved his family to Henry county, Illinois, and there engaged in farming three years. In 1857 the family moved to Linn county, Kansas, where the father took up land and again passed three years in farming. In 1859 the drought destroyed the crops and the family returned to Boston, going by way of St. Joseph, Missouri, and traveling from there in the first train over the Hannibal & St. Joe Railroad that carried passengers east. They remained in Massachusetts eighteen months, then in the spring of 1861 returned to Henry county, Illinois, where they remained until 1868. That year they moved to Iowa county, Iowa, and there the father bought land and once more turned his attention to farming. Mr. Hunt received the greater part of his education in Henry county, Illinois, being eighteen years of age when the removal to Iowa took place. At the age of twenty-one he quit the farm on which he had been working with his father, and went into the employ of a lumber company, working at both Walnut and Manning in Iowa. He served the company some time as clerk and bookkeeper and later was manager of one of its yards. In December, 1885, he came to Rapid City, whither his parents had come in 1877, the father taking up a ranch on Rapid creek and devoting his attention to raising stock. Prior to beginning this enterprise, however, Mr. Hunt's father and brother were engaged in freighting between Pierre and Sidney and Rapid City. Soon after his arrival at this place he secured employment in the office of the register of deeds for Pennington county, remaining so occupied from December, 1885, to April, 1887, when he was appointed county auditor, the first the county ever had. He held this office until 1891, at which time he opened an office for George N. Farrell, of Claremont, New Hampshire, for conducting a general land and loan business, which he managed until 1895. While serving as county auditor he had made a book of abstracts of titles to land in the county, and when he resigned as manager of Mr. Farrell's business he opened an office for himself and started an enterprise in abstracting, insurance and dealing in real estate. He has the only complete set of abstracts for the county ever made and is therefore especially well prepared and equipped for the business in which he is engaged. In 1898 he organized the Hunt Abstract and Investment Company of Rapid City, which has been incorporated and of which he is the general manager. The company has an extensive business, one of the largest in the city, with real-estate interests in both Pennington and Meade counties. Mr. Hunt is a gentleman of great enterprise and public spirit in matters involving the welfare of the community in which he lives, and cheerfully and effectively gives his aid to every commendable undertaking for its promotion. He is a zealous and earnest Republican in political faith, and a prominent and active worker for the success of his party. His home has always been at Rapid City, where he has one of the finest residences in the town.

On February 9, 1876, Mr. Hunt was married, at Waluut, Iowa, to Miss Annie L. Benedict, a native of Ohio. They have one child, Charles B., who is connected with the Pennington County Bank of Rapid City.

CLARENCE O. MCCAIN is a native of Clarion county, Pennsylvania, where he was born on October 20, 1851. He was reared and educated in his native county, and after leaving school engaged in farming there, remaining until 1874, when he moved to southwestern Iowa, and continued his farming operations, also dealing in stock. In the spring of 1886 he came to South Dakota and took up his residence at Rapid City, arriving in May. He soon afterward located a ranch on Box Elder creek, twelve miles from the town, and began to occupy himself in raising cattle and horses. He makes his home most of the time on the ranch, but he also has a residence in Rapid City, where his family spend their winters. He is a progressive and energetic man in the management of his affairs, and is a force of influence and inspiration, being one of the leading citizens in reference to all matters of the general welfare and public progress.

On December 29, 1880, Mr. McCain was married to Miss Jennie Castile, a native of Illinois, the marriage occurring in Adams county, Iowa. They have three children, Hermann L., William A. and Eva W.

FRED HOLCOMB was born in Jefferson county, New York, at the town of Carthage, on July 2, 1851, and is the son of William and Maria (Fanning) Holcomb, who were also natives of New York. The father was a prosperous and energetic farmer in Jefferson county, and in 1855 the family moved to Dubuque county, Iowa, four miles from the city of Dubuque, where they followed dairying for a time, then farming. In this county Mr. Holcomb grew to manhood and was educated. In 1869 he moved to Abilene, Kansas, where, with his brother, he was occupied in the cattle business until 1872. He then took a band of cattle to Des Moines, Iowa, and sold them, and with the proceeds paid his tuition for a term at a business college in Dubuque. In April, 1873, he came to South Dakota with a herd of cows which he left at Yankton while he went back to Dubuque and got married. Returning to Yankton with his bride, he settled there and started a dairy business on a small scale, carrying the milk about in cans on foot. A year later he had two wagons and his business continued to increase. In the spring of 1879 he came to Rapid City in company with his father to look over the country with a view to settling here. The father remained, but Mr. Holcomb returned to Yankton, making the trip on the only stage that was ever held up on the line between Rapid City and Pierre, this event occurring before the stage reached the Cheyenne river. In July of 1877, he made a visit to Rapid City for his health, and, determining to make this his future home, he went back to Yankton and disposed of his interests there, and in the spring of 1881 brought his family and cattle to this section, settling the family at Rapid City and placing the cattle on the range along the Cheyenne, removing them later to the White river. His cattle are now mostly to the north, on Sulphur and Morrow creeks. He has made a great success of his business by keeping steadily at it and applying the wisdom gained in experience and observation, ever increasing its magnitude and conducting it along the lines of the most wholesome progress and development. His acreage in both ranch and grazing lands is very large and his stock industry is the leading one belonging to an individual citizen in this part of the state. The Holcomb home has been at Rapid City ever since the family settled here, and is one of the most elegant and attractive in the town. The head of the house is an active and devoted member of the Masonic fraternity, with membership in the lodge at Rapid City.

On June 4, 1873, Mr. Holcomb was married in Dubuque county, Iowa, to Miss Minnie V. Miller, a native of that county. They have one child, May, the wife of George H. White, of Rapid City. Mrs. Holcomb's parents came to Rapid City in 1880 and remained there until death, the father dying in 1886 and the mother in 1891. The father was prominent as a stockman and also conducted one of the first hotels at Rapid City.

HENRY C. CORDES, of Pennington county, was born in Germany, on February 15, 1847. After getting a good ordinary education at the state schools and reaching maturity, he served several years in the German army, and went with it through the Franco-Prussian war of 1870-71 from the opening battle at Weissenburg to the crowning triumph of its arms at Sedan. Soon after the close of this momentous contest, in 1874, he came to the United States and located in Chicago, where he remained two years. From there he went to Taylor county, Iowa, and purchased land which he farmed until 1881, when he came to South Dakota, arriving at Rapid City in July. Here he went to work on the place which he afterward bought, and was busily employed for six months. At the end of that period he returned to Taylor county, Iowa, and on April 27, 1882, consummated the purpose for which he made the trip by uniting in marriage with Miss Emma Weber, a native of the state. Returning to this state with his bride, he resumed his work in agricultural pursuits, but on a different basis. Taking up a pre-emption claim two miles west of the ranch on which he now lives, he engaged in raising stock and farming on his own account. In 1890 he began buying and selling horses, and since that time he has conducted an extensive business in this line. The next year he moved his family to their present home, and there they have since resided. Prior to this, however, in 1892, he bought a number of Shetland ponies and began breeding them, and he now has a fine herd of this diminutive but interesting stock. He has steadily increased his operations in this line, finding a ready sale for his product in all parts of the state by keeping up the standard and maintaining the stock in good condition. The American life of Mr. Cordes has been a continuous success, and his prosperity has increased from the beginning with an accelerating progress. In addition to the business which he conducts at home, he has large interests in the cattle industry elsewhere and owns a considerable body of ranch land besides his home place. He is one of the progressive and representative men of the county, active in every good enterprise for its advancement and giving intelligent and serviceable attention to every phase of its public life. He is energetic in political affairs, but has declined all overtures to accept public office, and has had many opportunities. His business occupies his time and faculties, and satisfies his ambitions. His family numbers ten healthy and promising children, Herman, Milton, Charlie, Edna, May, Henry, Ellsworth, Richard, Catherine and Theresa.

FRED J. RILEY, of Doland, was born on April 28, 1867, three miles west from Waunakee, Dane county, Wisconsin, and is the son of James and Euphemia E. (Ford) Riley. The father was a native of Runcorn, Cheshire, England, and came to America when fourteen years of age in company with an uncle who settled in Dane county, Wisconsin. He was for many years engaged in merchandising at Kingsley's Corners, and later at Waunakee, where he died in 1884 at the age of fifty-four years.

The mother of the subject was a native of Dunfirmland, Scotland, and came with her parents to America when seven years of age, the family locating at Fordville, Dane county, Wisconsin, which locality received its name from the family. Her death occurred May 30, 1897. The parents were married in Dane county and to them were born two sons and six daughters, as follows: Mary married William Davidson, now residing at Campbell, Minnesota; Alice married James Lester, of Dane county, Wisconsin, now residing at Kendallville, Iowa; Nettie died at the age of eighteen years; Amelia died at the age of twenty-one years; William T. Riley, residing at Waunakee, Wisconsin, where he is working in the interest of the subject; Fred J., the subject; Laura married Robert Hanson, and is residing at Doland, South Dakota; Rosa died at the age of fourteen years.

Fred J. Riley received his educational training in the public schools of his native county, following which he learned telegraphy. In 1889 he came to South Dakota and took a position as telegraph operator and agent for the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad Company at Volin, near Yankton. Six months later Volin was destroyed by a prairie fire, including the railroad buildings. Mr. Riley himself having a narrow escape from the flames. Following this he spent nine months at Centerville, Turner county, as operator on the same railroad, and then was stationed at Raymond, Clark county, where he was agent and operator for a period of three years. The great strike of the telegraphers occurred in 1903, and Mr. Riley went out with his fellow operators all over the country. Previous to this, however, he had become interested in the sheep business in this state, but he lost all of his investments in that line during the panic of 1893, and like many other men, he left this state, and returned to Wisconsin, where he engaged in the confectionary business at Madison, but he was not contented to remain long in that business; in fact his mind was on South Dakota and accordingly in 1895 he returned to this state with the determination to make a strenuous effort to regain what he had previously lost. Upon returning to South Dakota Mr. Riley again entered the employ of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company, this time as agent at Wolsey, Beadle county. From Wolsey he was sent to various points on the railroad, including Brookings, where he spent three months, and from that city he was sent to Tyler, Minnesota, where he was agent for about two years. In 1898 he was promoted by the company and sent to Doland, where he had charge of the station until July 8, 1901, when he resigned his position to engage in the real-estate business at Doland, leaving the railroad company in good standing, his services having been highly appreciated by the company, as was testified by their offering him a position should he desire to re-enter their service in the future. While Mr. Riley's railroad career was a success, he having always attended to and discharged his duties with ability, it is as a real-estate and land dealer that he has made his mark and demonstrated his ability as a man of affairs. He began his real-estate dealings in a modest way, opening a small office in Doland. His capital was limited, likewise his experience in land matters, and during the first six months, which was the last half of his first year, his transactions were also limited, but beginning with January, 1902, he began to do a "land-office business" and during that month he sold thirteen quarters of land and during the year he sold one hundred and two quarters. His business has continued to increase, and from the beginning of 1902 he has sold more land than any other land dealer in this part of Spink county.

By judicious investments, progressive ideas and methods, and untiring energy, coupled with absolute reliability and straightforward dealings, Mr. Riley has built up a business of large dimensions and on his books can always be found most desirable investments. He now owns twelve quarter sections of valuable farming land in Spink county, a fine farm of one hundred and fifty acres in Lyon county, Iowa, also a fine modern residence and other properties in Doland. Mr. Riley is a thorough-going business man, and possesses all the characteristics necessary to a successful career. He is quick to observe an opportunity, and just as quick to seize it, having the happy faculty of seeming to do the right thing at the right time. He has a pleasing personality, is courteous and affable, and his manner is such as to gain the confidence and respect of all with whom he comes in contact. All in all, Mr. Riley is a typical South Dakotan, with all that term implies.

August 24, 1896, at Alpena, South Dakota. Mr. Riley was married to Frances H., the daughter of Charles M. and Lydia (Stevens) Yegge, pioneers of Jerauld county, South Dakota, they having moved there from Iowa on the first train to run into that country from the south on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway. Mrs. Riley was born in Iowa. To Mr. and Mrs. Riley one son, Fred Burl, and one daughter, Zura Fern, have been born.

PETER A. HAMMERQUIST, who is pleasantly located on a fine ranch twenty miles from Rapid City on Rapid creek, his land being redeemed from the wilderness by his own industry and skill, was born on March 12, 1848, in Sweden and remained there until he was nineteen, receiving a good common-school education and working in stores after leaving school. In 1867 he came to the United States, and after passing some time at Chicago and Calumet, Indiana, having a brother living at the latter place, he moved to Lee county, Illinois, where for two years he carried on barbering in small towns. At the end of this period he moved to Boone, Iowa, and after barbering in that town, Marshalltown and State Center for some time, went to Sioux City in the early part of 1873, and soon afterward came to South Dakota, locating in Clay county, where he took up land and turned his attention to farming. The grasshoppers devoured his crops and he was forced to return to Sioux City and work at his trade. He then passed a year at Davenport in the same employment and another in the coal fields south of there. In 1875 he returned to South Dakota, crossing the river on ice and found that his homestead had been jumped. He then went to Vermillion and opened a barber shop which he conducted until February, 1877. At that time, in company with three other men, he came to the Black Hills. The party had one wagon which was heavily laden with goods and they were obliged to walk most of the way. Their route was by way of Pierre and they were compelled to cross the Missouri on ice and had great difficulty in doing so. The ice broke under the wagon and it went to the bottom of the river, but they succeeded by great effort in getting it out and across without material loss in their supplies. They joined the first train that reached Rapid City by way of Pierre. They had no armed guards for protection, but nearly all the members of the party, consisting of sixty-five men, were armed. Arriving at Rapid City on March 19th, and having his barbering outfit with him, Mr. Hammerquist determined to remain there and for employment opened a shop, a much-needed enterprise in the small town as it was then. He witnessed all the exciting events of its early history and took his part like a man in every movement for the general weal. In 1878 he went east for a short visit and on his return found his town property jumped. He recovered this, however, and in it opened a small drug store which he profitably conducted for a few years. In the fall of 1881 he purchased the claim to the ranch he now occupies and moved his family there the next spring, this being the second family to settle at this end of the creek. Since then this has been his home and here he has been actively engaged in the stock industry. After moving to the ranch he went east and bought a small herd of cattle which was the nucleus of his present holdings in this line, and by vigorous management of his business he has steadily expanded it until he has become one of the leading stock growers in this part of the county. He has also pushed forward the improvement of his ranch from year to year, and thus made it one of the most attractive rural homes in the neighborhood. The land is nearly all under irrigation and is very productive, yielding abundant returns for his labor and a generous support to his stock. In the local affairs of the county Mr. Hammerquist has ever been energetic and serviceable, and having displayed more than ordinary capacity for administrative duties, has been chosen by his fellow citizens to places of trust and importance in the public service. He has been postmaster at Farmingdale since 1890 and was county assessor from 1890 to 1894, two terms. He is an ardent worker in the Republican party and has commanding influence in its councils. He has also been zealous and helpful in school affairs and prominent in every movement for the advancement of the county. He belongs to the Masonic order, with membership in the lodge at Rapid City.

On October 12, 1879, Mr. Hammerquist was married at Comstad, in Clay county, to Miss Mary E. Anderson, a native of Norway, who came to America in childhood and to Vermillion in 1873, when she was sixteen. They have eight children, Ida F., Harry E., Fred A., Anton W., Earl N., Erma M., Charles L. and Helen C.

MAURICE KELIHER, one of the prominent and enterprising stock growers and highly esteemed residents of Pennington county, was born on July 20, 1849, at Bangor, Maine, and while he was yet a child the family moved to near Harvard, Illinois, where the father took up land and engaged in farming. The old homestead now belongs to Mr. Keliher and is one of his most cherished possessions. On it he was reared to the age of eighteen, and near it in the little country schoolhouse he received his education. In 1867 he left the scenes and associations of his childhood and youth, and moved to Denver, Colorado, then a small place in a new country, but with the promise of its mighty growth and enterprise already showing plainly. After a short residence there he went to Montana and for a short time was engaged in freighting in that state, after which he returned to Denver and again followed freighting in partnership with his brother Michael, who was afterward killed by outlaws in Texas. They had a number of bull-teams and carried on an extensive and profitable business, freighting between Denver and the Indian reservations and also between that town and Cheyenne. In 1877 Mr. Keliher went east to visit his parents and on his return to Cheyenne was married. He remained in that city until the fall of 1878. At that time freighting became unprofitable owing to the completion of the railroad, and Mr. Keliher determined to come to the Black Hills and turn his attention to raising cattle. He brought cattle with him and, locating on Spring creek, gave his whole time and energy to building up and expanding his business. To this enterprise he has adhered steadfastly ever since, and has made a decided success of it, becoming one of the most extensive stock growers in this part of the country, and producing stock of high grades. His home is at Rapid City where he has a handsome residence of modern style and furnished with every consideration for the comfort and enjoyment of its inmates.

On November 24, 1877, Mr. Keliher was married, at Cheyenne, Wyoming, to Miss Eleanora Walsh, a native of Ireland who came to the United States with her parents in her childhood. They have five children, Frank, Eleanora, Margaret, Morse and Miriam. Mr. Keliher belongs to the Masonic order and the United Workmen, holding his membership in both at Rapid City. In politics he is an unwavering and active Republican, but has always declined public office.

GEORGE BUCKINGHAM, of Pennington county, one of the few remaining pioneers of the Black Hills, whose extensive ranch of one thousand acres on Rapid creek, fourteen miles from Rapid City, is one of the valuable and attractive country homes of this region, was born in Devonshire, England, on February 27, 1856, and began his education there. While he was yet a youth his parents emigrated to the United States and settled at Morristown, New Jersey, where he attended school one term, then worked on a farm two years. In 1873 he went to Philadelphia, and during the next three years was employed in railroading. In the spring of 1876 he came to the Black Hills by way of Cheyenne, arriving at Custer City on April 10th. From there he went to Castleton, a mining camp on Castle creek, and after prospecting there a short time, moved to Silver City, on Rapid creek, where he remained until 1880 prospecting and mining. In March of that year he took up a ranch on this creek eleven miles from Rapid City and engaged in ranching and raising stock, following this line of industry there until 1897. He then sold that ranch and bought the one he now occupies, two miles farther down the creek, on which he has since made his home. Here he has continued his farming and stock operations and greatly improved his land. His ranch comprises one thousand acres, the principal product of which is hay, and he has extensive herds of well-bred and high-grade cattle. With plenty of water for irrigation, and the greater part of his land well supplied with it, he need never fear a shortage in his crop, and his success is well established and of a commanding character.

On December 25, 1889, Mr. Buckingham was married at Rapid City to Miss Emma Botney, a native of Norway, who died on September 3, 1902. She was one of the remarkable women of this part of the country and had a career of inspiring interest and usefulness here. She came with a party from Minnesota to Deadwood in 1878, but after a short residence there returned to her former home. In 1883, however, she came again to the hills, this time to remain. Being a woman of unusual force of character and business capacity, she engaged in freighting with a bull-team between Deadwood and Pierre, Sidney and Cheyenne,—the only woman who ever conducted a freighting business in this section on her own account,—and it should be said that she was very successful in the enterprise.

HON. JAMES HALLEY, president of the First National Bank of Rapid City, is a native of Scotland, born January 7, 1854, at the thriving little city of Sterling, Perthshire. When he was two years old his parents brought him to the United States and located at Washington, D. C., where he grew to the age of sixteen and received his education. He learned telegraphy and then went south, where he was employed for a year at different places. He returned to Washington at the end of the year and soon afterward came west to Cheyenne, Wyoming, and there secured a position as chief operator, which he filled for three years. At the end of that time he made a trip to the Pacific coast, and on his return located at Omaha for a few months, then once more made his home at Cheyenne. In 1876, for a private company composed of Cheyenne capitalists, he opened telegraph offices along the line between Cheyenne and the Black Hills, arriving at Custer in August and Deadwood a few weeks later. He remained in the employ of the telegraph company until 1879, when he was appointed teller of the First National Bank of Deadwood. This position he resigned at the close of 1880, and then, in company with Messrs. Lake, of Deadwood, and Patterson, of Rapid City, he organized the banking house of Lake, Halley & Patterson, at Rapid City. He was prominent in the management of this institution until September 1, 1884, when it was merged into the First National Bank of Rapid City, of which he was appointed cashier. On January 13, 1898, he was chosen president of this bank, and he has held this office ever since. He is also president of a bank at Hot Springs, and one at Keystone which was formerly the Harney-Peak Bank of Hill City, when that town was on the boom. He is president of the Rapid City Electric Light Company and treasurer of the Rapid River Milling Company. However he has not devoted the whole of his time to fiscal matters. He is also deeply and intelligently interested in public affairs, and being a loyal and devoted member of the Republican party, he has on all occasions given the principles and candidates of that organization an earnest and serviceable support. He served one term in the upper house of the territorial legislature, the last one before South Dakota was admitted to the dignity of statehood. He has also been mayor of Rapid City two terms, and was a delegate to the Republican national convention at Minneapolis in 1892, and at Philadelphia in 1900. For a number of years he was a member of the state central committee of his party, and has served as chairman of its county central committee. He is also extensively interested in real estate and the stock industry, and is secretary of the Box Elder Land and Live Stock Company which owns two thousand acres of land and large numbers of stock. Of the numerous and admired fraternal orders he has joined but one, the Knights of Pythias, being a member of Gate City Lodge, No. 8, of this order.

On September 13, 1878, at Cheyenne, Wyoming, Mr. Halley was united in marriage with Miss Lottie Smith, a daughter of S. L. Smith, of that city. Their wedding trip was made by stage from Cheyenne to Deadwood. They have nine children, Albert, Helen, James, Frances, Lottie, Sarah, Samuel Russell, Walter and Donald. Albert recently graduated from Stanford University, and Helen from Wellesley College.

JOSEPH JOLLY, of Pennington county, is one of the representative and forceful men of this portion of the state. He was born on December 14, 1843, in Lafayette county, Wisconsin, and was there reared and educated. There also he worked at blacksmithing and followed freighting until 1874. He then removed to Dallas county, Iowa, and after a residence of about eighteen months there, started in 1876 for the Black Hills, making his journey by way of O'Neill to Custer City, where he arrived in May of that year. He then began freighting between Sidney and Pierre and Rapid City and Deadwood, continuing this business with gratifying results, although it was attended with great danger and considerable difficulty, until early in 1879. At that time he came to Rapid City to locate, and in February entered the ranch he now occupies, four miles south of the city, on Rapid creek. Taking up his residence on this place, he at once started an industry in farming and made good his hopes by vigorously arranging for irrigating his land. For a number of years his principal crop was oats, but after the construction of the railroad through this section he changed to alfalfa, and also began raising cattle and horses. He has remained on the place continuously since first settling on it, and has converted it into an excellent farm and a comfortable home. He also has much additional land on which he runs his stock. In fraternal relations he is an active member of the Masonic lodge at Rapid City and in politics he has been zealous and serviceable on all occasions, advocating high standards in official life and the broadest principles of civic and political morality. In 1889 he and Richard Hughes were the county's representatives in the state legislature, the first session of that body, and on its elevated forum he sustained the reputation he had earned at home for breadth of view, strict integrity and wise foresight in public affairs.

JOHN E. HUNT, one of the most enterprising and progressive farmers of Pennington county, is a native of Lyon county, Kansas, born on September 10, 1859, and the son of George and Charlotte (Belcher) Hunt, natives of Massachusetts. In 1854 the parents removed from their native state to Illinois and there lived on a farm for two years. In 1856 they took another flight westward, settling at the place of his birth, where they were pioneers. They engaged in farming here until the autumn of 1859, when they went back to Massachusetts. They were still imbued with the western spirit, however, and after remaining two years in the east, again started in the wake of the setting sun, stopping first in Henry county, Illinois, and carrying on successful farming operations there for nine years. In 1870 they moved to Iowa county, Iowa, and soon afterward to Guthrie county in the same state. Here their son received the greater part of his scholastic training, for in 1877 the family came to the Black Hills, and in the strenuous contest with nature then before them no opportunities was left for further schooling, except as it might be had under the stern discipline of experience. They made the trip by way of Yankton, and arrived at Rapid City on June 14th. This flourishing metropolis was then but a hamlet of a few houses, but the golden music from the hills had electrified the world, and families were pouring into the region by every route and means of travel. The Hunts remained at Rapid City for a year, the father and sons engaging in freighting between that place and Sidney and Pierre. They continued this business for three years, but in 1878 located the ranch on which the mother and son now live and made it the family home. In 1880 the freighting enterprise was abandoned, and the whole time and energy of the family were devoted to the improvement of the home they had chosen, and the development of its promising resources. Their first efforts were given to securing sufficient water to irrigate the land as a means of permanent improvement, although they raised a crop of very respectable proportions in the summer of 1880. The irrigation was pushed forward as rapidly as possible with the facilities they had, and although their progress was slow for awhile, it was steady and the work was conducted on a scale looking to permanent results, and enduring value; now it is complete and effective in all respects, the entire farm of one hundred acres being fully supplied with water for every need. The father was in active control of the farming business until his death, February 19, 1894, and since then the son, John E. Hunt, has had it in charge, and has conducted and developed it along the lines laid down at the beginning. Mr. Hunt's mother, a most estimable lady, who fully enters into the spirit of the business, and is in harmony with her surroundings, lives with him and manages the affairs of the household with the same vigor, breadth of view and success that he displays in the operations of the farm.

MICHAEL QUINN, living near Smithville, Meade county, was born in Ireland, but when he was four years old his parents moved to England and settled in Lancashire, where he grew to the age of eighteen and received a limited education. His life began on October 18, 1846, and in 1864 he came to the United States and locating at Lawrence, Massachusetts, worked in a cotton mill, remaining there two years. In 1866 he joined the Fenian raid into Canada, but, with the others who were concerned in that movement, he was compelled by the United States government a short time afterward to return to this country. He then went to St. Joseph, Missouri, where he made a contract to drive an ox-team from that city to Denver, Colorado. A few days after his arrival at Denver he secured employment on the construction of the telegraph line between that city and Salt Lake, but heavy snows made it impossible to continue this work, and he went to Julesburg and engaged as a freight teamster between that place and Fort Laramie. The severity of the weather again stopped operations, and he determined to winter on the Platte. Here he and his comrades had an exciting time, being attacked by Indians who took all their horses and cattle. Mr. Quinn remained in that neighborhood and Wyoming two years, then went to work on the Union Pacific Railroad, which was building through this country at that time, and continued to be so employed until the road reached Cheyenne. He spent a short time freighting and filling contracts to supply wood in Colorado, and when the excitement over the discovery of gold in the Black Hills broke out he began freighting between Cheyenne and Deadwood, making his first trip in the spring of 1877. Later he freighted between Rock Springs and Fort Friedman two seasons, then in 1878 he went to Pierre and freighted between that city and Fort Meade, Deadwood and Rapid City. Having teams of his own he did a considerable business down to 1882. In the spring of 1881, however, he bought cattle and placed them on the Cheyenne river, leaving a man in charge of them, and the next year he sold out his freighting outfit and devoted his time to raising cattle on the Cheyenne. When the Sioux reservation was opened in 1892 her moved to Bad river, and later he took up land there which is his present home ranch. It is sixty-five miles east of Rapid City, which he has always made his trading town, and is a fine body of land, well located and adapted to the stock industry. His time and energies are devoted entirely to the cattle business, and his interests in this and in land are considerable. While not an active partisan in politics, he is a man of great public spirit and deeply interested in the enduring welfare of his country and state.

ALGERNON L. HOLCOMB, of Rapid City, whose untimely and tragic death on October 11, 1891, at the early age of forty-two, shocked the entire community and was universally lamented, was a native of Carthage, Jefferson county, New York, where he was born on May 27, 1849, and was the son of William and Maria (Fanning) Holcomb. They were prosperous farmers in his native place, but believing the west offered better opportunities for effort and capacity than the east, in 1855 the family moved to Dubuque county, Iowa, and here Mr. Holcomb was reared and educated. After completing his scholastic course he attended Bailey's Commercial College, at Dubuque, and soon after leaving there was married. In the spring of 1876 he and his wife started to the Black Hills, arriving at Yankton in March and proceeding from there by boat to Pierre. Here Mr. Holcomb was taken ill and they were obliged to return to Iowa. In the fall of 1877 they again started for the hills, and this time were successful in making the trip, arriving at Rapid City in December. They brought cattle with them and the first chairs seen in Rapid City which was then a small village with no buildings but a few rude log shanties. Their first home in this western wilderness was a little log house in which they were obliged to hoist umbrellas to keep dry when it rained. As soon as it was practicable they built a better house, also of logs, and making it their home placed their cattle on the Cheyenne river. For a time Mr. Holcomb was in partnership with two brothers, but later they divided their property and each conducted his own business. He moved his cattle to the White river, where he kept them until his death. It was on White river that he first bought land, and his widow still owns large tracts there and continues the cattle industry, employing a manager to look after her stock. On their arrival in this section of the country they opened a grocery store at Rapid City, and with his own teams Mr. Holcomb freighted his goods from Pierre. Some time afterward he took charge of the hotel which his father opened when he came to this country, but at the time of his death his energies were wholly given up to raising cattle and horses. In October, 1891, he was thrown from his horse while riding, and on the 11th day of that month he died from the effects of the accident. He was an active and zealous Republican in politics, and in fraternal relations belonged to the Odd Fellows at Rapid City.

On March 5, 1876, Mr. Holcomb was married to Miss Sarah E. Brown, a native of Dubuque, Iowa, where the marriage occurred. She is the daughter of Hiram and Eliza (Luck) Brown, the former a native of Maryland and the latter of Kentucky. Both settled in Dubuque in childhood, their parents being pioneers in that locality, and they were reared and married there, the father being a prominent contractor and builder in that city. Mrs. Holcomb also was reared and educated there, and had her home in the city until her marriage. Soon after this took place she came with her husband to South Dakota, and this has been her home ever since. She has been prominent in the social life of the city, and being a lady of great business capacity, was of great assistance to her husband during his life, and since his death she has conducted the business with unusual shrewdness and success, handling both the cattle and the horses with skill and every consideration for securing the best results. Two sons blessed their union, Robert L. and Algernon A. Robert is married and engaged in the cattle industry, while Algernon is finishing his education in New York.

PETER DUHAMEL, of Rapid City, was born December 22, 1839, near Montreal, Canada, and he remained there until he reached the age of seventeen. In April, 1857, he came to the United States, and after short stops at Chicago and St. Louis, proceeded to the mouth of the Sioux river, where Sioux City now hums with its myriad enterprises and busy life. The settlement at that time consisted of a store and a few uncanny residences built in the rude manner of the period and locality. He remained in this vicinity working on a farm until the fall of 1859, when he engaged to drive an ox-team from there to Fort Randall and on to Fort Pierre, his compensation to be fourteen dollars per month. He was therefore in the territory when almost all its inhabitants were Indians and soldiers. He remained at Fort Pierre until May 3, 1860, when, with two other men, he started for Pike's Peak. Nineteen days were consumed in reaching Denver on horseback, this place then consisting of two shacks and a few tents in the way of human habitations. The journey was tedious and trying, but otherwise uneventful, not a white man being met by the party in the whole of its course. Mr. Duhamel and his companions went up the South Platte to a point about nineteen miles north of Denver, where they took up land and he began to raise cattle on a small scale and gradually enlarged his operations, remaining there nineteen years. In July, 1879, he left there with his family and eight hundred cattle for southwestern Dakota, and arrived at Rapid City on September 29th. The following winter was an unusually severe one and he lost one-half of his stock. In the ensuing spring everybody in the neighborhood was discouraged and ready to sell out. But although he had lost heavily during the winter, he still had faith in the section and at once invested all he had in cattle. His confidence has been fully justified by subsequent experience, as he is now one of the largest and wealthiest stock men in the western part of the state. He later bought land all over the region, at one time owning extensive tracts, but in 1900 he sold both land and stock, not, however, intending to retire from the business, for he went south and bought more cattle which he placed in the northwestern corner of the state near the North Dakota and Montana lines, where his sons are now managing the business. He has for a long time made his home at Rapid City, where he has a fine residence. Here he is living retired from active pursuits, having turned all his business over to the management of his sons except his interest in the First National Bank of Rapid City, in which he is a leading stockholder and serves as vice-president.

On October 6, 1871, at Denver, Colorado, the subject was married to Miss Catherine Lapus, a native of Germany. They have eight children: Matilda (Mrs. Babue), Alexander, Mary (Mrs. Waldron), Josephine (Mrs. Horgan), Adeline (Mrs. Fallon), Joseph, Annie and Agnes.

HERBERT W. SOMERS is a native of Barnet, Vermont, where he was born on May 31, 1857, and is the son of parents belonging to families long resident in that state. In 1864 they moved to Marshall county, Iowa, where they prospered as farmers. The son grew to manhood in that county and received his early education in its public schools, afterward attending Iowa College at Grinnell, from which he was graduated in 1882. In August of the same year he came to Rapid City to take the position of superintendent of the public schools, which he filled with credit for two years. In 1885 he was appointed bookkeeper at the First National Bank of Rapid, and since then he has been connected with that institution continuously, rising by merit to the post of cashier in 1898 and to that of director also in 1902. In addition to his work at the bank he has done a great deal to promote and build up the Rapid City Electric and Gas Light Company, acting as its secretary and treasurer since 1887, and as its manager since 1892.

Mr. Somers was married at Jacksonville, Illinois, in June, 1888, to Miss Nellie M. Van Zandt, the home over which she presides with dignified grace being brightened by the presence of two sons and a daughter, namely: Leslie, Paul and Helen. The Ancient Order of United Workmen enrolls Mr. Somers among its members, while in religious matters he is an active member of the Congregational church, in which he is a trustee and the superintendent of the Sunday school.

NOAH NEWBANKS, city auditor of Pierre, was born in Senecaville, Guernsey county, Ohio, on the 25th of December, 1841, and is a son of Strother McNeil Newbanks and Sarah Sophia (Larrick) Newbanks, both of whom were born in Virginia. The subject received his educational training to the common schools of Ohio and Missouri, to which latter state his parents removed when he was about eight years of age. In 1859 we find him engaged in mining in Colorado, where he remained until 1863, when he joined in the stampede to Montana, shortly after the discovery of gold in Alder gulch. He engaged in the mercantile business at Virginia City and there remained until the fall of 1865, having been one of the pioneers in that historic mining camp and having witnessed the work of the vigilantes, who had recourse to heroic measures in ridding the country of its outlaws and cut-throats, many of whom were executed by summary hanging. From Montana he preceded to Salt Lake City and thence to San Francisco, making the trip across the plains to the Golden Gate and thence taking passage on a vessel bound for New York, making the voyage by way of Cape Horn. From the national metropolis Mr. Newbanks returned to Missouri, where he was engaged in farming until 1868, when he removed to Junction City, Kansas, where he conducted a general store for one year, at the expiration of which he removed to Ellsworth, that state, where he was engaged in the same line of enterprise for the ensuing two years. He then returned to Missouri and was there identified with agricultural pursuits until 1875, when he went to Denver, Colorado, where he remained until the following year, when he came to the Black Hills of South Dakota, reaching Custer City in April, 1876. From that point he went to Rapid City, assisting in the locating and staking out of the town. He also built a stockade corral and aided in the erection of a block house, both of these being necessary for protection from the hostile Indians, who were at that time constantly on the warpath, though mostly operating in small bands. Of this period Mr. Newbanks has written as follows: "The only instance where the Indians did any great damage was about August 1, 1876, when they attacked us in our stronghold, but they did not succeed in doing us any injury other than driving our men to cover, but upon leaving the stockade they circled around to the west of Rapid City and killed four men who were coming into town. Two of the party escaped and came in with the news. We then went out and recovered the four bodies, which we brought to the town, burying them in one grave. The next attack occurred early in September, when we had a running fight with the savages. They succeeded in taking our cattle, but I saved my horses, getting them to the corral and thus protecting them."

Mr. Newbanks conducted a general store and corral in Rapid City until 1878, when he engaged in freighting from Pierre to the Black Hills, continuing operations in this line successfully until 1886, when he again located in Rapid City, and freighted between that point and Deadwood for one year. The following spring he went to Whitewood and engaged in the con-mission business, forwarding goods from the end of the Elkhorn Railroad to Deadwood, Lead and other points in the Hills, and handling all of the freight for the famous Homestake Mining Company for one year. In the spring of 1889 he disposed of his commission business and engaged in the raising of cattle upon an extensive scale, locating in Custer county, where he remained until the autumn of 1892, when he removed to Lyman county, where he has since continued in the business, having a ranch of six hundred and forty acres. In 1896 he took up his residence in Pierre, where he and his wife have since maintained their home.

In politics Mr. Newbanks is a staunch supporter of the Democratic party, and while he has never been ambitious for office he has been a member of the state brand commission for the past eight years, during four of which he served as chairman, while he has been incumbent of the office of auditor of the city of Pierre since 1902. He is a member of the Baptist church and Mrs. Newbanks is an Episcopalian.

On the 29th of October, 1884, Mr. Newbanks was united in marriage to Miss Mary Josephine Anderson, who was born in Sparta, Illinois, on the 8th of May, 1859, being a daughter of Francis B. and Matilda T. Anderson. Mr. and Mrs. Newbanks have no children.

GEORGE MYRON BAILEY, who is established in the real-estate and abstract business in Redfield, Spink county, claims the old Empire state as the place of his nativity, having been born in Middlebury, Wyoming county, New York, on the 27th of November, 1874, and being a son of Myron C. and Rosetta M. Bailey, both of whom were born in New Hampshire. The genealogy in the agnatic line is of English and Scotch derivation, and the original ancestors in America settled in Massachusetts in the colonial epoch of our national history. Later representatives of the name removed to New Hampshire, and from that state came the branch of the family which early settled in western New York. The parents of the subject removed to Iowa when he was about fourteen years of age and settled in Kossuth county, where the father turned his attention to mercantile business, and he and his wife are now residing in Lamberton, Minnesota. The subject completed the curriculum of the public schools, being graduated in the high school at Algona, Kossuth county, Iowa, and later taking a course of study in the Northern Iowa Normal School in that city. He was thereafter engaged in the real-estate and abstract business in the Hawkeye state until early in 1901, when he came to South Dakota and took up his residence in Redfield, where he is now in control of an excellent business in the handling of real estate, while he also has an excellent set of abstracts of title for Spink county, his records being in large demand by the residents and property owners of the county. He is enterprising and straightforward in his business methods, and is held in high esteem by all who know him. In politics Mr. Bailey is a staunch advocate of the principles and policies for which the Republican party stands sponsor, and fraternally is identified with the Masonic order, the Knights of Pythias and the Improved Order of Red Men.

HALVOR C. SOLBERG, one of the representative educators of the state, being a member of the faculty of the State Agricultural College, at Brookings, was born in Norway, on the 5th of March, 1861, a son of Christian and Anna Solberg, both of whom were born and reared in Norway, where the latter died when the subject of this sketch was a child of but five years. About the year 1867 Christian Solberg bade adieu to the fair land of his birth and set forth to seek his fortunes in America. He proceeded to Minnesota and settled in the town of Spring Grove, where he followed the trade of carpenter for some time, while he is at the present time a prosperous farmer in Minnesota, having consummated a second marriage a few years after his emigration to the United States.

After the death of his mother the subject of this review was reared to the age of seventeen years in the same home of his aunt, Mrs. Arne Sortaasen, who was a resident of Brottum, Norway. There he received his early educational training under excellent auspices, and at the age noted he came to America and joined his father in Minnesota. There he worked on the farm during the summer months, availing himself of the advantages afforded by the district schools during the winter terms, thus continuing his studies for a period of three years and sparing no effort in augmenting his fund of knowledge. In 1881 he came westward to Fargo, North Dakota, where he remained about two years, devoting his attention principally to the work of carpentry and cabinetmaking. He then came to what is now South Dakota and entered claim to a half section of land in what is now Marshall county, the tract being at the time thirty miles distant from any settlement. He held the land for a time, in the meanwhile finding employment in a furniture store at Columbia. At the expiration of three years Professor Solberg disposed of his land and shortly afterward was matriculated as a student in the State Agricultural College, where he continued his studies for four years, completing the prescribed course and in the meanwhile being employed in the institution as a teacher of carpentry, wood turning, etc., having marked skill in these lines. He was graduated in the college as a member of the class of 1891, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Science, and thereafter continued to devote his entire attention to teaching the practical art mentioned, while in 1892 he was chosen full professor of the mechanical engineering department of the college, having simultaneously been called to a similar position in the North Dakota Agricultural College, a preferment which he resigned soon after his appointment and before assuming the duties of the office. He has since continued at the head of the mechanical department of his alma mater and has brought the same up to a high standard, making it one of the most popular and valuable departments in the institution. Owing to the specific nature of the course of study in the agricultural college and the practical work exemplified, the sessions are held during the summer months, while the students have their longest vacation during the winter. This fact enabled Professor Solberg to attend during such vacation periods Purdue University, at Lafayette, Indiana, and he was there graduated as a member of the class of 1895, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Mechanical Engineering, and the following year he received the degree of Mechanical Engineer.

At the time when Professor Solberg entered upon his executive duties in the agricultural college the mechanical department was maintained on a very modest basis, its functions comprising only an elemental form of shop work, while the facilities were meagre. Under his enthusiastic and able direction a steady growth was had and the department rapidly increased in popularity, so that it became necessary to provide new and adequate quarters and modern mechanical accessories. The advance that has been made under his direction is best indicated in the statement that during the present year, 1903, more than two hundred and fifty students are availing themselves of the advantages of the department, of which Professor Solberg has just reason to be proud, not alone on the score noted, but also by reason of the fact that the equipment throughout is one of the best to be found in any similar institution in the northwest. So far as can be learned he was the first to introduce the short course in practical steam engineering, and the value of the same has been appreciated not only by the students, but also by other institutions which have followed his initiative, the course having proved a distinctive drawing card for the college.

In politics the Professor gives his support to the Republican party and fraternally he is identified with the lodge, chapter and commandery of the Masonic order, as well as with the auxiliary organization, the Order of the Eastern Star, of which Mrs. Solberg also is a member. He is likewise chief of engineering and ordnance of the National Guard, holding the rank of colonel. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and of the National Society for the Promotion of Engineering Education. He and his wife are members of the Lutheran church, in whose work they take an active interest, while their pleasant home is a center of gracious and refined hospitality.

On the 27th of May, 1887, was solemnized the marriage of Professor Solberg to Miss Bolletta Egeberg, who was born in Norway, being a daughter of Halvor and Olena Egeberg, who emigrated to the United States in 1867, residing for a few years in Minnesota and thence removing to Brookings county, South Dakota, where Mr. Egeberg took up a large tract of land, being now one of the prominent and influential farmers of the county. His wife passed away in 1893. Mrs. Solberg secured her early educational training in the district schools and then entered the State Agricultural College, where she formed the acquaintance of her future husband, who was a student in the institution at the time. They are the parents of three children, Harry, Ada Elizabeth and Ruby.

SAMUEL PRENTISS WATKINS, who stands as one of the leading members of the bar of Spink county, comes of stanch old New England stock, the genealogy in the paternal line being of English and Scotch derivation and in the maternal of English, while both families were founded in New England in the colonial epoch. Mr. Watkins was born in Cambridge, Lamoille county, Vermont, on the 22d of July, 1855, and is a son of David H. and Harriet A. (Holmes) Watkins. The father was born in Walpole, New Hampshire, whither his paternal ancestors came from Connecticut, while on his mother's side the ancestors were from England. The mother of the subject was born in Grafton, Massachusetts, with the annals of which state the family name was identified for many generations, the original progenitors in the new world having come from England.

The subject received his early education in the common schools of the old Green Mountain state and later continued his studies in the public schools of Massachusetts and in Grafton Academy, at Grafton, that state, and the Wesleyan Academy, at Wilbraham, prosecuting his educational work in these two institutions in the four years intervening between 1871 and 1876. Thereafter he was successfully engaged in teaching in Massachusetts and Vermont until 1877, when he came west and engaged in the same vocation in Minnesota, where he remained until 1879, when he came to the territory of Dakota and located in Bigstone City, in what is now Grant county, South Dakota. Two years later he removed to Ashton, Spink county, being one of the early settlers of the town and county, and here engaged in the real-estate and loan business, in which he met with success, since the section soon began to feel the beneficent effects of the strong incoming tide of immigration and advancing civilization. In the meanwhile he had for a number of years devoted much attention to the reading of law, and on the 14th of December, 1888, he was admitted to the bar of the territory, forthwith beginning the active practice of his profession in Ashton, where he has ever since maintained his home, and where he has gained distinctive precedence and success in his profession. He at the present time maintains an independent attitude in politics, but he was a member of the first three Republican conventions after the admission of South Dakota to the Union. He has been called to the incumbency of various offices of local trust and responsibility, where he gave his best efforts in the advancing of the general welfare and material progress, and for several years he was mayor of Ashton, in which connection his administration met with uniform approval and popular endorsement. He is affiliated with Ashton Lodge, No. 33, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and of Redfield Chapter, No. 20, Royal Arch Masons, at Redfield, while from 1888 to 1891 he was grand chief templar of the Independent Order of Good Templars in South Dakota. He and his wife are zealous and valued members of the Methodist Episcopal church of Ashton.

On the 17th of October, 1882, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Watkins to Miss Lilla B. Lee, who was born in Cresco, Howard county, Iowa, on the 2d of April, 1866, being a daughter of Timothy W. P. and Myra N. Lee. They have five children, Howard Lee, Myrtle May, Samuel Prentiss, Gardner H. and Elmer Le-land. Timothy W. P. Lee was a native of Stanstead, Canada, and came to the territory of Dakota in 1879. He was a lawyer by profession, taking an active part in politics, and was a member of the Sioux Falls constitutional convention, and was one of the framers of the present constitution of the state of South Dakota.

JAMES CURTIN, one of the representative citizens and leading business men of Northville, Spink county, is a native son of the west, having been born in Winneshiek county, Iowa, on the 27th of November, 1856, and being a son of James and Catherine (Murphy) Curtin, the former of whom was born in Ireland, of Scotch-Irish lineage, while the latter was born in Ireland. The father of the subject came to America as a young man, and early located in Dubuque, Iowa, later engaging in farming in Winneshiek county, that state, where he remained until 1865, when he removed with his family to Pawnee county, Nebraska, where he devoted the remainder of his life to agricultural pursuits, his death there occurring in 1867. His widow still lives in Pawnee county, Nebraska. She later married Silas Huff.

The subject of this review secured his educational training in the public schools of Iowa and Nebraska, having attended the high school in Pawnee City, Nebraska, in the completion of his scholastic work, and in the meanwhile he had assisted in the work of the homestead farm. At the age of twenty-one years he entered upon an apprenticeship at the trade of harnessmaking in Pawnee City, becoming a skilled artisan in the line. He was for a short time a successful teacher in the district schools of Pawnee county, Nebraska, and there continued to make his home until 1881, when, as a young man of twenty-five years, he came to the present state of South Dakota, arriving in Spink county in May of that year, and forthwith taking up one hundred and sixty acres of government land, in Mellette township. While "holding down" his claim he was employed in the James river valley at farm work for one year, and later engaged in the work of his trade in Fargo, North Dakota, after which he held a clerical position in a mercantile establishment in Northville for a period of five years, at the expiration of which, in 1888, he was elected to the office of county recorder, being chosen as his own successor in 1890, and thus serving four consecutive years. Within this time he purchased other land, in different sections of the county, having secured a considerable amount for speculative purposes, and after retiring from office he engaged in the buying and shipping of grain at Northville. In 1893 Mr. Curtin exchanged some of his real estate for a stock of merchandise and two lumber yards, the store and one lumber yard being located at Bath, Brown county, and the other lumber yard at Andover, Day county. He continued to successfully conduct these enterprises for three years, in the meanwhile maintaining his home in Bath, and he then, in 1896, disposed of the lumber business, as well as his store, and returned to Northville, where he opened his present establishment, in which he handles a comprehensive and select stock of general merchandise, as well as hardware and agricultural implements, and here he is also engaged in the buying and shipping of live stock, while retaining a number of valuable farm properties. He has a large and well-appointed store, and is popular in the business and social circles of the town and county, while in politics he gives an unswerving allegiance to the Republican party. He was appointed postmaster at Bath, under the administration of President Cleveland, and continued to serve in this capacity until the time of his removal to Northville. Religiously he is a member of the Wesleyan Methodist church.

On the 30th of September, 1884, Mr. Curtin was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Martin, who was born in Michigan, being a daughter of W. P. and E. A. (Disbro) Martin, while she was a resident of Northville at the time of her marriage. She is a sister of Ezra Martin, of whom individual mention is made on another page of this work. Mr. and Mrs. Curtin have three daughters, Zella, Elma and Faye, the eldest daughter being a successful and popular teacher in the public school at Clearview, this county, at the time of this writing.

FRANK C. MARINER, representative member of the bar of Spink county, is a native of the state of Illinois, having been born in Bushnell, McDonough county, on the 21st of November, 1854, and being a son of Orrin and Hannah (York) Mariner, the former of whom was born in Connecticut and the latter in the state of New York, both being representatives of staunch old colonial stock. The progenitor of the Mariner family in America was William Mariner, a Frenchman, who came to this country with General Lafayette, as nearly as can be determined from the records extant, taking part in the war of the Revolution under his noble commander and remaining to enjoy the advantages of the country whose independence he had thus aided in securing. The maternal grandfather of the subject was an active participant in the war of 1812. In 1840 Orrin Mariner removed to Illinois, becoming one of the sterling pioneer settlers of that state. He first located in Peoria county, whence he later removed to Marshall county, while finally he took up his residence in McDonough county, where both he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives, his vocation having been that of farming. Of the six children of this union four are living, the subject of this review having been the fifth in order of birth.

Frank C. Mariner received his preliminary educational training in the public schools of his native county, and supplemented this by a course of study in Lombard University, at Galesburg, Illinois. He then began reading law in the office of the firm of Barnes & Doughty, of Bushnell, Illinois, thus prosecuting his technical studies for some time, after which he went to Denver, Colorado, where he remained about one year. He then took up his residence in Shenandoah, Iowa, where he was admitted to the bar of the state in 1881. On the 6th of May of the following year he arrived in Northville, Spink county, Dakota, and here turned his attention to farming, taking up government land a few miles distant from the then embryonic village of Northville, and improving his property. He there continued to be actively engaged in farming until 1887, when he established his home in Northville and entered upon the active practice of his profession, in which he has attained prestige and marked success, having a representative clientele in the community and conducting a prosperous general practice, while he is also engaged to a very considerable extent in dealing in real estate, being personally the owner of sixteen hundred acres of valuable agricultural land, the major portion of which is in Spink county. He has ever shown a loyal interest in public affairs and has served in various positions of local trust and responsibility, having been a member of the board of county commissioners in the early days, while he is one of the leaders in the ranks of the Republican party in his section, being a member of the state central committee of the same at the time of this writing, having been chosen for his second term at the Republican state convention in May, 1904. He is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 18th of November, 1884, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Mariner to Miss Merta Peterson, who was born in Nebraska, whence she came with her parents to South Dakota in the territorial days. Of this union have been born six children, namely: Leta M., Hannah G., Orrin (deceased), Guy, Claude and Ward.

SAMUEL CROCKETT BLACK, secretary of the South Dakota & Iowa Land & Loan Company, with headquarters in Mellette, was born on a farm in Champaign county, Ohio, on the 23d of September, 1849, and is a scion of one of the old and honored families of the Buckeye state, where his grandfather, Alexander H. Black, who was a native of Kentucky and of Scotch lineage, took up his residence in 1809, taking part in the early Indian wars and serving as captain of a company in the command of General Wayne, known to history as "Mad Anthony Wayne," by reason of his intrepid daring. In this connection Captain Black accompanied his doughty general on the march to the lakes and saw not a little of active service in conflict with the Indians. He became possessed of a large tract of land in Champaign county, and there passed the closing years of his life, while his son Samuel C., Sr., the father of the subject, also lived on this ancestral homestead and became a prominent and influential farmer and stock grower. He likewise was a native of Kentucky and died in Ohio, as did also his devoted wife, whose maiden name was Mary Ann Grant. They became the parents of nine children, while of the number five are living at the time of this writing.

Mr. Black was reared on the home farm and received his early educational training in the common schools, after which he continued his studies in Wittenberg College, in Springfield, Ohio. He then resumed his association with agricultural pursuits, and also took up the study of medicine, to which he devoted his attention for a short time. After the death of his father he took charge of the homestead farm and in connection with its operation also continued to deal in live stock until 1882, when he came to the present state of South Dakota and purchased land in Spink county, where he became the owner of three quarter sections of land eleven and a half miles northeast of Mellette. He removed his family to South Dakota in 1886, and there continued to be engaged in farming and stock growing until 1898, when he took up his residence in Mellette and turned his attention to the handling of grain and live stock, with which important line of enterprise he has since been prominently identified, controlling a large business, while in 1902 he associated himself with the South Dakota & Iowa Land & Loan Company, with headquarters in Mellette, and he has since been secretary of said company, which controls a large real-estate and loan business throughout North and South Dakota. He served for two terms as mayor of Mellette, giving a most satisfactory administration of municipal affairs. He has passed the commandery, Scottish-rite and Shrine degrees in the Masonic fraternity, being secretary of his lodge at the time of this writing. He is also a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 18th of March, 1884, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Black to Miss Frances Miller, who was born and reared in Ohio, and they have two daughters, Jessie, who is a graduate of the Holy Angels Academy, in Minneapolis, and Lola.

GEORGE J. HAMILTON, engaged in the general merchandise business in the town of Mellette, was born in Brownhelm, Lorain county, Ohio, on the 25th of August, 1860, and is a son of Alexander Hamilton, who was born and reared in Edinburg, Scotland, whence he came to America in 1855, settling in Ohio, where he was engaged as overseer in a quarry for a number of years. In 1863 he removed with his family to Vernon county, Wisconsin, where he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, remaining there until 1885, when he joined the subject in South Dakota, where he afterward maintained his home, being engaged in farming in Spink county. He died in 1895. The subject of this review was reared on the home farm in Vernon county, Wisconsin, where he availed himself of the advantages of the public schools. He continued to be there engaged in farming until 1882, when he came to what is now the state of South Dakota, arriving in March and taking up his location in Spink county, where he took up government land, thirteen miles southeast of the village of Mellette, being there actively engaged in farming and stock growing until 1896, while he still retains possession of his homestead, which he has developed into one of the valuable ranches of this favored section of the state. In the autumn of the year last noted he removed to Mellette, where he was engaged in the livery and draying business until 1899, when he disposed of his interests in these lines and associated himself with his younger brother, Walter, in the general merchandise business here. They have since successfully continued operations, under the firm name of Hamilton Brothers, and have a well-appointed store and one in which is carried a select and comprehensive stock in each of the several departments, while both of the interested principals are held in uniform confidence and esteem in the community. The subject has been incumbent of various township offices and is at the present time chairman of the board of education in his home town. In politics his franchise is exercised in support of the Populist party and fraternally he is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America.

On the 6th of November, 1889, Mr. Hamilton was married to Miss Fannie Cloyd, who was born in Illinois, whence she came with her parents to South Dakota in 1884. Of this union has been born one child, Hazel.

RICHARD WILLIAMS, one of the prominent business men and representative citizens of Langford, Marshall county, was born in Cambria, Columbia county, Wisconsin, on the 16th of May, 1857, and is a son of William A. Williams, who was born, reared and married in Wales. He married Margaret Thomas, a native of Wales, and they became numbered among the very early settlers of Wisconsin, where they took up their residence about 1850. There his wife died in 1861, when the subject of this sketch was but four years of age, and the father thereafter continued to reside in Wisconsin until 1880, when he accompanied our subject to what is now the state of South Dakota, first locating in Brown county, whence both came to Langford in 1887, and here they are still living, the father being seventy-nine years of age at the time of this writing, in 1904, and being well preserved in both mind and body.

Richard Williams was educated in the common schools of his native county, and was engaged in farm work in Wisconsin until coming to South Dakota, in the fall of 1880. He settled in Brown county, having made the trip on foot from Milbank to Columbia, as the former place was at the time the western terminus of the railroad. He filed claim to a homestead near the present town of Bath and then returned to Wisconsin for the winter. In the following spring he returned to his homestead and initiated the work of developing the same. He remained on his farm until the spring of 1886, when he located in the village of Columbia, Brown county, where he engaged in the implement business, in which line he continued operations there until 1887, when he sold out and removed to Langford, Marshall county, and there became associated with his brother Rowland in the hardware business, under the firm name of Williams Brothers. They conducted the largest business of the sort in the county until 1892, when the subject sold his interest to his brother, the latter continuing the enterprise until his death. After retiring from the hardware business Mr. Williams was engaged in the farming implement business until 1900, since which time he has devoted his attention to the real-estate business and to farming, being the owner of extensive interests in the latter line, while his real-estate operations are of very considerable scope and importance. He is the owner of valuable farming lands in both Marshall and Day counties.

Concerning his public career we are able to quote from an appreciative article published in a local newspaper: "Mr. Williams has been more or less prominent in public affairs ever since coming to the state. In 1882 he was deputy assessor of Brown county and personally assessed most all the land in Brown county lying east of the Jim river, also a portion lying west of the river, including the city of Aberdeen. That same fall he was in charge of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company's exhibit of South Dakota agricultural products at the Milwaukee exposition, which did much to attract the attention of homeseekers toward the new state. In 1887 he was elected president of the first board of trustees of the town of Langford, and has often been re-elected to the same office. In the fall of 1892 he was unanimously nominated by the Republicans of Marshall county for the office of county treasurer, but owing to the pressure of a personal business resulting from the death of his brother he withdrew from the race, though there is no doubt but that he would have been successful at the polls. He has been for the past nine years a member of the board of trustees of the grand lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen of South Dakota, and was for eight years chairman of that board, being held in high esteem in the councils of the organization. In 1889 Mr. Williams was elected a member of the first senate of the new state, from Marshall county, and in 1898 he was re-elected to the senate as representative of the thirty-second district, comprising the counties of Day and Marshall. This district had been overwhelmingly Populist for two preceding elections, but owing to the strong hold Mr. Williams had on the friendship and confidence of the people he defeated the fusion nominee and served his constituents so faithfully and satisfactorily that he was unanimously renominated by the Republican senatorial convention of his district in 1900, and was again triumphantly elected to the responsible office in which he had rendered so effective service."

Mr. Williams has been an enthusiastic worker in the cause of the Republican party and is an able advocate of its principles and policies. In addition to holding membership in the Ancient Order of United Workmen, as already noted, he is also identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He and his wife are valued members of the Methodist Episcopal church in Langford, and he is also a member of its board of trustees.

On the 27th of January, 1887, at Columbia, Brown county, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Williams to Miss Ida H. Reynolds, who was born in the city of Chicago, Illinois, on the 8th of April, 1861, being a daughter of Elihu G. and Ruth Reynolds, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Williams have three children, Arthur, aged seventeen, Richard Glen, aged fifteen, and Gladys, aged nine, in 1904.

JOHN R. THOMPSON, M. D., one of the leading members of his profession in Spink county, was born in Burlington, Kane county, Illinois, on the 13th of September, 1858, and is a son of Thomas J. and Hannah A. (Tucker) Thompson, who were numbered among the pioneers of that state, whither they removed from their native state of West Virginia. In 1880 the father, accompanied by the subject, came to Spink county, South Dakota, and took up land. He then returned to Kane county, Illinois, and the following year moved the family out. He is now living in Northville. The mother died April 8, 1904, aged sixty-five years.

After completing the curriculum of the public schools the Doctor took a two-years academic course in the academy at Elgin, Illinois, and thereafter was engaged in farming in that state until 1880, when he came, as a young man of twenty-one years, to the present state of South Dakota and cast in his lot with its pioneers. He arrived in Spink county in May of that year, and took up government land, whose improvement he at once instituted, continuing to be engaged in farming on this property until September, 1882, when, in harmony with plans previously conceived, he went to the city of Chicago, where he was matriculated in the Bennett Medical College, in which he was graduated in March of the following year, having previously devoted much personal study and investigation to the science of medicine. He then entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons, in the same city and was graduated in the same in March, 1885, thus receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine from each of these well-known institutions. In April, 1885, he began the active practice of his profession in Northville, Spink county, where he has ever since maintained his home and where he has built up a large and representative business as a physician and surgeon, his success having been most gratifying from the start. He still retains his original ranch and has been consecutively identified with farming and real-estate interests since coming to the state, while he is now the owner of two entire sections of valuable land in this county. He is a member of the American Medical Association, the Aberdeen District Medical Society, and is identified with the fraternal insurance societies known as the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Modern Brotherhood of America. In politics he is a stalwart Republican, but has never manifested aught of predilection for public office of a political nature.

On the 29th of May, 1887, Dr. Thompson was united in marriage to Miss Etta M. Gregory, who was born in Waybridge, Vermont, on the 3d of August, 1846, being a daughter of Leander A. and Eliza A. Gregory, who removed from the old Green Mountain state to Beloit, Wisconsin, where she was reared and educated. Dr. and Mrs. Thompson have one daughter, Ketha A., who was born on the 28th of October, 1888.

EZRA MARTIN, of Northville, Spink county, was born in Martinsville, Wayne county, Michigan, on the 30th of September, 1860, being a son of Winslow P. and Emeretta Alida (Disbro) Martin, the former born in the state of Massachusetts and the latter in that of New York. The paternal grandfather of the subject was Joel Martin, who likewise was a native of Massachusetts and a scion of staunch old Puritan stock, the family tradition being that among those who came to America on the historic Mayflower, probably on the occasion of its second voyage, was one Christopher Martin, who figured as the original progenitor of the family in the new world. Winslow P. Martin was reared and educated in the state of New York, whither his father had removed from Massachusetts, and there he continued to reside until about 1852, when he removed to Michigan, becoming one of the early settlers of Wayne county, in which is located the city of Detroit, the beautiful metropolis of the state. He purchased a tract of wild land, heavily timbered, and set to himself the task of reclaiming the same to cultivation. He wielded much influence in the section where he thus established his home, having been called upon to serve in various important township and county offices, including that of superintendent of schools, in which connection it may be inferred that he placed that appreciative estimate upon the character of one fair school-teacher in his jurisdiction which led to his marriage to Miss Disbro, who proved to him a devoted wife and helpmeet. The last twenty-five or thirty years of his life were devoted to ministerial work in the Wesleyan Methodist denomination. He came to Northville, South Dakota, in 1882, and became pastor of the Wesleyan Methodist church here, continuing to hold that position until his death, which occurred in 1885. His widow survives.

Ezra Martin, the immediate subject of this sketch, entered the schools of Martinsville as a child of five years and there learned the mysteries of "Webb's Word Method" and other rudimentary text-books, and when he had attained the age of eleven years his parents removed to Pittsford, Hillsdale county, Michigan, where he completed the course in the graded schools, being graduated in the high school as a member of the class of 1877. For a time he was a successful teacher in the district schools of that locality, and also assisted in the work of the home farm which his father had there purchased. Just a few days before he had attained his legal majority he started for the west, passing about six months in Nebraska and thence coming to South Dakota, having made his advent in what is now the village of Northville on the 22d of January, 1882. The town was then represented by a depot and section house, and he purchased the first lot sold by the Western Town Lot Company in Northville, while he also took up a pre-emption claim adjoining the present corporate limits of the village. The tide of immigration began to flow in and the early settlers in this locality needed a place to secure provisions. Our subject accordingly associated himself with his brother Edwin and erected a store on the lot which he had purchased, and there established a general-merchandise business, the first in the town. The firm commenced operations upon capital furnished by their father, and though they secured a good support and were popular with the people of the community they were seriously handicapped by inexperience and lack of capital of their own, and after conducting the enterprise about two years they abandoned the same, our subject turning his attention to agricultural pursuits, while his brother later became a clergyman of the Wesleyan Methodist church.

Mr. Martin has been signally prospered in temporal affairs during the intervening years and has erected substantial and attractive buildings on the place, including a commodious residence, while all other improvements indicate the progressive spirit and good judgment of the owner. Mr. Martin is now the owner of twenty-three hundred acres of valuable land in this vicinity, and has also accumulated a considerable amount of real estate in Northville, while in addition to all this and his large amount of personal property he also owns property in Wisconsin, Michigan and Cuba. For the past decade he has given his personal attention largely to the grain business, buying and shipping large quantities each year.

Mr. Martin is a man of distinctive public spirit, is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and while he has taken a lively interest in its cause he has never been personally ambitious for office. He and his wife are prominent and valued members of the Wesleyan Methodist church in Northville, the respective families having been among the charter members of the same and having contributed in a large measure to the erection of the chapel in Northville, and in the same the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Martin was solemnized on the same day which marked the dedication of the building. They have been specially active in the work of the church, and the subject served as superintendent of its Sunday school about fifteen years.

On the 12th of October, 1882, was solemnized, under the circumstances just noted, the marriage of Mr. Martin to Miss Mary J. Thompson, who was born near the city of Elgin, Illinois, on the 31st of January, 1864, being a daughter of Thomas J. and Hannah A. (Tucker) Thompson, who came to Spink county, South Dakota, in 1881, where the father still resides, the mother having died in April, 1904. Mr. and Mrs. Martin have six children, whose names, in order of birth, are as follows: Earl Levant, Fern Hannah, Glenn Richards, Frank Thompson, Floyd Winslow and Alida Pearl.

RICHARD B. HUGHES, of Spearfish, was born April 14, 1856, in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, and is the son of Michael J. and Mary L. (Haight) Hughes, the former a native of Ireland and the latter of Bedford, Pennsylvania. His mother's ancestors emigrated to this country in colonial times, her grandfather being a gallant soldier in the war of the Revolution and fighting in that memorable contest under Washington. During the Civil war the family lived at Cumberland, Maryland, where they kept a hotel until 1864. In that year they moved to Illinois, and after living a short time at Dixon, moved to Peoria. In 1867 they changed their residence to Nebraska, the year that state was admitted to the Union, locating at West Point in the Elkhorn valley, where the father took up a homestead and engaged in farming. Owing to the migratory life of the family the son Richard had but broken and irregular opportunities for securing an education, but in 1869 he was sent to Chicago, where he attended a business college for two years. Returning to West Point at the end of that period, he went into the office of the West Point Republican where he served his apprenticeship to the printer's trade, remaining four years. In the spring of 1876 he came to the Black Hills, arriving at Custer on May 7th and at Deadwood gulch five days later. He then engaged in prospecting, alternating his work in this line with service on the newspaper of Deadwood, the Pioneer and the Times. During a portion of 1880 he edited and managed the News, an evening paper at Deadwood, and in December of that year he moved to Rapid City and took editorial charge of the Journal, then a weekly and later a daily paper, which he conducted nine years, in 1883 and 1884 serving as county treasurer. Rapid City was then in a vigorous boom and he was president of the board of trade and also city treasurer. In the fall of 1889 he was elected to the first state legislature as a Democrat and was one of the eighteen members of his party in a house of one hundred and twenty-five. Prior to this he had been in the real-estate business, and after leaving the Journal he devoted his attention to that until 1892, when he was appointed United States surveyor general for the district of South Dakota, an office he held four years, during which he made his home at Huron. He has always been more or less interested in mining and since leaving the office of surveyor general has devoted his whole time to that industry. Coming to the Hills with a number of capitalists from the eastern part of the state, he organized the Cleopatra Gold Mining Company, whose property is located in the carbonate district on Squaw creek, eleven miles northwest of Deadwood. From the organization of this company he has been its manager, and in March, 1902, he also became manager of the Holy Terror Mining Company, succeeding John S. George in this position, which he still holds. Since 1899 Mr. Hughes has made his home at Spearfish, where he has an elegant residence. He has other mining interests in stocks and claims in addition to those mentioned, and is also engaged in the cattle business, principally in the northern part of the state. He was one of the founders and is a charter member of the Pioneers' Association of the Black Hills, and takes a leading and serviceable part in its proceedings.

On March 19, 1884, Mr. Hughes was married, at Rapid City, to Miss Mattie E. Lewis, a native of Illinois. They have two sons, Richard L. and Clarence W.

DAVID ROBERTSON, an able member of the bar of the state, who has served several terms as a representative of Spink county in the state legislature, comes of stanch Scottish lineage and inherits the sterling characteristics of the canny Scotchman—sterling integrity, marked pragmatic ability and tenacity of purpose, with strong mentality and mature judgment. He is a native of the state of Wisconsin, having been born in Rock county, on the 21st of August, 1855, and being a son of Peter and Helen Robertson, both of whom were born and reared in Scotland, the father having been a native of Glasgow and the mother of Edinburgh. They were married in their native land and shortly afterward, in 1854, immigrated to the United States and settled on a farm in Rock county, Wisconsin, where they remained until 1863, when they removed to Freeborn county, Minnesota, becoming pioneers of that section, where the father improved a good farm, and there both passed the remainder of their lives, secure in the respect and esteem of all who knew them. Of their five children all are yet living. They were consistent members of the Baptist church, and in politics Mr. Robertson espoused the cause of the Republican party.

David Robertson, the immediate subject of this sketch, completed the curriculum of the public schools at Mitchell, Iowa, and was reared to the sturdy discipline of the home farm. In 1881 he was matriculated in Carleton College, in Northfield, Minnesota, where he completed the scientific course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1885, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. He had in the meanwhile been reading law, and after his graduation continued his technical studies in the office of Hon. Calvin L. Brown, of Morris, Minnesota, this able preceptor being now one of the associate justices of the supreme court of that state. Mr. Robertson read law under the direction of Judge Brown for one year, and was then admitted to the bar of Minnesota, in July, 1886. In January of the following year he came to South Dakota and took up his residence in Conde, where he engaged in the practice of his profession, and in the real-estate business, in which he has since continued. In politics he is a stanch advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, in whose ranks he has been an active and valued worker. In 1890 he was elected to the legislature, making an excellent record. Mr.

Robertson also takes an active interest in school work and is president of the board of education of Conde. He is an appreciative and popular member of the Masonic fraternity, being affiliated with the following named bodies of the same: Conde Lodge, No. 134, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; and South Dakota Consistory, No. 4, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, at Aberdeen, having attained to fourteen degrees in this branch of the order at the time of this writing.

On the 21st of February, 1887, Mr. Robertson was united in marriage to Miss Priscilla V. Herman, who was born in Glenville, Freeborn county, Minnesota, on the 3d of November, 1857, being a daughter of Philip and Augusta Herman, who are now living at Glenville, Minnesota, her father having been a farmer by vocation. Mr. and Mrs. Robertson have three children living, namely: Len D., who was born on the 17th of December, 1887; George V., who was born on the 14th of February, 1893; and Erskine H., who was born on the 14th of July, 1894. Their only daughter, Vida P., was born October 24, 1890, and died of scarlet fever at the age of fifteen months. Mrs. Robertson is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and takes special interest in Sunday school work.

EDWARD O. HANSCHKA, of Deadwood, was born on March 7, 1863, in Germany, and is the son of Frederick and Caroline Hanschka, also natives of the fatherland, where the father was an industrious and well-to-do blacksmith. Edward remained at home until he reached the age of seventeen, receiving a common-school education and serving an apprenticeship at the trade of his father. In 1880 he came to the United States and, passing by the allurements of the cultivated east, made his way direct to the Black Hills, locating at Central City, where he secured employment from the Homestake Mining Company at its Terry mine near that town, he to do blacksmithing there for the company. After five years' service to this company he bought a shop of his own at Central City and began business for himself. The shop he purchased had an interesting history. It was originally owned by John Belt, one of the pioneers of the Hills, and many important events in the early history of this section were started, discussed and planned under its rude roof. He was in business at this stand two years, then when the town of Carbonate was located he moved the shop to that point, being one of the founders and locators of the town. There he remained two years, and during this time was busily employed running his shop, supplying timber and limestone for the Iron Hill Mining Company, and hauling its ore from the mines to the smelter by contract. In the spring of 1888 he moved to Deadwood and went into the employ of the Golden Reward Mining Company as master mechanic, especially for the purpose of erecting for that company the first mill put up in the Hills except the Homestake stamp mills. He remained with this company a year, the mill being destroyed by fire at the end of that time; and as it was impossible for the company to rebuild it until the next year, he again accepted a berth in the blacksmithing department of the Terry mines of the Homestake Company, at Deadwood. As soon as the Golden Reward Company was ready to rebuild its mill he returned to its aid and constructed the plant, after which he worked for the company until 1892. He then took an engagement to build the Little B smelter for the Deadwood & Delaware Smelting & Refining Company, and when this was finished, he built for the same company its Big B smelter, being master mechanic in the erection of both. After the completion of the Big B he took charge of its blacksmithing department, of which he had the management two years. In 1895 he entered into a contract with the company to supply it with limestone and do all its hauling. Since then he has continued to furnish the limestone needed in the operations of the company, which has averaged nine thousand tons a month. In 1900 he first became interested in mining for himself, and the next year, he bought one thousand acres of mining land. That same year he organized the Standard Mining Company of

Deadwood, of which he is the principal stockholder and the vice-president and manager: The company at once erected a mill on its property, which is located in the Ragged Top district, and its operations have been active and eminently successful, it being beyond doubt one of the best mining properties in the Hills at this time. In 1903 Mr. Hanschka bought other large tracts of mining land on Elk creek seven miles south of the Homestake properties. These were known as the Hogan & Anderson and the Scandinavian properties, but he has rechristened them, calling them together the New Bonanza, and it is his intention to work them separately from his other enterprises. In the same summer he built a mill on them, and the results so far obtained justify him in the belief that they will be as rich in yield as the Standard. He has in addition several small mining interests and is a stockholder in some of the larger companies. In 1898 he started an industry in raising and handling cattle, running his stock on the Grand river north of this locality where he bought ranch land. In this venture he has been successful and is continually enlarging his business.

On January 1, 1889, Mr. Hanschka was married, at Deadwood, to Miss Minnie Walking, a native of Germany. They have one daughter, Emma C. Since his marriage the subject has made his home at Deadwood, where he has a fine residence. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America here, and also to the Masonic order, having solved the mysteries of the York Rite through the commandery and those of the Scottish Rite to and through the thirty-second degree.

JOHN BELL, postmaster of Spearfish, and one of the old and worthy citizens of Lawrence county, South Dakota, is a native of England, born in Yorkshire on the 13th day of December, 1849. Deprived of a father's guidance and loving care at the early age of three years, the childhood and youth of young Bell was beset with many vicissitudes and not a few hardships, by reason of which his educational advantages were exceedingly limited. While still a mere lad he was apprenticed to the blacksmith trade and after serving his time and becoming an efficient workman he followed his calling at different places in Lancashire, where he was reared until his twentieth year. In 1870 Mr. Bell came to the United States and after working at his trade in various towns and cities, finally located in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he operated a shop until 1876, when, by reason of the excitement caused by gold in the Black Hills, he joined the tide of fortune hunters and made his way to Dakota, reaching the mining district in the spring of the year noted. Immediately after his arrival in the Black Hills he started a blacksmith shop, the first one in the place, his only shelter being a large tree on the bank of White Wood creek. There was much more work than he could do and frequently he would be kept busy far into the night attending to the needs of his numerous customers. Later in the summer of 1876 he pushed on to Central City, where he started a shop and worked at his trade continually until 1883, when he closed his establishment and, removing to Spearfish, engaged in the livestock business. He moved his family to the latter place in 1886 and has since made it his home, the meantime continuing to raise, buy and sell cattle, until 1902, when he sold out his livestock interests, the better to attend to his duties as postmaster, to which office he was appointed by President McKinley in 1898. He was reappointed in 1902 by President Roosevelt and still holds the position, proving a most capable, painstaking and obliging official.

Mr. Bell is a Republican in politics and a zealous party worker. Fraternally he is a member of the Masonic order, belonging to Blue Lodge, No. 18, and Lookout Chapter, No. 36, Royal Arch Masons, at Spearfish. He was married, January 20, 1872, at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, to Miss Mary A. Perrett, a native of England, who has borne him nine children, of whom the following are living: Maggie E., Lula M., Rosa, Maud S. and Thomas A.; the deceased are Bertha, Kate and two that died in infancy.

Mr. Bell has been quite successful in the raising and handling of live stock, from which and his trade he realized sufficient means to retire in comfort, being now the possessor of an ample competence for his declining years. Being still in the prime of life, however, with a liberal income from the postoffice, he keeps abreast of the times in all matters pertaining to the material welfare of the city of his residence, being interested in its various enterprises, and co-operating with every laudable undertaking for the social and moral good of the community.

JOHN HENRY RUSSELL, a representative citizen of Lawrence county, South Dakota, was born in Fremont, Sandusky county, Ohio, December 10, 1853. His father, Solomon Norton Russell, a contractor and builder, and his mother, Sarah (Brown) Russell, were both natives of the Buckeye state and for many years residents of the city of Fremont. Of the early life and youthful experiences of John H. Russell little need be said, as they were without event of striking note, being confined to labor in the summer time as soon as he was old enough to be of practical service and to attending the public schools of his native town during the winter seasons. After acquiring a fair education young Russell apprenticed himself to a carpenter to learn the art of building, becoming an efficient workman. He followed his chosen calling in Ohio until 1877, the meantime taking a number of important contracts in his native city and county and earning the reputation of a capable and reliable mechanic. Leaving Fremont the above year, he came to South Dakota and since that time has made his home in the Black Hills country. Mr. Russell has been an honored resident of Lawrence county since April, 1877, and in addition to carpentry has followed various other pursuits, meeting with financial success at his different undertakings.

In 1893 Mr. Russell was elected a member of the Spearfish city council, in which body he served one term, and from 1897 to 1899 inclusive he was a member of the board of county commissioners. He also served during the years 1895 and 1896 on the city school board, and in 1903 was elected, on the Republican ticket, representative from Lawrence county to the lower house of the state legislature. Mr. Russell is one of the standard bearers of the Republican party in Lawrence county, and as such has been a potential factor in local and state politics.

Mr. Russell joined the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in 1881, and has been a member in good standing ever since, besides holding nearly every office within the power of the local lodge to bestow. He has also been prominent in the affairs of the grand lodge and at one time served as grand master. Since 1894 he has been identified with the Modern Woodmen of America, in which he has also been honored with important official station.

On the 12th day of April, 1879, in the city of Deadwood, Dakota territory, was solemnized the ceremony which united Mr. Russell and Miss Emma Sayre in the bonds of holy wedlock, a marriage blessed with five children, whose names and dates of birth are as follows: Lillian V., January 29, 1880; Howard, October 6, 1881; Una, July 24, 1884; Ruby C., August 9, 1887, and John C., who was born September 11, 1891.

GEORGE F. JOHNSON is a prominent business man of Redfield, Spink county, and is now serving as register of deeds of said county. The original progenitor of the Johnson family in America immigrated hither in the early colonial period and located in New England, representatives of the name being found in various sections thereof at the present time. Franklin Johnson, the father of the subject, was a native of the state of Vermont, where he was reared to maturity. As a young man he removed thence to New Jersey, and there he married Miss Rispah Compton, who was born and reared in that state, and they became the parents of five children, of whom three are now living, the subject of this review having been the second in order of birth. He was born in this historic old town of Perth Amboy, Middlesex county, New Jersey, on the 5th of June, 1843, his father having been there engaged in the manufacturing of locks for a number of years. George F. received his early educational training in the schools of his native town and was about fifteen years of age when, in 1858, his parents removed to the west and settled in Waseca, Minnesota, 'as pioneers of the state. There the father engaged in the milling business, in which he continued during the remainder of his active career, and there his death occurred in 1893, at the venerable age of eighty-seven years, while his devoted wife died at the age of sixty-seven years.

The subject was associated with his father in the work of the mill at the time of the outbreak of the Civil war, and in March, 1863, at the age of twenty years, he enlisted as a private in Company A, First Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, which was commanded by Colonel Sully, who later became a general and distinguished himself in the Indian warfare of the west and northwest. The regiment proceeded to the national capital and shortly afterward Colonel Colvin assumed command. The regiment was assigned to the Army of the Potomac, and thereafter took part in every engagement in which this notable division of the Union forces was concerned until the close of the war, Mr. Johnson having received his honorable discharge, at St. Paul, Minnesota, in July, 1865, while the history of his regiment is the history of his record as a leal and loyal soldier of the republic.

After the close of the war Mr. Johnson returned to Minnesota, and in 1871 he engaged in the hotel business at Janesville, that state, continuing to be identified with this enterprise until 1881, when he came to Redfield, South Dakota, and became the pioneer hardware merchant of the town. He has ever since continued to be identified with this important branch of trade, has built up a large and profitable enterprise and is one of the influential and honored business men of the county. The business is now conducted under the firm name of G. F. Johnson & Son, his only son having been admitted to partnership in 1890. In politics Mr. Johnson is a stalwart Republican, taking a lively interest in the party cause. He served as the first city recorder and treasurer of Redfield, and is incumbent of these positions at the present time, while in November, 1902, he was elected register of deeds of the county, in which office he is giving a most systematic and able administration of the important affairs entrusted to his charge. He is a member of George H. Thomas Post, No. 5, Grand Army of the Republic, and also of the Masonic fraternity, in which he is affiliated with Redfield Lodge, No. 34, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Redfield Chapter, No. 20, Royal Arch Masons.

On the 19th of May, 1869, Mr. Johnson was united in marriage to Miss Laura E. Storrs, who was born in Maples, New York, being a daughter of John and Sarah Storrs. The subject and his estimable wife are the parents of two children, Grace F., who is now the wife of Hubert W. Bartlett, of Lead, Lawrence county, this state, and Harry E., who is now associated with his father in the hardware business.

SAMUEL A. HOY, superintendent of schools of Spink county, retaining his residence in Redfield, was born in Pickaway county, Ohio, on the 30th of October, 1866, being a son of Rev. Samuel and Melinda (Imler) Hoy, both of whom were likewise native of the old Buckeye state and representatives of pioneer families of that great commonwealth, while both were of German lineage. Samuel Hoy was a minister of the Evangelical Association, and for sixteen years—four terms—was presiding elder in the Ohio conference. In 1883 he removed with his family to South Dakota and took up his residence in Spink county, where he continued his ministerial work, being one of the pioneers of that section, where he developed a good farm. He died February 17, 1901, and his widow died January 1, 1904, leaving eleven children, eight sons and three daughters, not a death having occurred among the children.

The subject received his early educational discipline in the public schools of Ohio, and was seventeen years of age at the time of his parents' removal to South Dakota, where he continued his studies in the schools of Spink county. In 1887, at the age of twenty-one years, he began his career as a teacher in the public schools of Spink county, proving successful from the start and continuing to thus follow the pedagogic profession for thirteen years, at the expiration of which, in 1900, he was elected to his present office as superintendent of schools of Spink county, and was re-elected in 1902, in which capacity he has accomplished an admirable work, gaining the confidence and hearty co-operation of the teachers in his jurisdiction and the unqualified approval of the people of the county. In politics he is a staunch adherent of the Republican party, and fraternally is identified with La Delle Lodge, No. 133, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On the 26th of November, 1902, Mr. Hoy was united in marriage to Miss Blanche Cadwell, who was born in Illinois, on the 13th of October, 1873, being a daughter of Simon and Rosa (Bell) Cadwell, who are now residing in Ellsworth county, Kansas, where they removed in about 1877.

OTTO HENRY GERDES, M. D., an able representative of the medical profession in Eureka, McPherson county, is a native of Hanover, Germany, where he was born on the 25th of January, 1868, coming of sterling old German lineage and being a son of Henry and Margaret (Heiken) Gerdes, who were likewise born in Hanover, in which province the former was identified with agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred in 1873. In the family were five children, and in 1885 the widowed mother with two of her sons came to America and located in Manson, Iowa, where another of the sons had taken up his residence two years previously. Mrs. Gerdes returned to Germany in 1895, and still remains there, while the three sons continue to reside in America. Dr. Gerdes secured his early educational discipline in the excellent national schools of the fatherland, completing a course in the gymnasium, which is analogous in its provisions and functions to the high school of the United States. A few months after coming to America with his mother, being seventeen years of age at the time, he secured a position in the drug store of Foley Brothers, at Manson, Calhoun county, Iowa, and was thus employed until 1888, when he began reading medicine under the efficient direction of Dr. D. T. Martin, of the town mentioned, continuing his technical studies under this preceptor until the autumn of 1889, when he was matriculated in the celebrated Rush Medical College, in the city of Chicago, Illinois, where he completed the prescribed course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1892, receiving his coveted degree on the 29th of March of that year. A few months later he came to Hutchinson county, South Dakota, and in March, 1893, established himself in the practice of his profession in Eureka, McPherson county, where he has since remained and where he has been most successful in the work of his profession, having gained distinctive prestige as a physician and surgeon and being known as a close student and one who keeps in close touch with the advances made in both sciences involved, while his personality is such that he has gained the high esteem of the people of the community. He is a member of the American Medical Association and the South Dakota State Medical Society. The Doctor is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and is local medical examiner for the same, as well as for several of the leading life insurance companies having agencies here, notably the New York Mutual Life. He is also a thirty-second-degree Mason. Religiously he is a Lutheran and politically a Republican.

On the 22d of October, 1894, the Doctor was united in marriage to Miss Bertha Bryan, who was born and reared in Woodstock, Illinois, being a daughter of Thomas and Susan Bryan. Dr. and Mrs. Gerdes have three daughters,—Irene, Lillian and Maude.

In a supplemental way it may be stated that the Doctor's grandfather, Henry H. Gerdes, was the owner of three excellent farms in Hanover, Germany, where he died in 1888, at the venerable age of ninety-three years. He left a large and valuable estate, and the properties mentioned still remain in the possession of his descendants. He was a soldier under the renowned General Blucher, and was in that officer's command at the memorable battle of Waterloo.

JAMES A. KISER, a member of the well-known real-estate firm of Kiser Brothers, of Redfield, Spink county, was born on a farm near Madison, Dane county, Wisconsin, on the 24th of February, 1865, and is a son of William C. and Lucy A. (Black) Kiser, the former of whom was born in Virginia and the latter in Ohio, where her father was a pioneer, the Black family having been founded in America in the colonial days. The father of the subject passed his early childhood in the Old Dominion state and was about two years of age at the time of his father's death. His mother later removed with her children to Ohio and located in Montgomery county, on the site of the present National Soldiers' Home, near the city of Dayton. While he was still a boy the family removed to Logan county, Ohio, where he remained until 1862, when he located in Dane county, Wisconsin, where he was engaged in farming until 1881, when he came as a pioneer to what is now the state of South Dakota, taking up government land ten miles east of the present village of Mellette, Spink county, where he developed a valuable ranch, upon which he still resides. In 1888 he was elected county treasurer of Spink county, of which office he was incumbent two years.

James Kiser, the immediate subject of this sketch, passed his youth in Dane county, Wisconsin, and received his educational training in the public schools of the city of Madison. He was sixteen years of age at the time of the family removal to Spink county, and here he assisted in the work and management of the home ranch until his father was elected county treasurer, when he served as a clerk in the office for two years. At the expiration of this period, in 1891, he purchased an interest in an abstract and real-estate business in Redfield, being identified with this enterprise until 1894, when he disposed of his interests and went to California, where he remained until 1899, when he returned to Redfield and became associated with his brother, William C., Jr., in the real-estate business, the enterprise having been established some time previously by his brother, and they have since continued the business under the firm name of Kiser Brothers. They have finely appointed offices in Redfield, and courteous attention is given to all who seek their aid or advice in connection with the sale or purchase of property. The subject of this sketch is a staunch Democrat in politics, and fraternally he is a member of the order of Freemasons, being identified with Redfield Lodge, No. 34; Redfield Chapter, No. 20, Royal Arch Masons; Huron Commandery, Knights Templar, and El Riad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Sioux Falls.

On the 20th of March, 1889, Mr. Kiser was united in marriage to Miss Lydia A. Markham, a daughter of Giles Markham, a prominent citizen of Markesan, Wisconsin, in which state she was born and reared.

BURNHAM W. COLE, one of the pioneer business men and representative citizens of Mellette, Spink county, is a native of Stanstead, province of Quebec, Canada, where he was born on the 22d of May, 1855, being a son of Philo B. Cole, who was born and reared in the same town, where he continued his residence until the autumn of 1855, when he removed with his family to the northwestern part of the state of Illinois, where he still maintains his home, being a carriage manufacturer by vocation.

The subject of this sketch was reared to manhood in Illinois, in whose public schools he received his educational discipline. In 1881 he came to the territory of Dakota and in spring of the following year took up his abode in Mellette, where he engaged in the farming-impliment, coal and lumber business, beginning operations upon a modest scale and having built up a large and prosperous enterprise in the line, his trade at the present ramifying throughout the wide radius of territory normally tributary to the town. He is the owner of town property and also of valuable farming land in the county and is one of the substantial men of this section. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Republican party and fraternally is affiliated with the local organization of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

In the year 1887 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Cole to Miss Kate B. Gagen, who died January 1, 1895, leaving one child, Helen E. In 1899 Mr. Cole consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Eva L. Lee, and they have two sons, Carroll L. and Harold.

CHARLES M. HARRISON, a leading member of the Spink county bar and practicing his profession at Redfield as senior member of the well-known firm of Harrison & Everitt, was born June 22, 1851, at Springfield, Ohio. He is the son of the Rev. Thomas Harrison, D. D., of the Methodist Episcopal church, who was a native of Yorkshire, England. Rev. Harrison came to the United States when a young man, and located at Springfield, Ohio. When sixteen years of age he was ordained to the ministry. For a period of eight years he occupied the editor's chair of the Western Christian Advocate, published at Cincinnati, and subsequently he became president of Moore's Hill College, a church institution located at Moore's Hill, Dearborn county, Indiana. He was a man of high scholarship and fine executive ability and he accomplished much in his field of endeavor.

Charles M. Harrison was educated in the public schools and at Moore's Hill College, taking a six-years course at the latter. After leaving college he taught school in Indiana, and was in turn principal of the high schools of Connersville, Lafayette and Kokomo. He read law and was admitted to the Indiana bar in 1876, and was actively engaged in the practice of his profession in that state until 1883, when he came to what was the territory of Dakota, locating at Huron. There he engaged in the practice of law, and was appointed agent and attorney for the Milwaukee Loan Company, with which he continued until 1893. In that year he removed to Sioux Falls to take the financial management of the Connecticut General Life Insurance Company for its loan business in South Dakota, a position he held for eight years. In 1902 Mr. Harrison removed to Redfield to enter into a partnership with the Hon. T. A. Everitt in the practice of law, negotiating of mortgage loans and the buying and selling of real estate.

Mr. Harrison is a Republican in politics, and in 1891 was elected to the second general assembly of South Dakota from Beadle county. He is a Mason of the Knights Templar degree, and is also a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On January 20, 1880, Mr. Harrison was married to Anna R. Shirk, of New Castle, Indiana, the daughter of the Hon. Benjamin Shirk. He was a prominent citizen of Indiana, and served in both the house and senate of the Indiana legislature. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison are the parents of three children: Ruth, Ben-Tom and Florence.

ANDREW H. OLESON, promoter, practical miner and prominent citizen of Deadwood, hails from far-off Norway, where his birth occurred on July 15, 1861. His father was a well-to-do farmer and amid the romantic rural scenes of his native land young Andrew spent his childhood and youth. He attended for some years the public schools, and until reaching the years of young manhood remained with his parents, assisting in the cultivation of the farm and contributing to the maintenance of the family. Leaving home, Mr. Oleson engaged in railroad construction, to which line of work he devoted himself until 1879, when he came to America, and for some years thereafter lived in Wisconsin, where he was variously employed. From that state he went to Michigan and engaged in the manufacture of lumber, later returning to Wisconsin, where he also operated a sawmill, afterwards finding mining for some years in both states.

In 1883 Mr. Oleson came to the Black Hills, where he put in a number of years at mining, being employed a part of the time by the Homestake Company at Lead, and devoting the rest to prospecting, later to the promoting of various mining enterprises. He has located a number of valuable mines that promise liberal returns, when properly developed, in addition to which he also owns rich mineral properties adjoining the Homestake ledges, from which in due time he will no doubt realize an independent fortune. At the present time he is engaged in promoting a business he has prosecuted with encouraging financial results, and at intervals he mines for himself and for others, realizing from both lines of work a handsome income. Since becoming a citizen of South Dakota Mr. Oleson has been active in the public and political affairs of his city, county and state, having been elected in 1890 a member of the general assembly as representative from Lawrence county. He served with credit during the session of that year, and subsequently, 1896, was re-elected to the same body. He also served as a member of the city council, in which capacity his record was above criticism. Mr. Oleson is a Democrat in politics, and is a worthy citizen of his adopted country, an admirer of its institutions, a loyal supporter of its laws, and to all intents and purposes as genuine an American citizen as if he had been born and bred under the protecting folds of the Stars and Stripes.

Mr. Oleson was married, December 22, 1892, to Miss Minnie Gies, a native of Dayton, Ohio, and of German descent, who came to the Black Hills with her parents in 1879, when a child. The result of his union is one child, a daughter by the name of Florence.

JERRY T. HARRINGTON, one of the prominent mining men of the Black Hills, who retains his residence in the city of Deadwood, is a native of County Kerry, Ireland, and exemplifies the sterling characteristics of his sturdy race. He was born on the 7th of April, 1847, being a son of John and Mary (Twohey) Harrington, both of whom were likewise born in County Kerry, where the respective families had been established for many generations, the paternal grandfather of the subject having borne the name of Patrick Harrington, while the maternal grandfather was Patrick Twohey, both having been sturdy and honest tillers of the soil in the fair but oppressed Emerald Isle, as was also the father of the subject. In the great famine of 1848 he met with the great misfortune which attended the many other farmers of Ireland, and died there in 1850. Soon afterward his wife and her three sons emigrated to America, settling in Dutchess county, New York, where they remained until 1856, when they removed to Michigan and located in Copper Harbor, while later they took up their abode in the great copper district in the upper peninsula of that state, where the mother passed the remainder of her life. The eldest son, Philip, removed to Colorado in 1878, and has there been very successful, being a resident of the city of Boulder at the present time. The third of the sons is deceased.

The subject of this sketch received his educational training in the schools of Michigan and early began to depend largely upon his own resources, doing various kinds of work about the copper mines. He continued to reside in the vicinity of Calumet, that state, until 1879, when he came to Deadwood, arriving on the 24th of October. Here he first engaged in prospecting, but met with indifferent success, so that he then turned his attention to contracting, principally for the Homestake Mining Company, while in the connection he constructed the greater portion of the narrow-gauge railroad lines between Deadwood and Nemo and Deadwood and Piedmont, while later he met with considerable success in timber contracting and in the general merchandise business, in which latter he was engaged in Roubaix. Within this time he also began investing in mining properties, and in 1886 he gave up all other interests to devote his entire time and attention to his mining properties. He is associated with John F. Sawyer in the ownership of the Tomahawk mine, having six hundred and forty acres in the property, while two hundred acres are patented. The mine is located at

Nemo, just beyond the terminus of the branch of the narrow-gauge railroad, and more than forty thousand dollars have been expended in the improvement and development of the property, which is considered a most valuable one. One shaft has reached a depth of one hundred feet and the ledge is easily traced for one mile, men being constantly employed in preparing for further extension of the work of development. Messrs. Harrington and Sawyer also own the Transvaal and Idlewild mines, located at Suster Peak, where they have one hundred and seventy acres patented. Here they have an eighty-five-foot cage shaft of two compartments, while there are also a number of other shafts, together with cross-cuts, drifts, etc., ore showing on this property for thirty-six hundred feet on the strike of the ledge. This is also a valuable property, showing a decomposed ore seventy feet down and being easily worked, as large quantities of wood and water are available. Mr. Harrington is also associated with Harry Graig in the ownership of the Inca mine, formerly known as the Fairview, this having been one of the first discoveries in the Black Hills. On this mine a depth of two hundred and fifty feet has been reached, while they have a tunnel of three hundred feet, at a depth of one hundred and seventy feet from the apex of the shaft. This property is a producer, and the firm have a large quantity of ore staked—eighty acres, of which twenty are under patent. The subject is also interested in other promising properties and is known as one of the progressive and discriminating mining men of the Hills. He is a Democrat in his political proclivities, and fraternally is identified with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, while he also holds membership in the Business Men's Club of Deadwood and Mining Men's Association of the United States.

GEORGE S. JACKSON, a prominent and honored citizen of Deadwood, comes of stanch old New England stock, and is himself a native of Vermont, having been born in Bartonville, that state, on the 21 of August, 1850, and being a son of Samuel and Harriet (Brought Billings) Jackson, both of whom were born and reared in Bellows Falls, Vermont. In 1861 the subject accompanied his parents on their removal to the city of Chicago, Illinois, where his father continued to be engaged in the wholesale coffee and spice business until his death, which occurred in 1864, while the devoted wife and mother was summoned into eternal rest in 1902. They became the parents of four children, of whom the subject of this review was the second in order of birth, while all are living.

Mr. Jackson received his early educational training in the public schools of the western metropolis and later completed a course of study in the Goddard Seminary, at Barre, Vermont. He then returned to Chicago, where he held a clerical position in the wholesale furniture house of C. C. Holton & Company until 1877, when, at the age of eighteen years, he came west to Leadville, Colorado, arriving on the 26th of February, a number of years prior to the great stampede of mining prospectors to that section. At the time of his arrival the town had a population of about two thousand persons, and he there engaged in mining enterprises and also in the mercantile business, meeting with excellent success. In 1884 he left Leadville and came to Deadwood, South Dakota, where he forthwith became identified with mining, his prime object in coming here having been to give his attention to the mining of tin ore and shipping the same to Europe, for the purpose of enlightening the persons there interested as to the possibilities offered in connection with the development of this industry in America. He successfully proved that his position was well taken, and at the present time he is personally interested in fully thirteen hundred acres patented tin-mining ground in this district, while he was also the promoter of the Victoria Gold Mining and Milling Company, which is to be listed as the third largest producer of the Ragged Top district. He is the principal stockholder of the company and its general manager. Mr. Jackson is also extensively interested in real estate in this locality, owning about four hundred acres of land adjacent to the city of Deadwood, while he devotes no little attention to the raising of cattle, giving preference to the thoroughbred Hereford type. In addition to the mining properties mentioned it should be noted that he is also a member of the directorate of the Pluma Gold Mining and Milling Company and the Golden Empire Mining Company, both representing important enterprises. He was the originator and promoter of the Black Hills Mining Men's Association, which has accomplished much in connection with the mining interests of this section and which is mentioned in detail in the general historical division of this publication. He is also a valued member of the Deadwood Business Men's Club, the American Mining Congress and the Olympic Association, while he has attained the thirty-second degree in the Masonic fraternity, being identified with the consistory, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, at Deadwood, as well as with Naja Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Deadwood. In politics he gives a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, but has never sought the honors or emoluments of public office, though he takes a deep interest in all that tends to conserve the best interests of his home city and state.

On the 10th of October, 1888, Mr. Jackson was united in marriage to Miss Mary J. Power, who was born and reared in the city of Chicago, Illinois, and who is a daughter of Thomas Power, now a member of the Fish-Hunter Company, of Deadwood and Lead, South Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Jackson have one son, George L., who was born on the 5th of October, 1889.

JACOB TSCHETTER hails from far-away Russia, in the southern part of which country his birth occurred on October 27, 1857. His parents were Joseph and Mary (Wipf) Tschetter, both natives of Russia, the father for a number of years a farmer of considerable means and a man of much more than ordinary influence and social standing. In 1875 he immigrated to the United States and settled at Elkhart, Indiana, but after living there until the spring of the following year, moved his family to South Dakota, locating in Hutchinson county, where he took up a homestead and pre-erupted a claim, both of which he at once proceeded to improve. He was an industrious man, developed a good farm and spent the remainder of his life on the same, dying in the year 1884. His wife, who is still living, resides on the home place in Hutchinson county.

Jacob Tschetter spent his childhood and youth in the land of his nativity, and at the age of eighteen accompanied the family to the United States, receiving his first knowledge of the English language and of American manners and customs at Elkhart, Indiana. He attended school there a part of one year, and in 1876 removed with his parents to South Dakota, where he assisted his father in improving the farm, remaining at home until 1877, in the fall of which year he entered the marriage relation with Miss Anna Mendel, a native of Russia, and purchasing land near the family homestead engaged in the pursuit of agriculture. Meeting with encouraging success as a farmer, he subsequently purchased other lands, until in due time he found himself the owner of five hundred and twenty acres, the greater part of which he reduced to cultivation and otherwise improved and upon which he continued to live and prosper until 1884. In that year he abandoned agriculture and, moving to the town of Bridgewater, engaged in merchandising, in connection with which he also did a thriving business for some time buying and shipping cattle. Mr. Tschetter embarked in the latter line of trade with a partner in whom he reposed great confidence, but the latter, becoming financially embarrassed, so involved the entire business that at the end of two years the firm was obliged to close its doors and go to the wall. During the two years following this disaster the subject was variously employed, working for some time in a machine shop until elected city marshal, the duties of which position he discharged in an eminently satisfactory manner for several years. At the expiration of his official term he was appointed deputy sheriff of McCook county, and after leaving that office served as deputy United States marshal for six years, during which time he became widely known as a faithful and efficient public servant. In the course of his business career, especially in that part immediately following his financial reverses, Mr. Tschetter became involved in a number of law suits, growing out of the collecting of outstanding accounts, several of which he carried to the circuit court, thence to the supreme court, where verdicts were rendered in his favor. Considering his limited experience in litigation in this country and his indifferent knowledge of the English language, having attended school no more than six weeks in America, his success in pushing his cases to final issue and winning verdicts was little less than remarkable, as nearly everybody acquainted with the matter predicted his certain defeat. Realizing the justice of his cause, however, he refused to abide by the adverse decisions of lower courts and, appealing from the same to higher tribunals, obtained the victory to which in law as well as equity he was so clearly entitled.

For some years past Mr. Tschetter has been dealing in real estate, and his reputation as a clear-headed, far-seeing man has won him a large and lucrative patronage. He has made a number of important sales in different parts of the state, one of which, including the transfer of farm property in Beadle county, amounting to ninety-six thousand dollars, being the largest landed deal effected in South Dakota during the year 1902.

Mr. and Mrs. Tschetter are the parents of six children, namely: Jacob, a clothing merchant at Bridgewater; Joseph, a teacher in the public schools; Susan and Anna are also engaged in educational work, while David and Mary are still at home. Susan, the older daughter, was the first young lady of Russian parentage to teach in the schools of Hutchinson county, and one of the first of her nationality to engage in educational work in the state. She and her sister Anna are fine vocalists and leading members of the choir of the Mennonite church, to which the family belong. Joseph is also an accomplished musician; he organized the Lutheran College Band of Sioux Falls, was a member of the First Regimental Band for some years, and at this time is leader and instructor of the Goodrich Band, one of the finest organizations of the kind in South Dakota.

In politics Mr. Tschetter was a Democrat until 1896, since which time he has become an ardent supporter of the Republican party, his change of views being caused by the free silver fallacy, which he could in no wise endorse, having always been an advocate of a sound and stable currency based upon the gold standard. For a number of years prior to 1896 he served on the Democratic state central committee, and since abandoning his former position he has been equally as active in his efforts to advance the interests of the party with which he is now identified, being one of the Republican leaders in McCook county, and an influential factor in district and state, as well as in local politics. Fraternally he is a Mason, belonging to Sioux Falls Lodge, No. 262, and he is also an active worker in the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Modern Woodmen of America, holding important official positions in both. Religiously he was born and reared in the Mennonite faith, and is still a loyal member of the church of that time, as are also his wife and the other members of the family, being among the leaders and liberal supporters of the congregation worshipping in Bridgewater. Mr. Tschetter is a man of strong intellectuality, great personal force, and occupies a conspicuous position among the representative citizens of McCook county.

WILLIAM G. RICE, who is presiding on the bench of the circuit court for the district comprising Lawrence, Butte and Meade counties, and who has been established in the active practice of law in Deadwood for nearly twenty years, was born in Memphis, Scotland county, Missouri, on the 1st of February, 1858, and is a son of Hudson and Frances C. (Oliver) Rice, the former of whom was born in Kentucky and the latter in Virginia. The paternal grandfather of our subject likewise bore the name of Hudson and was born in Kentucky, whither his father, John Rice, removed from Virginia in an early day, both the Rice and Oliver families having been established in the Old Dominion state prior to the war of the Revolution, in which representatives of both participated, while further evidence of loyalty was given in succeeding generations of both families, for those of the two names were found enlisted for service during the war of 1812, the paternal grandfather of the Judge having been a participant in the battle of Fort Meigs, Ohio, in that conflict with the mother country. The maternal grandfather became one of the pioneers of Missouri, where he became extensively engaged in farming and stock raising, being one of the influential men of his section. The father of the subject was reared to maturity in Kentucky, where he received a liberal education for the locality and period, and as a young man he removed thence to Missouri, locating in Scotland county, where he became a prominent and successful farmer and stock grower. They became the parents of six children, of whom five are living, the Judge being the eldest.

Judge Rice was reared on the homestead farm and received his early education in the public schools of his native county. At the age of eighteen years he put his scholastic acquirements to practical test and use by engaging in teaching in the district schools, and he followed this profession successfully for several years. At the age of twenty-three he began reading law in the office of the firm of McKee & Jayne, whose principals were leading members of the bar of Memphis, Missouri, and under their effective direction he continued his technical studies until 1884, in May of which year he was duly admitted to the bar of Missouri, being pronounced specially well equipped. Shortly afterward he started for the west, and in July of the same year located in Deadwood, where he has been identified with a large percentage of the more important cases litigated in the courts of this and adjoining counties, and has retained a representative clientele, gaining popular favor at the very inception of his professional career. In 1888 he was elected to the office of district attorney, serving six consecutive years in this important and exacting position, which fact indicates that he was twice chosen as his own successor. He served the three terms and could not become again a candidate, this being the limitation prescribed by the constitution of the state. In 1894 he was elected to represent his district in the state senate, serving during the fifth general assembly and making a most excellent record as a discriminating, loyal and public-spirited member of the deliberative body of the legislature. He introduced and ably advocated the bill providing for the better protection of the state funds, and it was largely due to his earnest and unceasing effort that this wise measure was enacted. In 1896 the Judge was again the choice of his party for the state senate, and while he made a vigorous canvass and secured a gratifying support he was not able to overcome the Populistic landslide which swept the state in that year. From May, 1896, until May, 1902, the Judge served as city attorney of Deadwood, and on the 11th of June of the latter year he was appointed to his present office as circuit judge, to fill out the unexpired term of Judge Frank J. Washabaugh, whose death caused the vacancy. In politics the Judge has ever been an uncompromising Republican, and has been an able advocate of the principles and policies of the party. He and his wife are prominent members of the Methodist Episcopal church. The Judge is an enthusiastic devotee of sports and afield and afloat, and his vacations are largely given to recreation with rod and gun.

On the 21st of October, 1885, Judge Rice was united in marriage to Miss Minerva Smoot, who was born and reared in Memphis, Missouri, being a daughter of H. E. Smoot, a prominent citizen of that place and a native of Virginia.

IRA C. KINGSBERRY, cashier of the Bank of Hartford, Minnehaha county, is a native of the state of Indiana, having been born in Monticello, White county, on the 14th of September, 1851, a son of Albert and Maria (Adams) Kingsberry, the former of whom died in 1864.

while the mother still lives at Monticello, Indiana. The subject secured his educational discipline in the public schools of his native county, having also attended the high school at Crawfordsville, Indiana, for one year. In 1869 he initiated his independent business career by establishing himself in the grocery trade in Monticello, continuing this enterprise for three years and being successful in his efforts. In 1873 he purchased an interest in the Monticello woolen mills, which had been operated by his father up to the time of his death, in 1864. With this industrial undertaking the subject continued to be identified until 1876, when he disposed of his interest in the same and removed to Remington, Indiana, where he was engaged in the general-merchandise business for the ensuing six years, at the expiration of which, in 1882, he came to South Dakota, and located in St. Lawrence, Hand county, where he became the pioneer merchant of the town, there continuing operations for the ensuing three years and then removing to Highmore, Hyde county, where he became associated with his brothers in the hardware and implement business, in which he there continued until 1888, when he came to Hartford and established the Bank of Hartford, forthwith assuming the office of cashier of the institution, of which the president, William H. Wells, owns the remaining half interest, he having never taken up his abode in South Dakota, so that the entire executive charge of the business has been in the hands of the subject from the time of establishing the bank. In addition to his banking interests Mr. Kingsbery is the owner of a fine farm of two hundred acres adjoining the village, while he owns other lands in the county to an aggregate area of thirteen hundred and eighty acres, being prominently identified with the raising of the highest grade of Aberdeen Angus cattle. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, while both he and his wife are prominent and valued members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

On the 3d of June, 1874, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Kingsbery to Miss Lu A. Curtis, of Monticello, Indiana, and they are the parents of three children, namely: Lois K., who is the wife of Frank L. Mays, editor and proprietor of the Daily Journal at Pensacola, Florida; Albert C., who is a graduate of the University of Colorado, at Boulder, Colorado; Howard L., who is a member of the class of 1903 in the University of South Dakota, at Mitchell.

JOHN L. PYLE.—Many strong and noble men have lent honor and dignity to the state of South Dakota by distinguished public service, and among them stands the subject of this sketch, who was the first South Dakotan to die while in a state office. He was attorney general of the state at the time of his death.

John Levis Pyle came of sturdy stock. His mother was born near London, England, and came to America with her parents while still a child. On his father's side his ancestors were identified with American progress from the earliest times, the founder of the family having been one of Penn's colonists in the seventeenth century. The Pyles were early noted for their fearlessness and sturdy independence. They were steady, temperate men, of strong character, indomitable energy and magnificent physical development. Early settlers in Pennsylvania, they were also pioneers in pushing westward along the frontier. They were famous as fighters and many stories are told of their deeds of physical prowess. John Pyle presented in his own person the full development of this splendid ancestry, being a man of great mental and physical power, noted for his honesty, courage and progressive energy.

The future attorney general was born at Coal Run, Ohio, May 5, 1860. His mother, Mary Dean Pyle, was a woman of remarkably sweet and gentle disposition. The influence of her self-control and kindly ways were very great upon her son. It remained with him through life and made him in his private walks one of the most lovable of men. His father, Dr. Levis Pyle, was a man of restless and progressive spirit—energetic, public-spirited and absolutely fearless. During the strife and turmoil of the ante-bellum days in Ohio he took a prominent part in the agitation for the abolition of slavery and more than once was in peril for his life on account of his activity. Shortly after the war he removed to Raritan, Illinois, where he resided until 1882, when he came to the territory of Dakota and settled in Miller. Here he continued to reside, engaged in the active practice of his profession, until he was called away by death, at the ripe old age of seventy-five.

The early schooling of the subject of this sketch was obtained in the public schools at Raritan and was later supplemented by a course of study in the college at Westfield, Illinois. He early went to work for himself, earning his own living from the age of thirteen. In 1879 he went to Montana and engaged in mining until 1882, when he came with the early settlers to Dakota and took up land near Miller. He then began the study of law, was admitted to the bar and elected state's attorney for Hand county in 1886. In 1889 he removed to Huron, where he was residing at the time of his death. The best of his life work was done at Huron. He rose rapidly in his profession, commanded the unequivocal confidence and love of the entire community, and was finally elected attorney general in 1898. He was the first state officer ever selected from Beadle county and at the time of his election attracted attention by the unusual degree to which he received the support of his home county. In politics he was a stanch Republican and an influential party worker. As attorney general he gave a most able and satisfactory administration of the exacting duties of his office. The fever which brought about his death was contracted while in the discharge of his official duties, in Helena, Montana, whither he had gone to attend the conference of governors and attorneys general relative to the prosecution of the famous merger suit against the Northern Securities Company.

Mr. Pyle was a man who often attracted attention on account of his magnificent physique, and his untimely death was a great surprise to all. He was buried with the honors of state.

In his special proclamation touching the death of the attorney general, Governor Herreid said: "Mr. Pyle was an efficient public officer; an able, conscientious lawyer and an honorable Christian gentleman, who was respected by all classes and loved and admired by all who had the privilege of his personal acquaintance. In his untimely death his family, the legal profession, the public service and all the people of the state have suffered an unmeasurable loss."

Mr. Pyle was a prominent and active member of the Presbyterian church and president of the board of trustees of the Presbyterian College of South Dakota; fraternally he was identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, with the Modern Woodmen of America and with James River Lodge, No. 32, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. The bar of Beadle county adopted resolutions of respect and esteem at the time of his death, from which the following is an extract: "Our deceased brother was a man of high character and worth; as a public officer, he served the people of his state with fidelity; as a private citizen, he was zealous in the discharge of every civic duty; as a husband, he was faithful and kind; as a father, he was patient, gentle and indulgent; as a lawyer, he was able and conscientious, steadfast in his relation with his clients and earnest and careful in the protection of their interests; as a man, he was mild and sincere, true in his friendships, dignified in his bearing, and in all his conduct governed by a lofty sense of duty."

Mr. Pyle was married at Miller, on the 26th of May, 1886, to Mary I. Shields, who survives him and still lives at their beautiful home in Huron. Of this union four children were born, all of whom survive.

In conclusion, the whole matter of Mr. Pyle's standing in the community and his relation to his fellow men may well be summed up in the declaration of a former state official who had known him closely for nearly a score of years. Said this gentleman to the writer, "Physically, mentally and morally, John Pyle was one of the most perfect men I ever knew."

WASHINGTON J. HUNT, who holds the responsible executive office of manager of the Farmers' Elevator Company, at Hartford, Minnehaha county, claims the Empire state as the place of his nativity, having been born in North New Berlin, New York, on the 22d of February, 1856, and the fact of his having thus been ushered into the world on the birthday anniversary of the immortal Washington led to his being given the name of the "father of his country." He is a son of Reuben and Elizabeth (Wrench) Hunt, the father born in England and the mother in New York state. The father was engaged as a stone-mason until 1857, when he removed to Fayette county, Iowa, becoming one of the pioneers of that section, where he followed his trade, in connection with farming, for many years. He maintains his name at Fayette, Iowa, while his wife died April 4, 1901.

The subject of this review was not yet one year of age when his parents removed to Iowa, and thus he is a typical western man in spirit and training. After availing himself of the advantages of the public schools he continued his studies for a time in the Upper Iowa University, at Fayette. As a youth he learned the trade of stone-mason under the effective direction of his father, and to the same he continued to devote his attention in Iowa until 1878, when, at the age of twenty-two years, he came to Sioux Falls, South Dakota, thus gaining title to consideration as one of the pioneers of this commonwealth. Here he was engaged in teaching in the public schools for the first two years, and the ensuing seven years he devoted to agricultural pursuits in Minnehaha county. In 1892 he was elected superintendent of schools of the county, retaining this incumbency for a term of two years, during which he resided in East Sioux Falls, while later he devoted his attention to teaching and to the work of his trade, residing in Valley Springs. He returned to Iowa in 1900 and during that and the succeeding year was principal of the school at Larchwood, that state. He then returned to South Dakota and took up his abode in the thriving town of Hartford, where he was engaged in the work of his trade until August, 1902, when he was chosen to his present position of business manager of the Farmers' Elevator Company, in which capacity he has since continued to serve, manifesting that administrative ability and good business judgment which ever make for the success of any enterprise, and so materially has he advanced the interests of the company as to gain the unqualified approval and endorsement of its board of directors, who voluntarily increased his salary at the opening of the year 1903, thus tangibly showing their appreciation of his efforts. In politics Mr. Hunt is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Prohibition party and signified the same by supporting its cause. He and his wife are zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On the 7th of May, 1880, Mr. Hunt was united in marriage to Miss Louise C. Vandermark, of Sioux Falls, and they are the parents of three children, May E., who is the wife of Grant H. Stone, of Sioux Falls; Roy A., who assists his father in the work of the elevator business; and Faith A., who is attending the public schools of Hartford.

FRANK E. VAN DE MARK, who is the owner of a fine landed estate of six hundred and forty acres, in Hartford and Grand Meadow townships, Minnehaha county, was born in Lake county, Illinois, on the 8th of October, 1851, being a son of Henry A. and Mary (Adams) Van De Mark, who came to the territory of Dakota in 1877, the father dying here in 1887, at the age of sixty-six years, while his wife passed away in 1902, at the venerable age of ninety years. The subject of this sketch secured his early education in the public schools of Illinois and Iowa, to which latter state his parents removed when he was twelve years old, and after coming to South Dakota he supplemented the discipline by a course of study in a business college in Sioux Falls. In 1872, when twenty-one years of age, he left his home in Iowa and started for Dakota, making the trip principally on foot and driving a yoke of oxen, which represented his worldly possessions, since he did not have even a wagon. He took up the southeast quarter of section 29, Grand Meadow township, as a pre-emption, proving up on it and developing the property into a good farm, of which he disposed in 1876. He is thus one of the pioneers of Minnehaha county. Part of his present fine estate lies in sections 3, 4 and 10, Hartford township, and comprises six hundred and forty acres, as before noted, while it is one of the best stock farms in this section. The place on which he resides comprises seventy-three and a half acres and lies in section 22, Hartford township, just east of the city limits, and contains his fine home and buildings. He also plotted and owns the Van De Mark addition to Hartford. In addition to raising the various cereals best adapted to the soil and climate, he gives special attention to the raising of the finest grade of live stock, including registered short-horn cattle, Poland-China swine and Shropshire sheep, and at the present time he is devoting practically his entire attention to the fancy stock business, of which he has developed more than any other breeder in the state. Of his place and its attractions a leading stock journal has spoken as follows:

We feel compelled, through the merits of the case, to direct the attention of our stockmen to what is being done in their line by F. E. Van De Mark, of Hartford, South Dakota. Located in the immediate vicinity of a town, with splendid natural conditions and excellent accommodations for all kinds of stock, his farm furnishes most that could be desired for the successful breeding of pure-bred stock. While short-horn cattle, Shropshire sheep and Barred Plymouth Rock chickens are respectively represented by a number of the very best specimens, we wish to make particular mention of the Poland-China herd, having at its head Van Dee 69449, sired by the sweepstakes hog at the state fair of 1902. Viola Over 160780, who won sweepstakes at Yankton, is a sow of splendid proportions and her points of excellence are away in the majority. Paulina 174762, bred by Rockwell Brothers, of Iowa, is also a nicely turned and vigorous-looking animal. Other young sows, as Dakota and Iowa, show clearly that Mr. Van De Mark is on the right track and is more than an amateur in the business. The close proximity to the depot and town and the quality and variety of stock kept, should induce any lover of good stock to stop off at Hartford and give Mr. Van De Mark a call.

In politics Mr. Van De Mark is a staunch Republican, and he is now serving as justice of the peace and also as treasurer of the Hartford school fund, while in 1898 he received the nomination for representative in the state legislature, but met defeat with the rest of the party ticket in the state. He and his wife are prominent and valued members of the Methodist Episcopal church in Hartford, and fraternally he is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 1st of March, 1878, in Fayette county, Iowa, Mr. Van De Mark was united in marriage to Miss Amelia E. Hunt, who was born in England, whence she came with her parents to America in her childhood. The subject and his wife are the parents of seven children, namely: Guy E., who is attending the Northwestern Medical College, in Chicago; Walter E., who is a graduate of the university at Mitchell and who was principal of the East Sioux Falls public schools in 1902; and Blanch E., Frank E., Jr., Henry E., Martin E., and Ruth E., who remain at the parental home.

JOHN A. PHELPS, one of the interested principals in the Hartford Milling Company, at Hartford, Minnehaha county, is a native of the state of Minnesota, having been born in Shelton, Houston county, on the 1st of February, 1863, a son of John and Julia (Lyon) Phelps. The father died in 1899, and the mother is living at Richville, Washington. The subject attended the public schools of his native town until he had completed a course in the high school, and at the age of eighteen years he identified himself with the milling business there, working in various mills in Minnesota and gaining a thorough knowledge of the business in all its details. In 1886 he came to Madison, South Dakota, and there held the position of head miller in the Madison roller mills until April, 1902, when he came to Hartford and associated himself with Duncan A. McGillidray in the erection of the finely equipped roller-process mill which is now operated by them under the title of the Hartford Milling Company, our subject having the supervision of the operation of the mill, which is one of the best in this section, having a capacity for the output of one hundred barrels of flour per day, while the various brands manufactured, have gained a high reputation, so that the business of the company is constantly increasing in scope and importance. Mr. Phelps is a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, in whose cause he takes an active interest, though he has never desired the honors or emoluments of public office. Fraternally he is affiliated with Hartford Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, at Hartford, and with the chapter, Royal Arch Masons, at Madison, South Dakota.

On the 25th of August, 1887, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Phelps to Miss Elva Berry, of Money Creek, Minnesota, and she was summoned into eternal rest on the 25th of October, 1892, being survived by her only child, Hazel May, who was born on the 16th of March, 1891.

LUCIUS A. PEASE, who is now living retired in the pleasant village of Hartford, Minnehaha county, was born in the village of Hillsboro, Louisa county, Iowa, on the 18th of March, 1849, being a son of Allen W. and Esther N. (Blyvens) Pease, his father having been a school-teacher by vocation and a man of much ability and sterling character. He died in 1877 and his devoted wife is still living at the age of seventy-five years. The subject secured his early education in the public schools of Muscatine, Iowa, and when he was ten years of age his parents removed to Kenosha county, Wisconsin, where he continued to attend school until the time of the Civil war, when his youthful patriotism led him to tender his services in defense of the Union. At the age of fifteen years Mr. Pease enlisted as a member of Company C, Thirty ninth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, with which he continued in service during his term of one hundred days. In 1865 he re-enlisted, at this time becoming a private in Company D, Sixty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but as the war closed soon afterward he did not see much active service with this command. He received his discharge after his first term in the city of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, while the final discharge was received in the city of Chicago. After the close of the war he rejoined his parents, who were then residing on their farm in Kenosha county, Wisconsin, and there he remained, assisting his father in his labors, until 1873, when he came to the territory of Dakota, taking up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres in Minnehaha county, and also a pre-emption claim adjoining, and to this landed estate he later added until he is at the present time the owner of a valuable farming property of four hundred and twenty acres, the same being equipped with excellent improvements of a permanent nature and maintained under a high state of cultivation. On this farm he continued to be successfully engaged in diversified agriculture and stock growing until the spring of 1903, when he rented the place, by reason of impaired health, and took up his residence in Hartford, where he is now living practically retired, though he still maintains a general supervision of his farm property. In politics Mr. Pease gave his allegiance to the Republican party until the organization of the Populist party, when he joined its ranks, having since been a staunch advocate of its principles and policies. Mr. Pease served for twenty years as postmaster at Lyons, this county, said postoffice being located on his farm, and there he was also incumbent of the office of justice of the peace for a number of years.

On the 31st of December, 1873, Mr. Pease was united in marriage to Miss Josephine A. VanWie, of Salem, Wisconsin, and they are the parents of three children,—Luella E., who is the wife of David M. Crooks, of Lyons, this state; Maud May, who is the wife of George Lott, a successful farmer of Grand Meadow township, this county; and Walter L., who resides in Hartford, where he is engaged in farming.

DUNCAN A. MCGILLIVRAY, one of the representative business men and influential citizens of Hartford, Minnehaha county, comes of stanch Scotch extraction and was born in Gengarry county, province of Ontario, Canada, on the 4th of May, 1850, a son of John and Mary (McGillivray) McGillivray, the former of whom died in Lake county, South Dakota, in 1894. The subject received such educational advantages as were afforded in the excellent public schools of his native province, and was there identified with farming until 1878, when he removed to Wisconsin, where he remained about a year, being employed in connection with the lumbering industry. In May, 1879, he arrived in Lake county, South Dakota, where he took up a homestead claim and also a tree claim, developing and improving a good farm and being there engaged in agricultural pursuits and stock raising until the spring of 1902, when he came to Hartford and associated himself with John A. Phelps in the formation of the Hartford Milling Company. The finely equipped mill was erected by them in the same year, while they have built up an excellent business in the manufacturing of high-grade flour from selected spring wheat, the other products of the mill also being of marked superiority. The mill represents an investment of about fifteen thousand dollars, and has a capacity of one hundred and fifty barrels a day, the major portion of the output being sold in the local markets, while shipments are made at intervals to Illinois.

Mr. McGillivray has been a stanch supporter of the Republican party since attaining the right of franchise and has shown a proper interest in public affairs of a local nature. While a resident of Lake county he served four years as sheriff, giving a most able and satisfactory administration. Fraternally he is identified with Hartford Lodge, U. D., Free and Accepted Masons, and the Knights of Pythias.

On the 31st of March, 1885, Mr. McGillivray was married to Miss Delphemia Seaton, of Lake county, and she entered into eternal rest on the 31st of May, 1893, being survived by one son and three daughters, namely: Jessie, John, Della and May. On the 8th of October, 1894, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. McGillivray to Miss Mabel Phelps, a sister of his partner, John A. Phelps, and of this union has been born one son, Murdock J.

MYRON H. CALDWELL, owner of the Spring Creek farm, near Hartford, Minnehaha county, was born in Baraboo, Sauk county, Wisconsin, on the 19th of December, 1853, being a son of Hiram B. and Pamela (Allen) Caldwell, who were sterling pioneers of the Badger state. The father is now dead, while the mother makes her home with the subject. Mr. Caldwell secured his early education in the public schools and in the institute of Baraboo, continuing to abide beneath the parental roof until he had attained the age of sixteen years, when he came to what is now the state of South Dakota, arriving in June, 1870, and entering pre-emption and homestead claims near the present city of Sioux Falls. There he devoted his attention to the improvement and cultivation of his farm until 1879, when he disposed of the property and moved to Hartford township, this county, where he eventually became the owner of this present attractive and valuable farmstead of three hundred and twenty acres. There he was engaged in diversified farming and stock raising until February 15, 1903, when he rented his farm and took up his residence in Hartford, establishing himself in business here, as previously noted. Mr. Caldwell has been an uncompromising Republican from the time of attaining his legal majority, and the esteem in which he is held in this community is shown in the fact that he has been called upon to serve in every township office in Hartford township with the exception of those of assessor and treasurer, while he has always manifested a distinctive public spirit and an abiding loyalty to the state in which he has gained a position of independence through well-directed effort. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 10th of October, 1870, Mr. Caldwell was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth

A. Delaney, daughter of Sylvanus and Margaret (Scott) Delaney, of Sioux Falls, where they located in 1866, being numbered among the honored pioneers of that place, whither they came from Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell are the parents of six children, namely: Orrin S., Alice M., Ray H., Roy M., James G. and John R.

NELS HAUGEN, postmaster of Hartford, Minnehaha county, was born in Valders, Norway, on the 29th of June, 1852, being a son of Nels and Christina (Anderson) Haugen, both of whom passed their entire lives in the fair land of their nativity. The subject received his education in the schools of his native place, where he was reared to maturity. In 1874, at the age of twenty-one years, he severed the home ties and set forth to seek his fortunes in America. He embarked at Bergen, Norway, in 1874 of that year and arrived in New York city in April. Thence he came westward to Iowa, where he remained about one year. In June, 1875, he took up his residence in Minnehaha county, South Dakota, where he entered a homestead claim three years later, and he worked previously at farming in different parts of the state, and also in steamboating on the Missouri river. He then turned his attention to the improvement and cultivation of his farm, where he continued to reside until 1887, when he came to Hartford, where he did effective work as a buyer of grain for different elevators, continuing to be thus employed until 1902, when he received his appointment as postmaster, of which office he is now incumbent, having given a satisfactory and able administration of its affairs. He has been a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party from the time of attaining the right of franchise, and he has taken an active interest in public affairs. He was for eight years township clerk of Grand Meadow township, and for six years held the same office in Hartford township. The village of Hartford was incorporated in 1896 and he was chosen as first village clerk, an office of which he continued in tenure for eight years. Fraternally he is identified with the local lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he and his wife are members of the Lutheran church.

On the 31st of March, 1885, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Haugen to Miss Annie L. Tvedt, of Hartford, who has proved a devoted wife and helpmeet, and of this union have been born seven children, namely: Louis N., Carl A., William E., Thomas O., Martin B., Clarence R. and Roy O.

A. H. HENNEOUS is one of the honored and representative business men of White Lake, while he has also served as state's attorney of Aurora county and as county judge, being held in the highest esteem in the community, in which he has maintained his home for more than a score of years, while he is now engaged successfully in the lumber business here. Mr. Henneous is a native of Erie county, Pennsylvania, where he was born on the 13th of November, 1859, being a son of Frederick and Carrie (Sanders) Henneous, the former of whom has long been one of the prominent farmers and honored citizens of Erie county, where he still resides, being eighty-three years of age. His devoted wife passed away in 1900, at the age of seventy years, having been a zealous member of the Presbyterian church, with which he also has been prominently identified for many years, while he is a staunch Republican in politics.

Judge A. H. Henneous was reared on the homestead farm and after completing the curriculum of the public schools became a student in Allegheny College, where he remained five years, thereafter taking a course in the Pennsylvania State Normal School, at Edinboro, Pennsylvania. He thereafter devoted his attention for a full decade to teaching in the public schools of Pennsylvania and Iowa, to which latter state he removed in 1880. In the spring of 1882 he came to White Lake, where he has ever since resided. For a short time after his arrival he was engaged in the sale of agricultural implements. In 1890 he was elected state's attorney for this county, and after the expiration of his term served three successive terms as county judge. He was not then permitted to retire from public office, since he was again elected to the position of state's attorney, in which he served one term. He had given considerable attention to the study of law and was eminently qualified for the duties devolving upon him in each of these responsible offices. He was admitted to the bar January 5, 1891. In 1898 Judge Henneous opened a lumber yard in White Lake, and in this line of enterprise he has built up a large and successful business. He has ever given a staunch allegiance to the Republican party and has wielded no little influence in promoting its cause. He is a member of White Lake Lodge, No. 85, Free and Accepted Masons, and both he and his wife are valued members of the Presbyterian church in White Lake, our subject being a member of its board of trustees.

On the 27th of August, 1887, Judge Henneous was united in marriage to Miss Minnie M. Ponto, of Floyd county, Iowa, and they have three children, Agnes, Ralph and Fern.

W. B. WOLCOTT, who is one of the leading merchants and honored citizens of White Lake, Aurora county, is a native of the Empire state of the Union, having been born in Batavia, Orleans county, New York, on the 28th of January, 1863, and being a son of J. Warren and Susan (Hayward) Wolcott, of whose six children four are living, namely: Kate M., wife of E. M. Chamberlain, of Findlay, Ohio; Nellie A., wife of E. F. Janes, of Erie county, Pennsylvania; Margaret H., a resident of Alden, New York; and W. B., the subject of this sketch. J. Warren Wolcott was born in Orleans county, New York, in 1828, his parents having emigrated thither from Connecticut, where the family was founded in the colonial epoch, the ancestry being of French Huguenot derivation. Oliver Wolcott, Jr., a great-uncle of the subject, was the first comptroller of the United States treasury and upon the death of Alexander Hamilton was appointed secretary of the treasury. The father of our subject devoted his active life to agricultural pursuits in western New York and is now living retired in the town of Alden, that state. He is a Democrat in politics and while never an office seeker he served for one or more terms as sheriff of Orleans county. His wife, who was born in Erie county, Pennsylvania, in 1830, of English ancestry, died in 1871, at the age of forty-one years, having been a devoted member of the Presbyterian church, with which her husband likewise has been identified for many years.

W. B. Wolcott was reared on the home farm and his early educational advantages were those afforded by the public schools of the city of Buffalo, New York. At the early age of fifteen years he secured employment as clerk in a grocery in that city, and to this line of effort he there continued to devote his attention until 1883, when he came to the territory of Dakota, working on a farm in Aurora county for the first two years and then securing a position in the lumber yard of Warren Dye, of White Lake, with whom he remained two years. He then returned to the state of New York, where he remained about seventeen months, at the expiration of which, in February, 1888, he again took up his residence in White Lake, securing a clerkship in the general store of H. Hofmeister, in whose employ he continued about eleven years. In the spring of 1900 Mr. Wolcott engaged in the same line of enterprise on his own responsibility, and he has now a well-equipped store and controls a large business, the same being the result of his correct methods and marked personal popularity in the community. He is a staunch adherent of the Republican party, and fraternally is prominently identified with the Masonic order, being a member of White Lake Lodge, No. 85, Free and Accepted Masons; Pilgrim Chapter, No. 32, Royal Arch Masons; St. Bernard Commandery, No. 11, Knights Templar, at Mitchell; Oriental Consistory, No. 1, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, at Yankton; and El Riad Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, in Sioux Falls, while he also holds membership in White Lake Lodge, No. 84, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On the 25th of August, 1898, Mr. Wolcott was united in marriage to Miss Ida Ponto, of Charles City, Iowa, she being a daughter of the late Martin Ponto, a prominent farmer of that locality.

GEORGE M. TRIMMER.—Among the men who have been active in promoting the various interests of South Dakota, George M. Trimmer, of Hot Springs, is deserving of especial mention. Honored and respected by the people of his community, he enjoys a large measure of public esteem, not alone on account of his activity in business circles, but also by reason of the creditable course he has ever pursued and the worthy standing attained in the domain of citizenship. A native of McLean county, Illinois, where his birth occurred on the 8th of November, 1844, he spent his childhood and youth on a farm, grew up to habits of industry and enjoyed the advantages of a common-school education. He remained in his native state until reaching the years of manhood, and then started out to make his own way, going in 1865 to Fort Sully, on the upper Missouri, where he engaged in the wood business. During the ensuing ten years he handled a great deal of wood at various places along the river, shipping to different points, and met with encouraging success in the business. In 1876, when the country became excited by reason of the discovery of gold in the Black Hills, he wound up his affairs on the Missouri and, organizing a party of friends and furnishing an outfit for the same, started for the Hills, leaving the river a little below Fort Thompson, and going through Dakota via Pierre to Bear Butte, thence up Elk creek along the Custer trail to Box Elder, where the party spent about one month prospecting. From that locality they proceeded to Rapid creek, but after prospecting for two months at the latter place with indifferent success, the party finally disbanded. When Rapid City sprang into existence Mr. Trimmer went there and engaged in freighting, driving from that place to Pierre and other points and devoting about one and a half years to this kind of work. Later he became interested in the mines at Hill City, and going there to live made the place his home until 1879, the meanwhile suffering severe reverses as a miner, the result being the loss of nearly all his earthly possessions.

After this discouraging experience Mr. Trimmer decided to abandon mining and turn his attention to a more certain means of obtaining a livelihood; accordingly with two friends, L. B. Reno and Frank Holton, he came to what is now Hot Springs, where the three took up adjoining homesteads, the subject locating on the place which has since been his place of residence. This being done, the parties returned to Hill City, but in the spring of 1880 Mr. Turner moved his family to his claim, and at once began improving the same, also engaging in the cattle business, which he carried on quite successfully during the first few years, and then turned his attention to horticulture, finding his land particularly adapted to fruit growing. While improving his ranch, he also traded considerably with the Indian tribes in the vicinity, but this was of short duration and only reasonably profitable. In 1884 Mr. Trimmer set out his first orchard, and since that time has gradually increased the area of the same, until he is now the largest and most successful fruit grower in his section of the state. He has selected his trees with the greatest care and from the choicest varieties, and by judicious culture has so developed them that they seldom fail to return him large profits every year, a shortage in his crop being a rare occurrence. During the early settlement of Hot Springs he did quite an extensive business in gardening and dairying; having supplied the town for a number of years with butter, milk and all kinds of vegetables and small fruits, but as population increased he found horticulture more remunerative and, as already indicated, gradually worked into the latter and now follows it with success, such as few men in this part of the state have achieved.

Mr. Trimmer owns a beautiful home adjoining the town and is well situated to enjoy the many comforts and conveniences of life which he has accumulated. His residence, situated in a fine grove of maples and cottonwoods, with orchards in close proximity, also attractive shrubbery, tastefully arranged flower beds and well-kept lawns on every hand, is an almost ideal dwelling place and he spares no pains nor expense in adding to its attractiveness, being a man of refined tastes and progressive ideas. Politically Mr. Trimmer is a staunch and unswerving Democrat. While zealous in maintaining his principles, he has persistently declined office at the hands of his fellow citizens, manifesting little interest in active party work and none for public position. Mr. Trimmer has met with much more than ordinary success financially, which fact speaks well for his ability to recover from business reverses, such as would have discouraged a man of less tact and determination. The ample competence in his possession is the result of his own industry and excellent management, and the enviable position which he occupies in business and social circles has been honorably earned by a course of conduct singularly free from adverse criticism.

Mr. Trimmer was married in June, 1871, to Miss Mary Byua, and to this union were born three children, as follows: Maggie, the wife of Elwood Williams; Fannie, the wife of J. W. Finnegan, a conductor on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, and Elizabeth. The subject's second marriage occurred February 16, 1891, to Mrs. Mary A. (Wood) Roberts, a native of Louisville, Kentucky, who came to the Black Hills in 1877.

REV. FRANZ JOSEPH FEINLER, pastor of St. Peter's church, at White Lake, Aurora county, was born in Gissigheim, Granduchy of Baden, Germany, on the 28th of March, 1871, being a son of Franz Carl and Maria Magdalena (Schmitt) Feinler, who were likewise born and reared in that section of the great German empire, where they remained until 1900, when they came with their son John A. to America, joining the subject in Parker, this state, and remaining as inmates of his home until 1903, since which time they have made their home with the son previously mentioned, on his farm, which is located one and one-half miles distant from White Lake. The son John A. was united in marriage, on the 19th of May, 1903, to Miss Mary Majerus, of Robey, this county. The parents have ever been devoted communicants of the Catholic church and are folk of sterling character, while they are passing the evening of their lives far from the scenes of their loved fatherland but sustained and made content through the filial devotion of their children.

Father Feinler secured his early educational discipline in the admirable schools of his native land, and in 1892 was graduated in the gymnasium at Tauberbischofsheim, Baden. He then began the work of preparing himself for the priesthood, studying theology for two semesters at Freiburg, Baden, after which he continued for four years his ecclesiastical and philosophical studies in the Collegio Urbano di Propaganda Fide, in Rome, being ordained to the priesthood in St. John's Lateran, on the 12th of June, 1897. In the same year he came to America and began his pastoral duties in the diocese of South Dakota, having been for a time secretary to Bishop O'Gorman, in Sioux Falls, after which he was assigned to the pastorate of the church at Parker, Turner county, where he remained until November, 1901, when he entered upon his present pastorate, having here accomplished a most successful work and having infused vitality into the spiritual and temporal life of the parish. He is a man of high intellectuality, a forceful and convincing speaker, sincere and earnest in his devotion to his noble calling, and has gained the affectionate regard of those among who he is laboring for the establishment of a kingdom of Christ on earth.

EVERETT H. DAY, the treasurer of Day township, Clark county, is a native of the old Pine Tree state, having been born in Lovel, Maine, on the 17th of January, 1850, and being a son of Thomas and Abigail A. (Phipps) Day, the former of who was a shoemaker by trade, while he was also identified with the lumbering industry in Maine. In 1853 he removed with his family to Berlin, Wisconsin, and there he followed his trade during the winter months, while in the intervening summer seasons he was engaged in the manufacturing of brick. In 1862 he removed to Mankato, Minnesota, becoming one of the early settlers of that now attractive city. He was there residing during the disastrous outbreak of the Sioux Indians, and assisted in the building of the stockade in Winnebago City, while he remained on the frontier until the Indian troubles had subsided. In the following autumn he returned to Wisconsin for his family, who accompanied him on his return to Mankato, where they were residing at the time of the execution of thirty-eight Sioux Indian prisoners, on the 26th of December, 1862. In the summer of the following year they took up their residence on a homestead near Winnebago City, where they remained until 1876, when they removed to Nemaha county, Kansas. The father died in 1898 at Seneca, Kansas, aged eighty-four years, while the mother died in 1871 on the farm near Winnebago City, Minnesota.

The subject of this review secured his rudimentary educational discipline in Berlin, Wisconsin, and thereafter continued his educational work in the common schools of the various points which constituted the family home for certain intervals. When he left school, in 1873, he was well advanced in the high school at Winnebago City, but was not graduated. He engaged in teaching school during the winter of 1873-4, but his natural tastes and inclinations led him to adopt farming and stock growing as a permanent vocation. Upon his removal to Kansas, as stated, he opened up a new farm on the prairies of Nemaha county, and was there engaged in farming and stock raising until 1884, when he disposed of his stock and came to what is now the state of South Dakota. His brother Edward W., who was born in Berlin, Wisconsin, in 1857, was the first treasurer of Clark county, South Dakota, and here his death occurred in 1883, which circumstance was the cause of our subject's coming to the state, and he settled on one of the tracts of land owned by the brother at the time of his death. He at once initiated the work of improving the property and has resided on this farm ever since, while he has since added to his landed estate until he now has a well-improved and valuable farm of four hundred and eighty acres, and is here successfully engaged in diversified agriculture and stock growing, while he is also giving special attention to the dairy-ing business, which he finds a profitable adjunct to his farming enterprise.

Mr. Day has held public office of some description almost continuously since taking up his residence in the county, the township of which he is a resident having been named in honor of his brother, previously mentioned, who was one of its first settlers. In 1886, the subject was elected township clerk and justice of the peace, serving in these offices consecutively thereafter until 1900, while for about a decade he was incumbent of the offices of school clerk, treasurer and director. He is at the present time township treasurer and also treasurer of his school district, while he has ever stood prominently forward as a progressive and public-spirited citizen and able business man. The most important semi-public enterprise which has secured his valued support and co-operation is that of the Clark Co-operative Creamery Association, of which he was one of the organizers, in 1896. The disbursements of the corporation in 1897 aggregated two thousand and seven dollars and eighty-seven cents, and the business has steadily and gradually increased in scope and importance until its disbursements in 1903 reached the notable aggregate of forty-seven thousand, three hundred and fifty-seven dollars and fifty-two cents. At the first meeting of the stockholders of the association Mr. Day was elected its president, and has ever since remained its chief executive, through annual re-election, while he has been designated as the father of the association, whose plant is now the largest in the state exclusive of three which operate skimming stations. In 1904 Mr. Day took an active part in organizing the Clark County Farmers' Electric Company, incorporated with a capital of twenty thousand dollars and at its first meeting of the board of directors he was elected president of the company. In politics he has ever given an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party, and he was a delegate to its first state convention in South Dakota, the same having been held in Chamberlain, while he is usually active in the various local campaigns, while for the past ten years he has held the position of superintendent, judge, and clerk of elections in the county, and he was a delegate to the state convention of his party, in Sioux Falls, in 1900. For several years he was a member of the secret society known as the Brotherhood of Purpose, and was a member of the directorate of the order. In March, 1900, he became affiliated with the Modern Brotherhood of America, a fraternal insurance order. In 1887 he became a member of the Methodist Episcopal church in Seneca, Kansas, and has ever since been a zealous and valued member of this denomination, being at the present time a member of the board of directors of the church at Clark.

On the 5th of September, 1885, at Nashville, Minnesota, Mr. Day was united in marriage to Miss Mary Bottomley, a daughter of James and Mary Bottomley, both of whom were born and reared in England, while they were numbered among the pioneers of Minnesota, where Mr. Bottomley served in various positions of public trust, including that of probate judge of Martin county. Mr. and Mrs. Day have two children, Lula C., who was born June 22, 1886, and Mark M., who was born January 9, 1893.

WILLIAM A. SHARP, successfully established in the real-estate business, in the city of Clark, Clark county, was born on the home farm in Oldtown township, McLean county, Illinois, on the 21st of November, 1858, and is the son of Theodore and Ophelia M. (Watson) Sharp. Theodore Sharp was born in New Jersey on the 8th of October, 1820, and when eighteen years of age went to Chatam, that state, where he engaged with A. & W. C. Wheeler to learn the machinist's trade, becoming a skilled artisan in the line and also a successful inventor. He may be said to have inherited much mechanical ability, for as far back as records are in evidence the family have been allied with the machinist's trade and business. Christian Sharp, an uncle of Theodore, was the inventor of the Sharp rifle and was a manufacturer of firearms. John H. Sharp, an uncle of our subject, was likewise a machinist by vocation, and the same is true of Jacob Sharp, his son. Ancestors of Mr. Sharp were participants in the war of the Revolution and also in that with Mexico, but as the family records were unfortunately destroyed by fire no definite data is accessible at this time. Ophelia M. Sharp, the mother of the subject, was born in Glencoe, Columbia county, New York, on the 20th of April, 1832, and her marriage to Theodore Sharp was solemnized, in the city of Albany, that state, on the 31st of December, 1849. They became the parents of one son and three daughters, one of the latter being now deceased.

In the spring of 1858 Theodore Sharp removed with his family to McLean county, Illinois, where he remained until a short time before the outbreak of the Civil war, when he removed with his family to Louisville, Kentucky, where he had charge of the machine shops of the firm of Miller & Moore during the progress of the war, said shops being engaged principally in government work at the time. In the spring of 1866 he again located on a farm near Benjaminville, McLean county, Illinois, where he continued to be actively engaged in agricultural pursuits until the fall of 1882, when he came to South Dakota, accompanied by his only son, the subject of this review, and on the 6th of September of that year each of them filed on a homestead and a tree claim in Clark county. Theodore Sharp here continued to be engaged in farming and stock growing until his death, which occurred very suddenly, in the city of Clark, on the 2d of March, 1886.

William A. Sharp passed his boyhood days on the old homestead farm in McLean county, Illinois, and after completing the curriculum of the public schools in that locality continued his studies in the Wesleyan University, at Bloomington, and the State Normal School, at Normal, Illinois. After coming to South Dakota he taught during several winter terms in the district schools, and in the meanwhile continued to be actively engaged in the improving and cultivating of his farming properties until 1860, having been elected to the office of register of deeds of Clark county, on an independent ticket, in the autumn of that year, and having removed with his mother from the farm to the county seat on the 12th of the following December. Here they have ever since continued to reside. Mr. Sharp was clerk of Garfield township in 1885-6-7, and held the office of register of deeds for a term of two years, while in 1897-8 he served as county treasurer, having shown much fidelity and discrimination in every official capacity in which he has labored. In 1893 he purchased the only set of abstracts of titles for Clark county, and thereafter conducted an abstract business until March 1, 1903, when he disposed of his books and has since continued in the real-estate business. He is interested in several valuable farming properties and also controls a considerable amount of town realty, while he is also a stockholder in the Vienna Roller Mill Company, at Vienna, this county, where the company has a well-equipped flouring mill and grain elevator. In politics Mr. Sharp was aligned with the Republican party until 1890, since which time he has maintained an independent attitude. Fraternally he is a valued member of the local organizations of the Woodmen and the Knights of the Maccabees, in the latter of which he has served as commander.

On the 11th of July, 1901, Mr. Sharp was united in marriage to Miss Grace C. Latimer, of Seneca, Kansas. She was born near Winnebago, Minnesota, on the 12th of October, 1872, and is a daughter of Pleasant H. and Lucy E. (Day) Latimer, whose marriage was solemnized in Minnesota, on the 6th of January, 1869. Mr. Latimer was born in Knox county, Illinois, on the 2d of May, 1844, and removed to Minnesota in 1860, and he served eighteen months in the Ninth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, during the Civil war, and thirty days during the Indian war in Minnesota in 1892. He removed with his family from Minnesota to Kansas in 1876.

His wife was born in Maine, whence she accompanied her parents to Wisconsin and later to Minnesota. Mrs. Sharp was a child of about four years at the time of her parents' removal to Nemaha county, Kansas, and there she was reared and educated, having attended the high school in Seneca and later having been for a time a student in Campbell University, at Holton, Kansas. For a number of years prior to her marriage she was a successful and popular teacher in the public schools of Nemaha county, Kansas, where her parents still reside. Mr. and Mrs. Sharp have one child, Carol O., who was born August 11, 1902.

FREDERIC ALAN MIX, publisher and editor of the Fairplay, at Fort Pierre, Stanley county, was born on a farm in Hall county, Nebraska, on the 8th of November, 1875, being a son of Eugene Jesse and Caroline O. (Mann) Mix, both families having been early established in the state of New York, while the parents of the subject were numbered among the pioneers of Nebraska. In 1881 they removed to Smith Center, Kansas, where the father was engaged in mercantile pursuits until his death, which occurred in 1894. His widow and her two children then returned to Nebraska, and she now resides at Cairo, Hall county, that state, with her daughter, Miss Sadie J. The subject secured his early educational training in the public schools of Smith Center, Kansas, and after the death of his father accompanied his mother on her return to Nebraska, where he was for a time employed on the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad and also identified with farming operations. In 1896 he entered the Grand Island Business College, at Grand Island, Nebraska, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1897. Shortly afterward, in August of that year, he went to the city of Omaha, where he was engaged in stenographic work and job printing until 1901, when he came to South Dakota, arriving in Fort Pierre, Stanley county, on the 20th of January of that year. Here he effected the purchase of the Fairplay, which he has made an exponent of the principles of the Republican party, while through his energetic and capable management the paper has gained a high standing and its business has been increased fourfold in the short intervening period, while the cumulative tendency in the enterprise is still to be marked in a significant and gratifying way. Mr. Mix was reared in the Republican party and has ever given the same his allegiance since attaining his majority, while both he and his wife are communicants of the Catholic church. Fraternally he is identified with the Modern Brotherhood of America and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 30th of May, 1900, in St. Philomena's church in the city of Omaha, Nebraska, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Mix to Miss Marguerite W. Weinrich, who was born in Saxony, Germany, and who is associated with him in the newspaper business, while he attributes to her co-operation and influence much of the success which has attended his efforts.

LEWIS L. FLEEGER, an able and representative member of the legal profession in Turner county, is a native of the old Keystone state, having been born in Butler county, Pennsylvania, on the 12th of December, 1864, and being a son of Samuel L. and Mary A. (Pierce) Fleeger. When he was but two years of age his parents removed to Missouri and located in Cooper county, where his father engaged in farming, and in that county the subject secured his early educational discipline in the public schools, while he was reared to the sturdy life of the homestead farm. He continued his studies for some time in Clarksburg College, at Clarksburg, Missouri, and then entered Waynesburg College, at Waynesburg, Pennsylvania, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1889, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts. After his graduation he took up the reading of law in the office of his cousin, George Fleeger, of Butler, Pennsylvania, one of the representative members of the bar of that section, and under this preceptorship continued his technical studies for two years, at the expiration of which, in the autumn of 1891, he returned to Missouri, and for the following years was engaged as instructor in mathematics in Clarksburg College, in which institution he had previously been a student, as has been noted in this context. In the autumn of 1892 he came to South Dakota and located in the city of Yankton, where he was shortly afterward admitted to the bar of the state, and there he was for a short interval engaged in the practice of his profession. In the spring of 1893 he came to Turner county and located in the village of Centerville, where he was engaged in practice about eighteen months, at the expiration of which he took up his residence in Parker, the judicial center of the county, where he has since been successfully established in practice, controlling a large and representative clientage. In politics Mr. Fleeger is a stalwart advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party and he is one of its wheelhorses in Turner county, having served for the past four years as chairman of the Republican central committee of the county and having handled his forces with marked skill and discrimination in the furtherance of the interests of his party. In the autumn of 1893 he was elected state's attorney of the county and served in this capacity for two terms, or four consecutive years, making an admirable record as prosecutor. Fraternally he is affiliated with Parker Lodge, No. 30, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

On the 5th of November, 1899, Mr. Fleeger was united in marriage to Miss Clifflie M. Elliott, daughter of Judge W. Elliott, of Parker, and of this union has been born one son, Samuel Boyd.

ALFRED H. STILL, of Parker, Turner county, is a native of Clinton county, Iowa, where he was born on the 29th of September, 1862, being a son of Orange and Ruth (Bovard) Still. When he was a lad of six years his parents removed to Scranton, Greene county, Iowa, where he secured his early educational discipline, and in 1873, when he was eleven years of age, he came with his parents to what is now the state of South Dakota. His father took up a homestead claim of government land in Turner county, being one of the earliest of the permanent settlers in this section of the state, and here developing a good farm. The subject remained on this homestead until he had attained the age of seventeen years, in the meanwhile having availed himself of the advantages of the pioneer schools of the locality, and he then came with his parents to Parker, where his father built a portion of the hotel of which he is now the proprietor, this being the first hotel in the town. Alfred continued to be associated with his father in the conducting of the hotel for the ensuing two years, at the expiration of which he went to Sioux Falls, where he was employed in connection with the hotel and livery business for five years. He then removed to Boyd county, Nebraska, where he took up a homestead claim, perfecting his title to the same in due course of time and making good improvements on the place, which he still owns. Later he returned to Turner county, South Dakota, and purchased a quarter section of land three miles north of Parker, the county seat, and there he was actively engaged in farming and stock raising for about seven years, also operating a threshing outfit in season during the major portion of this period. In July, 1903, he disposed of his farm here and purchased the Parker House, which had been enlarged and modernized, while he has refitted the same and made it one of the most attractive stopping places in this section of the state, his intimate knowledge of the business and his constant care for the comfort and convenience of his guests making his house a most popular one, while its cuisine has at all times the best the market affords, and the service accorded is admirable in all respects. In politics Mr. Still is a staunch Republican and takes a zealous interest in the furtherance of the party cause. He has served as delegate to various state conventions of his party as well as to the minor conventions, and is ever ready to do active work for his party. Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, holding membership in the lodge at Sioux Falls, and also with the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 3d of June, 1883, Mr. Still was united in marriage to Miss Theresa Wagner, a daughter of Simon Wagner, one of the pioneers of Turner county, and they have seven children, namely: Hubert J., Howard L., Ida, Ruth, Alice C., Alfred H. and Theodore.

OLAF GILBERTSON, one of the successful farmers and stock growers of Lincoln county, was born in Christiania, Norway, on the 29th of June, 1865, being a son of John H. and Sophia Gilbertson, the former of whom immigrated to the United States in the spring of 1869, being joined by his family in the fall of the next year. The father of the subject had followed the trade of blacksmith in his native land, but upon coming to the new world he decided to turn his attention to farming. He came to Lincoln county, South Dakota, and took up a quarter section of government land, in Canton township, there being but few settlers in the county at the time. He built a log house and then set to work to reclaim his wild land and aid in developing the resources of this section. He continued to live on the old homestead until his death, which occurred in 1899, his wife having passed away in 1885. They became the parents of four children, namely: Eliza, who is the wife of Andrew Lunn, of this county; Susanna, who is visiting in Norway at the time of this writing, in 1903; Olaf, who is the subject of this sketch, and John H., who died at the age of twenty-seven years.

The subject was reared on the homestead, where he has continuously resided, and he secured his education in the common schools. At the age of twenty-one years he rented the home farm, and he now has one hundred and ninety acres, well-improved and under effective cultivation, the land lying partly in Lincoln county and partly in Lyon county, Iowa. In addition to diversified farming he also raises good live stock, including Durham cattle and Poland-China hogs. He is a Republican in politics, is a member of the Lutheran church and is affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen at Canton, his postoffice address.

HIRAM HUMPHREY CURTIS, cashier of the First National Bank at Castlewood, Hamlin county, was born in Geneva, now known as Lake Geneva, Walworth county, Wisconsin, on the 6th of December, 1844, being a son of Lewis and Mary Elizabeth (Humphrey) Curtis. The former was born at Plymouth, Chenango county, New York, on the 8th of November, 1813, and is still living and in fair health, though more than ninety years of age at the time of this writing, in 1904. He engaged in the mercantile business at Manhattan, near the city of Toledo, Ohio, but in 1839 removed to Wisconsin, locating at Geneva, that state, in January of the following year, and there continuing in mercantile pursuits for nearly half a century. He still maintains his home there, honored as one of the oldest living pioneers of that section and as one of the noble patriarchs of the state. His wife was born at Middlebury, Ohio, on the 25th of May, 1822, and her death occurred on the 21st of March, 1868. The father became a prosperous business man and one who wielded much influence. He served for ten years as postmaster of Geneva, under the administrations of Presidents Lincoln, Johnson and Grant, and during the climacteric period leading up to the war of the Rebellion he was a staunch Abolitionist and his home was a station on the famous "underground railway." He became somewhat extensively interested in farming and timber lands in Wisconsin in the early days, and has ever commanded high esteem. His devoted wife was a woman of gracious refinement, a lover of good books and good music, and both became members of the Presbyterian church in early life and ever exemplified their faith in their daily walk and conversation. It may be further stated that the ancestry of the subject in both the paternal and maternal lines became identified with the settlement of New England in the early colonial epoch, and the maternal grandparents of the subject each lived to attain the venerable age of eighty-nine years.

Hiram H. Curtis received his early educational training in public and private schools in his native town, and then entered Beloit College, at Beloit, Wisconsin, where he took up the work of the classical course, but on account of ill health was compelled to abandon his studies in the sophomore year, having been a member of the class of 1870. He entered college with the intention of preparing himself for the ministry of the Presbyterian church and it was a matter of grievous disappointment to him that he was obliged to change his plans and enter upon other work. He was fond of good books and of working with tools, particularly in wood, and also enjoyed writing and bookkeeping. This last proclivity caused his father to make a place for him in his store and office, and at the age of sixteen years he became bookkeeper for the store and also assistant postmaster. In 1862, when so many of his schoolmates were enlisting in defense of the Union, he was most anxious also to tender his services, but his parents decided that it was unwise to permit him to do so. In his eighteenth year he left home for college, going first to the Wisconsin University in the spring of 1863, and in the autumn of the same year to Beloit College, where he passed four years, in the preparatory and collegiate departments, but was unable to complete his course. He returned to his home in Geneva, and in the spring of 1868, through the assistance of his father, there engaged in the mercantile business, opening a stock of drugs, books, etc. He was associated in this enterprise with Pardon McDonald, now of Clyde, Kansas, about one year, and thereafter individually continued the business for ten years, and with fair success until he became interested in the erection of a large business block, which undertaking compassed his financial failure. For about five years thereafter he was employed in his father's store. In August, 1882, he visited the territory of Dakota and was very favorably impressed. In the following October he came here again, in company with a party of friends, among whom was his brother-in-law, Joseph P. Cheever, and after a trip through what is now the central part of what is now South Dakota, along the line of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, they proceeded up the James river valley to Columbia and Aberdeen, returning to Wisconsin without locating land or really deciding what action to take. During the winter of 1882-3 Dakota was thought about and discussed, and finally, in March, 1883, Messrs. Cheever and Curtis came again to Dakota, visiting Brookings, DeSmet, Huron, Miller, Redfield, Aberdeen, Columbia, Clark, Watertown and some other towns. The immigration was immense in that year, and it almost seemed to Messrs. Cheever and Curtis that there was really no place in which they could begin business with any prospect of success. Finally Thomas H. Ruth, of DeSmet, suggested that they visit Hamlin county. They followed this suggestion and arrived in Castlewood on the 28th of March, 1883, looked about the embryonic frontier town, learned what they could concerning the surrounding country and finally decided to remain. They at once erected a building to include office and dwelling and in the same opened a bank, law, insurance and real-estate office, Mr. Cheever being a lawyer by profession. They had business from the start, but years of drought and short crops came, entailing much discouragement. There were several years of struggle and little or no profit. Mr. Curtis' wife and children did not come to the new home until about fifteen months after he had here located, arriving in June, 1884. During the interim he states that he had learned to appreciate home and family as never before, and when his family finally joined him they found their abiding place on a government homestead about three miles from Castlewood. He made proof on this claim in December, 1884, and they then removed into Castlewood, where they now have a very pleasant and comfortable home. He still owns the homestead farm, to which he has made some addition, and with his family is the owner of other lands in the county, so that as a family they are interested in farming upon a somewhat extensive scale.

In 1891 the banking business established by Messrs. Cheever and Curtis was incorporated under the state law, prosperous years came to the surrounding country, and the enterprise became correspondingly successful. In 1894 Mr. Cheever removed to Brookings to engage in the practice of law, and this left the subject individually to superintend the affairs of the bank, though Mr. Cheever continued to retain his interest in the business. In 1901 the enterprise was reorganized and incorporated as the First National Bank, succeeding the Hamlin County Bank, under which title the enterprise had previously been conducted. The bank is capitalized for twenty-five thousand dollars and is one of the solid and prosperous financial institutions of the state.

As before stated, Mr. Curtis was very desirous of tendering his services in defense of the Union in the early period of the Civil war, but deferred to the wishes of his parents. In 1864, when the call came for seventy-five thousand more men, he was in college at Beloit. Enlistments were called for, and students and other young men waxed enthusiastic, and thus, without consulting his parents, Mr. Curtis entered the one-hundred-days service, enlisting on the 12th of May, of that year. The company was assigned to the Fortieth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, which was largely made up of students from Wisconsin University and other colleges in the state, and the command was sent to Memphis, Tennessee, and assigned to picket duty, and there remained during its term of enlistment, when, with the others of the command, the subject received his honorable discharge.

Mr. Curtis was always an earnest Republican until 1896, when he became a party Prohibitionist, because he believed that there was and is no question before the nation of so great importance as the destruction of the American saloon and liquor traffic. In 1902 he was the nominee of the Prohibition party in the state for the office of governor. The state committee's management of the campaign was admirable and brought a largely increased vote over that accorded in any previous campaign. Mr. Curtis is now a member of the national Prohibition committee from his state. In early years of his residence in South Dakota Mr. Curtis served as township clerk and township treasurer, but has never been ambitious for office of local order. He is now considerably interested in and connected with town and rural telephone construction in Castlewood and vicinity. He and his wife are prominent and valued members of the Presbyterian church in their home town, and he is an elder in the same and for the past eighteen years has been superintendent of and a teacher in its Sunday school.

On the 6th of December, 1870, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Curtis to Miss Mary Annette Allen, the ceremony being performed at the home of her parents, in Linn, Walworth county, Wisconsin. She is a daughter of George and Harriet Amelia (Buell) Allen, her father having been a prominent and wealthy farmer and a citizen influential in political and business affairs in his home town, county and state. Mrs. Curtis completed her education in the Wisconsin State University, at Madison, being graduated as a member of the first class in the normal department, in 1865. Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Curtis we incorporate the following brief data: Allen Lewis, who was born June 26, 1874, was graduated in Beloit College, his father's alma mater, as a member of the class of 1901; Kate Lilly, who was born December 12, 1875, was a member of the class of 1902, in the same institution, but was compelled to withdraw on account of impaired health; Amelia Buell, who was born August 2, 1879, was graduated in Beloit College as a member of the class of 1902, and died March 29, 1904, and Annie Mary, who was born on the 7th of February, 1883, expects to enter the same institution in the autumn of the present year, 1904. All of the children were born at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, their father's native place.

CHRISTOPHER SNYDER VINCENT, M. D., successfully engaged in the practice of his profession at Wagner, Charles Mix county, was born on a farm in Coeymans township, near Indian Fields, Albany county, New York, on the 18th of March, 1845, and is a son of ASA S. and Hannah Maria (McClure) Vincent, both of whom were likewise born in Albany county, the lineage on the paternal side being of English origin and on the maternal of Scotch. The maternal great-grandfather of the Doctor was a clergyman of the Scotch Presbyterian church, and his son Daniel W., grandfather of our subject, was a local minister in the Methodist Episcopal church. Leonard Vincent, great-grandfather in the agnatic line, was an Englishman of means and immigrated to the state of New York while it was still an English colony. His eldest son, Leve, was born in that state, on the 1st of June, 1736, and the latter's eldest son, Amos, grandfather of the Doctor, was born about 1760. ASA S. Vincent, father of our subject, was born near Indian Fields, Albany county, New York, on the 14th of April, 1808, and it is interesting to note that the Doctor is the descendant of the oldest child and son in the line of five successive generations.

Dr. Vincent prepared for college in the Greenville Academy, New York, and was graduated in Hamilton College, at Clinton, that state, in 1873, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts, while in 1876 he received from his alma mater the degree of Master of Arts. In the meanwhile, at Turin, Lewis county, New York, on the 1st of April, 1874, he was ordained to the ministry of the Presbyterian church, being stated supply for the first six months thereafter and being then installed as pastor, retaining the incumbency two and one-half years. During his active labors in the ministry the Doctor held pastoral charges in Norwalk, Ohio; Baltimore, Maryland; Springfield, Ohio; Turner's Falls, Massachusetts; Williamstown, New York; Auburn, Nebraska; Joplin, Missouri; Oakes, North Dakota, and Tyndall, South Dakota. He finally took up the study of medicine, and on the 2d of June, 1885, was graduated in the Eclectic Medical College, in Cincinnati, Ohio, receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine from this well-known institution. He was engaged in the practice of his profession for a time in Springfield, Ohio, and later at Dormansville, New York, while in 1897 he established himself in practice at Tyndall, Bon Homme county, South Dakota, where he remained for a period of six years, at the expiration of which he came to Wagner, Charles Mix county, where he has built up a large and representative practice. While he has always been successful in general practice and surgery he considers that his best work has been accomplished in connection with the treatment of chronic diseases, to which he has devoted special attention and study.

In politics the Doctor is a staunch Republican, and of his religious faith we can give no more consistent statement than to quote his own words: "I have been an ordained minister of the Presbyterian church since September, 1874, honoring alike all denominations as so many schools in the one universal church of Jesus Christ, and cherishing the hope that God in his wisdom will ultimately realize the universal salvation of all men and angels." In a fraternal way the Doctor is identified with Lodge No. 212 of the Ancient Order of United Workmen at Auburn, Nebraska, and in 1868 he became a member of Jefferson Lodge, No. 554, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, in New York, being at the present time affiliated with Bon Homme Lodge, No. 101, at Tyndall, South Dakota.

On the 23d of April, 1874, was solemnized the marriage of Dr. Vincent to Miss Ella Hammond, who was born in Auburn, New York, on the 3d of December, 1854, being a daughter of Colonel George Edmond and Hannah Maria (Harris) Hammond, and of the children of this union we enter the following brief record, the respective dates of birth being given in each connection: Wright A., March 1, 1875; Wheel-don Jones, July 31, 1876; Maybelle, May 14, 1878; Edmond Hammond, June 28, 1881; Paul, August 31, 1884, and Faith, September 30, 1892.

ORVILLE S. BASFORD is a native of the old Green Mountain state, having been born in Shelburne, Vermont, on the 29th of August, 1848, and being a son of Samuel and Henrietta (Kingsbury) Basford, the former of whom was a mechanic by vocation, while both passed their entire lives in New England. In the agnatic line the genealogy is traced back to four brothers who came to America from England in the latter part of the eighteenth century, having been originally from Wales, and their descendants in the new world are now numerous and found in the most diverse sections of the Union, while the orthography of the name has become varied.—Basford, Bassford, Bashford, etc. The subject received his early education in the common schools and then completed a four-years classical course in the University of Vermont, as a member of the class of 1876. Prior to his graduation he was regularly stationed as a licentiate of the Vermont conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, and later was duly ordained to elder's orders. After five years of successful work in the ministry of his church in Vermont, at Milton, Hyde Park and Essex, he came to the territory of Dakota, in 1880, his prime object being to induce his brothers, who were merchants, to avail themselves of advantages offered in the securing of government lands. He was given a Methodist circuit embracing the south half of Spink county, and within the three years following he organized four societies and erected three churches,—at Hitchcock, Crandon and Redfield. He then became concerned in political affairs and withdrew from the active work of the ministry. In 1894 he was chosen chairman of the Republican state central committee, manoeuvred his forces with much ability during the campaign of that year, and in the spring of the following year resumed ministerial functions, removing to Missouri, where he was for four years pastor of a church at Wellville, Montgomery county, and for three and one-half years incumbent of a charge at Linnens, Linn county. His health became impaired and he accordingly returned to South Dakota, where the invigorating climate soon enabled him to recuperate his energies. He is now associated with his two sons, Frank and Harry, and is manager and editor of the Redfield Press, which is published by the firm of Basford Brothers & Basford. He was postmaster of Redfield from 1890 to 1894, inclusive, and in 1887-8 was editor and publisher of the Dakota Methodist. He has been an active worker in the cause of the Republican party, as has already been noted in this context, and fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, the Knights of Pythias, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Good Templars and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which last he was elected grand master of the grand lodge of the state, at Deadwood, in 1890, while in the following year he was elected grand representative at Yankton.

Mention should be made of the fact that Mr. Basford enlisted, in 1864, as a member of the Seventeenth Vermont Volunteer Infantry, but was rejected by reason of his youth and was thus unable to assist in the defense of the Union during the Civil war. He was a member of the board of commissioners of Spink county from 1884 to 1886, inclusive, and was a member of the board of regents of the Mitchell University in 1887-8-9.

On the 22d of August, 1871, at Georgia, Vermont, Mr. Basford was united in marriage to Miss Arminda M. Blake, and they are the parents of six children, namely: William B., Caroline A., Delta C., Frank W., Orville K. and Harrison D.

AMUND O. RINGSRUD, a successful business man of Elk Point, Union county, is a native of Norway, where he was born September 13, 1854, being a son of Ole O. and Carrie Ringsrud, who emigrated thence to the United States in 1867, when he was a lad of thirteen years, locating in Union county, South Dakota, the father engaging in agricultural pursuits and being known as an honest, industrious and worthy citizen of his adopted country. Our subject secured his rudimentary education in his native land and after coming to America he continued his studies in the public schools. He gave his attention to farm work in Union county until the year 1870, when, at the age of sixteen years, he came to Elk Point and being there employed as clerk in a general store until 1879. In 1878 Mr. Ringsrud was elected to the office of register of deeds of Union county, in which capacity he served six consecutive years, while in 1885 he was elected county treasurer, being chosen as his own successor in 1887 and thus ably administering the fiscal affairs of the county for four years. Still further honors were in store for him through the appreciative recognition of the people of the state, for in 1889 he was elected to the office of secretary of state, of which he continued incumbent four years, proving himself a capable and discriminating official and by his course fully justifying the popular choice. In 1885 he engaged in the mercantile business here on his own responsibility, beginning operations on a modest scale, and from this nucleus he has built up a most excellent trade, having now one of the largest general stores in this section of the state and being known as a reliable and honorable business man, whose word is as good as his bond. The subject was a member of the state constitutional convention of 1889, and proved anew his loyal interest in the welfare of the new commonwealth. In politics he accords an uncompromising support to the Republican party, in whose cause he has been a most active and efficient worker, and in 1896 he was the candidate of his party for the office of governor of the state, being defeated by only a few hundred votes and running ahead of his ticket. Fraternally Mr. Ringsrud is a Mason, belonging to the commandery and consistory, and also belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Modern Woodmen of America.

On the 23d of March, 1876, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Ringsrud to Miss Emma F.

Snyder, of Lawler, Iowa, and they are the parents of three children, Grace E., now Mrs. F. W. Ford, of Elk Point; Stella May, at home, and Alfred, at St. John's Military Academy, Delafield, Wisconsin.

JAMES L. BULLOCK, of Pierpont, Day county, was born in Tonica, LaSalle county, Illinois, on the 20th of December, 1861, and is a son of James T. and Ann Frances (Crossman) Bullock, both of whom were born and reared in Massachusetts, being representatives of staunch old colonial ancestry. As a young man James Tisdale Bullock removed from New England to Illinois, locating in LaSalle county, where he engaged in farming. A number of years later he removed to Michigan, where his death occurred, his family thereafter returning to Illinois, his wife dying later, in Michigan. The subject of this review was the eighth in order of birth of the eight children, of whom two are living, and he passed his schooldays in Michigan and Illinois, availing himself of the advantages of the public schools and growing up under the sturdy and invigorating influences of the farm. He was identified with agricultural pursuits in Illinois until 1887, when he came to what is now the state of South Dakota and purchased two hundred and forty acres of land five miles northeast of Pierpont, Day county, where he engaged in farming and stock raising, with which important lines of industrial enterprise he has ever since been identified. To the area of his original purchase he has added until he now has a finely improved ranch of about four hundred acres, the same being devoted to diversified agriculture and to the raising of high-grade live stock. He is recognized as an energetic, far-sighted and progressive farmer and business man and is one of the honored citizens of the county, commanding uniform confidence and esteem. From the time of taking up his residence in the county to the present he has manifested a commendable interest in public affairs, and is one of the stalwart supporters of the Republican party in this section of the state. In 1899 he was elected to represent his district in the state legislature, and was chosen as his own successor in 1901, proving a valuable working member in the house and having been assigned to various important committees. He is affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and its auxiliary organization, the Degree of Honor.

On the 23d of August, 1885, Mr. Bullock was joined in wedlock to Miss Ella Remsburg, who was born in Illinois, being a daughter of Perry Remsburg, who removed from his native state of Maryland to that of Ohio and later to Illinois, where he made his home for a number of years, both he and his wife, whose maiden name was Mary Brown, passing the closing years of their lives in Kansas. Mr. and Mrs. Bullock have four children, namely: James Shelby, Harry Romaine, Emmet Mellette, and Myrtle Janette.

GEORGE A. WOOD, one of the representative and highly esteemed business men of Milbank, Grant county, has here in connection with his brother, built up a successful hardware, lumber and farm machinery business. He is a native of the province of Quebec, Canada, having been born in Brome Corner, a village which was settled by people from New England, and situated near the Vermont line. Walter Wood, father of the subject, was born and reared in the state of Vermont, and moved across the border into Canada, where he became identified with the lumbering industry in that section. His wife, whose name was Martha P. Jacobs, was a native of Connecticut.

The subject of this sketch was born on the 23d of June, 1851. His early education was received in the old stone school house in his native village and continued in the academy of that place. When he was twelve years of age his parents removed with their family to Wisconsin, and a few years later took up their residence in Elliot, Minnesota, where his father was engaged in farming. George A. entered the preparatory department of the State University of Minnesota in 1872, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1878, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Literature. In the same year he engaged in the hardware, lumber and machinery business with his brother, John C., under the firm name of Wood Brothers, in the village of Ortonville, Big Stone county, Minnesota. When the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad was extended westward into South Dakota in 1880 the firm removed to Milbank, Grant county, and established an excellent business, being one of the leading retail concerns in the state. They are progressive and energetic and have so conducted their business as to win and retain the confidence of all with whom they have dealings. They have large and well-equipped warehouses and general salesrooms, and handle all kinds of heavy and shelf hardware, lumber and builders' materials, agricultural implements and machinery. The firm also have milling and agricultural interests.

In politics the subject is an independent Republican; fraternally he is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and is a member of the Congregational church.

On the 9th of June, 1879, Mr. Wood was married to Miss Caroline Rollit, daughter of Rev. Charles Rollit, at that time a resident of the city of Minneapolis. She is a graduate of the University of Minnesota of the class of 1879.

DARWIN M. INMAN, president of the First National Bank of Vermillion, Clay county, is a native of the old Empire state and a scion of old colonial stock in New England. He was born in Clarendon, Orleans county, New York, and is a son of Philip and Anna (Thompson) Inman, the former of whom was born in Connecticut and the latter in Vermont, both being of English lineage.

Mr. Inman was reared in his native county, and after duly availing himself of the advantages of the public schools he continued his studies in Holley and Albion Academies, locating in that county, and there preparing for college. He was matriculated in Rochester University, where he completed the classical course and was graduated, receiving his degree. Mr. Inman is to be noted as one of the pioneer bankers of South Dakota, where he has maintained his home since the territorial era, when the present state was on the very frontier. In the spring of 1875 he engaged in the banking business in Vermillion, being associated in the enterprise with his brothers-in-law, Messrs. Myron D. Thompson and Martin J. Lewis. They also became prominently concerned in the grain business, owning and operating a large elevator in Vermillion, and also conducting an extensive business in the handling of agricultural implements, machinery and lumber, while they are associated in the live-stock business in the county. Mr. Inman was successfully engaged in teaching in the public schools of New York state for several terms prior to coming as a pioneer to the great territory of Dakota, and he has ever retained a deep interest in educational affairs. He was president of the board of trustees of the village of Vermillion in 1876, and in 1876-7 was a prominent member of the territorial legislature, in which he later served two more terms, while he was a member of the first general assembly after the state was admitted to the Union. He served for several terms as a trustee and director of the State University, in Vermillion, being one of its trustees at the time when the first building was erected.

In politics Mr. Inman is a stalwart advocate of the principles of the Democratic party, and he has been a prominent figure in its ranks in South Dakota, serving as chairman of the Democratic state central committee for six years, both during the territorial and state regimes. He served two terms as supervisor of the town of Clarendon, New York, prior to coming to the west, while mention has already been made of the official positions he has retained in South Dakota. Fraternally he has attained the chivalric degrees in the Masonic order, being identified with Vermillion Commandery, No. 16, Knights Templar, in Vermillion, and with El Riad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Sioux Falls.

On the 28th of December, 1874, Mr. Inman was united in marriage to Miss Adele Lewis, of Columbus, Columbia county, Wisconsin, who was born in Clarendon, Orleans county, New York, being a daughter of William L. and Eliza Ann Lewis. No children have been born of this union. Mrs. Inman takes a deep interest in the Baptist church to which Mr. Inman gives a liberal support.

ANTON V. VETTER, a member of the well-known firm of Vetter, Stoller & Hepperle, of Artas, Campbell county, and also president of the Artas State Bank, was born near the city of Odessa, Russia, on the 19th of January, 1868, and is a son of Valentine and Franciska Vetter, both of whom were born and reared in that same locality, being of German lineage. The subject received superior educational advantages in the excellent national schools of his native land, and was there engaged in teaching for several years prior to coming to America, in 1892. His parents had immigrated to the United States in 1888 and located in Emmons county, North Dakota, where they still reside, the father being a prosperous farmer and stock grower and a man of influence in his community. Upon coming to South Dakota the subject of this sketch located in Eureka, McPherson county, where he secured a clerical position in the general store of John Pietz, in whose employ he continued four years, at the expiration of which he removed across the line into North Dakota and engaged in the mercantile business at Selz, North Dakota, where he remained six years, meeting with excellent success and laying the foundations for his present exceptional prestige as a business man. In 1901, upon the completion of the Missouri River branch of the "Soo" Railroad through Altas, he removed to this village and here associated himself with Messrs. John Stoller and Fred Hepperle, in the establishing of the firm mentioned in the opening paragraph of this article, and they have built up a large and prosperous general merchandise business, having a well-equipped store, forty-six by one hundred and twelve feet in dimensions, besides an annex, twenty-six by eighty feet, in which is carried their stock of furniture and stoves, while in addition they have a large warehouse for general storage purposes. They carry a complete stock of all kinds of merchandise and have a first-class store and one which has gained popularity and a large supporting patronage from a wide radius of country normally tributary to the town. In 1903 Mr. Vetter entered into partnership with Ludwig Schmalz and opened a general store at Hague, North Dakota, under the firm name of Schmalz & Vetter, and this establishment also is doing a prosperous business. On the 1st of August, 1903, Mr. Vetter was elected president of the Artas State Bank, in which connection he is proving a most capable executive officer. In politics he gives his support to the Democratic party, and he is a thoroughly loyal, progressive and public-spirited citizen.

On the 6th of August, 1889, Mr. Vetter was united in marriage to Miss Barbara Wingerter, of Odessa, Russia, and they have five children, Martin, Frances, Elizabeth, Peter and Mary.

JAMES HALL, the popular proprietor of Hotel Hall at Ft. Pierre, Stanley county, is a native of the old Green Mountain state, having been born in Hardwick, Caledonia county, Vermont, on the 10th of May, 1841, and being a son of Don C. and Mary L. (Bell) Hall, both of whom were likewise born in Vermont, the former being of Spanish descent in the paternal line and Scotch in the maternal, while the latter was of Irish and English genealogy. The paternal grandfather of our subject was Don Carlos Barrett, and the name Hall was taken by his son and namesake, who was reared in the home of his maternal relatives, who bore that name. Don Carlos Barrett was a sea captain and as nearly as can be ascertained he lost his life on a voyage made in 1818. Don Carlos Hall, father of the subject of this review, was taken by his mother's people when he was but four years of age, the Hall family being of Scotch extraction and having long been identified with the ship-chandlery business in New England. James D. Bell, the maternal grandfather of our subject, was brought from Ireland to America when a child, his father having been compelled to leave the Emerald Isle by reason of his prominence in connection with political disturbances, as he was an Orangeman. This exiled patriot became an eminent criminal lawyer in Vermont and was a man of exalted character and distinguished ability. James D. Bell married Lucy Dean, who was a direct descendant of Governor Thomas Dudley, who landed in America in 1630, and of Walter Dean, who arrived in the new world in 1638.

James Hall, the immediate subject of this article, was a child of fourteen years at the time of his parents' removal from Vermont to the wilds of Wisconsin, and they became pioneers of Portage county, that state. He was reared in the midst of the great forests of northern Wisconsin, and his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the common schools of the locality and period, while he early became inured to the strenuous and somewhat venturesome labors connected with the great lumbering industry. He was engaged in the lumber business in that state for some time, as was he later in Illinois, Missouri and Iowa, and in 1883 he came to South Dakota and located in Blunt, Hughes county, where he continued in the same line of enterprise until 1890, when he engaged in the hotel business, with which he has ever since been identified. In politics Mr. Hall is staunchly arrayed as a supporter of the principles and policies of the Democratic party.

On the 3d of July, 1868, at Hanover, Jo Daviess county, Illinois, Mr. Hall was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Truax, who was born in Rome, New York, on the 20th of October, 1854, being a daughter of Isaac and Sarah (Ford) Truax, who were numbered among the pioneers of Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Hall became the parents of five children, namely: Alice, Robert I., Harry, Bella and Norma, and all are living with the exception of Bella, who died at the age of six years.

Robert I. Hall, the elder son, was born in Stevens Point, Wisconsin, on the 9th of June, 1871, and he is one of the popular young men of South Dakota, where the major portion of his life has been passed. On the 26th of April, 1898, at the time of the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, he enlisted as a member of Company A, First South Dakota Volunteer Infantry, and he proceeded with his command to San Francisco, whence they embarked on the transport "Morgan City" and sailed for the Philippines, where he took part in ten engagements with the insurgents. He arrived in San Francisco one month earlier than his regiment, having been sent home on account of physical disability entailed by severe illness, and he received his honorable discharge on the 31st of August, 1899, while in the city hospital of San Francisco. He is now engaged in the real-estate business at Evarts, South Dakota.

REV. C. E. O'FLAHERTY, of Kimball, Brule county, is one of the able and well-known young priests of the Catholic church in this diocese and is doing an admirable work in his holy calling as a missionary in a wide territory. He was born on the 24th of April, 1878, in the city of Galway, Ireland, where his parents still reside. His earlier studies were made at Wilton College, Cork, and his theological education was begun at the Seminary of Foreign Missions, Lyons, France, and later completed in this country. He was ordained a priest by Bishop O'Gorman at Sioux Falls on the 15th of September, 1901, and was assigned to his present charge on September 22, 1901, the same extending over the greater part of Brule and Lyman counties. His ambition to advance the work and influence of his church in these frontier counties has brought him prominently before the public in his locality. Within his two years' incumbency of this position a beautiful rectory has been erected in Kimball, a church edifice completed in Pukwana, and the St. James church in Chamberlain erected at a cost of five thousand dollars, the same being the most beautiful public building in that thriving town. In addition to this a little church has been built at Ioun, in Lyman county, and two more are soon to be built in the same county and under the direction of Father O'Flaherty, who, as may readily be understood, has few idle moments.

ALBERT W. WILMARTH, who is actively engaged in the practice of his profession in Huron, the official center of Beadle county, is one of the able and influential members of the bar of the commonwealth, has served as a member of the state legislature and as a citizen commands unequivocal confidence and regard.

Mr. Wilmarth is a native of the old Keystone state, having been born in Harford, Susquehanna county, Pennsylvania, on the 15th of February, 1856, and being a son of George P. and Martha (Payne) Wilmarth, who were likewise born and reared in that county, the latter being a daughter of Oliver Payne, who was born in Massachusetts, while Walter Wilmarth, the paternal grandfather, was born in Connecticut, both families having been identified with the annals of our national history from the early colonial epoch. Grandfather Wilmarth was numbered among the pioneers of Susquehanna county, Pennsylvania, where he engaged in farming, which vocation was also followed by the father of the subject, who became an influential citizen of that locality.

Albert W. Wilmarth secured his early education in the town of Harford, where he completed a course in the high school, and after leaving school he entered the office of Judge J. Brewster McCollum, of Montrose, Pennsylvania, who was afterward chief justice of the supreme court of that state, and under the able direction of this honored preceptor carried forward his study of the law for several years, being admitted to the bar of his native state in 1879. He was thereafter engaged in the active work of his profession in Montrose, Pennsylvania, until 1883, when he came to South Dakota and located in Huron, where he established himself in practice and where he has gained high prestige and marked precedence as a skilled trial lawyer and discriminating counsel, being especially well read in the learning of the law and having a judicial and analytical mind which enables him to grasp the cases presented to him for consideration and to readily apply the legal principles relevant thereto. In 1892 he was elected to the office of city attorney, in which he served six consecutive years, retiring in 1898. In the following year he was chosen to represent his county in the state legislature, where he made a most enviable record as an active and able working member of the house, being assigned to various important committees and championing many measures which have proved of inestimable benefit to the state since enactment. He was re-elected in 1901 and during the next general assembly was equally prominent in the legislative body. He was the chief promoter of the referendum bill, which was presented by him and ably upheld on the floor of the house, being finally enacted as a law of the state and standing in evidence of the progressive policy of the members of the assembly. In politics Mr. Wilmarth is a staunch adherent of the Republican party, having been an active worker in its cause and being prominent in its councils in the state. He is identified with various fraternal organizations and is distinctively popular in professional, business and social circles. During Mr. Wilmarth's first term in the legislature he entered into a wise coalition with John Pusey, of Hand county, and Wilbur S. Glass, of Codrington county, and they effectively combined their efforts in the support of worthy measures, being thus practically invincible in securing the passage of bills which they undertook to put through in the house. During both terms Mr. Wilmarth was a recognized leader in the house, and during the second term he had the distinction of being chairman of the judiciary committee, one of the most important of all committees, as is well known. In the Republican state convention of 1904 Mr. Wilmarth was chosen to make the speech nominating Coe I. Crawford for the governorship, and made an eloquent appeal for his candidate, winning for himself additional laurels as a public speaker. The press reported the incident as follows:

ALBERT W. WILMARTH.

The chairman called for nominations for governor.

A. W. Wilmarth, of Huron, and Carl Sherwood, of Clark, were on their feet instantly. The chair recognized Sherwood who in a flowery speech placed in nomination the name of his favorite, Sam Elrod. A number of chairmen of delegations seconded the nomination, several of them raising a hubbub and calling for "question" in a vain attempt to bluff Wilmarth. That gentleman quietly waited till they were all done and then in a voice penetrating every corner of the convention hall and the ringing eloquence of which held every ear in that vast turbulent audience attentive and seemingly spellbound, placed in nomination the name of Coe I. Crawford, whom he termed "the plumed knight" of South Dakota politics and coupled his name with that of Theodore Roosevelt in a striking comparison. After paying a high tribute to Crawford, characterizing him as one of the ablest, cleanest and most courageous of all South Dakota Republicans, he said:

"He takes his platform. He has unfurled his banner like the 'plumed knight' that he is and he will carry it through the camps of enemies until in triumph he places it upon the platform of a Republican convention hall. Triumph he must and shall. He has added to the Republican platform the primary election plank which guarantees the right of every man—he of the rank and file—to express his will. The demand is almost universal for Coe I. Crawford." Several times he was interrupted by applause and at the close the whole convention hall thundered forth its cheers from friend and foe alike until the great auditorium rang with round after round of admiring approbation.

WILLIAM H. EVERHARD, M. D., one of the representative members of the medical fraternity in Volga, Brookings county, was born in Ripon, Fond du Lac county, Wisconsin, on the 4th of May, 1857, and is a son of Dr. Aaron and Ann V. (Vauett) Everhard, the former of whom was born in Doylestown, Wayne county, Ohio, and the latter in the state of Massachusetts. The father of our subject was graduated in the medical department of the Western Reserve University, one of the oldest educational institutions in the Buckeye state, and was a thoroughly skilled physician and surgeon, having been engaged in the active practice of his profession for full half a century. He located in Ripon, Wisconsin, in 1856, being one of the pioneer physicians of that section, and there continued in practice until his death, in 1892, at which time he was sixty-nine years of age. His widow is still living and makes her home with her children, who accord her the utmost filial care and solicitude. The father of our subject was mayor of Ripon for fourteen years and was one of the most honored citizens of the community in which he so long lived and labored. Of his seven children six are living, namely: Andrew T., who is a resident of Bryant, South Dakota; Kendrick M., who is engaged in Bryant, Hamlin county, South Dakota; Frank A., who is a practicing physician in Ripon, Wisconsin; Ella S., who is likewise a medical practitioner, engaged in the work of her profession in Dayton, Ohio; Mary, who is a resident of the city of Boston, and William H., who is the immediate subject of this review.

Dr. William H. Everhard was reared to maturity in his native town, and after completing the curriculum of the public schools he entered Ripon College for two years, being twenty-one years of age at the time. He was matriculated in Rush Medical College, in the city of Chicago, in 1878, and there completed the prescribed course, being graduated in this celebrated institution in February, 1880, and receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine. It should be stated that he had previously taken up the study of medicine under the effective direction of his honored father. Almost immediately after his graduation the Doctor started for South Dakota, having determined to follow the advice of Horace Greeley by coming west and growing up with the country. He arrived in Volga on the 9th of April, 1880, the line of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad having been completed to this point only a few months previously. The Doctor at once displayed his professional "shingle" in the new town, and that it was essential for him to find someone to "practice" upon may be well understood when we state that his cash capital was reduced to the sum of fifty cents the day succeeding his arrival. It was his good fortune, however, to find his services in demand that same morning, twenty-one patients coming to him for treatment. He is distinctively the pioneer physician of the town, and for many years labored with unabating zeal and self-abnegation in the relieving of suffering and distress in the community, driving to great distances, often through blinding snowstorms over the trackless prairies, and ever responding to the call of duty, no matter how great the personal discomfort or even hazard. He was very successful in his professional work and continued in active practice until 1901, when he sold out his professional business to Dr. D. L. Scanlan, in order that he might have more time to devote to his various capitalistic interests, while he gives special attention to dealing in real estate, being the owner of much valuable property in the county and elsewhere in the state. He is a member of the National Association of Railroad Surgeons.

Dr. Everhard is the owner of two thousand acres of land in the state, and the greater portion of this is in Brookings county, and he has shown marked discrimination in the handling of realty since coming here. He is associated with Messrs. John L. Hall and Robert Henry in the ownership of the First State Bank of Volga, which was organized and incorporated in 1900. He was the first single individual to raise a carload of hogs west of the Sioux river in Brookings county, and since 1893 he has had under effective cultivation in the county about fifteen hundred acres of land. He has paid out more than any other one man in the section of the county west of the Sioux river in the way of farm improvements, including labor, and has thus materially aided in the development of the resources of this section.

Dr. Everhard was aligned with the Democratic party until 1896, when he felt convinced that the platform of the party did not represent the organic principles which the name should imply, and he therefore transferred his allegiance to the Republican party, to which he has since given his support, having been a delegate to one of its state conventions. He was the first treasurer of the village of Volga, was county coroner for a number of years and also a valued member of the board of health. He served as surgeon for the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad Company from the time of coming here until he retired from practice, and he is now frequently called in consultation and emergency work. Fraternally the Doctor is identified with the lodge, chapter and council of the Masonic order, having passed the official chairs in the lodge, and is also affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 19th of March, 1882, Dr. Everhard was united in marriage to Miss T. Ella Taggart, who was born in Meadville, Pennsylvania, being a daughter of George and Elizabeth Taggart, who settled in Brookings, in 1881, being numbered among the pioneers of this section of the state. Mr. Taggart served with distinction during the war of the Rebellion and he and his wife are now dead. Dr. and Mrs. Everhard have three children, namely: Frank T., who was graduated in Ripon high school, Wisconsin, in 1901, and who thereafter continued his studies for one year in the Wisconsin State University, at Madison, and is now in the University of Minnesota; Bertha M., who completed the course in the Volga graded school, later attended the college at Yankton for two years, and is now at the parental home; and Raymond is a student in the East high school at Minneapolis, Minnesota.

THOMAS H. NULL, who is actively engaged in the practice of law in Huron, Beadle county, is a native of the Buckeye state, having been born in Warren county, Ohio, on the 10th of February, 1862, and being a son of Benjamin and Mary (Stevens) Null, both of whom were likewise born and reared in that state, where their respective parents were numbered among the early pioneers. Henry Null, the grandfather of the subject, was born in Rockingham county, Virginia, and the great-grandfather, Charles Null, was likewise born in that state. His father, Christopher Null, was born in Germany, whence he came to America prior to the war of the Revolution, taking up his abode in the Old Dominion. He came to the new world about 1750 and continued to reside in Virginia until 1796, when, after the Wayne treaty with the Indians, he removed with his family to a point about thirty miles north of the Ohio river, in what is now the state of Ohio, taking up land on a trail which had been established by "Mad Anthony" Wayne's army, in what is now Warren county, so that the Null family became represented among the earliest settlers within the confines of the present Buckeye state. Christopher Null died yeoman service in the cause of independence, having served as a colonel in the Continental line during the war of the Revolution and having previously been an active figure in various wars and conflicts with the Indians. In Warren county he and his sons took up large tracts of land and reclaimed farms in the midst of the primeval forests, while their products were shipped down the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, on flatboats, to New Orleans. Christopher Null lived to attain a venerable age, and his death occurred in Warren county, as did also that of his son Charles, who there devoted the major portion of his life to agricultural pursuits, while in the early days he also owned and operated a distillery, the output of which was shipped to New Orleans. He also took part in the early Indian wars in Ohio and was of the advance guard of civilization in that great commonwealth. Henry Null, the grandfather, was four years of age at the time of the family removal to the wilds of what was then the Northwest Territory, and he passed the remainder of his life on a portion of the ancestral homestead in Warren county. He passed to his reward in 1880, in the fullness of years and well-earned honors. His fourth son was Benjamin Null, the father of our subject. Benjamin was reared on the old homestead and received a common-school education. At the age of twenty-one years he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Stevens, who died a few years later, leaving three children, of whom Thomas H. was the second in order of birth.

Thomas H. Null secured his early educational training in the district schools. At the age of fifteen years he entered upon an apprenticeship to the trade of carriage making, and during the four years he was thus engaged he was a diligent student, passing all his leisure moments in close application to his studies and early showing a predilection for the law, so that he finally began the technical study of the same under an able preceptor, George W. Moyer, in Farmersville. At the age of eighteen the subject entered the office of the firm of Bolton & Shanck, prominent members of the bar, engaged in active practice at Dayton, Ohio, and under their effective direction carefully continued his study of the science of jurisprudence until he had attained his legal majority. Immediately afterward Mr. Null came to what is now the state of South Dakota, and in his profession and as a citizen he has thus literally "grown up with the country." He located in Jerauld county and was admitted to the bar of the territory at the first term of court held in Aurora county by Judge Edgerton, who was one of the prominent members of the early bar of the territory. In April, 1883, Mr. Null took up one hundred and sixty acres of government land in Jerauld county and opened a law office in Waterbury, that county, where he entered upon the active practice of his profession. In the fall of 1886 he was elected state's attorney of the county, and in the following spring located in Wessington Springs, the county seat. He resigned his office and removed to Huron, Beadle county, in January, 1889, believing this a wider and more attractive field for professional labor, and here he has built up a large and representative practice. Mr. Null was candidate on the People's ticket for the office of attorney general of the state, but was defeated with the balance of the party ticket. While a resident of Jerauld county he was retained in the defense of B. L. Solomon, charged with murder. Solomon and the deceased were alone on the ranch of their employer and during a quarrel Solomon shot his companion, resulting in the death of the latter. The case came to trial before Judge Tripp, the district judge, and the jury disagreed, a change of venue being then taken to Sanborn county. The subject made an able defense for his client and Solomon was convicted of manslaughter only, and received a sentence of but two years in the penitentiary. Solomon was a son of a prominent lawyer in Council Bluffs, Iowa, and the case attracted wide attention, while in this connection the service rendered by Mr. Null gained him a reputation throughout the state. In 1897 Mr. Null represented the railroad commissioners of the state in the litigation in the United States courts as to the rights invested in the railroad commission to fix the maximum rates for transportation of freight and passengers on the lines traversing South Dakota. The case was strenuously fought through the circuit courts of the United States and then carried to the federal supreme court, and after a period of four years of conflict a compromise was effected, just as the matter was to be taken into the United States supreme court a second time. The railway companies submitted to the jurisdiction and control of the state railroad commissioners, and while the expense of the litigation to the state had been more than forty thousand dollars the benefits received were twofold, in that the railways had incidentally placed a high valuation on their properties, thus enabling the assessment to be materially increased by the state assessors, while a reduction for passengers was secured from four to three cents a mile. As indicating the increase in the amount derived by the state from the tax placed in the roads it may be noted that the assessed valuation of the rolling stock on one system alone was raised from two hundred and fifty thousand to one million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. A reduction in freight rates of about ten per cent. was also secured. The subject was most conspicuously identified with this prolonged and important litigation. Fraternally he has attained the thirty-second degree in Scottish-rite Masonry, being identified with the consistory, at Yankton, South Dakota, while he is also affiliated with El Riad Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Sioux Falls, and with Huron Lodge, No. 444, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in his home city.

On the 25th of May, 1887, Mr. Null was united in marriage to Miss Injis Burton, of Jefferson, Iowa. She was born in Indiana and is a daughter of J. O. Burton. Mr. and Mrs. Null have three daughters, Gertrude, Veda and Fern.

ROBERT O. ROBINSON, superintendent of the timber, sawmilling and other similar interests of the Homestake Mining Company, with headquarters in Nemo, Lawrence county, is a native of the Dominion of Canada, having been born in Omemee, province of Ontario, on the 10th of October, 1851, and being a son of Robert and Elizabeth (Humphreys) Robinson, the former of whom was born in Ireland and the latter in England. The father of the subject came to America as a young man and first located in New York city, where he became the owner of two lots, at 63 and 65 Pearl street. These he exchanged for fifty acres of land which is now within the city limits of Toronto, Canada. He shortly afterward disposed of this property and removed to Omemee, eighty miles northeast of Toronto, on the Midland division of the Grand Trunk Railroad, where he engaged in farming and stock raising and became one of the honored and influential citizens of that locality, where he passed the remainder of his life, his death there occurring in 1892, while his wife died July 31, 1894. They became the parents of three sons and four daughters, of whom two of the sons and four of the daughters are living.

The subject was reared to the sturdy discipline of the home farm and secured his educational training in the excellent schools of his native province. At the age of twenty-one years he engaged in farming on his own responsibility, on a place not far distant from the homestead, and thus continued operations until the fall of 1876. In the following spring he started for the Black Hills, coming to Cheyenne, Wyoming, and thence with mule-team to the Hills. He devoted the first two years to placer mining, meeting with varying success, and then entered the employ of the Homestake Mining Company, in connection with the lumbering department of their enterprise. Shortly afterward he built for the company a sawmill on Elk creek, and after its completion was employed in the mill about a year. In 1882 Mr. Robinson purchased teams and engaged in the wood and lumber business on his own responsibility, continuing operations in this line about nine years, within which period all of his contracts were with the Homestake Company, which he supplied with timber of all kinds. In 1892 he entered into a specific contract with the company to assume charge of all their wood, timber, lumber, sawmills, timber lands, etc., and has since been incumbent of this important position, having control of the operation of two sawmills and utilizing at times as many as forty teams and three hundred men. He makes his home in Nemo, one of the most picturesque spots, and the headquarters of the timber interests of the company. In politics Mr. Robinson is a staunch Republican.

On the 26th of March, 1874, Mr. Robinson was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Lamb, who was born in Ontario, Canada, and whose death occurred in 1876. The only child, Janet, is now Mrs. A. C. McCready, of Hanna, South Dakota. On the 16th of March, 1892, Mr. Robinson wedded Miss Irene Karr, who was born and reared in Iowa, and they have two children, Helen and James.

JAY RUSSELL HICKOX, of Deadwood, is a scion of staunch old colonial stock, and is himself a native of New England, where was cradled so much of our national history. He was born in South Britain, New Haven county, Connecticut, on the 3d of April, 1865, and is a son of Henry P. and Julia E. (Bradley) Hickox, both of whom were likewise born and reared in that state, being of English lineage, and there they still retain their residence, the father being a farmer by vocation. The subject secured his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools and then entered Yale College, where he was graduated in 1886, with the degree of Ph. B. Thoroughly equipped in scientific knowledge of a general order and with practical skill in a technical way, in the year of his graduation Mr. Hickox became identified with the engineering department of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, and first came to the Black Hills in 1889, to take charge of the construction of the northern end of the Deadwood branch of the line of that road, from Edgemont to Deadwood. After the completion of this work he was prominently identified with extensive operations in connection with the development of the irrigation systems of the state as well as of Nebraska, until 1899, when he took up his residence in Deadwood and opened a general engineering office. His services have been in requisition in connection with much important work in the line of his profession, while from the time of locating in Deadwood he has held the office of United States deputy mineral surveyor, and has done all of the engineering work for the city. In politics Mr. Hickox is a staunch supporter of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and fraternally is identified with Deadwood Lodge, No. 7, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he served as worshipful master in 1902.

On the 28th of November, 1895, Mr. Hickox was united in marriage to Miss Minnie Harding, who was born in Diamond City, Montana, on the 16th of November, 1869, being a daughter of John A. and Matilda (Kline) Harding.

ORVILLE U. PRYCE, of Deadwood, where he holds the position of manager of the Deadwood-Colorado Investment Company, is a native of the Badger state, having been born in Albany, Green county, Wisconsin, on the 9th of January, 1867, and being a son of Evan and Sarah Pryce, both of whom were born in Newtown, Wales, being representatives of old and honored families. They are now residing at Boulder, Colorado. The subject received his preliminary educational training in the public schools and thereafter continued his studies in the seminary at Evansville, Wisconsin, and the Northwestern Business College, in Madison, that state, in which institution he completed a thorough commercial course. In 1890 he came to South Dakota and secured a position as bookkeeper and stenographer in the Citizens' National Bank at Madison, Lake county, retaining this incumbency until 1901. In 1895 he went to Cripple Creek, Colorado, and remained about three years in that state, where he devoted his attention to mining, becoming interested in the development of good properties. He then returned to South Dakota and resumed his residence in the Black Hills district, where he had been located for some time prior to going to Colorado, and here he is now one of the successful and representative mining brokers and operators of the district. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Republican party, and fraternally is affiliated with Deadwood Lodge, No. 7, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Deadwood Lodge, No. 51, Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 19th of June, 1902, Mr. Pryce was united in marriage to Miss Maryella Ellis, who was born in the city of Utica, New York, on the 18th of September, 1870, being a daughter of David and Elizabeth Ellis.

GEORGE STEPHEN HOPKINS was born in the city of Lockport, Niagara county, New York, on the 28th of August, 1852, and is a son of Stephen Hopkins, a great-grandson of Stephen Hopkins, one of the signers of that immortal document, the Declaration of Independence, and a lineal descendant of Stephen Hopkins, one of the Puritans who came over in the "Mayflower" in 1620 and landed on Plymouth Rock. The family name was long and conspicuously identified with the annals of New England history, whence representatives finally went into the state of New York, as pioneers, while scions of the sturdy stock are now to be found in the most diverse sections of the Union. The subject was reared in his native state and after completing the curriculum of the common schools took a thorough course in surveying and engineering in the city of Brooklyn, while he has attained a high reputation in the northwest as a civil and mining engineer. He followed his profession in the east and in the western states until 1875, when, as a young man of twenty-three years, he came to what is now South Dakota and became one of the pioneers of the Black Hills, having arrived in this district in July of the year mentioned and having ever since followed his profession as a surveyor and civil and mining engineer, while he has also been interested in the development of a number of important mining properties. He holds high prestige in his chosen vocation and has been identified with much important work in the line, while he is at the present time serving as United States deputy mineral surveyor. He is one of the popular and highly esteemed residents of Deadwood, having the confidence and regard of all who know him and being prominent in both business and social circles. He is one of the most prominent and valued members of the Black Hills Pioneer Association, of which he is historian, having been elected to this office for life. In politics he accords a stanch allegiance to the Republican party, and fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being past grand of his lodge and also past district deputy grand master, while he has attained the thirty-second degree in Scottish-rite Masonry, and is affiliated with Naja Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

On the 16th of September, 1888, Mr. Hopkins was united in marriage, at Spearfish, this state, to Miss Jessie O. Robinson, and they have three children, namely: Georgiana C., who was born in Spearfish, on the 18th of September, 1889; William Stephen, who was born in Deadwood, on the 31st of May, 1891; and Florence Ruth, who was born in Spearfish on the 26th of October, 1892.

REV. JOHN POAGE WILLIAMSON, one of the able and honored members of the clergy of the Presbyterian church in the state, and the pioneer missionary among the Indians in Dakota, was born in Lac qui Parle, in the county of the same name, Minnesota, on the 27th of October, 1835, being a son of Rev. Thomas S. and Margaret (Poage) Williamson, the former of whom was born in South Carolina and the latter in Ohio, while they were numbered among the earliest settlers in Minnesota, the lineage of each being of Scotch-Irish derivation. Rev. Thomas S. Williamson, M. D., was a man of distinguished attainments and was for forty-five years a missionary of the Presbyterian church among the Sioux Indians in Minnesota, continuing his earnest and self-abnegating labors there until his death, in 1879. He was a son of Rev. William Williamson, a soldier in the Continental line during the war of the Revolution, who removed from South Carolina to Ohio in 1803, in order that he might manumit his slaves. Margaret (Poage) Williamson, the mother of our subject, was the daughter of Colonel James Poage, who became general surveyor of government lands west of the Alleghany mountains at the close of the Revolutionary war, and for his bounty he received forty thousand acres of government land. He settled in Kentucky, where he was a member of the legislature in 1796, and he afterward founded the town of Ripley, Ohio, whither he brought his twenty-four slaves and set them free. His father was Robert Poage, who was a colonial soldier under Washington at the time of Braddock's defeat. Margaret (Poage) Williamson was summoned into eternal rest in 1872.

John P. Williamson passed the first twelve years of his life on the frontier in Minnesota, before there was a public school established in the state. However, his paternal aunt, Miss Jane Williamson, a mission teacher to the Sioux Indians, gave him much faithful instruction. In 1847 he was sent east, and he studied two years in South Salem Academy, Ohio; one year at Harnar Academy, in Marietta, Ohio; one year at Mount Palatine Academy, LaSalle, Illinois; two years in Knox College, at Galesburg, Illinois, under Jonathan Blanchard, the noted abolitionist; and two years in Marietta College, Ohio, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1857. He then entered Lane Seminary, in Cincinnati, Ohio, where he completed his theological course and was graduated in 1860. He was licensed to preach by the Presbyterian church in Minnesota in 1859, and in the year following his graduation he held pastoral charges at Allensville and Zoar, in Switzerland county, Indiana. He was appointed a missionary to the Indians and commenced mission work in the autumn of 1860 at Redwood agency, Minnesota, and has ever since continued his work among the Indians. By the massacre of 1862 the white persons at Redwood, Minnesota, were all killed or driven away, and the Indians were exiled. Mr. Williamson's scalp was providentially spared and he decided to follow the exiles with the gospel. He arrived at Crow Creek, South Dakota, on the 31st of May, 1863, with thirteen hundred Indians, in charge of Colonel Clark W. Thompson. This officer immediately built the cedar stockade called Fort Thompson, on the site of the present Crow Creek Agency. The Indians were removed from this point in 1866 and Mr. Williamson followed them to Niobrara, Nebraska, where he labored among them until March, 1869, when he located at Yankton Agency, South Dakota, where he has resided during the long intervening years. For the past twenty years he has been general missionary, having the supervision of all the Presbyterian missionary work among the Sioux Indians, and having visited practically all of the Sioux agencies at varied intervals. He was the first missionary of any denomination among the Indians of South Dakota, and when he came there were less than half a dozen clergymen of all denominations in what is now the state of South Dakota.

Mr. Williamson cast his first vote for General John C. Fremont, the first presidential candidate of the Republican party, of whose principles and policies he has remained a staunch advocate from the time of its organization to the present. He was elected to the legislature in 1896, serving during the fifth general assembly, and looks back with particular satisfaction upon the course of the Republican minority in re-electing Senator Kyle in that session. He was appointed

United States special agent for the Flandreau Indians in 1873, and remained in tenure of this office for a period of five years.

On the 27th of April, 1866, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Williamson to Miss Sarah A. Vannice, of Winnebago City, Minnesota. She was born in Iowa, in 1843, and is a daughter of Cornelius C. and Susan L. (Dickerson) Vannice. Mr. and Mrs. Williamson have seven children, namely: Winifred Lee, Guy W., Thomas C., Jesse P., John B., Laura L., and Helen V. Mr. Williamson is the author of a number of publications in the Dakota Indian language. He originated and published for many years the Iapi Oaye, a monthly Indian paper. His English-Dakota Dictionary will preserve his memory as long as the Dakota language is spoken.

LOUIS LAPLANTE.—A consistent and valuable prerogative is exercised by a compilation of this nature when it enters a resume of the life history of so honored and prominent a pioneer as he whose name initiates this paragraph. Whatever there is represented in the perilous and stirring life which marked the life on the frontier is known to the subject by personal experience in the days long since past, and then, as in the later era of development and civic and industrial progress, he played well his part, proving himself a man of courage, self-reliance and utmost integrity of purpose.

Mr. LaPlante comes of sterling French lineage, as the name implies, and is a native of the province of Quebec, Canada, where he was born on the 11th of November, 1835, being a son of Louis and Sophia (Morran) LaPlante, both of whom were likewise born and reared in that province, the paternal grandfather, who also bore the patronymic of Louis, having been a seafaring man, as was also the father of the subject. He who was later to become a pioneer of South Dakota received somewhat limited educational advantages in his boyhood, and early became dependent upon his own resources. At the early age of ten years he became identified with the vocation followed by his father and grandfather, going to sea and continuing as a sailor before the mast for the ensuing seven years, within which time he visited the principal maritime ports in England, France, Germany, Wales and America. In 1852 he arrived in the city of New Orleans, Louisiana, where he secured employment in connection with steamboat navigation on the Mississippi river, being thus engaged for two years, after which he turned his attention to coal mining on the Ohio river. In a short time he found himself afflicted with the all-prevailing ague, and consequently returned to St. Louis, and after a trip to New Orleans, came back to the former city and there shipped on the steamer "St. Mary," plying the upper Missouri river. On this little vessel he came up the river as far as the mouth of the White river, in what is now South Dakota, this being then the head of navigation, and thence the government supplies with which the boat was laden were freighted through with teams to old Fort Pierre, where Mr. LaPlante put in his first appearance on the 11th of November, 1855, his twentieth birthday anniversary. He passed the winter at Camp Pierre, on the opposite side of the river, Major Galpin being in charge of the camp, and in the following spring, in company with seven other men, started down the river with supplies, the same being transported with mule-teams. The party became disaffected because the supply train had been placed in charge of an unpopular man, instead of Charles Picotte, who had been the choice of the men, and they accordingly left the supply train at the mouth of White river, their principal objection to service in the connection being that they were reluctant to work under military rules and supervision. The eight men took a small supply of necessary provisions and made their way back to Fort Pierre on foot, where they were taken prisoners and court-martialed, all being ordered out of the country. On their way up the river they found a soldier who had deserted from Fort Pierre with two others. The three deserters had lost their way and two of them died from lack of food and from exposure, while the survivor was found in a fearfully demented condition, having entirely eaten

the body of one of his companions, and partially consumed the other. He was taken back to the fort and placed in charge of the authorities, and in the following summer was sent down the river to St. Louis. When ordered to leave the country each of the eight men agreed to do so with the exception of a half-breed Indian, who told Colonel Harney, commanding the post, that he had a natural right to the country and would remain. He brought into play a knife, with which he attempted an attack on the colonel, but was disarmed. He was permitted to remain, this provision being a part of the treaty made by the Indians with Colonel (later General) Harney, in 1856. Seven of the men then proceeded down the river, but the adventurous spirit of Mr. LaPlante led him to escape surveillance and make his way up the river to Fort Clark, where he entered the employ of the American Fur Company, with which he remained engaged until it disposed of its business about 1859. He then became an employe of the company's successors, the firm of Frost, Tudd & Atkins, and was in their service until 1861, when Mr. LaPlante engaged in trapping on his own account. In the summer of 1863 he entered the employ of the government at Fort Randall, which was then in command of General Cook, who had relieved General Sully, and passed the summer in carrying dispatches between that post and Fort Sully. In the summer of 1864 he was engaged in scouting duty for General Sully, having become by this time familiar with the country and with the habits and maneuvers of the crafty Indians, while his daring and courage led him to risk the many dangers involved in the service in which he was engaged. He followed scouting during that summer and then engaged in business on his own account, trading with the Indians and raising horses and cattle. His ranch was located in Bon Homme county and there he continued to reside until 1875, when he removed to Fort Pierre, where he established his home, while he has ever since been engaged in stock raising, his ranch being located on the Cheyenne river, sixty-five miles west of Fort Pierre, and comprising one thousand eight hundred acres, in

Stanley county, while he also uses the open range and conducts his operations on an extensive scale. When the Black Hills district was opened to settlement he engaged in freighting between Fort Pierre and Deadwood, in which enterprise he successfully continued until the year 1883. He gives special attention to the raising of Hereford and shorthorn cattle and Percheron and French coach horses. Mr. LaPlante is a man of broad and varied experience and strong mentality, well informed and genial and courteous in his relations with his fellow men. Though he has nearly attained the age of three score years and ten he enjoys perfect physical health and is a worthy type of the sturdy and valorous frontiersmen who aided in ushering in the era of civilization and progress, while his integrity has ever commanded to him the respect and confidence of those with whom he has come in contact. He is a pioneer of pioneers, and it is most consonant that he be accorded marked precedence in this publication. His elder sons, two of whom are individually mentioned on other pages of this work, are also numbered among the progressive and successful stock growers of the state, being likewise located on a reservation, while all of his children have been accorded excellent educational advantages and have honored the name which they bear and the state in which their entire lives have been passed. The two eldest sons have attained the thirty-second degree in Scottish-rite Masonry, and the subject himself is a Royal Arch Mason, while he is also affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a staunch Democrat in politics, and upon the organization of Stanley county was elected a member of its first board of commissioners, serving one term, while for two years he was a member of the village council of Fort Pierre.

In March, 1860, Mr. LaPlante was united in marriage to Miss Julia Abbott, who was born and reared in Fort George, South Dakota, being a daughter of Mr. Abbott, of the firm of Abbott & Cotton, who were engaged in the fur business in this section in the early days, having their headquarters in the city of New York, while their trading post was at the mouth of the Yellow Medicine river, in Pratt county, South Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. LaPlante have six sons, namely : Frederick, George, Alexander, Charles, Louis, Jr., and Ovila.

ALBERT MASON, of Fairfax, Gregory county, is a native of the state of Iowa, having been born on the homestead farm, in Cedar county, on the 7th of January, 1867, and being a son of James and A. E. (Monroe) Mason. The father of the subject was born in the vicinity of Meadville, Pennsylvania, and there continued to be identified with agricultural pursuits until 1850, when he started for the west and became a pioneer settler in Cedar county, Iowa, where he became the owner of a valuable landed estate of two hundred and forty acres, upon which he made the best of improvements. He continued to reside on the old homestead until his death, in 1883, at the age of fifty-seven years. His widow is still living, being seventy years of age at the time of this writing, and she resides in Fairfax, South Dakota. She was born and reared in Indiana. Of her twelve children only three are living. The father of the subject was a staunch Republican, having identified himself with the party at the time of its organization, and his religious faith was that of the Baptist church, of which his widow also has long been a devoted member.

The subject of this review was reared to manhood on the homestead farm and his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the public schools of the state of Iowa. Mr. Mason continued to be associated in the work and management of the home farm until he had attained the age of seventeen years, having been about sixteen years old at the time of his father's death. In 1884 he came to Holt county, Nebraska, and, with his mother and sisters, resided on a homestead until 1891, and then came to Gregory county, South Dakota, and here took up a homestead claim of government land, while he was one of the first to settle in the embryonic village of Fairfax, of which he is one of the founders and builders. In 1895 he here established himself in the general merchandise business, in which he has ever since continued, having at the present time a well-equipped store, and being recognized as one of the leading merchants of the town. In politics he maintains an independent attitude, using his franchise in support of the man and measures approved by his judgment. He has been a member of the village council from the time of the incorporation of the town, and is at the present time president of the same and is giving a most progressive and able administration as the executive head of the municipal government. Mr. Mason was the first postmaster of the town, having received the appointment during the administration of President Harrison and having continued in tenure of the office for eight successive years. He is a member of the board of education and took an active part in the establishing of the public-school system in the village and county, and has done most of the local surveying throughout the county, and in this capacity has laid out all of its towns. He was prominently concerned in the organization of the county, having charge of the official correspondence and making two trips to interview the Governor in furtherance of the work, while he personally secured many of the signatures to the petition for the organization of the new county. Fraternally he is identified with the local lodges of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Ancient Order of United Workmen, having been a charter member of the latter. He and his wife are prominent and valued members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

On the 6th of September, 1888, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Mason to Miss Bertha Batesole, who was born in Sandusky county, Ohio, being a daughter of William H. and Nancy J. Batesole, both of whom were born and reared in Ohio, where the father was engaged in farming until his removal to the estate of Michigan, where he continued to follow the same vocation until 1885, when he removed to Holt county, Nebraska, where he remained until 1891, since which year he has been successfully engaged in farming in Marshall county, Iowa.

THOMAS FULLERTON, president of the Fullerton Lumber Company, of Mitchell, was born in County Antrim, Ireland, July 14, 1853, a son of Samuel and Anna (Holmes) Fullerton, of whose fourteen children eleven are still living. The parents of our subject were likewise born in County Antrim, of Scotch-Irish parents, and there both were reared and educated, the father having been a seafaring man from his youth up, while for about twenty years he was a sea captain and ship owner. At the age of nineteen years he was a passenger on a sailing vessel bound for the United States, and after the boat was but a few days out the captain died, whereupon the first mate urged upon the passengers the expediency of making their peace with their Maker, since there was no one on board who knew aught about navigation. Mr. Fullerton, though but a boy at the time, had studied navigation and had considerable practical experience, and he forthwith took charge of the vessel, which he brought in safety to its port in New York city. For his services at this time he was tendered and accepted the position of first mate, and thereafter continued to follow the sea for a score of years, while he continued to own vessels for several years after his retirement. In 1884 or 1885 he became a resident of the United States, locating in Beloit, Kansas, where he has since lived a retired life, in the company of his devoted and cherished wife. They are members of the Presbyterian church, and he is a Republican in his political views.

The subject of this sketch was reared in his native county, where he received the advantages of the common schools. At the age of nineteen years he went to England and entered the government secret service, having relatives who held high office in said department. At the expiration of three and one-half years he resigned his position and came to the United States, locating in Clay Center, Kansas, in the spring of 1876. There he secured employment in the lumber yard, receiving thirty dollars a month for his services. The yard was owned and operated by the Chicago Lumber Company, and after serving one year our subject was made manager of the business, retaining this incumbency until the 1st of January, 1881. In the following month he went to Niobrara, Nebraska, where he engaged in the same line of business on his own responsibility. In 1882 he sold the yard and came to Mitchell, South Dakota, where he has since been established in the lumber business, this city being the headquarters of the enterprise, in which Mr. Fullerton is associated with his brothers, James G. and George J. In the spring of 1903 the company was incorporated under the title of the Fullerton Lumber Company, and with official corps as follows: Thomas Fullerton, president; George J. Fullerton, vice-president; and James G. Fullerton, treasurer. This is one of the large lumber concerns of the northwest, owning yards in Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and South Dakota, the entire number of yards being about forty and the same being located at various eligible places. The family name is most conspicuously identified with the great lumbering industry. Samuel H. Fullerton, a brother of our subject, is president of a lumber company which is capitalized for two and one-half million dollars, with headquarters in the city of St. Louis, and Robert, another brother, is vice-president of the corporation, which dates its foundation back to the year 1866, and which is known as the Chicago Lumber & Coal Company. The company of which the subject is president is incorporated with a capital of one million dollars, having unrivaled facilities for the transaction of its enormous business.

Mr. Fullerton is known as a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and in 1896 he was the nominee of his party for state senator, but he was defeated by the small majority of but twenty-one votes, the usual Democratic majority in the district being fully three hundred. In 1893, when there was so lamentable a failure of crops throughout this section, he donated ten carloads of coal for the relief of the poor, and his benefactions in other ways have been wide but signally unostentatious. In 1895 he was elected mayor of Mitchell, serving two successive terms of two years each and giving a clean and business-like administration of the municipal government. He was a member of the first council of Mitchell after its incorporation as a city and served as mayor from 1896 to 1900. He is president of the Mitchell Club, whose personnel comprises the leading business men of the city and whose object is primarily to advance the best interests of the place. In 1901 Mr. Fullerton was appointed, under Governor Herreid, a member of the state board of agriculture, in which capacity he served two years, and in 1902 he was elected a member of the capital committee, his colleagues on the board being Harry L. Bross and U. L. Davidson. Mr. Fullerton is not formally identified with any religious body, but attends and contributes to the support of the Presbyterian church, of which Mrs. Fullerton is a zealous member.

In the year 1880 Mr. Fullerton was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Reed, of Clay Center, Kansas, and their only child, Robert, met his death at the untimely age of five years, having been accidentally shot and surviving his injuries but a few hours.

REV. JAMES J. HEIDEGGER, who has pastoral charge of the Church of Epiphany, at Epiphany, Harrison county, was born in the Tyrolian district of Austria, on the 18th of March, 1846, and after securing a proper preliminary education began preparing himself for the priesthood in 1859, in which year he entered the Jesuit college at Feldkirch, Austria, where he completed his course, having graduated in 1867. In the same year he came to the United States, proceeding to the city of Cleveland, Ohio, where he completed his theological studies in St. Mary's Seminary, under Bishop Rapp, being ordained to the priesthood July 5, 1870. He was then given a charge at Avon, Lorain county, Ohio, where he remained until 1878, having erected a church edifice, a parish house and a parish convent. In 1878 Father Heidegger was transferred to Fort Jennings, Putnam county, Ohio, where his initiative and executive ability again came into marked evidence, since he erected a church building and also established several auxiliary missions. He held this pastorate until 1885, when he was assigned to the important charge of St. Mary's parish, in Sandusky, Ohio, where he had a congregation of more than eleven hundred families, and there he labored zealously until the spring of 1893, when he returned to Europe, remaining until June of the following year, both of his parents having entered the life eternal during this interval. He then came again to the United States, and after passing a short time in St. Cloud, Minnesota, he came to Yankton, South Dakota, where he held the office of convent chaplain until 1899, having in the meanwhile remodeled a building and converted the same into the present Sacred Heart Hospital. In 1896 he effected the purchase of the building of the Episcopalian college in Vermillion, and forthwith converted the same into the convent of St. Joseph. In September, 1899, Father Heidegger assumed his present charge, and among the tangible results of his zeal and devotion is the present handsome and consistent church edifice, which was completed in 1901. He has the affectionate regard of his people, who have given him a full measure of sympathy and co-operation, and he has the unqualified esteem of all who know him, being a man of high intellectuality, broad and tolerant views and most gracious personality.

FRANK F. APLIN, general merchant at Britton, Marshall county, was born February 2, 1852, at Kendall, Orleans county, New York, the son of Rev. N. J. and Chalnissa A. (Sherman) Aplin. The father was born at Kendall, New York, on May 31, 1821, the mother at Rochester, New York, September 18, 1828. Rev. Aplin was for many years a minister of the Methodist Episcopal church. He removed his family from New York state to Wisconsin in 1853, and to Britton, South Dakota, in 1894.

The subject was educated in the summer schools of Wisconsin, attending at the different points his father was stationed. In 1879 he went on the road as a traveling salesman, continuing for fifteen years. In 1894 he located in Britton, South Dakota, and established himself in business by opening a large general store. Mr. Aplin is a Republican and belongs to the Masonic fraternity, Ancient Order of United Workmen and Eastern Star. He has twice been married. His first wife was Susan Alice Woodworth, daughter of E. G. Woodworth, of Berlin, Wisconsin. She died in 1894, leaving one son, Harry Grant. His second marriage was to Mattie A. Smith, daughter of H. A. Perkins, of Villard, Minnesota.

GAYLORD E. SUMNER, cashier and one of the principal stockholders of the Stockgrowers' Bank, of Fort Pierre, is a native of the old Empire state and is in direct line of descent from the well-known Sumner family, of Boston, the distinguished statesman, Charles Sumner, being of the same line.

The subject was born in Belfast, Allegany county, New York, on the 2d of November, 1870, and is a son of Newton and Eliza A. (Swift) Sumner, both of whom were likewise born and reared in New York state, while the former is one of the prominent and influential farmers of Allegany county, where his entire life has been passed. He has been continuously incumbent of some public office in the township of Belfast from the attaining of his legal majority to the present, and is sixty-three years of age at the time of this writing, in 1904. The great-great-grandfather of the subject in the agnatic line removed from Massachusetts into northern New York as early as 1759, crossing Lake Champlain on the ice and losing a large amount of his household goods through the breaking of the ice. He lived in sound of the guns of Fort Ticonderoga, and also the sounds of the battles of Lakes Champlain and George, during the war of the Revolution. Hiram Sumner, grandfather of the subject of this review, was reared on the old ancestral homestead in northern New York, and later became the first settler in Allegany county, that state, cutting his way through the dense forests to the site of the present town of Angelica, that county, the same being the oldest town in said county. The maternal grandfather of the subject was Cullen Dean Swift, of English descent and direct from the renowned Dean Swift, of the Church of England, in whose honor he was named. He was one of the old-time circuit riders of the Methodist Episcopal church in New York, riding on horseback through the woods from church to church and being absent several weeks on his rounds as a clergyman of his church in the pioneer section in which he so zealously labored.

Gaylord E. Sumner attended the district school in the neighborhood of his home until he had attained the age of fourteen years and in the meanwhile lent his quota of boyish aid in the work of the home farm. He entered Houghton Seminary, at Houghton, New York, where he completed a commercial course and was graduated in the high school of his home town of Belfast. In the same year, 1892, he came to Fort Pierre, South Dakota, to accept the position of bookkeeper in the Stockgrowers' Bank, while in 1893 he was made assistant cashier and in 1895 elected cashier of the institution, which incumbency he has ever since retained. Up to 1897 he gave his undivided attention to the affairs of the bank, and in 1898 he became one of the incorporators of the Empire State Cattle Company, which now has a capital of thirty thousand dollars, while it holds by lease one hundred and sixty-five thousand acres of government land on the Cheyenne reservation, having fenced this large tract in one enclosure for pasturage purposes. He is still one of the stockholders in the company, whose operations are conducted upon an extensive scale. In 1900 Mr. Sumner made a trip to Texas and assisted James Philip, of Fort Pierre, in shipping nine thousand head of cattle from that state to Pierre, and in the summer of 1902 he went up into the mountains of Idaho, and, with a partner, purchased five hundred head of horses, which they shipped by rail to Cheyenne, Wyoming, from which point they drove them through over the trail of Fort Pierre. He now owns ten thousand dollars' worth of cattle on the range, and with Mr. Millett owns a controlling interest in the bank, whose business has been built up to its present admirable condition principally through their well-directed efforts, the institution being capitalized for twenty-five thousand dollars and having a surplus of fifteen thousand dollars. In politics Mr. Sumner gives an unqualified allegiance to the Republican party, and in May, 1902, he was elected mayor of Fort Pierre, serving until 1904 and giving a most business-like and progressive administration. Both he and his wife are prominent and valued members of the Congregational church in Fort Pierre, and also identified with the Christian Endeavor Society of the same. Fraternally he holds affiliation with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

In Fort Pierre, on the 17th of June, 1896, Mr. Sumner was united in marriage to Miss Ida May Ricketts, who was born in Charlestown, Illinois, being a daughter of Joshua and Louise Ricketts, the former of whom died when she was a child, as the result of injuries received in battle during the Civil war. The family came to South Dakota in 1882.

FRANK LECOCQ, JR., of Harrison, Douglas county, was born in Marion county, Iowa, on the 19th of June, 1858, being a son of Frank and Mary (Van Gorkum) Le Cocq, both of whom were born and reared in Holland, where their marriage was solemnized. There they continued to reside until 1847, when they bade adieu to their fatherland and set forth for America, in whose early history their sturdy countrymen had played so important a part centuries before. They located in Marion county, Iowa, where Mr. Le Cocq took up government land, which he reclaimed and developed, being there identified with agricultural pursuits for a long term of years, though he gave his personal attention more particularly to mercantile business, having conducted a general store in Pella, that county. For two terms he served as county recorder, being a Republican in politics, while both he and his wife were firm in the faith of the Dutch Reform church. Both are now residents of Harrison, Douglas county, South Dakota.

Frank Le Cocq, the immediate subject of this review, and at the present time incumbent of the office of railroad commissioner of the state, received his early educational training in the public schools of his native state, while he was significantly favored in becoming also well educated in the Holland language, which he acquired in his home, where the vernacular of their native country was commonly utilized by his parents. After leaving school the subject engaged in the real-estate business in Sioux county, Iowa, having his headquarters in Orange City, where he remained until 1882, when he came to South Dakota and took up his permanent abode in Douglas county, whose organization was effected within that year. He was the projector and organizer of the colonization movement which culminated in the settlement of the western part of this county, including six townships, by Hollanders and descendants of Holland stock. Upon the organization of the county Mr. Le Cocq was appointed to the office of county surveyor, and in the same year he was elected a member of the board of county commissioners, in which capacity he continued to serve consecutively until 1890, in which year he was further honored by the people of the county by being elected to represent them in the legislature of the state. At the expiration of his term, in 1892, he was again called to the office of county commissioner, and he was incumbent of the same continuously until he was again called to a higher preferment, having been elected a member of the state board of railroad commissioners in 1900, for a term of six years, in which office he is giving a most discriminating and able administration. He is a stalwart advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party and has been a delegate to every convention of the same since the organization of Douglas county, both under the territorial and state regimes. He and his wife are members of the Dutch Reform church in Harrison, in which attractive village they maintain their home.

On the 4th of August, 1884, Mr. Le Cocq was united in marriage to Miss Rhoda Brinks, who was born in Michigan, and they are the parents of eight sons.

ORLIN A. ABEEL, cashier of the Alcester State Bank, in Alcester, Union county, is a native of the city of Albany, New York, where he was born on the 17th of August, 1849, being a son of Waldo and Maria Abeel, who were likewise born in that state. The Abeel family is one of the old and honored ones in the Empire state, and the records extant show that John Abeel, of whom the subject is a direct descendant, was mayor of Albany in 1694, and that he signed the charter for historic old Trinity church in New York city. Henry V. S. Abeel, grandfather of our subject, was a valiant soldier in the war of 1812. Orlin A. Abeel received an excellent common-school education, but his training has been most effectually rounded out under the discipline of that wise headmaster, experience. When he was three years of age his parents removed to Wisconsin, locating in Madison, and his father became superintendent of the Madison division of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, retaining the incumbency until his death. In 1865, at the age of sixteen years, our subject inaugurated his independent career, securing a position as clerk in the office of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad at Madison, and later being promoted to the office of cashier for the same company in its office at Missouri Valley, Iowa. Later he was for three years in charge of the country department of the Bradstreet Mercantile Agency, in its Chicago office, and then became pool clerk for the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, in the same city. In 1884 he became private secretary to Charles M. Hays, at St. Louis, Missouri, in the general manager's office of the Gould system, retaining this incumbency until 1884, in December of which year he came to what is now the state of South Dakota and located on a farm in Union county. In 1888 Mr. Abeel was elected cashier of the Bank of Centerville, Turner county, and was elected county treasurer in 1890. In 1896 he took up his residence in Alcester and here was publisher and editor of the Alcester Union from 1896 until January 1, 1903, when he was elected to his present position as cashier of the Alcester State Bank. He is a fine accountant and endowed with excellent executive ability, and the affairs of the institution are most consistently placed in his charge. He has disposed of his newspaper plant and business, having made the Union a true exponent of local affairs and interests and an able advocate of the principles of the Republican party, to which he has ever given an uncompromising allegiance. He is identified with the Masonic fraternity, and was master of the lodge at Parker, South Dakota, for three years, while he served for three years in the same capacity in Alcester Lodge, No. 115, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

On the 14th of December, 1888, Mr. Abeel was united in marriage to Miss Edith L. Hall, of Union county, Dakota territory, daughter of Samuel W. Hall, who served with distinction in the Civil war, as a member of a Missouri cavalry regiment. Mr. and Mrs. Abeel have five sons, whose names are here entered, with respective ages at time of this writing, in December, 1903: Charles Wallace, fourteen; Verne Waldo, twelve; Paul Jordan, six; Clyde Ambrose, four; and Orley, one.

JOHN W. SEDGWICK, of Alcester, Union county, is a native of Wisconsin, born near the town of New Diggings, that state, on the 28th of January, 1853. His father was Joseph Sedgwick, a well-to-do farmer of Wisconsin, and his mother, whose maiden name was Hannah Peacock, also spent the greater part of her life in that state, both being of English descent. John W. was reared on a farm, early became familiar with its rugged, toilsome duties, and while still a mere youth was obliged to take his place in the fields and contribute to the support of the family. By reason of his services being required at home, his educational advantages were somewhat meager, being confined to a few months' attendance of winter seasons at the country schools of his neighborhood. He remained with his parents, cultivating the farm and otherwise looking after their interests, until twenty-four years old, at which time, 1877, he left home and went to Portlandville, now Akron, Iowa, where he engaged with his brother in buying and shipping grain and live stock, which line of business occupied his attention during the greater part of the ensuing ten years. In 1883 Mr. Sedgwick came to South Dakota and on March 19th of that same year was united in marriage, at Elk Point, with Miss Minnie Trader, after which he moved to a farm near Alcester, Union county, and engaged in agricultural pursuits and stock raising. After spending ten years on his farm, and bringing it to a high state of cultivation, also greatly enlarging its area, he built a fine residence in Alcester and moved to the same, in order to give his children better educational advantages than were afforded by the country schools. Since coming to South Dakota Mr. Sedgwick's business affairs have continually prospered, and he is now numbered with the energetic and well-to-do men of Union county, owning in addition to his fine and highly improved farm of four hundred acres near the county seat, worth at a conservative estimate sixty dollars per acre, an eight-hundred-acre tract in the county of Buffalo, also fifteen lots and three valuable residence properties in Alcester, his belongings at this time representing a capital of fifty thousand dollars, every dollar of which is the result of his own labor and unaided endeavor. Mr. Sedgwick's early home training, under the direction of plain, industrious, pious parents, was all that any one could desire, and it had great influence in forming his character and shaping his destiny. He was reared according to the rather strict discipline of the Methodist church and still adheres to that faith, belonging with his family to the congregation worshipping in Alcester, to which he is a constant and liberal contributor. He served as school clerk for a period of nine years, and for the last four years has held the office of city trustee, a part of which time he was chairman of the board.

Mr. and Mrs. Sedgwick's beautiful and attractive home in Alcester is noted for the spirit of generous hospitality that reigns therein, and it is a popular resort for the best social circles of the city. In addition to the father and mother, its happy domestic circle at this time includes three children, whose names are Lillian, Levi S. and Walter W.

SAMUEL M. HOWARD.—The honored subject of this sketch, who is now nearing the psalmist's span of three score years and ten, is one of the honored citizens and able and prominent lawyers of Potter county, retaining his residence in Gettysburg and being at the time of this writing incumbent of the office of state's attorney of the county. He is a scion of a family whose name has been long and conspicuously identified with the annals of American history, while the same has ever stood for exalted integrity and lofty patriotism. He is a direct descendant of General Howard, who renders so brilliant service in the Continental army during the war of the Revolution, and the General was descended from one of the name who laid out the city of Baltimore, Maryland, the original American ancestors having settled in the patrician old dominion state, Virginia, in the early colonial epoch. Charles Howard, an uncle of the subject, served with distinction in the war of 1812, and died in Fulton county, Illinois, of which state he was a pioneer, as was also the father of the subject, who was numbered among the earliest settlers in Fulton county, Illinois.

Samuel M. Howard was born in Fulton county, Illinois, on the 2d of July, 1838, being a son of Samuel and Anna (Alderman) Howard. The former was born in the state of Virginia, and the latter in New York. In 1831 the father and mother removed from Ohio to Fulton county, Illinois, and there remained until his death, having been a farmer by vocation. He upheld the military prestige of the name by taking an active part in the Black Hawk war, and he died in 1840, at which time the subject was a child of about three years, while the devoted wife and mother passed away in 1882. At the age of three years the orphan boy was bound out to a farmer named Lorenzo Hitchcock, of Peoria county, Illinois, and in his home was reared with kindness and consideration, being afforded the advantages of the common schools and an excellent academy in Cuba, Fulton county, that state. Shortly after leaving school Mr. Howard, at the advice of Hon. William P. Kellogg, who was afterward governor of Louisiana, as well as United States senator from that state, and who is now a venerable resident of the city of Washington, and a millionaire, decided to take up the study of law and prepare himself for the active work of the profession. He had as preceptor E. G. Johnston, of Peoria, one of the leading members of the Illinois bar at the time, and under his able direction made rapid progress, being admitted to the bar of the state in 1859, upon examination before the supreme court, but not received his certifying papers until it had been his portion to render valiant and protracted service in defense of the integrity of the nation.

Mr. Howard was among the first to respond to President Lincoln's call for volunteers after the thundering of rebel guns against the ramparts of old Fort Sumter had voiced the tocsin of civil war. On the 14th of August, 1861, the subject enlisted as a private in Company H, Twenty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, commanded by Colonel Amary K. Johnston, and after the expiration of his term he re-enlisted in the same company and regiment, serving in all four years and nine months, covering somewhat more than the entire period of the war, as will appear in following statements. His command was first assigned to the Army of the Tennessee and took part in all the operations under General Grant in the Mississippi valley, from Cairo to Mobile. Among the engagements in which Mr. Howard participated may be mentioned the following: Belmont, which was General Grant's first battle; capture of Forts Herman, Henry and Donelson; battles of Pittsburg Landing, or Shiloh; the engagement at Davis Crossing of the Hatchie river, being a part of the battle of Corinth; and the siege and capture of Vicksburg, Spanish Fort, Fort Blakely and the city of Mobile. After the surrender of General Lee, Mr. Howard accompanied his regiment to Texas, to assist in driving Maximilian out of Mexico, and the command encamped at Brownsville, that state, until March 16, 1866, when its members were mustered out and finally disbanded at Springfield, Illinois, May 14, 1866. Mr. Howard then returned to Illinois, and, at Springfield, received his honorable discharge on the 6th of April, 1866. The following day he made requisition for and secured his certificate of admission to the bar, and shortly afterward located in Knoxville, Illinois, where he was actively engaged in the practice of his profession for the ensuing twelve years, gaining success and prestige. He then removed to the city of Chicago, where he accepted a position on the editorial staff of the old Chicago Times, whose founder, the late Wilbur F. Story, was at the time in control, being one of the strongest, though most eccentric, figures in the newspaper history of the great western metropolis. Mr. Howard retired from his editorial position two years later and shortly afterward came to what is now the state of South Dakota, arriving in Redfield, Spink county, in March, 1882, and there remaining until May of the following year, when he came to Potter county and here took up one hundred and sixty acres of government land, to whose improvement he at once directed his attention, being there engaged in farming and stock raising until 1892, when he located in the county seat, Gettysburg, where he has since been established in the practice of his profession, being a man of broad and exact knowledge of the law and having long held a place of honor and priority, being practically the Nestor of the bar of the county. He is now serving his third term as state's attorney, and has proved a most discriminating and successful public prosecutor. He is held in high esteem in the community and his genial personality has gained to him a host of friends in the state of his adoption. In politics Mr. Howard is an uncompromising advocate of the principles of the Republican party, while fraternally he manifests his abiding interest in his old comrades in arms by retaining membership in Meade Post, No. 32, Grand Army of the Republic, of which he is a prominent and honored comrade. He has attended the national encampments of this noble organization in Chicago, Washington City and San Francisco, and on each occasion has met with most grateful reunions and fraternal experiences. Mr. Howard has never been married, and has never belonged to any other fraternal organization.

JOHN G. HOARD, an honored representative of one of the early pioneer families of Union county, is a native of the state of New York, having been born in St. Lawrence county, on the 31st of December, 1855, and being a son of Alonzo and Keym (Small) Hoard, the former of whom was born in Vermont and the latter in New York state. The paternal grandfather of the subject came to America from England, settling in Vermont. The original orthography of the name was Hoar, and he changed the same to its present form. In 1856 when the subject of this review was an infant of six months, his parents removed to the west and located in Richland county, Wisconsin, his father becoming one of the pioneer farmers of that locality. Mr. Hoard early became inured to hard work, being reared on the pioneer farm, and his early educational advantages were limited, owing to the exigencies of time and place. He conned his studies in a log schoolhouse of the primitive type, and finished his specific schooling in an old sod house in Union county, South Dakota, stating to the writer that this rude "temple of learning" bore the name of Antioch. In 1874, at the age of nineteen years, he accompanied his parents to the present state of South Dakota, the family locating in Union county, where his father became one of the pioneer farmers, as had he previously in Wisconsin. He died here in 1890, and his wife is yet living, while of their eight children seven are living. When the subject arrived in this country his cash capital was represented in the sum of twenty dollars, which he soon gave to his father, to aid in the support of the family, while his first two years' labor after coming here was similarly applied, so that he started out in life empty-handed upon attaining his legal majority. In 1874 he had entered claim to a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres, in Prairie township. By industry, energy and good management he made every effort count, and soon the star of prosperity shone upon him, and he has now a fine landed estate of five hundred and sixty acres, and a conservative estimate of the value of his various holdings would approximate forty-five thousand dollars. In 1886 he left the farm and took up his residence in the village of Alcester, where he engaged in the buying and shipping of live stock and grain, while for four years he also conducted a general store in the village. Mr. Hoard is a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, but has never sought the honors or emoluments of public office. He and his wife are valued members of the Congregational church in their home town.

On the 10th day of March, 1879, was solemnized the marriage of John G. Hoard to Miss Adaline Disbrow, who was born in Rosendale, Fond du Lac county, Wisconsin, on the 19th of January, 1862, being a daughter of M. L. and Hannah (Scofield) Disbrow, who were numbered among the pioneers of Union county, South Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Hoard have six children, all of whom remain at the parental home except the eldest, Marjory E., who is now the wife of T. T. Sullivan, of Chicago, Illinois. The others are John S., Edna L., Ethel A., Gladys A. and Ralph D.

JOHN L. HARRIS, M. D., well-known physician and surgeon, of Webster, Day county, South Dakota, was born at Battle Creek, Calhoun county, Michigan, on January 3, 1849, the son of James M. and Eliza (Cosad) Harris, both natives of New York state. Both families were founded in America in colonial times, and one of the Doctor's ancestors served as a soldier in the Continental army. Three of his uncles served in the war of 1812. The father of the subject first removed from New York to Michigan in 1841, and was a pioneer of Calhoun county. He came to South Dakota in 1880, but in 1898 returned east to Chicago, in which city he died in 1903.

in his eightieth year. The mother died in 1849. Doctor Harris passed through the common schools of Battle Creek, and then attended Olivet College, at Olivet, Michigan. He began reading medicine in 1870, and subsequently he took a course of lectures at Chicago. In 1873 he began the practice at Eastport, Michigan. In 1874 he entered Hahnemann Homeopathic Medical College, Chicago, where he was graduated in the class of 1875. The Doctor then resumed his practice at Eastport, but after a year's time he located at Ovid, Michigan, where he practiced until 1877, and then removed to Roanoke, Indiana. In the spring of 1880 he came to South Dakota (then a territory) and began practicing in Brown's Valley, Minnesota, but having his residence in Roberts county, South Dakota. In June, 1881, the Doctor located at Webster, where he was the pioneer physician. Dr. Harris became a member of the state board of health in 1886, and was chosen secretary of the board in 1887, and president in 1888. In the fall of 1890 Dr. Harris took his family to Chicago and spent the winter in that city, during which time he attended the College of Physicians and Surgeons, receiving his degree from the same. The Doctor is a graduate of both schools of medicine, but has not practiced homeopathy since 1877.

In March, 1875, Dr. Harris married Miss Sarah J. Buckley, who was born in New Brunswick, Canada, and to their union a son and daughter have been born as follows: Lyle, who married Rev. Donald McLean, and Rex W., a law student in the University of Minnesota.

FRED J. CROSS is a native of the state of New York, born at Cape Vincent, Jefferson county, on August 30, 1835. His father was a merchant at Cape Vincent, and during his childhood the family moved to the wilds of Ohio, locating about thirty-five miles south of Cleveland. The whole surrounding country was then a dense forest, and life in its midst entailed all the privations, hardships and dangers of the frontier. It was in the scenes and experiences of such a life that the son grew to manhood and received the only schooling available under the primitive conditions of the time and locality. In 1853, at the age of eighteen, he left the paternal roof-tree and moved westward to Stephenson county, Illinois, where he learned his trade as a tinner and worked at it until 1868. Then with two other men he came to the territory of Dakota, making the journey with ox-teams. They settled in Clay county, and taking up land engaged in farming. There were but few settlers in that part of the country then, and the experiences of his childhood and youth in Ohio were repeated in this western world in his young manhood. The towns of Yankton and Vermillion were merely outfitting points, and without any of the advantages of advanced civilization. He continued farming in Clay county until 1872, then went to Sioux Falls and opened a hardware store in partnership with N. E. Phillips, which he conducted successfully until 1874. His health then failing, he was obliged to sell his business and for a time measurably relinquished all active pursuits. In 1868 he was elected to the territorial legislature, but as there was no session owing to a misinterpretation of the law, he was re-elected in 1870. In the ensuing session the first memorial to congress to divide the territory into North and South Dakota was framed and signed by the members. In 1874 he was elected emigration commissioner and superintendent of the territory, and in 1876 he was again chosen to this important office. He served until the following spring, when he came to Custer as register of deeds for the county by appointment of the governor. Soon after his arrival in April the county seat was changed to Hayward and he removed to that town. He accepted the office of register because it was impossible at the time to get another suitable man who had been a resident of the state a year. When he wished to resign the county refused to let him, but he forced it to before the county seat was changed back to Custer. While making Hayward his home he came into the neighborhood of Keystone and located mining property on which he is now living. In those days Harney was a thriving mining camp and drew all comers to its promising fields. Mr. Cross was among the first prospectors to come into the Keystone region and take up claims, and is therefore the pioneer of this section. In 1878 he settled on his claim and here he has since made his home. In 1880 he was elected to the legislature from Pennington county on the Republican ticket, and in the session which followed he was prominent and useful in securing the passage of serviceable legislation, especially in reference to the stock industry. He was elected county commissioner in 1886 and served one term. In 1897 he was again elected to this office and he has held it continuously since that time. He is a firm and faithful Republican in politics, and to the aid of his party he has on all occasions brought wise counsel and efficient service. He owns many valuable mining properties and others of considerable worth here and elsewhere, and no citizen of the state has a higher or more firmly fixed place in the public regard and good will.

LOUIS EVERLY, of Keystone, is a native of Indiana, born in Vermilion county on May 1, 1845. His father was a farmer and in 1852 the family moved to Cass county, Iowa, which was a new and almost wholly undeveloped country, and they found themselves in the midst of the hard conditions incident to the most ultra pioneer life. The son grew to the age of seventeen there, and in 1862 moved with his parents to Boulder, Colorado, where the father acquired mines in which he and Louis worked. In the spring of 1876 the young man came to the Black Hills, from Franklin county, Nebraska, arriving at Custer in April. From there as captain he led a company of seventy-two men to Bear gulch, traveling by way of Cold Springs. On the trip two of the men strolled away from the train and were killed by Indians. Mr. Everly remained in Bear gulch about six weeks prospecting, then went to what is now Deadwood, although at that time there was no such place. Going into the gulch he located what is known as the Everly Addition to the town of Elizabeth, all being now a part of Deadwood. He plotted his land and sold it in town lots in the fall of 1876, and soon afterward returned to Nebraska for his family and in the spring of 1877 brought them to this state and settled them at Harney, where he occupied himself in prospecting and mining. He has sold many claims there for both gold and tin mines, and has also worked some from which he has taken thousands of dollars; and he still owns a number which show great promise. He is still living on the land on which he settled in June, 1877, which in the intervening years he has greatly improved and brought to a high state of cultivation, irrigating it at considerable expense and devoting a large part of it to the production of small fruits, of which he produces the largest volume and finest varieties in the Hills. One of the oldest prospectors left in this section, he is also one of the few who have in their declining years the means to make the residue of life easy, and what he has is the result of his own industry and thrift. In politics he has always been an unwavering and active Democrat, and in public and local affairs has never failed to do his part cheerfully toward the promotion of the best interests of the community.

On August 22, 1864, Mr. Everly was married at Boulder, Colorado, to Miss Jennie Downen, a native of Illinois. They have had five children, Edna, Milton, Joseph D. (who was killed in the Holy Terror mine on November 6, 1899, at the age of twenty-six years), Catherine and Effie.

THOMAS C. BLAIR, of Keystone, is a native of Nova Scotia, born on June 5, 1854, and the son of Duncan B. and Mary (McLean) Blair, who were born and reared in Scotland. The father was a Presbyterian clergyman at Pictou, Nova Scotia, and there the son grew to manhood and received his education. When he was sixteen years of age he went into a mercantile house as a salesman and bookkeeper, continuing so employed until the spring of 1879, when he started for the Black Hills. After a long drawn-out and tedious journey he reached Deadwood in July of that year and soon afterward removed to Terry, where he worked in the mines until the spring of 1880. He then located at Rockerville and engaged in placer mining for a year, after which he took up his residence at Keystone as it is now, and helped to construct the Harney hydraulic flume, which was then building. Since then he has been continuously occupied in prospecting and mining in this section, and has discovered several famous mines. He was one of the locators of the old Keystone mine, his partners in this being William B. Franklin and Jacob S. Reed. They located the mine in 1890 and sold it to the Keystone Mining Company in 1892. That same year the town of Keystone was started, Mr. Blair being one of its founders, owning a considerable portion of the land on which it is built. He is also one of the original locators of the Holy Terror mine, William Franklin, J. A. Fayel and A. L. Ausbury being associated with him in this. They located this property in 1894 and before the end of the year they built a five-stamp mill on it, which they operated until May, 1895, when they sold the whole property to eastern capitalists who formed and incorporated the Holy Terror Mining Company, which has since then absorbed all the Keystone properties. From that time to the present Mr. Blair has been prospecting most of the time and has located several good claims. He is a zealous Freemason, being one of the founders and a charter member of the lodge at Keystone.

On January 30, 1884, at Rapid City, Mr. Blair was united in marriage with Miss Anna L. Reed, a native of Pennsylvania, who died on May 17, 1896, leaving four children, Etta B., Alice, Grace and Mary S.

CARL BRAATZ was born in Prussia March 23, 1851, and is the third of a family of seven children born to Carl and Minnie (Cols) Braatz. These parents were also natives of Prussia and never left the fatherland, both having died near the place where they were born and reared. The following are the names of their children, in order of birth: William, a farmer of Winona county, Minnesota; Amelia, deceased; Carl, the subject of this sketch; August, a resident of Minnesota; Robert, Fred and Bertha, who remain in Germany.

Carl Braatz was reared in his native land and grew to maturity on his father's farm, receiving a good education in the public schools. He early became inured to honest toil and while still a mere youth could perform a man's duty at almost any kind of manual labor, in consequence of which he was able to care for himself when thrown upon his own resources. Thinking to better his condition in America, whither so many of his countrymen had preceded him, Mr. Braatz, in 1867, came to the United States and spent the ensuing three years in Winona county, Minnesota, where he turned his hands to various employments, devoting especial attention to agricultural pursuits. At the expiration of that time he engaged in steamboating, in which capacity he plied various rivers in the west and south, and to this line of work and to railroading he devoted the greater part of six years. Severing his connection with his employers in 1878, he went to Hutchinson, South Dakota, where he took up a quarter section of land which he at once proceeded to improve and on which he lived for a period of sixteen years. Disposing of his original homestead in 1894, he purchased his present place and at this time he owns a fine farm, the greater part of which has been improved by his own labor and from which he realizes every year a liberal income. Like all progressive tillers of the soil in this state, he gives considerable attention to live stock, raising fine cattle, horses and hogs, and from this source no little of his prosperity has been derived. Mr. Braatz is in independent circumstances and has succeeded in accumulating a sufficiency of this world's goods to render useless every anxiety for the future. He has held various local offices, though by no means an aspirant for public honors, and in politics votes the Democratic ticket.

The domestic life of Mr. Braatz dates from September 13, 1879, at which time he contracted a matrimonial alliance with Miss Sarah M. Stonebrake, who was born January 19, 1860. The result of this union has been the birth of the following children: Millie, born May 24, 1880; George, July 30, 1881; Ferd, October 11, 1882; Hattie, February 9, 1884; Seymour, July 15, 1885; Eliza, December 22, 1887; Isaac, July 25, 1890; Bertha, January 9, 1897; John, June 14, 1900.

HENRY C. ASH, of Meade county, is a native of Allegany county, Maryland, and was born on Christmas day, 1827. He remained under the paternal roof in his native state until he reached the age of eleven, then moved with his parents to Tippecanoe county, Indiana, where the family engaged in farming in which he assisted, attending a little country school near the homestead in the winter months, thus supplementing in a small way the slender educational facilities he had enjoyed in his former home. In a short time he entered actively on farm work in connection with his father, remaining so occupied until the death of the latter, when the son was but sixteen years old. Mr. Ash and his brother conducted the farm for a number of years under the supervision of their step-mother, then divided their interests and he went to White county and began farming on his own account, uniting stock raising to his other work. He developed a fine farm and built himself a comfortable residence, making his property one of the most desirable rural homes of the section in which it was located. In 1856, believing there were better opportunities for thrift and enterprise in the farther west, he sold his Indiana home and came to Sioux City, arriving at that place on May 26th. The town then consisted of a few tents and shacks and contained only one house with a shingle roof. On July 4th he opened the first hotel ever conducted in the town and continued to conduct it until the fall of 1859, the building being built of logs. At the time last mentioned he moved his family to Dakota, arriving at Yankton on Christmas eve. There he built the fourth house in the town, a log structure with a dirt roof and no floor but the earth, and here he again engaged in the hotel business, this being the second frontier town in which he ministered to the wants of the traveling public, and this enterprise being practically the first hotel within the present limits of the state. He continued in active control of it until 1876, when he sold it and went to the Black Hills, whither he had been ordered as United States deputy marshal, an office he had held continuously since 1862. His outfit was the first to cross the Missouri on the way to the Hills, and the party was obliged to make its own trail through the wilderness from the Missouri to Deadwood. They arrived at what is now Rapid City on March 25th and then pushed on to Deadwood. Mr. Ash made a number of trips back and forth over this route in his official capacity, taking away the first prisoner ever taken out of Custer county, a man whom he had arrested for selling whiskey without a license. In 1877 he moved his family to Deadwood, and while on the passage up the Missouri the boat on which they were traveling caught fire and they lost all their possessions aboard of her. The climate at their new home not agreeing with Mrs. Ash, she returned to Yankton, but he remained in the territory and in August settled at Sturgis. The town was staked out on August 7th, and the next day he located on his present site, having taken up one hundred and sixty acres of land. Of this he still owns forty acres, but has sold the rest in town lots, the depot and St. Martin's Academy having been built on land which was originally in his farm. He built a log house on his tract and in the fall of 1878 his family joined him there. He engaged in the real-estate business and found it profitable. Sturgis was a thriving town in those days and there was ready sale for land in the vicinity. He resigned as deputy marshal in the fall of 1878 and the next fall was elected justice of the peace, an office to which he was continuously re-elected for a period of seven years. While living at Yankton Mr. Ash represented Yankton county in the territorial legislature, serving two terms in that capacity. In 1894 his residence was destroyed by fire and he at once began the erection of a fine stone dwelling. The facilities for building were not first class and a long time was consumed in building this house, but when it was completed it rewarded his patience and efforts, being the best residence in the town and beautifully located on the brow of a small hill about half a mile from the center of the place commanding a view of a wide extent of the surrounding country. It is in colonial style with a wide veranda around it, and is in the midst of a fruitful orchard and garden. The house is elegantly finished and furnished throughout, and the place is one of the finest homes in the west. Mr. Ash belongs to the Masonic order, with membership in the lodge at Sturgis. In 1863, as a charter member, he helped to organize St. John's Lodge, No. 1, at Yankton, the first Masonic body in the state, and he is one of its two surviving charter members.

On March 22, 1851, at Mount Jackson, White county, Indiana, Mr. Ash was married to Miss Mary Reynolds, a native of Ohio. They have five children, Ben C., Julia (Mrs. Bates), Harry C., William B. and Elizabeth (Mrs. Eccles).

HON. THOMAS M. GODDARD, commandant of the Soldiers' Home at Hot Springs, also attorney-at-law and ex-county judge, was born on a farm near Troy, Iowa, November 24, 1846, and received his preliminary education in the schools of his native place. He was reared to agricultural pursuits and at the breaking out of the great Civil war, when a youth of sixteen, enlisted in Company E, Third Iowa Cavalry, with which he served until the close of the struggle, taking part in a number of campaigns and noted battles and earning an honorable record as a brave and gallant soldier. Returning to Iowa after his discharge, Mr. Goddard entered the Troy Academy and after completing the prescribed course of that institution took up the study of law in the State University, supporting himself while in attendance by devoting his vacations to teaching and various kinds of manual labor. In due time he received his diploma from the university and immediately thereafter opened a law office in Centerville, Iowa, where he practiced from 1874 until 1883. In the latter year he came to South Dakota, and took up a tract of land near Shiloh, on which he has since made his home, the meanwhile attending to his law practice in the courts of Sully county, also devoting considerable attention to stock raising.

In 1887 Mr. Goddard was elected, on the Republican ticket, district attorney, which position he held for three years, when he resigned to accept the county judgeship, having been chosen to the latter office in 1889. His career on the bench, which included three consecutive terms, was eminently creditable both to himself and to the county, and he retired from this with the commendation and good will of the people, irrespective of party affiliation. In the fall of 1896 Mr. Goddard was further honored by being elected to represent Sully and Hyde counties in the legislature, in which body he served by successive re-elections from the new district comprising Sully, Hyde and Hughes counties four terms, and in the deliberations of which he took an active and influential part, being recognized as one of the Republican leaders of the house.

Mr. Goddard was chairman of the first judicial convention of the sixth judicial circuit, and as such wielded a decided influence in shaping the policy and controlling the action of the assemblage. He has long enjoyed distinctive precedence as a leader of the Republican party in his county and district, but few conventions have been held in which he has not appeared as a potent factor and he has also been active in state and national politics, being not only a skillful organizer, but a most effective and successful campaigner.

In the month of April, 1903, Mr. Goddard was appointed commandant of the Soldiers' Home at Hot Springs, the duties of which responsible and exacting position he is now discharging in an able and satisfactory manner. As a lawyer, Mr. Goddard is easily the peer of any of his professional associates in the central part of the state, and his official career demonstrates his ability to fill worthily positions of honor and trust.

Mr. Goddard has a family of children whose names are as follows: Io, Goddard, Sim, Jim, Dick, Guy and Ray. His family was represented in the late Spanish-American war by two of his sons, who were about the first to respond to their country's call in this part of the state. One of these sons, Sim, was a member of Company E, Grigsby's famous rough riders. This regiment only got to Chattanooga, Georgia. Jim, who joined Company A, of the First South Dakota Infantry, accompanied his command to Sioux Falls, South Dakota, where he died.

ELI B. WIXSON.—Among those sterling citizens of South Dakota who have lived up to the full tension of the strenuous life on the frontier and who have likewise contributed in a significant degree to the development and up-building of the great and prosperous commonwealth, stands the subject of this memoir, than whom there are few to be found who have been longer resident of what is now the state of South Dakota, since he took up his abode here forty-five years ago. Mr. Wixson may be said with all consistency to be the founder of the town of Elk Point, the official center of Union county. He still resides in Elk Point and no citizen of the county is held in higher estimation than is this sturdy pioneer of pioneers.

Eli B. Wixson was born in Wayne, Steuben county, New York, on the 6th of May, 1833, a son of Daniel and Deborah (Conklin) Wixson, the former of whom was of English lineage and the latter of German, both families having been early established in America. The subject was reared to manhood on the homestead farm, securing his early educational training in the common schools of the locality and remaining on the parental home until he had attained his legal majority. He thereafter attended for a time the academy at Dundee, New York, and shortly after leaving this institution he started for what was then considered the far west, this action being born of a spirit of adventure and a desire to discover what fortune had in store for him. He arrived in Sioux City, Iowa, in the month of May, 1856, the place being at that time a mere village of straggling order, and in 1859 he came into Dakota territory and pre-empted land in Union county, the southern portion of the town of Elk Point being located on this tract. He built the first house in the town, laying the foundation on the 22d of July, 1859. The domicile was of most primitive description, being constructed of logs and equipped with a dirt roof. Mr. Wixson located on his claim and devoted his attention to farming for several years, being one of the very first settlers in what is now a well-populated and prosperous section of the state. He was proprietor of the first hotel in Elk Point, conducting the same for a number of years, while he later erected and conducted what is now known as the Tremont House.

In 1861 Mr. Wixson enlisted in Company B, First Dakota Cavalry, being mustered in at Sioux City, Iowa, and he was in active service on the frontier in various Indian campaigns, having been for some time under command of General Sully and continuing in the service until 1865, when his company was mustered out, at Sioux City. He held the office of commissary sergeant during the entire period of his service and was a participant in many exciting and hazardous engagements with the hostile savages.

In politics the subject gives an unqualified support to the Democratic party, and he has been prominently concerned in public affairs of a local nature. He served for one term as mayor of Elk Point and was for many years a member of the town council and the school board. In 1871-72 he was elected register of deeds of Union county, being the fourth incumbent of this office, and he also held the position of county commissioner for several years, ever manifesting a lively interest in the welfare and development of his home town, county and state and evincing this interest in a practical and tangible way. In 1866 he was elected to and served with honor in the territorial legislature as a member from Union county. He is the owner of valuable realty in Elk Point, being one of its most substantial and prosperous citizens. At the time when preparation was being made for the erection of the new court house

ELI B. WIXSON.

Mr. Wixson gave to the county the land on which the present fine building is located, the same having been erected in 1898, and the condition on which he donated the land was that the county seat remain perpetually in Elk Point and that the land in question should be utilized for the purpose designated. To these grounds he has since given a warranty deed to the county. He also donated the land on which the Elk Point high-school building was erected, the latter being a fine structure, containing eight rooms and basement. Mr. Wixson was a charter member of the first Masonic lodge organized in Sioux City, Iowa, and is now affiliated with Elk Point Lodge, No. 3, Free and Accepted Masons, in Elk Point. He is without doubt the oldest Mason in the county at the present time. He also holds membership in Stephen A. Hurbert Post, No. 9, Grand Army of the Republic, in his home town. He was one of the organizers of the Old Settlers' Association of Union county and has been its president from the beginning.

In Elk Point, on the 30th of November, 1865, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Wixson to Mrs. Clara E. Christy (nee Cook), who was born in Onondago county, New York, on August 7, 1840. They have three sons and three daughters, concerning whom we incorporate a brief record, as follows: William M. is now engaged in a flouring mill at Hawarden, Iowa; Mary D. is the wife of George Walker, of Avon, South Dakota; Franklin B. is engaged in the elevator business in Elk Point; Eli B., Jr., is engaged in the barber business in Avon, this state; Alice May is the wife of Ren Wheeler, of Aberdeen, South Dakota; and Clara, who was the wife of William Davis, died in 1894, at the age of twenty-four years. By her former marriage Mrs. Wixson had a daughter, Lottie, who is now the wife of J. W. Steckman, of Avon, this state.

DENIS CARRIGAN, president of the First National Bank, Custer City, is a native of Canada, born in the city of Montreal, on the 31st of October, 1845. Mr. Carrigan spent his childhood and youth in his native place, receiving a good education in the schools of Montreal, and remaining there until twenty years of age, when he left home to achieve his fortune and carve out his own destiny. In 1866 he went to Omaha, Nebraska, and entered the employ of the Union Pacific Railway Company, remaining with the same until the line was constructed as far west as Sidney, Nebraska, which point was fixed upon as a terminal of a division of the road. Believing that in due time a thrifty town would spring up at this place, and seeing as he thought exceptional opportunities for business advancement, he severed his connection with the company and erected a store building on the present site of Sidney, which aside from the railroad was the first improvement in the town. Buying a stock of general merchandise, he was soon in the enjoyment of a profitable business, which continued to grow in magnitude as the population of the town increased, and in the course of a few years he found himself on the high road to prosperity.

In the spring of 1876, when the Black Hills were opened for settlement and Custer City sprang into existence, Mr. Carrigan started a branch store at the latter place, under the management of S. M. Booth, the venture proving remarkably successful. After running the latter store until 1879 he exchanged it for valuable real estate in Custer City, he meanwhile continuing his business at Sidney, which by the time indicated had grown largely in volume and earned him a fortune of no small proportions. In addition to the local trade it supplied various points in the Black Hills with merchandise, thus doing an extensive wholesale as well as a large retail business and proving profitable far beyond the original expectations of the proprietor. In connection with his mercantile interests, Mr. Carrigan also devoted considerable attention to live stock, having come into possession of a fine ranch about thirty-two miles west of Sidney, where he kept large herds of cattle, from the sale of which he realized liberal returns.

In the fall of 1880 Mr. Carrigan disposed of his mercantile and real-estate interests in Sidney and the following spring moved to Custer City, where in November of the same year he established a private bank, of which he was sole proprietor and business manager, this being the first financial institution not only in Custer City, but in the southern part of the Black Hills country. Mr. Carrigan managed the institution under the name of the Bank of Custer until 1890, in October of which year it was reorganized as the First National Bank of Custer City, he being elected president, which relation he still sustains. In addition to his position as executive head of the bank, Mr. Carrigan is also the principal stockholder and the institution under his able management has been successful from the beginning, the business at this time being large and far-reaching and second to that of few banks in the state.

Mr. Carrigan is a safe and conservative financier, familiar with every branch of the business in which he is engaged, and is well informed upon monetary questions in their relations to the varied interests of the country. In addition to banking he has done considerable in the line of real estate, owning at this time a large amount of city property, besides his ranch, in which he still has valuable live-stock interests. A staunch supporter of the Democratic party and an untiring worker for its success, he has steadily and persistently avoided partisan politics and refused to accept office, although he at one time consented to serve as county commissioner, and also acted for a number of years as school treasurer.

Mr. Carrigan is a thirty-second-degree Scottish-rite Mason, also a Knight Templar, and for a number of years has been a zealous member of this ancient and honorable fraternity. Mr. Carrigan owns a beautiful home in Custer City, the presiding genius therein being a lady of beautiful character and varied culture, to whom he was united in the bonds of holy wedlock on May 24, 1871, the ceremony having been solemnized in the city of Cheyenne, Wyoming. Mrs. Carrigan, who before her marriage bore the maiden name of Louisa McWhinnie, is a native of Illinois, but has spent the greater part of her life in the west.

JOHN N. BEACH, farmer and stock raiser, was born in Lesueur county, Minnesota, June 10, 1857. He was reared and educated in his native state, grew to the years of manhood on a farm, and on attaining his majority left home for the Black Hills, coming via Pierre to Boulder Park. He came empty-handed, and for two years worked on a milk ranch for wages, then he rented the place and conducted it during the winter of 1881. In the following spring he returned to Minnesota where he purchased a large number of cattle which he drove to the Black Hills, selling them at good prices in Sturgis, Deadwood and Rapid City.

Mr. Beach continued these trips between Minnesota and South Dakota for two years, and did a thriving business, buying and selling cattle, but in 1884 he turned his attention to mining in the tin district near Hill City, following the same until the spring of the succeeding year. On June 7, 1885, he was united in marriage to Miss Ettie M. Robinson, of Minnesota, and immediately thereafter moved to his wife's ranch on Squaw creek, four miles south of Hermosa, where he engaged in the live-stock business, raising cattle and horses, in addition to which he also bought a large number of these animals, becoming in due time one of the most extensive live-stock dealers in Custer county. Mr. Beach resided on Squaw creek until July, 1902, when he moved to his homestead on Spring creek, purchasing the same year a large tract of land adjoining, on which he has since pastured his cattle and horses, his business the meanwhile continuing to grow in magnitude, until he now ranks with the leading live-stock men of western Dakota. His ranch contains seven hundred and twenty acres of land, under irrigation, and the improvements on the same are among the best in the country, consisting of a comfortable and attractive residence and substantial out-buildings, which with the fine condition of the place in general indicate the home of a man of progress and thrift, as well as of public spirit and good taste. It is worthy of note that at one time Mr. Beach could have traded a single cow for one hundred and sixty acres of the land on which Pierre now stands. His fraternal relations are represented by the Masonic brotherhood, and the Knights of the Maccabees, belonging to the lodges at Hermosa and Black Hills Chapter, No. 25, Royal Arch Masons, at Rapid City.

Mr. and Mrs. Beach move in the best social circles of the community and are active in promoting every good work, being interested in public and private charities, and their influence has always been exercised on the right side of every moral issue. They have a family of two children whose names are Troy C. and William W.

PHILLIP M. BONNIWELL, civil engineer and merchant, also engaged in the live-stock business, was born in McCloud county, Minnesota, July 14, 1860. After obtaining a good education in the schools of his native state Mr. Bonniwell took up the study of civil engineering, in which he soon acquired a high degree of efficiency and skill, following which he was engaged in professional work in Minnesota, until the spring of 1878, when he came to South Dakota, reaching the Black Hills on June 22d of that year. Locating at Deadwood, he at once began working at his profession in the city and vicinity, and was thus engaged until 1883, when he embarked on the live-stock business on Willow creek, about twenty-five miles north of Whitewood, raising cattle in that locality during the five succeeding years. At the expiration of that time Mr. Bonniwell moved his live stock to Harding county, where he owns a large and finely situated ranch which he still manages, his success as a cattle raiser being attested by the prominent position he occupies among the leading stockmen of his part of the state.

In the fall of 1897 Mr. Bonniwell purchased of J. S. Demman the latter's large hardware store at Whitewood, and to this line of business he has since devoted much of his attention, the meanwhile looking after his cattle interests, as indicated above. In addition to a full line of hardware, he handles all kinds of agricultural implements, machinery and harness, in all of which he has an extensive and lucrative patronage, his establishment being the largest of the kind in Whitewood. Mr. Bonniwell is an experienced business man, and his career since coming west presents a series of advancements, which show him the possessor of ripe judgment and keen discrimination. Personally he enjoys a high degree of popularity, and in social as well as business circles is one of the leading men of the community. Mr. Bonniwell belongs to the Odd Fellows order and the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and in politics supports the Republican party. He was married at Hutchinson, Minnesota, November 26, 1877, to Miss Lura Rice, a native of Ohio, who has born him one child, a daughter by the name of Reva.

JOSEPH KUBLER is a native of the province of Alsace, Germany, where his birth occurred on August 23, 1854. He attended the schools of that country until his seventeenth year, after the Franco-Prussian war, when he left home and came to the United States, landing in New Orleans, thence after a short time went to Jackson, Mississippi, where he remained about two years, during which he was variously employed. From the latter place he went to St. Louis, Missouri, later to Kansas City, thence to Omaha, Nebraska, and finally, in 1873, made his way as far west as Denver, Colorado.

Shortly after reaching his objective point, he entered a newspaper office, to serve an apprenticeship at the printing business. It was while thus engaged that the Black Hills country was opened, and in the spring of 1876 he engaged with Mervick & Laughlin, who took a newspaper outfit to Custer City, to work in their office. Reaching their destination, these gentlemen while waiting for part of the material and stock of paper, issued a circular announcing to the people that their publication would appear in due time, but before the supplies arrived the gold excitement at Deadwood broke out, the effect of which was to cause a rush from Custer City, until the latter place was almost depopulated. Moving their plant to Deadwood, Messrs. Merrick & Laughlin, assisted by Mr. Kubler, issued, on June 8th of the above year, the first number of the Black Hills Pioneer, a sprightly, well-edited local sheet, devoted to the mining and other interests of the town and surrounding country, and which under the original management was regularly issued for some years thereafter. Mr. Kubler severed his connection with the paper and returning to Custer City, purchased, in partnership with A. D. Clark, a newspaper plant, that had been brought to the place some time previously, and on September 4th of the same year the first number of the Custer Chronicle was issued under the new management. After publishing the paper jointly for a period of five years, Mr. Kubler purchased his partner's share, since which time he has been sole proprietor, the Chronicle under his able editorial and business management growing steadily in public favor the meanwhile, until it is now not only one of the oldest newspapers in the Black Hills, but also one of the most successful, as well as one of the ablest and most influential local sheets in the state. Mr. Kubler has a well-equipped office, supplied with all the latest and most approved machinery and appliances, and the Chronicle is not only well edited, but is neat in its mechanical makeup and a model of typographical art, ranking in every respect with larger and much more pretentious metropolitan papers. Strongly Republican in politics and a zealous partisan, Mr. Kubler has never sought office or public position of any kind, believing that he can better promote the interests of his party through the medium of his paper than in any other way. He has attended many of the county, district and state conventions since locating in Custer City, and has wielded a strong influence in these bodies, being recognized as a safe and judicious counsellor. In May, 1900, he was appointed postmaster of Custer City, and was re-appointed in May, 1904, and has since discharged the duties of the position in a creditable and business-like manner.

Mr. Kubler is a thirty-second-degree Scottish-rite Mason, also belongs to the Mystic Shrine, and for a number of years has been a member of the blue lodge at Custer City, having served several terms as master of the same, besides holding various official positions in the other branches of the order with which he is identified; he also holds membership with the Pythian brotherhood, being one of the active workers in the lodge, which meets in the city of his residence. Mr. Kubler is one of the most enterprising men in the Black Hills, has always stood for progress and improvement and, although of foreign birth, he is intensely American in his inclination and tendencies, being a loyal supporter of the government under which he has achieved such marked prestige and success.

Mr. Kubler, in July, 1883, was united in marriage with Miss Louisa Katsch, of Germany, but at the date noted a resident of Custer City, the following children being the fruit of the union: Joseph W., William L., Carl H., Eva, Frank, Grace and Louisa.

CHARLES C. CRARY, liveryman, Custer City, was born in Lake county, Ohio, on the 6th day of August, 1845. He was reared and educated in his native state and remained at home until 1863, when he joined Battery C, First Ohio Light Artillery, with which he served until the close of the rebellion, experiencing many of the vicissitudes and fortunes of war during his period of enlistment. He was honorably discharged in June, 1865, and, returning to Ohio immediately thereafter, remained with his parents until 1867, when he went to Marshall county, Iowa, and engaged in farming. After spending the ensuing ten years in that state as a fairly prosperous tiller of the soil, Mr. Crary, in the spring of 1877, started for South Dakota, his objective point being the Black Hills, which region he reached the following June, stopping for a time at Deadwood, where he earned his livelihood by hauling logs. Later he worked for a while in the mines near that town, and then, with a party of prospectors, started for Lost Cabin, narrowly escaping from the hostile Indians on the way. After traversing a considerable part of the country and meeting with but indifferent success in his search for gold, Mr. Crary finally arrived at Bozeman, where he purchased a couple of ponies and a little later returned to the Black Hills. Reaching Cattle creek, he again began prospecting, but after spending a year and a half in that locality, part of which time was devoted to locating mining claims at Grand Junction, he went to Custer City, which place he has since made his home.

In 1884 Mr. Crary engaged in the livery business at Custer City, to which line of activity he has devoted his attention from that time to the present, meeting with flattering success in the undertaking, his barn being the largest and most complete establishment of the kind in the place. Meanwhile he was identified with another enterprise of no little moment, having, in 1890, with a friend by the name of James Clark, taken up mining claims on the present site of Sylvan Lake, and the year following a movement was set on foot by them and another party to dam a stream so as to fill a natural depression with water, thus creating one of the most beautiful little lakes to be found in any part of Dakota. This lake, which embraces an area of fifty-five acres, lies about six thousand one hundred feet above the level of the sea, and the situation is noted far and wide for beauty and romantic scenery, as well as for its pure air, equitable temperature and the remarkable healthfulness of the climate. The creating of this artificial body of water and establishing a health and pleasure resort was undertaken by Messrs. Crary, Clark and Spencer and shortly after locating their respective claims these gentlemen set about to carry their intention into effect. In due time the work of damming the water was successfully accomplished, after which the advantages of the place were extensively advertised with the result that within a comparatively brief period people from all over the country were attracted to the spot and it soon gained the reputation it has since sustained, as one of the most attractive resorts in the state. Mr. Crary erected a small cottage in 1890, which he continued to occupy of summer seasons for several years thereafter, and in 1896 he and Mr. Spencer became sole owners of the place. Two years later, however, he disposed of his interest to his partner, who is now owner and proprietor, and the resort has continued to grow in public favor until the large hotel and other places of entertainment are now taxed to their utmost capacity to accommodate the visitors that annually flock there to spend the summer seasons. Mr. Crary has made a success of all of his undertakings, has done much to promote the material welfare of Custer City, and takes an active part in municipal affairs and enjoys worthy prestige as a wide-awake business man and public-spirited citizen. He owns considerable city property, besides having valuable mining interests in the vicinity and in other parts of the Black Hills. In politics he is unswerving in his allegiance to the Republican party, being one of its standard bearers in Custer county, and he has also served the people in public capacity, having for several years held the responsible office of county commissioner.

Mr. Crary, in 1886, contracted a matrimonial alliance with Mrs. Alice (Weisner) Crary, a native of Ohio, the ceremony being solemnized in Custer City.

SEYMOUR N. FITCH, the leading dry-goods merchant of Custer City, is a native of New York, born in Rome, that state, on December 24, 1863. He was educated in the schools of the above city and there remained until his nineteenth year, when he left home to achieve his own fortune, going first to Des Moines, Iowa, where he held, during the two years following, a clerkship in a wholesale confectionery and cigar store. Resigning his position at the expiration of that time, Mr. Fitch, in the spring of 1882, came to South Dakota and after working on a ranch near Custer City about one year, became identified with the mercantile interests of the town by purchasing an interest in the dry-goods and clothing house of Bartell & Smith, succeeding the former partner in the business. Under the name of Smith & Fitch, the new firm grew rapidly in public favor and soon commanded the bulk of the trade in the lines of goods handled. The original building was a small structure, the capacity of which was in due time found entirely inadequate, accordingly a large addition was subsequently made and from the beginning a series of continued successes attended the enterprise. His partner dying in 1889, Mr. Fitch purchased the entire interest and became sole proprietor and as such enjoyed uninterrupted prosperity until October, 1901, when his establishment was almost destroyed by fire, entailing a loss conservatively estimated at twenty thousand dollars. This disaster, which would have been discouraging to the majority of men, served to stimulate the enterprising spirit of Mr. Fitch, as he immediately began rebuilding and within a comparatively short time recovered from his loss and was again on the high road to prosperity. The new building, in every respect larger and superior to the former structure, is one of the finest business houses in Custer City. It is now stocked with full lines of dry goods, clothing, gents furnishing, etc., and the business conducted within its walls exceeds in magnitude that of any similar establishment in the southwestern part of the state.

In addition to his commercial interests Mr. Fitch is also engaged quite extensively in the live-stock business, owning, in partnership with his cousin, Newton S. Tubbs, a large ranch near Edgemont, which is being devoted to sheep raising. The latter enterprise, under the efficient management of Mr. Tubbs, is successfully conducted and has proved the source of a very liberal income to both proprietors. While first of all a business man, Mr. Fitch is by no means indifferent to other matters in which his fellow citizens are interested, being a zealous Republican politician and an enthusiastic worker in local, district and state affairs. In recognition of his valuable services to his party, also by reason of his peculiar fitness for the position, he was elected some years ago treasurer of Custer county, discharging the duties of the office with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the people. He also served on the board of county commissioners and in that capacity was untiring in his efforts to inaugurate various public improvements. Fraternally Mr. Fitch is identified with the Knights of Pythias, belonging to the lodge in Custer City.

On January 9, 1890, in Custer City, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Fitch and Miss Helen Willis, of Springwater, New York, the fruit of the union being one daughter, Gladys M.

EDWARD STENGER was born June 5, 1858, in Douglas county, Oregon, and there spent his childhood and early youth, beginning life for himself when but sixteen years of age. Leaving the parental roof in the spring of 1874, he began trailing cattle through eastern Oregon, and after two years at that kind of work settled in Grant county, where he engaged in stock raising upon his own responsibility, in addition to which he also bought and shipped cattle and in due time built up a large and flourishing business. In 1882 he disposed of his interests in Oregon and trailed horses into Montana, going as far as Bozeman, where he located, later turning his attention to horses and sheep, in the raising of which his efforts were crowned with a large measure of success.

Mr. Stenger, in the early part of 1884, started for the Black Hills, arriving at Spearfish on the 3d day of July following, but not being able to find a favorable location on Battle Creek, he took up a pre-emption about eighteen miles from Rapid City, to which he brought a large number of horses the same year. The following spring he bought a ranch on Battle creek and for two years thereafter raised horses on quite an extensive scale, adding cattle in 1886, both of which lines of industry he still pursues. In 1887 he began sheep raising in connection with his other business and with characteristic energy has gradually extended the scope of his operations until he is now regarded the leading live-stock man in his part of the country. He purchased from time to time extensive tracts of land adjoining his ranch, and at this writing owns on Battle creek about seven thousand acres, two thousand of which are irrigated, a large part of the latter being in cultivation. In addition to his live-stock interests, he devotes considerable attention to farming, raising large crops of grain and hay which he feeds to his cattle, besides marketing each year the vegetable crops which his land produces in abundance. Mr. Stenger's ranch is not only the largest on Battle creek, but is also one of the best improved and most valuable; he spends the summer months on the place, giving personal attention to its management, but of winter seasons lives in Hermosa, where he owns a beautiful and well-appointed residence, one of the finest homes in the city.

In 1886 Mr. Stenger, at the urgent solicitation of many of his friends, erected a hotel in Hermosa, which he ran for some time, under the name of the Battle River House, but which is now known as the Glendale Hotel. After acting for some time in the capacity of "mine host," he retired from the hotel business and rented the property, later disposing of it at a liberal margin on the investment. Since then he has given all of his time and attention to his live-stock business. In matters of business, Mr. Stenger is energetic, wide-awake and progressive, and he occupies no small place in public esteem. He holds membership with the Masonic fraternity, Modern Woodmen of America and Ancient Order of United Workmen, and in politics supports the Democratic party.

Mr. Stenger, on April 17, 1887, contracted a matrimonial alliance with Miss Amanda Thomas, of Missouri, the marriage being blessed with two daughters, Eva and Edna.

JOSEPH E. PILCHER, proprietor of the largest drug house in Custer, was born in Racine, Ohio, on August 18, 1851. He attended the public schools of his native county until about sixteen years of age, when he went to Indiana, and for some time thereafter worked on a farm in Jefferson county, that state, later taking a commercial course in an Indianapolis business college. In 1878 Mr. Pilcher went to Colorado, where he entered the employ of the Santa Fe Railroad Company, which was then constructing one of its lines through that country, and after working there for some time he assisted in building branches of the same system in New Mexico and Arizona, remaining with the company in different capacities until 1880. In the latter year he made a business trip to Europe, returning in the fall of 1881, and immediately thereafter came to the Black Hills, locating at Deadwood, where he engaged in the hotel business, conducting the same until the spring of 1883, when he disposed of his interests in that place and changed his abode to Custer City. After devoting his attention for the greater part of a year to mica and gold mining, Mr. Pilcher, in the spring of 1884, accepted a position with the Adams Express Company, being appointed to a local agency in Nebraska, but later he was promoted traveling auditor of the company, and in that capacity visited various parts of New Mexico, and other western states and territories, discharging his duties in an able and business-like manner until his resignation, in August, 1886. After severing his connection with the above company, Mr. Pilcher returned to Custer City and, entering politics, was elected the same year register of deeds for Custer county, which position he held until 1891, proving an exceedingly efficient and popular official; meanwhile, in the fall of 1890, he was appointed assistant secretary of the state senate, in which capacity he served two terms, and in 1893 was sent to Chicago in charge of the Black Hills mineral exhibit at the World's Fair. Returning to Custer City, he resumed mining in various parts of the Hills, but not meeting with the results anticipated, he discontinued that line of work three years later and purchased a drug store, to which business he has since devoted his attention, building up a large and lucrative patronage.

Mr. Pilcher is still interested in mining and owns considerable mineral property in the Black Hills, some of which is quite valuable and from which he reasonably hopes to realize a fortune. As an authority in all matters relating to the mining industry, he is frequently consulted by experts and others, and in 1898 he had charge of the large mineral exhibit of the Black Hills at Omaha. He has devoted much study to mining in all of its phases, has made many valuable researches and original investigations, being a scientific assayer, as well as a graduate of the School of Mines at Rapid City, one of the most thorough institutions of the kind in the world. Mr. Pilcher is a Republican in politics, and for a number of years has been an active party worker and an influential factor in the public affairs of his city and county. He is now second vice-president of the Black Hills Mining Men's Association, and he is also interested in various other local enterprises for the promotion of the material welfare of his adopted state. Fraternally he is a Mason, in which order he has held various official positions, and he also holds membership with the Modern Brotherhood of America and the Knights of Pythias.

Mr. Pilcher, on April 10, 1886, entered the marriage relation with Miss Jennie Thornby, of New York, and is now the father of two sons, Rufus J. and Warren T. Pilcher.

DANIEL NEWCOMB HUNT, one of the earliest settlers in Spink county, and the first mayor of the present attractive little city of Redfield, was born in Mansfield, Tioga county, Pennsylvania, on the 28th of January, 1843, and is a son of Dr. Daniel Newcomb Hunt and Miranda B. (Allen) Hunt, the former of whom was born in Rutland, Vermont, and the latter in Massachusetts. From a carefully compiled record of the genealogy of the Newcomb family the following data is obtained: Captain Charles Hunt, grandfather of the subject, married, in 1788, Jerusha Newcomb, a daughter of Lieutenant Daniel Newcomb, who was in the sixth generation in descent from Andrew Newcomb, who came from England to the New England colonies about 1650. Family tradition farther states, in connection with the maternal ancestry of the subject, that his grandfather Allen was a relative of Ethan Allen, of Ticonderoga fame, and also a descendant of Priscilla Alden, whose gentle virtues are so pleasingly recorded in the poem of "Miles Standish," by Longfellow. Both grandfathers were valiant soldiers of the Continental line during the war of the Revolution.

In 1853 Dr. Daniel N. Hunt, father of the subject, removed with his family from Pennsylvania to Reedsburg, Sauk county, Wisconsin, where he was engaged in the practice of his profession about five years, at the expiration of which time he removed to Granger, Fillmore county, Minnesota, where the mother died in 1864, at the age of fifty-five years. The father was born in 1799. He lived through every administration of the United States government until his death. In 1880 he came to Spink county, South Dakota, where he died in 1884. The subject was about ten years of age at the time of the family's removal to Wisconsin, and from 1853 to 1858 he was a student in the public schools of Reedsburg, and from 1859 to 1861 he continued his educational work in the schools at Decorah, Iowa. After the close of his service in the Civil war he entered the Eastman Business College, in the city of Chicago, where he was graduated in the spring of 1866.

On the 15th of March, 1862, Mr. Hunt enlisted as a private in Company C, Fifth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and re-enlisted as a veteran in the same company and regiment in 1864, with which he served until the close of the war, having been mustered out on the 6th of September, 1865. He was with his regiment in thirteen campaigns, five sieges and thirty-four battles and minor engagements, among which was the siege of Fort Ridgely, during the Indian massacre in Minnesota, in 1862. Mr. Hunt's name appears upon a monument erected by the state of Minnesota in commemoration of this massacre. He also holds a medal presented to him by the same state, one of which was given to each soldier present at the memorable tragedy. After receiving his honorable discharge Mr. Hunt returned to Granger, Minnesota, and thereafter was engaged in farming and teaching school in that state until April, 1879, when he came to what is now Spink county, South Dakota, being one of the first citizens of the city of Redfield, he being here when the town was founded and surveyed. Here he established himself in the real-estate business, in which line he has ever since continued operations, being one of the leading dealers in this section of the state. He was register of deeds of the county, by appointment, from 1880 to January 1, 1881, and was secretary of the first Republican convention called in the county to elect delegates to the territorial convention. He was a member of the first constitutional convention of the territory, at Sioux Falls, in 1884. In May, 1883, he was elected the first mayor of Redfield, receiving a silver dollar as his salary, the facts in the case having been engraved on the coin by order of the council, and it is needless to say that Mr. Hunt places a high valuation on this unique and historic souvenir. He has been four times re-elected to the office of mayor, having been re-elected the last time on May 1, 1904. He called and was chairman of the first school meeting held in the county, and from the early days to the present he has always been found at the front in lending his aid and influence in support of measures and enterprises tending to promote the general welfare and progress. He has given his efforts in furtherance of the cause of the Republican party, of whose principles he is a staunch advocate. He was initiated in the Masonic fraternity in 1865 and is still actively affiliated with the same. He has been identified with the Grand Army of the Republic from the time of its organization in the territory of Dakota, having held office in his post and being at the present writing quartermaster of George H. Thomas Post, No. 5, in his home city.

On the 15th of February, 1873, Mr. Hunt was married to Miss Adalynn J. Ellis, who was born in the state of Vermont, on the 2d of October, 1849, and is a descendant of the Chase family who came from England to the Massachusetts colony in the early colonial epoch. Mr. and Mrs. Hunt have three children, Arlington Chase, who was born on the 2d of January, 1877; Georgie Mae, born August 15, 1881, and Ray Nelson, born February 8, 1887.

The following story of an early trip made by Mr. Hunt is of special interest:

About the middle of March, 1881, I hired William West, now of Clifton township, and Ira Bowman, brother of the present chairman of the county board, to attempt a trip to Huron for provisions. There had been nothing received from outside since the first of January, except one small load of flour brought in February from Huron by F. H. Craig. A heavy storm followed and to get that flour from his place to Old Ashton—about eight miles—required two teams and three men three days. The flour had to be conveyed by the men from Craig's place to Belcher's ford, a distance of two miles. This flour had been largely distributed and consumed, and I engaged the two men, West and Bowman, to attempt another trip to Huron.

When knowledge that the trip was to be attempted had spread, our party was joined by the mail carrier, who had been snowed in for a month at Old Ashton, and by Cal Spencer, who afterward built the Clyde mill in 1881. I accompanied the party, which consisted of five men with four horses and one covered wagon.

The first day out from Old Ashton we made Redfield, a distance of five miles, and stopped with Mrs. Welker. The second day we made an early start and took a straight line south to the grade of the Chicago and Northwestern road, which had been thrown up in the summer of 1880, but had not been ironed, and from there followed the grade, and by night had reached the high grade just north of Hitchcock. The most difficult points were where the culverts now cross sloughs and through the cuts. These were filled level with the prairie with snow, and to cross we men would shovel and tread the snow and then give the lead team about thirty feet of chain, and when they were through to solid footing they helped drag through the other team and wagon. The second night we wintered in a snow house, dug in about ten feet of snow, over which was spread a tent cover. The night was severely cold and none were allowed to sleep in the snow house more than two hours at a time, but were made to get out and walk on the grade to keep up circulation. By the second night all but two of the party had gone snow blind so that they had to be piloted. The third day we made Huron. The Pierre branch had been ironed, and when we reached James Valley junction we took to the track and bumped over the ties, to the amusement of the few residents of Huron who had been warned of our coming by the rattle of the wagon, and who were curious to know who and what were coming and where from.

I bought all the flour I could secure in Huron, about three thousand pounds, upon which some of the citizens were disposed to put an embargo, lest they also should get short. The fourth day we spent in building a couple of snow boats, convinced by our trip down that we never could get the load back by wheels. They were made of boards about ten feet long, turned up a little at the front and bolted to a scantling frame by which to haul it, the boards serving as runners. The flour, with some other provisions and feed for the teams, made for each boat a load of about one thousand eight hundred pounds.

The fifth day we started on the return trip by way of the VanDusen ranch, which lies nearly due north from Huron. We had a compass with which to keep our direction. For the first few hours, owing to a thaw and freeze, the snow crust carried both the horses and sleds and we made good time. The snow at this time stood at least three feet deep on the level prairie. When the crust softened so that the team would break through the progress was a slow wallowing, and by night we had made the twelve miles to the ranch. Here we struck quite comfortable quarters for both men and teams.

From the ranch to Old Ashton was a distance of twenty-five miles, and for the first eighteen miles there was no trail and no shanty of any kind. This we knew to be the most critical day of the whole trip, and possibly we tried to crowd too rapidly. I had set the compass direct for Old Ashton and we began the slow wallowing, but before night it became evident that we could not make Holcomb's during daylight and so I pushed on ahead and had a light hung out on a pole at Holcomb's to guide the other boys. The horses played out so thoroughly that the boys left the loads in the big slough near Will Bingham's present residence and came in to Holcomb's for the night. On the seventh day we returned for our loads, and by noon had gotten as far as Warden's. Here I engaged Jimmie Warden, who had six yoke of cattle, to yoke up and drive them from there to the river, thus breaking a road through which our teams made fair progress. From the river we knew we had a track, and at sundown of the seventh day, which was Sunday, we reached home.

The frozen snow cut the legs of both the men and horses so severely that protection was provided for by wrapping our legs and the legs of the horses with grain sacks, and not less than one hundred grain sacks were worn to rags in the trip.

JAMES A. STEWART, postmaster of Edgemont and president of the Citizens' Bank, at the same place, is a native of Newton county, Indiana, born May 18, 1893. His father was a tiller of the soil, and to this kind of labor young Stewart was reared, his early experience on the farm being instrumental in forming industrious habits and teaching him the important lessons of independence and self-reliance. At the proper age he entered the district school and attended the same of winter seasons until the age of seventeen. While still a youth he left home and went with a brother to Furnas county, Nebraska, where the two took up land, and later he spent two years teaching in the public schools of that state. Discontinuing educational work, he served a two-years apprenticeship at the printer's trade in Arrapahoe, and after becoming an efficient workman followed his chosen calling in various parts of the west, traveling over a number of states and territories and finding employment in Denver, San Francisco and other cities and towns.

In the spring of 1895 Mr. Stewart came to South Dakota and, in partnership with Harvey Goddard, purchased the Edgemont Express, a weekly paper which had been established a number of years before under the name of the Dudley Reporter. This paper was originally started in a settlement across the river, known as Dudley, but later was moved to Edgemont, where it has since been published, being the oldest paper in the town, also one of the best edited and most influential local sheets in the county of Fall River. Mr. Stewart was identified with this publication until October, 1897, when he disposed of his interests in the office to Mr. Goddard and the same month was appointed postmaster of Edgemont, which position he still holds. In 1899 he embarked in the sheep business on the Cheyenne river, and is now regarded as one of the leaders of this important industry in western Dakota. He keeps a number of men employed to look after his extensive live-stock interests, owns large tracts of fine grazing land in various parts of the country and from this business alone derives a liberal income. In June, 1903, Mr. Stewart and George Forbes organized the Citizens' Bank, of Edgemont, the former being made president and the latter cashier. The enterprise thus far has more than realized the high expectations of the proprietors, the bank being one of the solid and popular monetary institutions of the state, and the business already is rapidly increasing. Mr. Stewart is careful and conservative as a financier and possesses executive ability of a high order. The confidence reposed in him by business men and the people in general is attested by the steady growth of the bank in public favor and although of brief duration his experience in monetary affairs has already won him an enviable reputation in financial circles. In politics he has always been an ardent Republican, and an influential member of the party. Since becoming a resident of Fall River county he has taken a prominent part in politics, serving as a delegate to nearly every county, district and state convention during the interim, and in April, 1902, he was honored by being elected mayor of Edgemont, which office he has since held; he also served several years as a member of the local school board.

Mr. Stewart has filled worthily important public trusts, and in every relation of life has been true and faithful in the discharge of his duties. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity, has held various official positions in the order and endeavors to exemplify the precepts and teachings of the same in his various relations with his fellow men.

Mr. Stewart's domestic life began in 1888, on June 19th of which year was solemnized his marriage with Miss Ada N. Witherow, of Illinois, the ceremony taking place in Afton, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart are the parents of four children, viz: Lloyd, Fern, Albert and Ada.

ISAAC BEEM, of near Vesta, Pennington county, is a native of Belmont county, Ohio, where he was born on September 27, 1849, and where he grew to the age of sixteen and was educated. In the spring of 1865, in company with his brother Joseph, a sketch of whom will be found elsewhere in this work, he moved to Jefferson county, Iowa, where he remained four years engaged in farming. In 1869 the brothers went over the Union Pacific to Fort Steele, Wyoming, and a short time afterward proceeded to Egan Canon, Nevada, where they followed mining and teaming during the winter of 1870. The next spring they drove stock to Salt Lake city, and from there went to Corinne, Utah, and engaged in freighting between that place and Helena, Montana. During the summer they worked on the telegraph line between Helena and Deer Lodge, and later were employed in ranching and mining in the vicinity of Helena. They returned to Corinne and soon after to Iowa, where they wintered. In the spring they came to Fargo, which had just been laid out and had but a few rude houses. Mr. Beem worked on the construction of the Union Pacific Railroad, then building to Bismarck. In August he went to Bismarck, and in the ensuing January bought a pony and cutter and drove down the government trail to Yankton. Disposing of the team, he joined his brother again in Iowa. In the spring they crossed the country to Bismarck, and after working a few months at the Standing Rock agency, passed the fall at Bismarck, having settled on land near the town. In 1874 they went into Canada and worked until fall on the Canadian Pacific Railroad, then in course of construction, and the winter was again spent in Iowa. Returning to Canada in the spring with a number of teams, they continued to work on the railroad until fall, when he returned to Bismarck for the winter and his brother did freighting to Miles City for the government. In the summer following Mr. Beem freighted between Bismarck and Deadwood, and the next spring returned to Iowa to buy more mules for his business, leaving a man in charge of his freighting while his brother looked after his interests at Bismarck. In the spring the brothers took a contract from the government to supply wood for Fort Assiniboine, Montana. From then until 1884 he was engaged in various occupations, freighting and grading along the line of the Northern Pacific under contract, and doing other things as opportunity offered. In 1884 he brought his brother and family with him by teams to Rapid City, and the brothers took up land on Box Elder creek, four miles apart. The brother conducted both ranches and Mr. Beem continued freighting until 1887, when he settled on his ranch and began devoting his whole time to raising stock, in which he has since been engaged. He has acquired a considerable body of land in this section and has a large acreage leased in addition. He is an uncompromising Democrat in politics and energetic in the support of his party, having influence in its councils and high standing in the community generally.

SAMUEL GRANT DEWELL, editor and publisher of the Free Press, at Pierre, was born in Shelby county, Iowa, on the 17th of April, 1864, being a son of Samuel and Harriet (Spicer) Dewell, the former of whom was a native of Ohio and the latter of the state of New York. In the agnatic line the genealogy is traced back to John Dewell, who was one of the valiant soldiers of General Lafayette, whom he accompanied from France to America at the time of the war of the Revolution. After the close of the great conflict which determined American independence he located near the city of Annapolis, Maryland, and later his descendants settled in the states of New York and Virginia, the branch of which the subject is a scion having been that which traces back to the Old Dominion. The mother of the subject was descended from Obediah Gore, who, with his brother John, was numbered among the Pilgrim fathers of New England. Samuel Dewell took up his residence in Shelby county, Iowa, in the year 1859, and there passed the residue of his life, engaged in surveying, his death occurring in 1889, while his devoted wife was summoned into eternal rest in 1897. They became the parents of eight children, of whom five are living.

Samuel G. Dewell was reared on the homestead farm in Iowa, and received his early educational training in the public schools, while at the age of twelve years he entered upon an apprenticeship at the printer's trade, in the office of the Sun, at Magnolia, Iowa. He continued to be identified with newspaper work in Iowa until 1883, when, at the age of nineteen years, he came to South Dakota, and located in Norfolk, Sully county, where he became the publisher and editor of the Norfolk Spy, in 1884. In 1887 he became the publisher of the Nonpareil, at Blunt, Hughes county, where he remained until 1887, when he came to Pierre, where he has ever since maintained his home, having been for a time an employe in the office of the Signal, and later the Free Press, of which he is now proprietor and publisher, having secured control of the property in 1890. This is one of the leading papers of the state and exercises much influence in public affairs, its political policy being uncompromisingly Republican. The statement just entered indicates, as a matter of course, the political predilections of Mr. Dewell, who is one of the active and valued workers in the ranks of the "grand old party" in the state. On the 2d of March, 1898, he entered upon the discharge of his duties as postmaster of Pierre, having received the appointment under the administration of the lamented President McKinley, while at the expiration of his term, in 1902, he was re-appointed under President Roosevelt, so that he is in tenure of the office at the time of this writing.

Mr. Dewell has been identified with the South Dakota National Guard since 1897, having originally been a member of Company A, First Infantry, with which he started for the Philippines in 1898, but was rejected at the time the regiment was mustered into the United States service. He is at the present time quartermaster of the Second Regiment, South Dakota National Guard. Fraternally he is affiliated with Pierre Lodge, No. 27, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Pierre Chapter, No. 22, Royal Arch Masons; Capital City Chapter, No. 39, Order of the Eastern Star; and also with several mutual benefit associations.

On the 3d of August, 1890, Mr. Dewell was united in marriage to Miss Alice Geltz, who was born in Port Hope, Huron county, Michigan, on the 14th of March, 1871, being a daughter of John and Julia (Moran) Geltz, who are now residents of Pierre. Of the three sons of Mr. and Mrs. Dewell we enter the following record: Perley Geltz, who was born July 11, 1891, died on the 14th of January, 1903; Paul Samuel was born December 14, 1893; and Julian, April 3, 1900.

GEORGE W. KRUM, a representative citizen and successful business man of Claremont, Brown county, is a native of the Wolverine state, having been born in Kent county, Michigan, on the 2d of August, 1844, and being a son of Abraham and Theresa (Holmes) Krum, both of whom were born in New York state, the former being of Holland Dutch extraction and the latter of English. Abraham Krum was born in Ulster county, New York, and removed to Kent county, Michigan, in 1837, being one of the very early settlers in that now populous and opulent section of the state, Grand Rapids, the second city of the commonwealth, being located in the county mentioned. In 1838 he returned to New York, where he married Miss Theresa Holmes, who returned with him to the pioneer farm in the midst of the primeval forests of Michigan, where they passed the remainder of their long and useful lives, retaining the uniform esteem of all who knew them. The subject was reared to the sturdy discipline of the homestead farm, in Vergennes township, and early began to aid in its work, while his educational advantages as a boy were those afforded in the common schools, while later he attended the high school in the city of Grand Rapids. He continued to reside on the old homestead until 1874, when he went to the south, where he remained six years, passing the major portion of this time in Texas and the Indian territory. He then, in 1881, came to what is now Brown county, South Dakota, and settled on a homestead claim three miles west of Groton, where he developed a good farm and continued to be engaged in farming and stock growing until the autumn of 1886, when he located in Claremont and opened a real-estate and loan office. He has built up a most prosperous enterprise, is recognized as an able and straightforward business man, and through his well-directed operations has done much to forward the development of the section of the state in which he conducts his enterprise, while he commands the unequivocal confidence and esteem of all who know him. He still owns his original homestead, besides other valuable properties in the county. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Prohibition party and fraternally he is a member of Cement Lodge, No. 103, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, in Claremont, and of Aberdeen Chapter, No. 12, Royal Arch Masons, in Aberdeen.

PHILIP H. HERTHER, of Hecla, Brown county, where he is now living practically retired, is a native of Germany, having been born in Rheinbauer, in the year 1835, and being a son of Philip Herther, Sr., who came with his family to America when the subject was about two years of age, settling about twenty-five miles west of the city of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and became one of the pioneers of the Badger state, where he cleared and improved a farm and became a substantial citizen. The subject of this review purchased a farm adjacent to that of his father, and after a few years on this farm Mr. Herther disposed of the property and purchased a farm near Lomira, Dodge county, a few miles distant from the town of Fond du Lac, and there he continued to be actively engaged in agricultural pursuits for nearly a score of years. In 1885 he sold his farm and came to South Dakota, at the time when the line of railroad was being completed from Aberdeen to Oakes. He passed two months on a farm twelve miles west of Hecla, and then came to this village as one of its first settlers, where he ran a restaurant for about six months and shortly after that opened a hardware store, thus becoming one of the first merchants in the town, and with the passing of the years he built up an excellent trade, his integrity and fair dealing gaining him the confidence and respect of the community. He continued to be actively identified with this enterprise until 1903, when he sold the business to his sons, Fred W. and Philip, Jr., the former of whom had been previously associated with him in the enterprise. They have since continued the business under the firm name of the Hecla Mercantile Company and are maintaining the high standard set by their honored father. The subject and his wife are members of the Lutheran church.

On the 12th of December, 1859, Mr. Herther was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Spietz, who was born in Germany and whose parents were numbered among the pioneers of Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Herther have ten children, namely Andrew, Henry, Peter, John, George, Philip, Fred, Jacob, Cony and Kate.

ISAAC S. CRAMER has been a resident of South Dakota since the spring of 1881, and during all but a few months of the time has lived on the ranch which is now his home. He was born on April 19, 1858, in Indiana county, Pennsylvania, where he remained until he reached the age of twenty and received a district education. In the spring of 1878 he moved to Cowley county, Kansas, and occupied himself in farming, remaining there until the spring of 1881. He then came to Rapid City, arriving there in April of that year, and soon afterward took up the ranch on which he now resides and which has ever since been his home. It is pleasantly located on Rapid creek, ten miles from Rapid City, and through extensive and judicious irrigation and careful husbandry has been made one of the most desirable properties on the creek. Here he has been profitably engaged in the stock industry and farming his land which yields large crops of hay and other products. He also has a fine orchard of choice fruit which is very productive and profitable. He has been successful and prosperous in his business and is one of the leading men engaged in it in this part of the state. He is a progressive and public-spirited man in reference to the general welfare of the community, always at the front in every commendable undertaking involving this, and in politics is an ardent and active Republican, but he has never accepted public office of any kind.

On January 24, 1889, Mr. Cramer was married, at Rapid City, to Miss Ora L. Barnes, a native of Iowa. They have four children, Florence, William L., Francis E. and James A. Mr. Cramer belongs to the order of Modern Woodmen of America, with membership in the camp at Rapid City.

MAJ. IRA A. HATCH, at the present time incumbent of the office of United States Indian agent at the Cheyenne River agency, South Dakota, was born near Fort Atkinson, Jefferson county, Wisconsin, on the 20th of May, 1855, and is a son of Columbus Hatch, who was one of the pioneers of that state, having removed thither from Pennsylvania in 1848 and having been one of the successful and influential farmers of the county mentioned. He was for many years judge of the Campbell county court, at Mound City, this state. In 1861 he enlisted as a member of Company K, Thirty-third Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, with which he proceeded to the front, seeing much active service, as he remained with this regiment until the close of the war. He was with General Sherman in the memorable march from Atlanta to the sea and took part in many of the more important battles of the great civil conflict. After the close of his military career he located in Crawford county, Pennsylvania, where he was engaged in farming until 1886, when he came to South Dakota and located in Campbell county. Of the six children in the family, the subject of this review was the second in order of birth. Judge Hatch died May 12, 1904, at his home in Campbell county, having enjoyed his seventy-eighth birthday.

Major Hatch secured his early educational discipline in the common schools of Pennsylvania, later continued his studies in the normal school at Edinboro, that state, and supplemented this by a course in Allegheny College, at Meadville. Thereafter he was for two years employed in the office of the chief engineer of the Erie Railroad, and in 1879 joined in the stampede to the mining district near Leadville, Colorado, remaining for six years in the Gunnison district of that state, where he gave his attention to lumbering and mining. He was one of the promoters and founders of the town of Grand Junction, in that section, which has turned out to be one of the best in the state for the raising of fruit and other products. He served as deputy sheriff in the Gunnison district during the pioneer days when lawlessness was rife, and in the connection it may be noted that he arrested George Howard, one of the most notorious desperadoes and cutthroats of the west at that time. The Major was leading his posse and had secured the drop on Howard, who fired two shots at him ere he finally secured him, the United States marshal having been in pursuit of the outlaw for some time. Howard was killed, the day after his capture, by a deputy United States marshal who rode up and, not knowing that Howard was under arrest, shot him dead.

In 1885 Major Hatch came to Mound City, Campbell county, South Dakota, where he has since maintained his legal residence. In 1888 he was elected superintendent of schools of that county, retaining the incumbency until 1892, when he was elected to represent his district in the state senate, serving through the fifth general assembly. In 1897 he was appointed deputy collector of internal revenue for the northern district of the state, serving until November, 1899, when he resigned to accept his present office as United States Indian agent at the Cheyenne agency, where he has given a most able and discriminating administration of the affairs assigned to his control. In his political adherence the Major is a stalwart Republican, and fraternally is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Modern Brotherhood of America.

On the 3d of June, 1883, was celebrated the marriage of Major Hatch and Miss Emma E. Smith, the ceremony being performed in Colorado, whither the bride's parents had removed from her native state of Illinois. Major and Mrs. Hatch have eight children, Clyde, Agnes, Arthur, Cora, Scott, Dewey, Grace and Marion.

CHARLES E. LENNAN, one of the successful and highly esteemed real-estate dealers of Bowdle, Edmunds county, is a scion of stanch old colonial stock, of Scotch-Irish origin, and is himself a native of the old Pine Tree state, having been born in Belfast, Waldo county, Maine, on the 14th of December, 1848, and being a son of Ansel and Mary (Maxey) Lennan, both of whom were likewise born and reared in that noble old New England commonwealth. David Lennan, grandfather of the subject, was one of the largest owners of timber lands in Maine, where he met with heavy financial losses at the time of the Mooshead lake speculation, his loss having footed up to fully fifty thousand dollars in the connection through his endorsing security papers. The father of the subject was for many years deputy collector of customs at Belfast, Maine, was for several years a pension agent, and also devoted no little attention to the buying of raw furs, passing the last twenty years of his life in the city of Bangor, where his wife also died. The father, an old-line Democrat, wielded no little influence in political affairs in his native state and was a man of the highest integrity and honor in all the relations of life. Of his two children the subject of this review is the younger.

Charles E. Lennan secured his early educational discipline in the public schools of Maine, which he attended until he had attained the age of nineteen years. He then engaged in the ship brokerage and commission business, and later as shipper and dealer in baled hay and farm produce, at Bangor, Maine, also operating quite heavily in the same lines in New Brunswick, building up a most successful business, in which he continued for some time. From 1880 he was engaged in the wholesale and produce business in the city of Boston, Massachusetts. In the spring of 1883 he came to what is now the state of South Dakota and took up government land twelve miles northwest of the present town of Blunt, in Hughes county, returning to Boston in the autumn of 1884. There he established himself as selling agent in the wholesale hay business, with the firm of Scott & Bridge, extensive operators in the line. In the autumn of 1885 he located at Crown Point, Indiana, with the intention of shipping hay from that point to eastern markets, but one month later decided to again come to South Dakota. He invested in land at Scranton, Walworth county, and found the investment entailed a total loss. He then came to the present site of Bowdle, where he in a sense brought in the first building in the embryonic village, having originally erected said building at a point one and one-half miles southwest, and having hauled the same to the new site. In this building he established himself in the real-estate business. The years 1886 and 1887 proved hard ones in the state, and all of the real-estate dealers located on the railroad at points west of Ipswich were practically starved out by reason of lack of patronage and general business stagnation, but Mr. Lennan weathered the storm and finally found his anchorage secure. He has succeeded in building up a very prosperous business and is known as one of the leading real-estate men of this section of the state. He also makes a specialty of the extension of financial loans upon real-estate security. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Republican party and fraternally is identified with the Masonic order, in which he has received the degrees of the lodge and chapter.

On the 26th of December, 1896, Mr. Lennan was united in marriage to Miss Hortense B. Kennedy, who was born in Illinois, and reared in Kansas, of which state her foster-brother is governor at the time of this writing.

DAVID L. FAIRBANKS, one of the extensive stock growers and land owners of South Dakota, whose finely improved home ranch is located in Sully county, about twenty miles southwest of the city of Gettysburg, in Potter county, was born in Dodge Center, Minnesota, on the 11th of November, 1868, and is a son of Henry C. and Harriet Allen Fairbanks, both of whom were born in the state of New York. The Fairbanks family was established in America more than two centuries ago, and the name has been prominently identified with the annals of our national history, both in New England and divers other sections of the Union. A complete genealogical record has been compiled, touching also the allied families, and a copy of this valuable work is in possession of our subject, the data of course being too comprehensive to admit of consideration in so necessarily circumscribed a publication as this history of South Dakota. When

Henry C. Fairbanks was a child of four years his parents removed to Wisconsin in the year 1834, becoming numbered among the pioneers of that state. In 1854 he removed to Dodge county, Minnesota, where he was engaged in farming until 1883, when he located in Yankton, South Dakota, where he continued to be identified with farming and stock growing until 1898, when his cherished wife was summoned into eternal rest, and he has since resided in Edgerly, North Dakota, where he is living practically retired.

The subject was reared in Dodge Center, Minnesota, where he duly availed himself of the advantages of the public schools, and he accompanied his parents upon their removal to South Dakota, continuing to be associated with his father until he had attained his legal majority, when he initiated his independent career, being for four years in the employ of the mercantile firm of Lea & Prentice, in Vermillion, and thereafter engaging in farming and stock dealing in that locality for the ensuing seven years, meeting with distinctive success in his individual operations. He passed the next two years in Charles Mix county, running his stock on the reservation. He then came to Sully county, where he became associated with Alfred Hallam in the stock and land business, under the firm name of Stone Lake Stock Company, and here they have since continued operations with gratifying success. They raised cattle of high grade, giving preference to the Durham type and also having a considerable number of the Polled Angus and Hereford grades, usually running an average of one thousand head of cattle, while they keep an average of two hundred head of horses, principally Percherons, with a proportion of the Hambletonian line. In sheep they run an average of twenty-five hundred head, all being bred from full-blood sires, of the Rambouillet and Shropshire lines. In the home ranch are comprised eight thousand acres, and here water is supplied from a fine artesian well, sunk to a depth of fifteen hundred and ninety-five feet and flowing eighty gallons a minute, while on the place is secured a supply of natural gas adequate for light and fuel should it be deemed expedient to thus utilize the same. The buildings on the ranch are substantial and well-arranged structures, including an attractive modern residence. Twenty miles east of this place the firm have the Stone Lake ranch of about thirty-five hundred acres, with an inexhaustible supply of water available at a depth of thirteen feet, and on their ranches is raised an ample supply of fodder to provide properly for the care of stock during the winter seasons. Mr. Fairbanks is a man of progressive ideas and through his well-directed efforts has gained a position as one of the representative and prosperous stockmen of the state. In politics he exercises his franchise in the support of the principles of the Republican party, and fraternally holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On the 9th of August, 1892, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Fairbanks to Miss Gertrude Olsen, who was born in Clay county, this state, being a daughter of C. Olsen, a successful farmer and stock raiser of Vermillion, Clay county. Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks have five children, Hattie, Mabel, Ruth, and Frank and Francis, who are twins.

ALEXANDER LEANDREAUX, one of the successful stock growers of Edmunds county, comes of French lineage and is a native of the province of Quebec, Canada, his birthplace having been sixty miles east of the city of Montreal, where the family was early established. He was born in November, 1835, and will have thus passed the psalmist's span of three score years and ten by the time this history is issued from the press. but he is an excellent type of the sturdy pioneer and in appearance and actions gives slight indications of the years which rest so gently on his head. His parents passed the closing years of their lives in the state of Massachusetts. In 1852, when about seventeen years of age, Mr. Leandreaux left his native province and made his way to the Lake Superior region, where he was engaged in teaming for the ensuing three years.

In the autumn of 1855 he went to the city of New York and there embarked for California, making the trip by way of the isthmus of Panama and arriving in due course of time in San Francisco. He went to the gold fields and devoted his attention to placer mining there for three years, being successful during the major portion of the time, as it evident when we revert to the fact that he cleared sixteen thousand dollars in thirty days. In 1858 he joined the stampede to the newly discovered gold fields of the Frazer river, where, within one year, he lost nearly all he had previously accumulated. He then proceeded to Colville, Washington, at the head of the Columbia river, where he remained two years, being fairly successful in his operations. He then went to Florence City, Idaho, three hundred miles distant, remaining six months and finding his success notable for its absence. He then returned to Colville and started in the business of transporting supplies by means of pack trains of mules, continuing this enterprise four years and making the same profitable. Thereafter he was for three years in Virginia City, Montana, where gold was first discovered in that state, and he then joined in the unsuccessful stampede to the Blackfoot district, and thence, the same fall, went to the Deer Lodge valley and made his way down the Missouri river on a steamer called the "Zephyr," to Fort Rice. In the following spring he, with others, was ordered to leave, by reason of the treaty stipulations made with the Indians, the major in command of the post having about this time taken measures to also expel Father Smith, one of the missionary priests of the Catholic church. He fired his gun at the good father, and one of the Indians stepped forth and reproved the major, telling him he was a fool and trying to kill God Almighty. Mr. Leandreaux went next to Fort Sully, where he worked about five months for the post traders, Duff & Peck, assisting in the erection of their store. He then secured permission and established a wood yard on the river, and continued to operate the same until the railroad reached Pierre, having made the business a profitable one. He then engaged in the livestock business, going to Minnesota for stock and pasturing the same on the range about Fort Pierre. He next located on the Cheyenne river, where he continued in the same line of enterprise for three years, utilizing the Bad river range for the ensuing two years, and then moving his stock to the Moreau river valley, where he has since remained, running about five hundred head of cattle, principally of the Hereford breed, while he also has an average of one hundred horses, both draft and light driving. He is the owner of a fine modern residence in Evarts, and the family occupy the same during a portion of each year. Mr. Leandreux has been twice married, his first wife having been a Sioux woman, and after her death he married a half-breed French and Sioux woman. He has one son and eight daughters.

JAMES SIMPSON.—No history of the South Dakota School for Deaf Mutes can be complete without a sketch of the life of the one man who, through thick and thin, worked early and late to build up the institution. This man was the late James Simpson, virtually the founder and for twenty-three years the superintendent. He took up the work in the summer of 1880, one year after any attempt was made to educate the deaf of the then territory of Dakota, and he did not relinquish the work until the end of the twenty-fourth year of the school's existence, in June, 1903. His was a most remarkable career, the more so when one considers that Mr. Simpson was himself deaf, like the young people of the state of South Dakota who came to his school in quest of an education. Being possessed of a broad and thorough education himself and realizing the many difficulties that the deaf have to surmount in the attainment of an education, Mr. Simpson was early drawn to the cause of teaching the deaf and he expended his whole life in the work.

James Simpson was born in Milford county, Michigan, January 21, 1855, of sturdy Scotch stock. He was the youngest of a family of six children, two girls and four boys. Besides himself there were in the family two brothers who were deaf more or less. William, the second boy, was partially so, and Delos, the next youngest, was almost totally deaf. The deafness of James came on gradually and the exact cause is a mystery, though one of the physicians of the day attributed it to a throat trouble. The fact that he was losing his hearing was only fully apparent when he was about ten years old. His mother was a painstaking woman and encouraged him to use his vocal powers all the time, with the result that he was always able to speak. Being unable to hear, he came into the habit of watching the motions of the lips and in this way understood nearly all that was said to him. This accomplishment remained with him through life, and few persons, meeting and conversing with him for the first time, were aware that they were speaking to a man who could not hear a word of what was said to him. In nearly all matters of business intercourse Mr. Simpson relied on spoken words in carrying on conversations, thus facilitating matters and avoiding the tedious method of written conversation necessarily employed by those who are unable to use speech in their intercourse with the hearing people.

At the age of fourteen years, when both of his parents were dead, the subject of this sketch entered the Michigan School for the Deaf, at Flint. His brother William was acting as guardian to him and his other deaf brother, Delos. The last named, being older than James, had been attending the school at Flint for several years previous and was soon to graduate and enter the National College for the Deaf at Washington, D. C., the only institution of its kind in the world. At the Flint school James Simpson entered upon his studies with zest. He was naturally bright and absorbed learning readily. One of his ambitions was to graduate and enter the national college or one of the larger schools for the deaf in the east, to round out his education. For four years he studied hard under the tutorage of Prof. Thomas L. Brown, and made such rapid progress that he was soon in the highest class, having passed many a student who had been in the school any number of years. At the end of these four years young Simpson removed to New York state, making his home with an uncle or cousin. In the fall of the same year he entered the Fanwood School for the Deaf, in New York city. Here he again showed his propensity to outstrip the older students in the race for the head of the class. He entered the highest or academic class within three months after his entrance into the institution, and in so doing passed three or four classes of some twenty-five students each. The academic class consisted of about thirty students and was under the tutorship of Prof. Oliver D. Cooke, of whom there has seldom been an equal as a teacher of the deaf, and never as a disciplinarian. Prof. Cooke, previous to his appointment to the Fanwood school, was a teacher in the school for the deaf at Hartford, Connecticut, the original school of the kind in America, founded by Dr. Thomas Hopkins Gallaudet, whose son, Dr. Edward M. Gallaudet, is president of the National College for the Deaf. Mr. Simpson spent three years in the Fanwood school and graduated with the highest honors. He devoted himself so assiduously to his studies that in a total of seven years he had completed a course which it takes most young men from ten to fourteen years to finish. He was the valedictorian of his class, and delivered a masterly address at the graduating exercises, and received, with his sheepskin, honorary mention from the faculty for his particularly fine record throughout the three years he had spent at Fanwood.

Immediately upon graduation young Simpson went to Attica, New York, and took up the jeweler's trade. He spent about a year at this business, then went back to Michigan, where he secured employment on the farm of one of his cousins. He was young and his future in life had not then shaped itself definitely. He was determined, however, to make his mark in the battle of life and as he followed the plow he kept his mind active planning for the future. His chance, which was also the turning point in his life, came in a most unexpected manner. His brother Delos had graduated from the national college some time previous and his standing as a student had reached the ear of Moses Folsom, then superintendent of the Iowa School for the Deaf, at Council Bluffs. Mr. Folsom was looking for a number of bright and capable young men to become a part of his faculty. He wrote to Delos Simpson and offered him a position in the corps but the offer for some reason did not appeal to him. It occurred to him, however, that his brother James might be willing to accept the position were it agreeable to Superintendent Folsom to make the substitution. Accordingly he laid the proposition before James, who signified his willingness to accept, and a letter of explanation was dispatched to Superintendent Folsom. Word came back that it would be satisfactory to the school authorities to have James become a member of the teaching corps.

It was with vigor and enthusiasm that he entered upon the work of teaching the deaf. His methods were eminently those employed by Prof. O. D. Cooke at the Fanwood school and by Prof. T. L. Brown at the Michigan school. It was a coincidence that Mr. Simpson had had in Prof. Brown an instructor who had been a pupil of Prof. Cooke's at Hartford. To this fact undoubtedly was due the peculiar success attained by Mr. Simpson in his educational work, coupled with his natural aptitude for the work. His every procedure was logical and his explanation of subjects clear. He realized that to attain the best results the student should understand fully the subject in hand. Thorough and intelligent work on the part of the pupil was made the watchword—and results fully attested to the wisdom of such a course. At the Iowa school he was a leader among the faculty, ever holding out for modern and logical methods, tempered with conservatism. He remained in this position for three years, during which time he was married to Miss A. Laura Wright, a student of the Iowa school and sister of the matron.

In the summer of 1880 Mr. Simpson, finding himself in poor health, sought rest and recreation at the home of his brother-in-law, Attorney E. G. Wright, at Sioux Falls, South Dakota. Another sister of Mrs. Simpson had been in Sioux Falls the previous twelve months, teaching a class of seven deaf children. She had found the work rather trying and was not sure that she would want to continue it indefinitely. When Mr. Simpson came among the people of Sioux Falls the suggestion was made that he was the proper person to take up and carry on the work. He immediately put the suggestion into effect. Citizens of Sioux Falls came to his aid promptly, for they realized that such an institution in their midst was bound to grow and prove a worthy institution. Money was raised for the erection of a suitable building and to provide for the maintenance of the school until such time as the territory should come to its aid with territorial funds. A tract of ten acres of land was donated by a few public-spirited citizens and a large building erected thereon. The school was opened under most auspicious circumstances on October 21, 1880, with James Simpson at the head. The attendance was eight pupils on the opening day. The ninth pupil came one month later, and by the beginning of the year 1881 there were ten pupils. Since its establishment this school had had at least two hundred and fifty pupils at one time or another within its walls.

Superintendent Simpson acted as instructor, assisted by his wife. The first two or three years were trying ones, but Mr. Simpson had a stout heart and knew he was engaged in a worthy work that would bring him his reward. He overcame numerous obstacles and the school prospered. The attendance grew rapidly and new buildings had to be provided. After the lapse of twenty years there were six fine stone structures, grouped in such manner that a fire threatening one would not affect the others. Thirty acres of land additional was purchased, deciduous and evergreen trees were set out and the grounds were beautified with driveways and lawns. From the nucleus of eight pupils on the opening day there were nearly fifty in 1889, when the territory of Dakota was divided into the states of North and South Dakota. A new school was soon established in the northern commonwealth and between fifteen and twenty pupils at Sioux Falls were transferred. A few years later the attendance at the South Dakota school was again at the former number, three or four teachers were regularly employed, and one of South Dakota's most worthy institutions was doing a noble and necessary work. Her graduates are scattered to the four winds, and they are self-supporting and valuable citizens. Most of them, in addition to obtaining an intellectual education, learned some branch of the trades, by which they are able to hold their own with hearing people.

Mr. Simpson was a careful manager and watched every detail of the institution closely. His expenditures were always within the annual allowances made by the state. The health of the children in his charge was so carefully looked after that seldom was there a case of serious sickness. The moral and spiritual welfare of the children also came for most careful attention. In his personality Mr. Simpson possessed a most attractive quality and he made friends easily. To know this man and to enjoy his confidence were an honor. He was devoted to his family, of whom he had three boys, all of whom survive him, and one girl, who passed away in infancy. His wife also survives him. He was a good business man and made judicious investments of his earnings, thus leaving his family in good circumstances at his death. His property holdings consisted of a large farm in Iowa and two in South Dakota, besides numerous head of live stock and other property.

The pernicious practice of permitting politics to enter into the affairs of state institutions is responsible for Mr. Simpson finally relinquishing the superintendency of the school he had so long guided. In the spring of 1903 the board of charities and corrections, pleading a desire to make a record in economical management of the institutions under their charge, reduced his salary nearly one-half. Under the circumstances Mr. Simpson could not accept the reduction and still retain his self-respect, so he promptly handed in his resignation. This step had been anticipated by the board, and they were not slow in accepting the resignation, seeing that it was their chance of driving in the wedge that was to open the way to using the school for deaf mutes for political purposes. For twenty-three years no preceding board had dared go contrary to public sentiment by removing the efficient head of the school. This action of the board in the spring of 1903 was condemned by every citizen of the state who wanted to see efficiency placed above politics.

At the time he handed in his resignation Mr. Simpson's health was poor and the action of the board only hastened a step he had considered for some time previous. He immediately sought recuperation of his health in the Black Hills, but there was no appreciable improvement. He returned to Sioux Falls to settle down in a home of his own, hoping that complete rest would restore him to health. But on the way he was stricken down and in a very short time breathed his last at the home of his brother-in-law, J. T. Gilbert, in Sioux Falls, surrounded by his entire family. His death occurred on November 16, 1903, and on the 19th his mortal remains were consigned to their last resting place in Mount Pleasant cemetery. The services at the house were private, but at the grave the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks had charge of the exercises, the deceased having been an honored member of the order. The services, both at the house and at the grave, were largely attended and the floral tributes were many.

In the demise of James Simpson the state of South Dakota lost a valuable citizen and the deaf a warm friend. There can be no nobler monument to his memory than the South Dakota school for the deaf.

PHIL L. AXLING.

NEWTON S. TUBBS, of Custer City, is a native of Oneida county, New York, and dates his birth from November 22, 1853, having first seen the light of day in the town of Weston, near which the parental homestead is situated. His youthful years were spent on his father's farm, where he early learned the lessons of industry, thrift and self-reliance, which have so materially influenced his subsequent life, and in the public schools he received a modest educational training. When a mere lad he began working for himself and so assiduously did he apply himself that at the age of sixteen he found himself the possessor of several hundred dollars, which he judiciously invested in land, thus early in life becoming a tiller of the soil upon his own responsibility. A hard worker and good manager, he took advantage of every opportunity to improve his condition, and it was not long until he was regarded one of the most energetic and successful agriculturists of the community in which he resided. He continued to cultivate his farm and prosper until 1879, when he disposed of his interests in York state and started west, arriving at Cheyenne, Wyoming, on March 24th of that year. Shortly after reaching his destination Mr. Tubbs engaged in dairying near Cheyenne, in connection with which he also bought cattle, meeting with encouraging success in both lines of business. Later he discontinued his operations in Wyoming and in the fall of 1879 drove through with an ox-team to the Black Hills and took up land adjoining Custer City which place, at that time, was an insignificant hamlet, consisting of a few log shacks and occupied by a transient population, attracted thither by the prospect of gold. Having faith in the future growth and ultimate prosperity of the town, Mr. Tubbs decided to make it his permanent place of abode; accordingly he began improving his land, and in a short time started a dairy, which he operated for several years with profitable results, also established a cheese factory, which in like manner proved the source of a handsome income. While prosecuting these enterprises he turned his attention to stock raising, beginning on a small scale, but gradually enlarging the business until within a comparatively short time he had it established upon a firm basis with every prospect of continued success. In the fall of 1882 he went to Cheyenne and bought one thousand head of sheep, which he drove through to the Hills and herded on a large tract of fine grazing land near Red Canon, about ten miles from the Cheyenne river. This was the first attempt at sheep raising in the Black Hills country and to Mr. Tubbs belongs the honor of being the father of the industry in southwestern Dakota. From that time to the present his business has steadily grown in magnitude and importance until he is now the largest and most successful sheep raiser in the state, owning extensive tracts of land in various parts of the country and running from sixteen to twenty-five thousand head every year.

In addition to his large live-stock interests Mr. Tubbs is identified with various other enterprises, notable among which is the Edgemont Irrigation and Improvement Company, an undertaking inaugurated in 1895 to carry water from the Cheyenne river to a large area of surrounding country for the purpose of reclaiming and reducing to cultivation lands which up to that time were little better than dry, sterile wastes. This laudable object, however, failed of accomplishment by reason of the financial embarrassment of the company, after which Mr. Tubbs secured the entire canal and lands to the amount of ten thousand acres, taking possession of the property in January, 1903. He is now rapidly pushing the enterprise to completion and when finished it will doubtless make him one of the wealthiest men in the west, as the canal is the largest artificial waterway in the state, and the land when properly irrigated will be among the richest and most productive in Dakota.

Mr. Tubbs has manifested commendable zeal in all of his undertakings and possesses the ability, judgment and fertility of resource essential to the prosecution of large and important enterprises. He is not only a broad-minded, public-spirited man of affairs but tactful, shrewd and a natural leader who in business knows no such word as fail and who labors for the public good while advancing his own interests. His home, adjoining the corporate limits of Custer City, is perhaps the finest and most costly private residence in this part of the state, and he has been exceedingly liberal in surrounding himself and those dependent upon him with the conveniences and comforts of life and all the luxuries which large wealth and refined taste suggest. He was married in Custer City, August 3, 1883, to Miss Jennie Page, of Illinois, the union being terminated by the death of the loving and faithful companion, after a happy wedded experience of nearly nine years' duration. Mrs. Tubbs departed this life on the 22d day of March, 1902, leaving besides a husband three children to mourn her untimely loss, namely: George, Page and Alice. Mr. Tubbs holds membership with several secret fraternal organizations, belonging to the Masonic lodge at Custer City, also to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Modern Woodmen of America, Knights of the Macca-bees and Ancient Order of United Workmen, at the same place, being an active worker in the different orders.

ALLEN D. DOUGAN, one of the prominent and successful citizens of Aurora county, is a native of Dodge county, Wisconsin, where he was born on the 14th of December, 1856, being a son of John and Eliza (Nickerson) Dougan, who now reside in Mason City, Iowa, the former being seventy-three years of age at the time of this writing. The paternal grandparents of the subject were born in Ireland, whence they emigrated to America in an early day and located finally in Warren county, New York, where their son John was born and reared. In 1845 they removed to Wisconsin and located on a farm in Dodge county. At the age of twenty-one he left home and learned the carpenter's trade and was foreman and had charge of the woodwork in John S. Rowell's manufacturing establishment at Beaver Dam, Wisconsin, for ten years. In the fall of 1869, he, with his family, removed to Mason City, Iowa, where he formed a co-partnership with E. R. Loyd for the sale of farm machinery. Their efforts were very successful. For the past twenty-five years he has not engaged in any active business, only giving attention to his landed interests. He has been an ardent Republican from the time of the organization of the party. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and it is largely through his efforts that the organization has completed a fine business structure and lodge rooms, also having succeeded in securing the location of the State Orphans' Home at Mason City, Iowa. Of their eight children only three are now living.

The subject of this sketch received his early educational discipline in the public schools of his native county and supplemented this by a course of study in the Shattuck Military Academy, at Faribault, and a six-months course at a business college in St. Paul, Minnesota, after which he was engaged in teaching school about three years, meeting with success in his pedagogic efforts. Later he was employed for four years as a salesman in a mercantile establishment in Mason City, Iowa, and in 1883 established himself in the hardware business in Plankinton, South Dakota, to which he continued to devote his attention for twelve years. He has been in a significant sense the architect of his own fortunes, and the marked success which stands to his credit thus represents the tangible result of his own well-directed efforts. In 1882 he came to Aurora county, South Dakota, where he took up government land in Palatine township, the same constituting an integral portion of his present valued homestead ranch of four hundred and eighty acres, most eligibly located nine miles northeast of Plankinton, the county seat, where he has maintained his home since 1896. His entire ranch is well fenced and equipped with substantial and attractive buildings and other permanent improvements of the best type. In addition to the original homestead, Mr. Dougan also took up a tree claim, and that he has accomplished more than the required amount of work in the matter of planting trees is evident to even the casual observer, for his place is made doubly attractive by the many fine trees planted by him and now well matured. In addition to the various cereals, he has given special attention to the raising of potatoes, to which he devotes about six acres of ground, from which he secures an annual yield of about one thousand bushels. He also has a good orchard on his place, and in the agricultural and pomological and horticultural departments of his farming enterprise he is particularly favored through the providence afforded by his fine artificial lake, which covers a tract of fourteen acres and which varies in depth from seven to nine feet. From the surface of the same he can draw off the water to a depth of thirty-three inches for irrigation purposes, while the supply is unfailing, being secured from one of the finest artesian wells in this section of the state. The well has a diameter of four and one-half inches and is five hundred and twenty-three feet in depth, the sinking of the same having been accomplished at a cost of eight hundred dollars. In the line of live stock, Mr. Dougan gives special preference to the Black Polled cattle, while he also raises an excellent grade of horses and swine. In addition to this homestead ranch he owns seventy acres of valuable land adjoining the town of Oacoma, Lyman county, where he lived during the year 1889, after which he returned to his home place. In politics Mr. Dougan had always been a Republican until the campaign of 1896, when he advocated the policy as adopted by the Chicago and later the Kansas City platforms, believing the volume of the money regulates the prices of all commodities, but in no sense is he in sympathy with what is known as Cleveland Democracy. He served one term each as mayor of Plankinton and as a member of the board of supervisors of Palatine township. He is affiliated with the Brotherhood of American Yeomen, Knights of Pythias and also was a charter member and the first noble grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Plankinton.

On the 6th of September, 1883, Mr. Dougan was united in marriage to Miss Katherine E. Dunn, who was born in Crawford county, Pennsylvania, and reared to maturity in Iowa. She is a daughter of Philip and Rebecca (Greenlee) Dunn, who removed from Pennsylvania to Cerro Gordo county, Iowa, in 1876, where Mr. Dunn became a successful farmer, and where he remained until his death, which occurred in 1893, in Plankinton. His widow now has her home with her daughter, the wife of the subject. Mr. and Mrs. Dougan have three children, Lee, Blanche and Lynn, all of whom remain at the parental home, the two elder children having completed their education in the Plankinton high school, in which they were graduated as members of the class of 1903. Lee is at present taking a course in the State University at Vermillion, South Dakota, and Blanche, having completed a successful term of school the past winter, is at present studying music at Mason City, Iowa.

S. WESLEY CLARK, a representative and successful member of the bar of Spink county, was born at Platteville, Grant county, Wisconsin, on the 28th of December, 1873, and is a son of Samuel P. and Elizabeth (Huntington) Clark, who now maintain their home in San Jose, California. Samuel P. Clark was born on a farm near the city of Rutland, Vermont, in the year 1838, and in 1847 he accompanied his parents on their removal thence to Wisconsin. His father, Pliny Clark, was one of the early pioneers of the Badger state, where he reclaimed a good farm, being compelled in the early epoch to haul his produce by wagon to Milwaukee, eighty miles distant. The Clark genealogy is traced back to pure English extraction and family tradition indicates that the original representatives in America were Puritans who came over on the historic Mayflower, either on its first or second voyage. Abraham Clark, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, was of this family. The father of the subject was reared in Dane county, Wisconsin, where he was educated in the common schools of the pioneer era and the state university, at Madison, where he completed a partial course, withdrawing from that institution in order to assist his parents, by teaching. In 1862 he was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Huntington, who was born in Liverpool, England, in 1842. In 1849 her father, Thomas Huntington, came with his family to the United States and settled in Dane county, Wisconsin, becoming one of the prominent farmers near the town of Mazomanie, where the mother of the subject received her early education in the common schools, supplementing this discipline by a course of study in a seminary at Evansville, that state. She and her husband are communicants of the Episcopal church. Thomas Huntington was a prominent architect and builder in Liverpool, after coming to America abandoned his profession and lived quietly on his farm in Wisconsin until summoned to his reward.

In July, 1882, the parents of the subject came to South Dakota and located in Faulk county, within whose confines the father took up a considerable tract of government land and engaged in farming and stock growing, while in 1883 he established the postoffice of Wesley, named in honor of the subject of this sketch, who was the youngest white boy in the county, having been eight years of age when the family located in Faulk county. During the early years he watched his father's cattle on the prairies and assisted in trapping many wolves and foxes during the winter months, while in August, 1882, he espied a single buffalo, not far distant from the primitive home, and wished to take his father's rifle and shoot the animal, but was forbidden to do so by his anxious mother, her husband being absent at the time. Mr. Clark stated to the writer that he had ever retained a sincere regret that he had failed to shoot at that buffalo. He early manifested a distinctive predilection for the reading of good books and while still a boy expressed a wish to become a lawyer. When but thirteen years of age he began to read with absorbing interest such books as he could obtain as touching both ancient and modern history, as well as scientific works, and the while secured such educational advantages as were offered in the pioneer common schools of Faulk and Spink counties. When but nine years of age he met on his father's farm near Athol, Spink county, Thomas Sterling, now dean of law at the state university, and through a conversation with him determined to take up the study of law as soon as he could secure the necessary books, while it may be said that in the passing years he has not abated in the least his enthusiasm in the study of the science of jurisprudence in its various branches. He herded cattle for fifteen dollars a month and thus secured the money which enabled him to begin his collegiate work. He studied out on the prairies while keeping watch and ward over the cattle, and at times became so immured in his reading that his charges took unkind advantage of his abstraction and wandered away from their prescribed province. After completing the curriculum of the public schools Mr. Clark entered Redfield College, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1894, having taught school to aid in defraying his college expenses and having held a first-grade teacher's certificate when but eighteen years of age. Immediately after his graduation he entered the law office of Sterling & Morris, at Redfield, and devoted himself assiduously to his legal duties until February, 1897, when he was admitted to the bar of the state, upon examination before the supreme court. He then remained with his preceptors for two years, on salary, and at the expiration of this interval, in 1899, entered into a professional partnership with E. B. Korns, at Doland, Spink county, this alliance continuing until the removal of Mr. Korns to Tracy, Minnesota. In 1900, upon his election to the office of state's attorney of Spink county, Mr. Clark returned to Redfield and here entered into partnership with his honored preceptor and friend, Thomas Sterling, and they have since continued to be associated in practice, under the firm name of Sterling & Clark, while they control the leading law business in Spink and adjoining counties. At the time of his election to the office of state's attorney Mr. Clark was but twenty-seven years of age, being at the time the youngest incumbent of such office in the state. At the expiration of his two years' term, in 1902, he was re-elected, receiving the largest majority ever accorded a candidate for public office in the county. His second term will expire in January, 1905, while it should be stated that he has made a most admirable record as a public prosecutor. In politics he gives an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party; his religious faith is that of the Congregational church, with which he united while attending college; and fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, the Knights of Pythias, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and the Modern Woodmen of America, being at the time of this writing chancellor commander of Ivy Lodge, No. 23, Knights of Pythias. He has ever taken an interest in military affairs, and has been a member of the National Guard since he was sixteen years of age. He enlisted at the time of the Spanish-American war, at Sioux Falls, but was in poor health at the time and thus unable to pass the required physical examination and was not accepted as a volunteer. He is at the present time captain of Company G, Second Regiment, South Dakota National Guard, at Redfield. Mr. Clark is of sanguine temperament and genial personality, and has a host of loyal friends, his only enemies being malefactors whom he has hard pressed in his various prosecutions. He went to California in 1890, with the intention of permanently locating, but became homesick for the prairies and the invigorating climate of South Dakota, to which state he returned after six months, convinced that this is the ideal place for young men.

On the 7th of February, 1900, at Doland, this county, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Clark to Miss Daisy Gertrude Labrie, who was born in the state of Illinois but who has resided in South Dakota since infancy, being here reared and educated. She is a daughter of Joseph E. Labrie, who came to this county in 1879, becoming a member of the first board of county commissioners and being one of the most prominent pioneers and influential citizens of Spink county; he is now postmaster at Doland. Mr. and Mrs. Clark have twin sons, Sterling and Stanton, who were born at the home of his parents, in San Jose, California, on the 1st of June, 1902, and when they were but six weeks of age the two lively youngsters were brought to their South Dakota home snugly ensconced in a basket.

LYMAN T. BOUCHER, of Eureka, at the present time state's attorney of McPherson county, was born in Washington county, Illinois, on the 27th of February, 1858, and is a son of John V. and Polly (Roundtree) Boucher, the former of whom was born in Kentucky and the latter in Illinois. John Boucher, the grandfather of the subject, was likewise a native of Kentucky.

where the family was established in the early pioneer epoch. John V. Boucher was a pioneer of Illinois, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits at the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion. He tendered his services in defense of the Union, becoming a member of the Tenth Missouri Volunteer Infantry, a considerable quota of which was furnished by Illinois, and he served from the opening of the war until the year of its close, having died in January, 1865, while enroute to his home, his death being the result of disease contracted during the Wilderness campaign. His wife survived him a year. Of their six children four are living, the subject of this review having been the sixth in order of birth.

Lyman T. Boucher passed his boyhood days in his native county, where he secured his early educational training in the public schools, after which he was a student in McKendree College, at Lebanon, that state. He then took up the study of law and in 1879 was matriculated in the Chicago College of Law, where he was graduated in June, 1880, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, being duly admitted to the bar of his native state. He located in Bellville, Illinois, where he was engaged in the practice of his profession until the spring of 1883, when he decided to cast in his lot with the pioneers of the future commonwealth of South Dakota. He forthwith opened an office in Leola, and later at Eureka, being one of the early settlers of the town, and here he has labored earnestly and successfully in his profession, attaining prestige as an able and discriminating attorney and counselor and having the respect and confidence of the people of the community, while he has at all times been at the forefront in urging forward all measures ending to advance the general welfare and social and material progress of his county and state. He was a member of the state constitutional convention of 1889, and served as prosecuting attorney of McPherson county prior to the admission of the state to the Union, while he has since been incumbent of the office of state's attorney for several terms, his last election having occurred in 1902, while his term will expire in January, 1905. On June 2, 1904, Mr. Boucher was nominated by the Republican party of the sixth judicial circuit of South Dakota for the office of circuit judge, and as all the counties of the sixth circuit are Republican, his election next November is assured. He was a member of the state board of regents of education from 1893 to 1896, inclusive, and is one of the three members of the state board of commissioners to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, which opened in the city of St. Louis in May of the present year, 1904. In politics he is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party and has been active as a worker in the party cause.

On the 26th of December, 1888, Mr. Boucher was united in marriage to Miss Helen Melvill, of Galena, Illinois, and they have four children, namely: Melvill, John M., Lyman T., Jr., and Hiram A.

HANS O. WICKRE, one of the progressive farmers and stock growers of Day county, is a native of Norway, where he was born on the 5th of May, 1855, being a son of Jacob and Katerina (Holland) Wickre, who emigrated from Norway to the United States in 1868 and located in Benton county, Iowa, where they remained until 1886, when they came to South Dakota, being residents of Webster at the present time. The subject secured his early education in the excellent schools of his native land and was about thirteen years of age at the time of the family immigration to America. He remained on the home farm in Iowa, in the meanwhile attending the public schools at intervals, until 1884, when he came to South Dakota and located in Independence township, twenty-two miles northwest of Webster, Day county, where he took up government land, to which he has since added until he now has a finely improved landed estate of about one thousand acres. The entire ranch is being conducted under his personal supervision, and he raises large quantities of grain each year, the product running from twelve to fifteen thousand bushels annually, while he also makes a specialty of breeding Hereford cattle, from registered stock, usually having an average of two hundred head; also Percheron horses; and in particular the Duroc Jersey swine, in which line his stock is unexcelled in the state. He has a modern two-story house on his farm and a specially large and well-equipped barn, which provides the best of accommodations for stock and produce. He is a man of much energy and good judgment and has attained success through his own efforts, while his enthusiasm in regard to the attractions and great resources of the state of his adoption is as marked as is the success which has attended his efforts since casting his lot here. He has shown a zealous concern in local affairs of a public nature, has held various township offices and also served as a member of the school board of his district. In 1888-89-91 Mr. Wickre was a member of the board of county commissioners, and in 1902 he was elected county treasurer, of which office he is incumbent at the time of this writing, while his continuance in the position by re-election in the fall of 1904 is practically a foregone conclusion. He has maintained his home in Webster, the county seat, since 1895, and here he has one of the finest and most modern residences in this section of the state, the same having been erected at a cost of seven thousand dollars and being a dwelling which would be a credit in any metropolitan center. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Modern Woodmen of America, while he is one of the most prominent and popular members of the Old Settlers' Association of the county, of which he is president at the time this article is prepared.

On the 22d of December, 1878, Mr. Wickre was united in marriage to Miss Bertha Sfrand, who was born in Norway, in 1877, whence she immigrated to America, having been a resident of Iowa at the time of her marriage. Of this union have been born one daughter and three sons. Janna is a member of the class of 1904 in Oberlin College, at Oberlin, Ohio, and Jacob, Sherman and Benjamin are attending the public schools in their home town. In politics Mr. Wickre is a staunch adherent of the Republican party, and both he and his wife are members of the Lutheran church.

WHEELER S. BOWEN, who is at the present time editor of the Sioux Falls Press and a member of the firm of Dotson & Bowen, publishers of the same, was born in Akron, Summit county, Ohio, on the 8th of April, 1843, being a son of Hiram and Martha (Wheeler) Bowen, who removed to Jonesville, Wisconsin, when he was a lad of six years, the father there becoming editor of the Janesville Gazette, of which he was part owner.

The subject received his early educational discipline in the common schools of Janesville, and as a boy began to work about his father's printing office, the training afforded in this line having been consistently designated as equal to a liberal education, and so it eventually proved in the case of Mr. Bowen. In the second year of the Civil war his patriotism was roused to responsive and definite protest, and in August, 1862, he enlisted as a private in the Twelfth Battery of Wisconsin Light Artillery, with which he served until the close of the war, making the record of a valiant and loyal son of the republic whose integrity he thus aided in perpetuating, while the history of his battery is the history of his service in the great conflict. His command was assigned to the Army of the Tennessee, commanded in turn by Generals Grant, Sherman, McPherson and Howard, and he was a participant in all the campaigns of said army after the time of his enlistment. Mr. Bowen received his honorable discharge in May, 1865, and then returned to his home in Janesville, where he became a compositor in the office of the Gazette, later being made foreman of the office and finally city editor of the paper, with whose publication his honored father was long identified. In the spring of 1874 Mr. Bowen accepted the position of Rock Island editor for the Davenport Gazette, retaining this incumbency a few months, after which he returned to Janesville and was married.

In November of that year, in company with his bride, Mr. Bowen came to the territory of Dakota and located in the city of Yankton, where he became associated with George W. Kingsbury, Sr., in the purchase of the Yankton Press and Dakotan, and he thereafter continued to be in editorial charge of that paper during the major portion of the time until 1896, covering a period of nearly a quarter of century. In the year mentioned he went to Washington, D. C., to assume the office of clerk of the senate committee on Indian affairs, remaining in the federal capital until 1901, in July of which year he located in Sioux Falls and purchased the Sioux Falls Press, C. L. Dotson being admitted to partnership a few months later. They have since conducted the Press as an independent paper, the same having both daily and weekly editions. During the campaign of 1896 Mr. Bowen was editor of the Sioux Falls Daily Journal, and in the connection ably supported Bryan for the presidency, while during the campaign of 1900 he edited the Press as an exponent of the interests of the same party and presidential candidate. He is stanch Democrat and has been one of the leader of the party contingent in South Dakota, during and since the campaign of 1896. While a resident of Yankton he served six years as postmaster of the city, having been twice appointed to this office, and once removed because of a change in the politics of the administration.

On the 21st of June, 1874, in Janesville, Wisconsin, Mr. Bowen was married to Miss Ella S. Davis, daughter of Jerome Davis, a well-known citizen of that place, and they have one son, George H., who is now a student in the Sioux Falls high school.

FRANK ALEXANDER is one of the pioneers of Campbell county. He settled at Mound City in September, 1884, and with the exception of the interval of a few years has resided there to the present time. He was born in Dubuque county, Iowa, and spent his early life on a farm. His parents were among the pioneers of Iowa and date their residence in the Hawkeye state from November, 1837. Mr. Alexander was elected register of deeds of Campbell county in 1884, and was elected as delegate to the constitutional convention held at Sioux Falls in 1885. He was elected county judge on the admission of the state of South Dakota into the Union in 1889, and has the honor of being the first register of deeds and county judge elected by the people of this county. He was appointed chief of division in the office of Indian affairs in Washington and after holding that position for over a year he resigned to take the position of special agent of the general land office, and was assigned to duty in Montana. He returned to Mound City in 1902. In 1896 he was elected state's attorney of Campbell county and held the position for four years. Owing to a vacancy in that office he has been appointed to fill the unexpired term, and has been nominated for that position on the Republican ticket and will be elected for a two-years term. In politics Mr. Alexander is a Republican and he has always taken a very active part in building up his party.

ROBERT C. HAWKINS, who stood as an honored citizen of Sioux Falls from practically the time of its inception to that of his death, and who passed to his reward on the 16th of September, 1903, was born in Plattsburg, Clinton county, New York, on the 23d of July, 1825, and was a scion of colonial stock, while his parents were numbered among the pioneers of the Empire state, where he was reared to manhood and where he received a common-school education which he later effectively supplemented through personal application and the valuable lessons of experience. He acquired the trade of mason, to which he gave his attention in his native state until 1844, when he removed to Illinois, and thence, a few years later, to Richland Center, Richland county, Wisconsin, where he followed his trade and also engaged in farming. He was chairman of the township board of supervisors, township clerk and treasurer, chairman of the county board and justice of the peace, while he was sheriff of the county for one term. A man of broad mental ken and decided views, it was but natural that his intrinsic patriotism and loyalty should manifest themselves in a definite way when the thundering of rebel guns against the ramparts of old Fort Sumter heralded the opening of the Civil war. He raised the first company of volunteers in Richland county, being made captain of the same, which became Company H, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. He continued in active service with his command for nearly two years when he received his honorable discharge, owing to disabilities resulting from his service in the field.

Soon after the close of the war Mr. Hawkins removed to Woodstock, in the same county of Richland, and was there engaged in the mercantile business until September, 1872, when he came to the territory of Dakota and located in Sioux Falls, where he was engaged in the work of his trade for two or three months. In the early winter he started to return to his home in Wisconsin by way of St. Paul, and so severe were the snowstorms and so many the other obstacles encountered that an entire week elapsed ere he reached the city mentioned. In the spring of the following year, in company with his family, he returned to Sioux Falls, where he ever afterward made his home. In the early days he took up a homestead claim in Wayne township, the same comprising the south half of the southeast quarter of section 33, and the south half of the southwest quarter of section 34, and this property he improved and retained in his possession until his death. He followed contracting in the line of his trade about two years after his return to Sioux Falls. He soon gained the confidence and esteem of the people of the city, and became influential in public affairs, having ever given a staunch allegiance to the Republican party and having been for a number of years an active political worker in a local way. In 1874 he was elected justice of the peace and continued incumbent of that office, with the exception of one term, until he was elected police justice of the city, upon its incorporation, in 1883. In the latter office he served consecutively until April, 1894, representing a full decade. He also held the office of probate judge of Minnehaha county for eight years, and in every office of trust to which he was called he manifested the utmost fidelity, honor and zeal, while his mature judgment and strong individuality made him a power for good in whatever work he undertook. He was one of the prominent representatives of the Masonic fraternity in the state, and did much to forward the interests of the order in his home city.

In 1843 Mr. Hawkins was united in marriage to Miss Ada Monroe, of Plattsburg, New York, and they became the parents of three children, Frederick B., who is now a resident of Sioux Falls; Albert, who resides in Sioux City, Iowa; and Isabel, who is the wife of George W. Clark, of Pasco, Washington. Mrs. Hawkins was summoned into eternal rest in 1869, and on the 23d of December, 1872, at Alma, Wisconsin, was solemnized his marriage to Miss Harriet Albertson, who was born in Stroudsburg, Monroe county, Pennsylvania, and she survives him and still retains her residence in Sioux Falls, as did also their only son, the late Dr. John R., of whom individual mention is made elsewhere in this work. In religion Mr. Hawkins was a Methodist.

Mr. Hawkins was the architect of his own fortune, and upon his life rested no shadow of wrong or injustice while his kindly and genial nature won him firm and abiding friendship, his memory resting as a benediction upon all who came within the immediate sphere of his influence.

FRED LEWIS TIFFANY, one of the able and popular young members of the bar of Walworth county, and now incumbent of the office of United States court commissioner for the northern district of the state, was born in Mason City, Cerro Gordo county, Iowa, on the 20th of May, 1877, and is a son of David M. and Addie R. Tiffany, the former of whom was born in the state of New York and the latter in that of New Hampshire, while they are now residents of Mitchell, South Dakota, the father being a merchant by vocation. The subject passed his boyhood days in his native town, where he completed the curriculum of the public schools, having been graduated in the high school as a member of the class of 1896. He then entered the University of Minnesota in the city of Minneapolis, where he continued his studies in the academic department for two years and later completed the prescribed course in the law department, in which he was graduated in June, 1901, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, being simultaneously admitted to the bar of the state, as was he to that of South Dakota a short time afterward. In June of the same year he came to Mitchell, this state, and there initiated the active practice of his profession, remaining there until March, 1902, when he located in Selby, Walworth county, where he was engaged in practice until June 16, 1903, when he was appointed to his present office, by Judge J. H. Carland, of the United States district court, and then removed to Everts, where he has since given his attention to his official duties, while he also continues the practice of the law, in the minutiae of which he is thoroughly well informed. In politics Mr. Tiffany gives his allegiance to the Republican party, and he takes a lively interest in the questions and issues of the hour. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, while he is also affiliated with two college fraternities, the Phi Kappa Psi and Phi Delta Phi.

On the 20th of May, 1902, was consummated the marriage of Mr. Tiffany to Miss Florence Gregory, who was born in Racine, Wisconsin, on the 10th of December, 1877, being a daughter of William H. and Ellen R. Gregory, now residents of Mitchell, South Dakota. Of this union has been born a fine little son, Lewis Gregory Tiffany, who was ushered into the world on the 10th of April, 1903.

JOHN R. HAWKINS, M. D., who was summoned to the life eternal on the 3d of May, 1904, in the very flower of his manhood, was a native of Sioux Falls and a son of one of its honored pioneers, Robert C. Hawkins, to whom a memorial tribute is accorded on other pages of this volume. Dr. Hawkins was born in Sioux Falls, on the 10th of July, 1874, and was a son of Robert C. and Harriett (Albertson) Hawkins. He secured his early education in the public schools and manifested from his boyhood a distinctive predilection for study. After completing a course in the local high school he entered the University of Chicago, where he continued his studies for four years, at the expiration of which he was matriculated in Rush Medical College, in Chicago, where he completed the prescribed technical course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1900, receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine. Through his own efforts he, to a large extent, paid the expenses of his higher education, and in the few years of his active professional work he had gained marked prestige and distinction. Soon after his graduation he engaged in active practice in his native city, making a specialty of the diseases of children, and he gained a representative support and a stronghold upon popular confidence and esteem, as well as upon the high regard of his professional confreres. He was made major surgeon of the Second Regiment of the South Dakota National Guard, and recently promoted to surgeon general with the rank of colonel, and held this office at the time of his demise, while he was a member of the State Medical Society and secretary of the Minnehaha County Medical Society, as well as county coroner and medical counselor of the ninth district when summoned from the sphere of life's activities, having been incumbent of the office of county coroner for three years. He was deeply devoted to his profession and took a great interest in all that tended to conserve its advancement. He was practically the originator of the present medical laws of the state, having expended much time, effort and money in preparing the measure and urging its passage, the enactment of the law having been made by the last legislature. He was a Master Mason, being identified with Minnehaha Lodge, No. 5, and was a consistent and valued member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

On the 19th of June, 1900, was solemnized the marriage of Dr. Hawkins to Miss Minnie Edna Dull, of Freeport, Illinois, who survives him.

ALBE HOLMES, superintendent of the Two Johns mine, located at Crow Hill, Lawrence county, comes of stanch old colonial stock, and is himself a native of the far-distant Pine Tree state, having been born in Belfast, Waldo county, Maine, on the 13th of June, 1848, and being a son of James and Hannah H. (Ward) Holmes, who were likewise born and reared in that county, both passing their entire lives in Maine, where the father devoted his attention to lumbering during his active business career. The subject secured his early educational training in the common schools of his native place and early began to assist his father in his lumbering operations. In 1869, upon attaining his legal majority, he came west as a youthful pioneer. He made his way to Nevada, where he was for a number of years employed in the great Comstock mine. In 1876 he came to the Black Hills, making the trip to Cheyenne, Wyoming, from which point he came overland in a stage coach, in company with ten other men, hiring a team from one of the old-time pioneers, Tim Dyer. This was the second stage to enter the hills, and while the party were enroute a band of one hundred and fifty Indians passed their camp but gave them no trouble. They arrived in what is now the town of Custer on the 24th of March, and after devoting a few weeks to quartz prospecting Mr. Holmes started the first express line between Gayville and Deadwood, operating the same about six months, when he sold out. He then resumed prospecting, in which line he met with varying success during the following years. In 1896 he located the property now worked by the Spearfish Mining Company, and he still retains an interest in this property, which is a most promising one. In 1897 he was appointed superintendent of the Two Johns mine, named in honor of two well-known individuals of national reputation, John W. Gates and John

A. Drake, the property being situated at Crow Hill, nine miles distant from Deadwood.

In politics Mr. Holmes gives a stanch support to the Republican party, and he is a member of the Business Men's Club, of Deadwood, being also a member of its house committee, while he also holds membership in the Mining Men's Association of the United States and the South Dakota Pioneer Society, as well as the time-honored Masonic fraternity, in which he has risen to the thirty-second degree of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, while he also holds membership in the adjunct organization, the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

On the 3d of April, 1886, Mr. Holmes was united in marriage to Miss Ellen V. Himes, who was born and reared in Pennsylvania.

DWIGHT GERARD HOLBROOK, of Sioux Falls, who is manager for South Dakota for the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of New York, is a native of Windsor Locks, Hartford county, Connecticut, where he was born on the 27th of July, 1867, being a son of Dwight and Kalista (Thayer) Holbrook, both scions of prominent families of New England, where the father was an inventor and a manufacturer of scientific and school apparatus, his birth having occurred in Derby, Connecticut. He died in 1891, and his wife resides in New York state. The subject of this sketch is of the seventh generation in direct line of descent from John Holbrook, who immigrated from Derby, England, and settled at Oyster Bay, Long Island, in the early part of the seventeenth century. His son Abel was the first white child born at Oyster Bay, the date of his nativity having been 1653. Several of the descendants of the original American ancestors were valiant soldiers in the Continental line during the war of the Revolution. On the maternal side the subject is descended from Richard Thayer, who settled in Braintree, Massachusetts, in 1640; Henry Adams, who was born in 1626; John Alden and his wife, Priscilla; William White, of the "Mayflower"; and in the fourth generation from Rev. Joseph Thaxter, who was commissioned by the "council of the Colony of the Massachusetts Bay," on the 23d of January, 1776, as "chaplain of the regiment whereof John Robertson, Esq., is colonel," and who carried a musket at the battles of Concord Bridge, Lexington and Bunker Hill. In 1825 Rev. Joseph Thaxter conducted the religious service at the laying of the corner-stone of Bunker Hill monument. His commission as chaplain is now in the possession of his great-granddaughter, the mother of him whose name initiates this resume. As to the genealogy of the Holbrook family specific reference is made in the following named historical publications: American Ancestry, volume I, page 38, and volume VII, page 6; Austin's Ancestral Dictionary, page 27, also allied families, pages 131-3; Dodd's History of East Haven, Connecticut, page 129; Orcutt's History of Derby, pages 729-31; and Vinton's Genealogy, pages 185-8 and 330-40. Of the Thayer and Thaxter families mention is made in detail in Massachusetts Historical Society, volume XVII, page 280; in the Records of the Town of Braintree, 1640-73; and in East Anglia, volume III, page 35; while of the Adams, Alden and White families, record appears in Savage's Genealogical Dictionary.

Dwight G. Holbrook received his early educational discipline principally in private schools in his native state, where he was prepared for college. He, however, decided to enter business life, in 1884, rather than to continue a burden upon a mother whose courage, business sagacity, self-abnegation and unqualified devotion had hitherto given him ample opportunities. After nine months of clerical service in the passenger department of the New York Central Railroad, he resigned, in October, 1884, to become a clerk in the actuary's department of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, winning advancement through his fidelity, discrimination and marked executive ability, and being made private secretary to the vice-president of the company in 1889, while in 1893 he was given his present important preferment as general agent for the Dakotas, in which capacity he has accomplished a great work in the interests of a great company, manoeuvring his forces with consummate skill and distinctive initiative and administrative force, and thus bringing much prestige to this old, reliable and well-known insurance corporation. He is a Republican in his political proclivities, but has never desired office. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias, and the Masonic order, in which latter he is affiliated with Minnehaha Lodge, No. 1, Free and Accepted Masons; Sioux Falls Chapter, No. 2, Royal Arch Masons; Cyrene Commandery, No. 2, Knights Templar; and Oriental Consistory, No. 1, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite.

In the city of Minneapolis, Minnesota, on the 14th of July, 1898, Mr. Holbrook was united in marriage to Miss Charlotte B. Long, daughter of Joseph D. Long, and of this union have been born two children, namely: Robert Dwight, June 7, 1899, and Darwin Long, July 5, 1903.

JOHN L. W. ZIETLOW, who is president of the Dakota Central Telephone Company, with headquarters in the city of Aberdeen, is a native of Prussia, where he was born on the 8th of December, 1850, and where he was reared to the age of seventeen years, having received his education in the excellent national schools of his native land. In 1867 he immigrated to the United States, having previously learned the watchmaker's trade in Prussia. He made his way to Wisconsin, and there sought such employment as came to his notice. He worked on a farm a time and later was employed in a machine shop and in sawmills. In 1873, while working in a sawmill, he had the misfortune to meet with an accident of most deplorable nature, having his right arm severed above the elbow. By the time he had recovered from his injury, so far as may be, he found himself almost penniless, but the same courage and self-reliance which have brought to him success in later years stood him well in hand at that critical period. He went to Naperville, Illinois, and there succeeded in completing a course in a commercial college. Thereafter he secured a position as scaler in a sawmill, while later he secured clerical work in an office in Stillwater, Minnesota. In March, 1880, Mr. Zietlow came to what is now the state of South Dakota, and took up a homestead claim in Spink county, where he turned his attention to farming and the implement business, but his crops failed six years in succession, a fact which led him eventually to identify himself with the telephone business. Being a superior mechanic and having made particular study of applied electricity, he has been able to direct his efforts with consummate ability and success.

It may be said that while residing in Minnesota the subject had read a glowing description of the attractions of the James river valley in South Dakota, and later he was visited by a man who purposed bringing a colony to this section. A church meeting was held and this promoter prefaced his exhortations by a long prayer, after which he expatiated on his plans and on the great future in store for the section in which he was interested. Mr. Zietlow determined to investigate matters for himself, and, in company with a friend, he came to Watertown, then the terminus of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, and thence, in the teeth of a fierce blizzard, made his way to the promoter's vaunted city of Ashton, which he found to be comprised of one shanty and a sod house. He took up a homestead claim, which proved to be near Athol, and then returned to Minnesota. On account of being caught in a blizzard in the fall of 1880, while on his way to his claim, he practically decided to abandon the property, when an offer of fifty dollars was made him for this tree claim adjoining Athol, which was beginning to show signs of growth, and which within six months was increased to the amount of twenty-three hundred dollars, he decided to once more come and "see what was doing." He found fourteen stores and two hotel buildings in the course of erection in the town, and that the railroad company had designated the same as a station on its line, while town lots were being platted beyond his claim. He refused eleven thousand dollars for his property and the town continued to boom for two years, within which time he platted his land, selling one lot. Other towns grew up as if by magic, and in time Athol's fortunes languished and it became practically but a memory.

Within the limitations necessarily prescribed for an article of this nature it is impossible to enter into details as to the gradual upbuilding of the great telephone enterprises in which the subject of this sketch is so prominently concerned, and yet it is but consistent that an outline be entered. In October, 1886, the Dakota Emmer Telephone Company was organized, the promoter having been the subject of this sketch, who was one of the seven stockholders and incorporators. This company establishes exchanges in Aberdeen, Watertown and Columbia, and also connected Aberdeen with Groton and Columbia by long-distance telephone during the winter of 1886-87, while the local exchanges in Aberdeen and Watertown were later sold to local companies. Within one year after the establishment of the business the Bell Company attempted to close the exchanges on account of infringements of patents, and, fearing litigation, all of the exchanges mentioned were closed with the exception of those in Aberdeen and Watertown, to which Mr. Zietlow gave his personal attention. He carried on the work against the wishes of the Bell Company, though he was simply working on a salary at the time and the struggle was a strenuous and bitter one. From 1887 to 1894 it was under these adverse conditions the two exchanges mentioned were kept in operation by the use of such appliances as Mr. Zietlow could secure by personal effort. He familiarized himself with the old Reis apparatus, which had been invented only for the reproduction of musical tones, and by personal manipulation and improvement he succeeded in making the device available for conversational purposes, and during this time he discovered and brought out several inventions which have proved to be very important to practical telephone service. Before the expiration of the Bell patents the other persons interested in the local service had become discouraged, and in April, 1896, Mr. Zietlow concluded to attempt individually what the company had originally intended to accomplish. He constructed the line from Aberdeen to Redfield, and then found himself six thousand dollars in debt and with a cash capital of but one dollar and a half. The line was constructed through the efforts of himself and his son, with the assistance of a kindly disposed friend, and the subject's wife and daughters attended to the operation of the exchange while he was thus engaged in building the new line. From this time forward success has crowned his efforts and justified his determination and courage. The line became very popular, particularly during the hard winter of 1896, when communication by other means was cut off. In the time of the great floods of the following spring, when telegraph and railroad service came to a standstill, he kept his line in operation to Redfield, fording the streams to make the necessary repairs, and on account of no other line of communication being open, it paid some days as high as seventy and eighty dollars. After he had constructed three hundred miles of line, Mr. Zietlow organized and incorporated the Western Dakota Telephone Company and also the Central Dakota Telephone Company. The Dakota Central absorbed the Clark Telephone and the Midland line, of North Dakota, the Western Dakota and Central Dakota Telephone Companies as well as the Aberdeen, Watertown and other local exchanges. Mr. Zietlow is still one of the principal stockholders and an officer in each of these companies, whose aggregate capitalization is five hundred thousand dollars, which fact indicates the extent and importance of the service given and the business controlled. The Dakota Central Telephone Lines, of which he is president, represents one of the most profitable enterprises of the sort in existence and still gives its service at minimum rates to patrons. It now has a four-thousand-mile circuit, with four hundred offices, fifty of which are local exchanges, while seventy-five persons are represented on the regular pay roll, besides the construction gangs and agents, the latter being on commission basis. In 1903 the company expended one hundred and thirty thousand dollars in improvements, and the average annual revenue has reached fifty thousand dollars, the estimate for 1904 being one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. It may be said without fear of contradiction, that the service accorded to patrons is cheaper than that of any other telephone company in the Union doing a legitimate business. The net profit on each twenty-five cent message is only four and a half cents. The company has no indebtedness and the stock is all held by residents of South Dakota.

In politics Mr. Zietlow is a Republican, his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church, and fraternally he is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Knights of the Maccabees and the United Commercial Travelers.

At Newton, Wisconsin, on the 4th of March, 1878, Mr. Zietlow was married to Miss Martha Hewitt, who was born in Ohio and reared in Wisconsin, and who has proved an able coadjutor to her husband in his past struggles and at all times a wise counselor. They have three children: J. Forrest, who is superintendent of the system here described, having grown up with the business; Essie, who is a graduate of the high school and who has been employed in the office of the telephone companies since she was ten years of age, and Nina, who aided in the work as a child and contributed her quota to the building of the great enterprises of which her father is the head; in fact she states that as a child she was a "messenger boy." She is a graduate of the Aberdeen high school, the Aberdeen Normal School, and is now a student of the Chicago Musical College.

FRED W. SCHAMBER, one of the leading business men of Eureka, McPherson county, was born in Krem, South Russia, on the 13th of December, 1860, and is a son of Martin Schamber, who was likewise born and reared in that locality, the family having been established in southern Russia during the time when Catherine was czarina. She was a German and induced many of her countrymen to locate in Russia, giving them grants of land and exempting them and their descendants from military service for a period of one hundred years. The expiration of this period, a few years ago, doubtless led to the emigration of many of these worthy Russo-Germans to America, and South Dakota is favored in having gained a large relative contingent of excellent citizens through this means, among them being the members of the Schamber family.

In 1874 Martin Schamber came with his family to America, landing in New York city on the 13th of August, and thence coming through to what is now the state of South Dakota. He arrived with his family in Yankton in August of that year, and soon afterward located on a farm in Yankton county, and there improved an excellent property. In 1881 he engaged in the hardware and implement business at Scotland, Bon Homme county, being associated in the enterprise with Messrs. Wentzloff and Max, and after about one year he disposed of his interests there and returned to the farm, where he remained until 1885, when he again engaged in the hardware and farming implement business in Scotland, where he continued operations until 1892, when he sold out and engaged in the lumber business. His devoted wife died August 29, 1893, her maiden name having been Friedericka Mueller, and in the following year he disposed of his lumber business and removed to the state of Virginia, where he passed three years, since which time he has maintained his home in Scotland, South Dakota. He served for eight years as a member of the board of county commissioners of Hutchinson county, and has been incumbent of other offices of local trust.

Fred W. Schamber secured his rudimentary education in his native land, having been a lad of about fourteen years at the time of the family immigration to the United States. His father is a man of distinctive scholastic ability and had been a successful school teacher in Russia, so that after coming to South Dakota in the pioneer days, when educational advantages were chiefly notable for their absence, he was enabled to aid his children in carrying forward their studies, and through this effective home discipline the subject of this sketch rounded out his education. He remained associated with his father until 1884, when he became identified with the clothing business in Scotland, Bon Homme county, thus continuing until 1887, when he located in the village of Tripp, Hutchinson county, where he was successfully engaged in the hardware and agricultural implement business until 1889, when he disposed of his interests there and took up his residence in Eureka, McPherson county, where, in company with his brothers Julius, Emil and Philip, he established himself in the same line of enterprise. In 1897 Emil and Philip withdrew from the firm and were succeeded by Christopher Hezel and Milburn Matthews and the new firm then opened the Eureka Bazaar. In the following year Mr. Matthews withdrew from the firm, and in January, 1904, Mr. Hezel retired, since which time the enterprise has been conducted by the subject and his brother Julius, while their establishment is a large and well-equipped department store, while the trade controlled is a representative one and wide in its ramifications. Julius Schamber is the active manager of this business, and with the subject is also associated in the ownership of the Golden Rule store, of which Mr. Hezel is manager and also a partner. The subject of this review now devotes the major portion of his time to his collection and loan business, having attractive offices in the building of the Bank of Eureka. In company with his brother Julius and Isadore Seitzick and W. G. Jacobs, Mr. Schamber is engaged in the manufacture of ladies' wrappers, the factory being in Millville, New Jersey, and the enterprise proving a profitable one, its inception dating back to July, 1903, while all of the interested principals are residents of South Dakota. The subject and his brothers are the owners of a large amount of valuable real estate in McPherson county, including two thousand acres of valuable farming land, all of which is under cultivation or utilized for grazing purposes, while each of the brothers is the owner of a modern residence and has been successful in his business operations.

In politics Mr. Schamber gives his allegiance to the Republican party, and he has ever shown a deep interest in all that concerns the general welfare and progress. He served for two terms as justice of the peace, in 1892 was elected to represent McPherson county in the state legislature, while in 1898 he was elected to represent his district in the state senate, making an excellent record in both assemblies and proving himself a valuable working member of both bodies of the legislature. In 1899 he was chosen the chief executive of the municipal government of Eureka, serving as its mayor for two years and giving a business-like and progressive administration.

On the 13th of December, 1885, Mr. Schamber was united in marriage to Miss Matilda Hetzler, who was born in Missouri, being a daughter of Rev. Heinrich Hetzler, who was numbered among the pioneers of South Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Schamber have two children, Edwin and Arthur.

BURNACE W. BAER, senior member of the firm of Baer & Brewster, who conduct a successful abstract and real-estate business in Woonsocket, Sanborn county, is a native of the state of Iowa, having been born in Ash Grove, Davis county, on the 4th of February, 1877, and being a son of William R. and Alice (Wonn) Baer. The subject secured his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools of his native town, and then entered the high school at Harlan, Iowa, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1895. Soon afterward he was matriculated in the Southern Iowa Normal School at Bloomfield, that state, where he completed a course of study and was graduated in 1896. Upon leaving the normal school he began reading law under the preceptorship of Thomas H. Smith, of Harlan, continuing his technical studies under these auspices for two years. He then entered the law department of the Iowa State University, at Iowa City, and was there graduated as a member of the class of 1900, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, while he was simultaneously admitted to the bar of his native state. In February, 1901, Mr. Baer came to South Dakota and took up his residence in Woonsocket, where he has since been engaged in the practice of his profession. In 1902 he entered into partnership with Delmar H. Brewster, and they have since conducted a general real-estate and abstract business, the firm name being Baer & Brewster. In politics the subject is a staunch adherent of the Republican party and is an enthusiastic advocate of its principles and policies. In 1902 he was elected to the office of state's attorney of Sanborn county, and has proved a most able public prosecutor, so that it is most certain that he will be chosen as his own successor in the election of November, 1904. In a fraternal way he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On the 1st of June, 1904, Mr. Baer was united in marriage to Miss Blanche E. Smith, daughter of Ellis M. Smith, who is a prominent and influential citizen of Woonsocket, where he is engaged in the drug business.

GEORGE J. JARVIS, of Faulkton, South Dakota, is a native of Ohio, having been born at Columbus, March 26, 1843. He is the son of George and Sarah Jarvis, the former of whom was born at Staffordshire, England, and the later at Brockelhurst, Sheffield, England. The paternal grandparents were William B. and Mary (Green) Jarvis, the former a native of Wales and the latter of Birmingham, England. The subject's grandparents on both the paternal and maternal sides came to America early in 1830. The subject was not favored with special advantages for securing an education in his youth, and as a consequence is practically self-educated. May 17, 1849, the subject accompanied his parents upon their removal to Wisconsin, the trip being made in a "prairie schooner," so much used by emigrants in those days. In the winter of 1851-2 they returned to Ohio, but in April, 1856, they went to Richland county, Wisconsin. On July 26, 1863, Mr. Jarvis enlisted in the Third Battery, Wisconsin Light Artillery, at Madison, Wisconsin, with which he served until October 15, 1864. Since becoming of age Mr. Jarvis has conducted business on his own account. He was in the milling business, in which he was fairly successful, and at the same time he also met with several severe reverses, having the mill once burned down and once destroyed by flood. He subsequently turned his attention to the study of law and was admitted to the bar at Richland Center, Wisconsin, in April, 1875. He came to his present location in South Dakota on August 2, 1883, and has since been actively engaged in the practice of his profession, having attained an enviable standing among his fellow members of the bar and the public generally. The only official position he has ever held is that of judge of the courts of Faulk county, in which position he is now serving, to the satisfaction of all having business in the court and with great credit to himself. The Judge has always taken an active interest in politics and was formerly a staunch abolitionist, and since the formation of the Republican party he has exerted his influence in its behalf. He is also engaged in farming to some extent and has made of this a success in an eminent degree. He maintains a deep interest in his old comrades by membership in the Grand Army of the Republic.

Judge Jarvis was united in marriage to Miss Diantha M. Nichols, a native of Somerset, Ohio, and to them have been born the following children: Nellie A., born April 26, 1866; George L., October 2, 1867; Harry J., April 24, 1869; Fred W., May 14, 1872; S. Belle, December 2, 1874.

EUGENE E. RING, president of the Bowdle Roller Company, merchant millers, was born at Owatonna, Minnesota, August 27, 1864, the son of Nathaniel and Mary (Wheeler) Ring. The parents were natives of Maine and Vermont, respectively. They were pioneers of Minnesota and South Dakota, coming to this state in 1884 and locating in Potter county, where the father took up land and farmed. He removed to Bowdle in 1903. He is now in his sixty-eighth year, while his wife is fifty-eight years old. Both are members of the Free Methodist church.

The subject was reared to manhood in Minnesota, where he attended the country schools and also an academy, finishing his education with a course at a commercial college. He came to South Dakota in 1885 and took up land in Potter county, where he farmed for twelve years. He then located at Bowdle, where he became interested in an electric light plant which had been incorporated by other parties. In 1900 he engaged in the milling business, he and his brother, Simon C. A., purchasing a half interest in the Bowdle Roller Company, which had been incorporated in 1897, combining the two corporations together. In 1902 the brothers bought sixty-six out of one hundred shares of the mill stock, thus securing a controlling interest, and they reorganized the company, with the subject as president. The plant has a capacity of one hundred and forty barrels daily, and the company also ships from one hundred thousand to one hundred and sixty thousand bushels of wheat annually. The nominal value of the plant and mill is thirty thousand dollars.

Mr. Ring married Miss Jennie Z. Wilson, who was born at Owatonna, Minnesota, the daughter of Charles and Zettela (Thompson) Wilson, now deceased. Their children are as follows: Mabel F., Eunice C., Lois A. and Lucile Z. Mr. Ring is a Republican in politics; in religion is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and fraternally is affiliated with the Knights of the Maccabees, carrying life insurance in the same, also in several old line companies.

JOHN R. WEAVER, a successful merchant and representative citizen of Claremont, Brown county, was born at Eureka, Montcalm county, Michigan, on the 29th of December, 1858, and is a son of Benjamin A. and Betsy (Clark) Weaver, both of whom were born and reared in the state of New York, the former having been a son of Aaron Weaver, who was a native of Rhode Island. The last mentioned was a son of John Weaver, who was likewise born in Rhode Island and who married a Miss Chase, whose original ancestor in America was one of two brothers who came over in the historic Mayflower, while their sister remained in England and became the wife of Sir John Townsend. Representatives of the Chase family were valiant soldiers in the Continental line during the war of the Revolution, and through their thus giving allegiance to the colonial cause they sacrificed a large estate in England. The paternal grandfather of the subject continued to reside in Troy, New York, until 1845, when he removed to Michigan and became one of the pioneers of Ionia county, where he passed the residue of his life. The father of the subject became the owner of a farm in Montcalm county, that state, where he remained until 1859, when he then removed to Ionia county, same state, then removed to Stearns county, Minnesota, being one of the pioneers of that section of the state. They passed on their way only three miles distant from the point the memorable Indian massacre at New Ulm, he and his family fortunately being unmolested. For a quarter of a century he resided in the city of Chicago, where he was a prominent contractor and builder, finally meeting with an accident which compelled him to retire from active labors. He is now living in the home of the subject, being seventy-four years of age at the time of this writing. His present wife is living with a daughter in Chicago. They became the parents of four children, all of whom are living. The subject's mother died in July, 1861; she was the mother of four children, three of whom are dead.

John R. Weaver, the immediate subject of this review, passed his school days in Michigan, and as his mother died when he was but eighteen months of age he was reared in the home of his paternal grandfather, with whom he remained until the spring of 1885, when he came to Brown county, South Dakota, and located in Detroit township, where he took up government land and engaged in farming. Two years later, upon the completion of the line of the Great Northern Railroad through this section, he engaged in the draying and freighting business, in which line he continued operations one year, at the expiration of which he established himself in business in Claremont, where for the ensuing decade he conducted a lumber yard and also dealt in coal and farming machinery and implements, building up a most prosperous enterprise. In 1899 he disposed of his business and purchased a farm southeast of the town, where he established the family home, and thereafter he was engaged as traveling representative for the Plano Manufacturing Company until March, 1904, when he entered into partnership with his brother, James A., and became associated with him in the carrying on of the general merchandise business which the latter had established in Claremont in the preceding September, and the enterprise has been since conducted under the firm name of Weaver Brothers. They carry a large and complete stock of general merchandise and also handle farming machinery and implements, and their trade has been most satisfactory from the start and is constantly increasing in scope and importance. It may be noted in the connection that our subject's brother and partner was the first white child born on the Indian reservation across the river from Sauk Center, Minnesota, and is the offspring of the second marriage of their father. He came to South Dakota in the autumn of 1903. In politics the subject is a stanch Republican, and fraternally is a member of the Masonic order, in which he has passed the capitialar degree, and also of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Knights of the Maccabees.

On the 31st of December, 1878, Mr. Weaver was married to Miss Janett Cole, who was born in Eureka, Montcalm county, Michigan, being a daughter of Leander T. and Sarah J. Cole, who were numbered among the pioneers of Brown county, South Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Weaver have two children, Clarence J., who has charge of our subject's farm, previously mentioned, and Maud J., who is the wife of M. Hugh Miller, a successful young farmer of this county.

JOHN J. FENELON is a native of the state of Wisconsin, having been born on a farm in the vicinity of the city of Brandon, Fond du Lac county, on the 20th of June, 1861, and being a son of William and Catherine (Fitzpatrick)

Fenelon, both of whom were born in County Carlow, Ireland, where their respective families had been established for many generations. Both the paternal and maternal grandfathers of the subject emigrated from the Emerald Isle to America in 1850, and both settled in Wisconsin, where they became successful farmers and where they passed the remainder of their lives. The parents of the subject are still residents of Fond du Lac county, Wisconsin. Of the six children in the family, John J. was the second in order of birth, while of the number five are living.

John J. Fenelon passed his boyhood days on the old homestead farm, and after completing the curriculum of the public schools, including the high school, in which he was graduated, he entered Ripon College, Ripon, Wisconsin, and there continued his studies for two years. In 1885 he came to the present state of South Dakota, and located in Campbell county, taking up a homestead seven miles southeast of the village of Pollock and being one of the earliest settlers in this section. He still owns the homestead mentioned. In 1892 he was elected to represent his district in the state legislature, and in 1894 was elected county treasurer, being chosen as his own successor in the latter office in 1896. He made Mound City, the county seat, his headquarters until 1901, in the autumn of which year he came to the newly established town of Pollock, moving his house from Mound City, and as this was the first house in Pollock he may well be said to be in a significant sense one of the founders and builders of the town. He had previously effected the organization of the bank, under the title of the Pollock State Bank, and on the 9th of November, 1901, the bank established was formally opened for business in its present location. The enterprise has proved successful, the subject acting as cashier of the same. Mr. Fenelon is associated with his brother, William, in the ownership of a large farm south of Pollock, and they are also largely concerned in the raising of live stock. In politics the subject is a stanch Democrat, and takes an active interest in the furtherance of the party cause.

On the 9th of November, 1899, Mr. Fenelon was united in marriage to Miss Flora E. Irwin, who was born and reared in Wisconsin, of which state her parents were pioneers. Of this union have been born two children, Irwin and Katherine.

GEORGE SMITH HUTCHINSON, president of the James Valley Bank, at Huron, is a native of the old Empire state, having been born in Pike, Wyoming county, New York, on the 5th of December, 1853, and being a son of George and Angeline A. (Smith) Hutchinson, who removed to the state of Wisconsin when he was about nine years of age, locating in Manitowoc, where he secured his early educational training in the public schools, later continuing his studies in Milwaukee, Madison and Durand, that state, and receiving good advantages in the line. On the 1st of November, 1872, Mr. Hutchinson located in West Depere, Brown county, Wisconsin, where he secured a position as clerk in a general merchandise establishment, eventually securing an interest in the business, with which he continued to be identified until 1887, when he sold out his interest. In November of that year he entered the employ of the extensive wholesale grocery house of Reid, Murdoch & Company, of Chicago, in the capacity of traveling salesman, and on the 16th of July, 1889, he came to South Dakota as representative of this concern in the state, with headquarters in Huron. He continued with the firm until May 1, 1902, when he resigned his position and forthwith effected the organization of the James Valley Bank, which was incorporated under the laws of the state on the 15th of that month, with a capital stock of thirty thousand dollars. He has been president of the institution from the time of its organization and has directed its affairs with consummate judgment and ability.

Mr. Hutchinson is a stanch Republican in his political proclivities and has been an active worker in its cause, in a local way. The hold which Mr. Hutchinson has upon the esteem and regard of the people of Huron has been given significant evidence, since in 1896 he was chosen mayor of the same, serving two years and giving a clean, capable and business-like administration of municipal affairs. He has been a member of the board of education since 1898 and in the connection his interest has been far removed from the apathetic and perfunctory. In 1902 still higher official preferment was conferred upon our subject, who was then elected to represent his district in the lower house of the state legislature, where he made an enviable record during the 1902-3 general assembly, while he is a candidate for state senatorial honors in the forthcoming election of November, 1904. He is a Knight-Templar Mason and is also affiliated with the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

On the 23d of July, 1884, Mr. Hutchinson was united in marriage to Miss Agnes J. Persons, of Brodhead, Wisconsin, and they have three children, Harry T., Augusta Jean and George.

REV. CALVIN H. FRENCH, A. M., D. D. is a native of the old Buckeye state, having been born in Wellsville, Columbiana county, Ohio, on the 13th of June, 1862, and being a son of Rev. Charles P. and Mary J. (Brown) French. His father, after serving as pastor of home mission churches in Virginia and spending some time in broken health at his own home in Washington county, Pennsylvania, removed to Grand Ridge, LaSalle county, Illinois, when the subject was eight years of age. He there secured his early educational discipline in the public schools and later entered the high school at Streator, that state, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1883. He was then matriculated in Lake Forest University, in the town of that name, and there completed the classical course and was graduated in 1888, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, while his alma mater later conferred upon him the degree of Master of Arts. Dr. French early decided to prepare himself for the ministry of the Presbyterian church, and in 1888 entered the Union Theological Seminary, in New York city, where he completed his divinity course, being graduated as a member of the class of 1891 and licensed by the presbytery of Chicago in June of that year. In the autumn of the same year Dr. French came to South Dakota and was ordained by the presbytery of Southern Dakota and installed as pastor of the Presbyterian church at Scotland, Bon Homme county, where he remained until August, 1898, having also acted as principal of the Scotland Academy, a church institution; during the last year of his pastorate. In the year mentioned was effected a consolidation of Scotland Academy and Pierre University, and the outcome was the founding of Huron College. Upon the establishing of the new college Dr. French was made president of the same, and he has ever since continued incumbent of this important executive office, in which his work has been a noble and prolific contribution to the educational prestige of the state. In recognition of his high intellectual attainments and his prominence as an educator and representative member of the clergy of the Presbyterian church, the Wooster University, at Wooster, Ohio, conferred upon him, in 1901, the degree of Doctor of Divinity. In politics the Doctor gives his allegiance to the Republican party, and he ever manifests a lively interest in the questions and issues of the hour.

On the 17th of July, 1897, was solemnized the marriage of Dr. French to Miss Anna E. Long, of College Springs, Page county, Iowa, and they have two sons, Robert C. and Ralph V.

From the bulletin of Huron College for 1904-5 we make the following historical excerpt: "The presbytery of Southern Dakota established Pierre University in 1883. The synod of Dakota was established in October, 1884, by order of the general assembly and assumed control of the college. With the division of the territory and the admission of the two states, the name of the controlling body was again changed, becoming now the synod of South Dakota. This was the name of both the ecclesiastical body and of the legal corporation until January, 1904, when the articles were amended and the corporate name of the institution changed to Huron

REV. CALVIN H. FRENCH.

College. Rev. Thomas M. Findley became the first president, serving two years. In 1885 Rev. William M. Blackburn, D. D., LL. D., succeeded to the presidency and continued in office until August, 1898. During these fifteen years the college did a noble and far-reaching work. It aided in the classical training of twenty-nine young men for the gospel ministry, two of whom are now missionaries in distant foreign lands. Many more became teachers, while hundreds were sent out to become centers of helpful and uplifting influence in almost as many different communities. Scotland Academy was established by the presbytery of Southern Dakota in 1886. Of its students seven have entered the ministry, while more than eighty are known to have become teachers. Owing to unforeseen changes in the development of the state, the synod deemed it necessary to remove the college from Pierre. With the purpose of obtaining greater efficiency in the educational work of the church in this state, it was determined to consolidate the college and academy. Action to this end was taken at a special meeting of the synod held at Huron on June 2-3, 1898. The people of Huron, by public subscription, raised a sufficient amount of money to purchase and fit up a large and substantial four-story building, costing, at the time of erection, fifty thousand dollars. On account of advancing years and failing health Dr. Blackburn resigned the presidency in the summer of 1898, but remained in the faculty as president emeritus and professor until his death, in December, 1898. The college will long bear the impress of his life, and its growth and usefulness will be a lasting monument to his noble self-sacrifice in its behalf. Rev. C. H. French became president of the college in August, 1898, and at once began the work of reorganizing and rebuilding on the new foundations. During the summer of 1902 a new impulse was given to the development of the college by the beginning of an effort to secure money for buildings and endowment. The Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company offered to donate for a campus four blocks of ground admirably located in the residence portion of the city. Subscriptions were taken in South Dakota and help was obtained from friends in the East. On December 31, 1903, a total sum of one hundred thousand dollars had been given or subscribed, of which thirty thousand or more will be available for use during the present summer (that of 1904). With this amount the new dormitory for girls will be completed and an artesian well will be secured and a central heating and lighting plant will be installed. The college is under the management of the Presbyterian synod of South Dakota. The synod elects the trustees, who are divided into three classes and serve three years each. They must not be less than five nor more than twenty-four in number, and two-thirds of them must be members of the Presbyterian church. This board of trustees appoints the faculty and administers all the affairs of the school."

It may be further said that the college is Presbyterian, but not sectarian, and that its curriculum and facilities are of the best, while its faculty has been selected with the utmost of discrimination. An excellent library and museum are maintained, a college paper published, and the student life is of enthusiastic and appreciative type. Four courses are offered in the college, leading up to the degree of Bachelor and Master of Arts, while there are also musical, academic, normal and commercial departments, each equipped for most effective work. The financial budget of the institution has increased from eight thousand dollars, in 1898-9, to eighteen thousand five hundred dollars in 1904. An endowment and building fund of one hundred thousand dollars was secured December 31, 1903. The building now occupied is valued at about twenty-five thousand dollars; the dormitory and heating and lighting plant, completed in the summer of 1904, represent an expenditure of thirty-five thousand dollars, and the campus, given by the railway company, on the 1st of September, 1904, is valued at twelve thousand dollars. The state, the church, the official board, the faculty and the students all have reason to take pride in Huron College and to be assured of its still brighter and more glorious future.

JOHN M. ROBB, a successful cattle raiser and farmer of Stanley county, claims the fine old Buckeye state as the place of his nativity, having been born in Lima, Allen county, Ohio, on the 28th of March, 1854, and being a son of Hon. Thomas M. and Ann M. Robb. The father of the subject was born in Pennsylvania, as was also his father, Joshua Robb, who removed thence into Ohio in the pioneer days, becoming a successful farmer and there passing the remainder of his life. Thomas N. Robb was a man of high attainments, being one of the representative members of the bar of the state, and also serving as a member of the legislature. Both he and his wife continued to reside in Lima, Ohio, until death. They became the parents of eight children, of whom five are living.

John M. Robb was reared to maturity in his native city, and there completed the curriculum of the public schools, being graduated in the high school as a member of the class of 1875. After leaving school he was engaged in the banking business until 1877, when, at the age of twenty-three years, he came as a pioneer to what is now the state of South Dakota. He was a member of the government party which came here and built Fort Custer, and there he was in charge of the trader's store until the fall of that year, when he removed to Fort Bennett, where he continued in charge of the government trading store until 1890, when he engaged in the same line of business on his own responsibility. The Indians were more or less troublesome during these years, and our subject became familiar with the strenuous work demanded in keeping them in subjection to government authority. Upon the removal of the military post from Fort Bennett, in 1891, Mr. Robb became associated with Senator Douglas F. Carlin in the stock business, and about three years later he purchased the interests of his partner and has since been successfully identified with the great cattle industry of the state in an individual way, having a fine ranch of ten thousand acres, eligibly located on the Cheyenne river, while on the place is also a fine natural spring which supplies a large amount of pure water. Mr.

Robb gives special preference to the Hereford type of cattle and carries on his operations upon an extensive scale. In politics he gives his support to the Democratic party, but has never aspired to public office of any description.

MORRIS M. WILLIAMS, a well-known and representative citizen of Lebanon, Potter county, was born in Portage, Wisconsin, on the 12th of October, 1865, and after there completing the curriculum of the public schools he entered the Northwestern Business College, in Madison, the capital of the state, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1885. In 1885 he came to the territory of Dakota and was for one year employed as clerk in the Inter Ocean Hotel, at Mandan, in what is now North Dakota. He then, in 1886, came to Gettysburg, Potter county, South Dakota, and was there working for his brother, A. G., in the real-estate business for two years, at the expiration of which, in 1888, he came to Lebanon, where he engaged in the buying of grain for the Marfield Elevator Company, remaining with this concern twelve years, while during the latter few years of this period he was also engaged in the lumber and farming implement and machine business on his own responsibility, retiring from the grain business in 1902, while he still continued the other lines of individual enterprise, having built up a large and successful business. In 1898 he was also engaged in the general merchandise business here, as the senior member of the firm of Williams & Schneider, having a commodious store and warehouse and carrying an extensive stock of goods. He has been consecutively concerned in the real-estate business, and his books at all times show desirable investments in good farming and grazing lands, as well as town property. He has recently completed in Lebanon a fine modern residence, the same being heated by the hot-water system and having other up-to-date facilities and being one of the most attractive homes in this section of the state. In politics he is a staunch Republican but has not been ambitious for public office.

though he served for a number of years as treasurer of the school district. He is a Royal Arch Mason and also identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 8th of August, 1890, Mr. Williams was united in marriage to Miss Frankie Carr, and they have three children, Perry R., Benjamin H. and Marjorie.

GEORGE A. DODDS, one of the leading and pioneer merchants of Watertown, is a native of the state of New York, having been born in Wellington, St. Lawrence county, on the 17th of June, 1845, and being a son of Captain George and Anne (Walton) Dodds, the former of whom was born in Scotland and the latter in England, while the father was for many years engaged in mercantile business, both he and his wife having died in Waddington, New York. After attending the public schools of his native town the subject of this review went to Ogdensburg, New York, where, at the age of seventeen years, he secured a clerkship in a dry-goods store, being thus employed for the following decade and gaining an intimate knowledge of the details of the business. At the expiration of the period noted he came west to the city of Chicago, where he was engaged in clerking in leading mercantile establishments until 1875, having been in the city at the time of the memorable fire of 1871. In 1875 he there engaged in the dry-goods business upon his own responsibility, continuing this enterprise until 1884, when he disposed of his interests in the western metropolis and came to Watertown, South Dakota, where he opened a dry-goods store in the Mellette block, his having been the first exclusive dry-goods establishment in the city. He built up an excellent trade, the growth of the enterprise keeping pace with the development and progress of the town, and finally he added other departments to his business and secured large and ample quarters, where he now has a general stock of merchandise of select and comprehensive order. He is one of the alert and progressive business men of the city and commands the unqualified esteem of its people, while he always maintains a deep interest in public affairs and in the promotion of the welfare of the city and state. His political allegiance is given to the Republican party and both he and his wife are valued members of the Congregational church.

Mr. and Mrs. Dodds have an attractive home, located on the north side of the city, and the same is a center of refined hospitality.

MELVELLE B. BRIGGS, a successful stock grower of Stanley county, is a scion of staunch old colonial stock, the original American ancestors having settled in New England prior to the war of the Revolution. He is himself a native of the old Pine Tree state, having been born in Brighton, Somerset county, Maine, on the 19th of January, 1860, and being a son of William E. and Almeda (Hight) Briggs, both of whom were likewise born in that state, where they were reared to maturity and where they continued to reside until 1865, when they removed to Iowa, the father having previously passed some time in California. They remained in Iowa until 1868, when they located in Olmstead county, Minnesota, where the honored father of our subject was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1881, when he came to South Dakota, passing the closing years of his life in Woonsocket, Sanborn county, where he died in 1899. His widow is still living, seventy-five years old. They were the parents of five sons, of whom the subject of this review was the youngest. His brother, George E. Briggs, who was a locomotive engineer on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, was killed in a wreck on that road near Bramhall, this state, on the 19th of July, 1899. The others are O. W. Briggs, of Rochester, Minnesota; W. T. and I. F. Briggs, of Woonsocket, South Dakota.

M. B. Briggs was about five years of age at the time of the family removal to the west, and his early educational training was secured in the public schools of Iowa and Minnesota. He remained at the parental home in Minnesota until he had attained the age of nineteen years, when, in 1879, he came to South Dakota and initiated his independent career by engaging in the butchering business in Huron, where he remained two years, at the expiration of which he rejoined his parents, who about that time took up their abode on their ranch in Sanborn county, this state. He continued to be associated in the work and management of the home place until 1894, when he removed to his present location, in Sterling county, twelve miles northeast of the little postoffice town of Leslie, among his neighbors in the locality being such well-known and honored citizens as John Robb, Senator Douglas F. Carlin and Louis La Plante, Sr., as well as others, who are individually mentioned in this compilation. Mr. Briggs has a well-improved and well-watered ranch of six hundred and forty acres, and the best of range facilities for his cattle, of which he runs a large herd each season. In politics he is a staunch adherent of the Democratic party, and fraternally he holds membership in the Modern Woodmen of America.

On the 8th of November, 1884, Mr. Briggs was united in marriage to Miss Kate U. Seely, who was born in Burns, La Crosse county, Wisconsin, being a daughter of Alfred and Louise (Miles) Seely, who removed thence to Elgin, Minnesota, when she was a mere child, and she was there reared and educated. Mr. and Mrs. Briggs have five sons, namely: Frederick, Frank, George, Walter and William.

DOUGLAS CARLIN, representative of Stanley and Lyman counties in the state senate, and one of the successful farmers and stock growers of this section of the state, is a native of the state of Illinois, having been born in Greene county, on the 20th of August, 1855, and being a son of Thomas J. and Mary (Kelly) Carlin, who were likewise born and reared in that state. William Carland, the grandfather of the subject, was born in the old Dominion state, where the family was established in the colonial days, and he became one of the early pioneers of Illinois, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death. He was associated with his brother Thomas, who later became one of the early governors of the state. The parents of the subject of this review are still living in Illinois, and the father, who has attained the venerable age of seventy-five years, has devoted his active life to farming. He served as register of deeds and clerk of the circuit court for a period of twelve years and is now living retired, in the town of Carrollton. His three children are all living, and the subject of this review is the only son.

Douglas Carlin passed his boyhood days in his native county, and received his rudimentary education in the public schools, after which he continued his studies in a school conducted by the Christian Brothers in the city of St. Louis, Missouri, entering the institution at the age of fifteen and remaining in the same for a period of four years. He then returned to his home and there attended school until he had attained his legal majority, when he was appointed deputy sheriff of Greene county, in which capacity he served one year, at the expiration of which, in 1877, he came to Bismarck, Dakota territory, and thence proceeded down the Missouri river to Fort Yates, where he joined his uncle, General William P. Carlin, who was in command of that military post. The General served with distinction during the war of the Rebellion, with the rank of major general, and was retired a number of years ago with the rank of brigadier general, while he now resides in the city of Spokane, Washington, in which state he has extensive real-estate interests. Upon reaching Fort Yates the subject was appointed quartermaster's clerk, and there served in that capacity until June, 1881, when he was ordered to Pierre by the chief quartermaster and there assigned to the supervision of the shipping department, issuing supplies to the different military posts up and down the Missouri river, including Fort Meade. He retained this position until 1885, when he was given a clerical office in the department of the interior and assigned to the Cheyenne Indian agency, where he continued in active service until the autumn of 1890. He then resigned his position and located on the Cheyenne river, where he has since been successfully engaged in the raising of cattle and horses, having a ranch of open range, well-improved and carrying on his enterprise on a large scale. He gives preference to the Hereford breed of cattle, keeping an average herd of about five hundred head, while he also raises an excellent grade of draft and road horses. In politics Mr. Carland gives an unwavering allegiance to the Democratic party, and in 1899 he was elected a member of the board of commissioners of Sterling county, while in 1902 he was elected to represent his county in the state senate, in which body he has proved a valuable working member. Fraternally the Senator is identified with the Masonic order and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 27th of August, 1887, Mr. Carlin was united in marriage to Miss Marcelle Dupree, who was born at Fort Sully, this state, being a daughter of Frederick Dupree, who resided in this section of the Union for sixty years, being a prominent and influential figure in the pioneer history of the state. He died in June, 1898, on his ranch, in Sterling county, at the advanced age of seventy-nine years. Of him individual mention is made on other pages of this work.

Mr. and Mrs. Carland have six children, namely: Lilly, Thomas, Walter, Laura, Bessie and Ruth.

JOSEPH J. STEHLY, of Hecla, Brown county, is a native of Lakeville, Dakota county, Minnesota, and a representative of one of the honored pioneer families of that state. He was born on the 3d of September, 1860, and is a son of John and Mary Stehly, the former of whom was born in Manheim, Baden, Germany, whence he immigrated to America when a young man, taking up his residence in Minnesota, where he turned his attention to farming, having been one of the early settlers of Dakota county, where he remained until the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion, when he showed his loyalty to the land of his adoption by enlisting as a member of Company K, Third Minnesota

Volunteer Cavalry, with which he served until the time of his death, which occurred on the 28th of August, 1864, at Pine Bluff, Arkansas, as the result of hardships endured while in the army. His wife survived him by many years, her death occurring in 1880, while their three children survive them. The father was but thirty-four years of age at the time of his death.

The subject was reared on the homestead farm and secured his early educational discipline in the public schools of Minnesota. He continued to be identified with the work and management of the homestead until 1884, when he entered upon an apprenticeship at the carpenter trade, becoming a skilled artisan in the line and following his trade in Minnesota until 1888, when he came to South Dakota, locating in the village of Hecla on the 30th of May of that year. Here he found ample demand upon his services as a contractor and builder, and in July, 1888, he purchased a half interest in a local furniture establishment, being associated in the enterprise with Fred Rock, under the firm name of Rock & Stehly. In 1890 the firm purchased the lumber yard of the town and continued to conduct both enterprises until January 20, 1892, when the partnership was dissolved and our subject secured the lumber business as his share. He has since conducted this most successfully, his trade being exceptionally large for a town of the size and this fact indicates that he is specially energetic, progressive and straightforward in his methods, his annual transactions reaching a large aggregate. As he is a thorough mechanic and an excellent judge of material, he is able to discriminate in the selection and care of stock, and this fact is appreciated by his patrons. He also carries a full line of builders' materials, including paints, glass, special hardware demanded in the line, etc. He is also the owner of a considerable amount of good farming land in the county, and has in the town an attractive modern residence, located in the vicinity of his lumber yards. Fraternally he holds membership in the Modern Woodmen of America, and he and his wife belong to the Roman Catholic church.

On the 12th of January, 1891, Mr. Stehly was united in marriage to Miss Katie Dietrich, who was born in Germany, whence she came to America with her parents when a child, being reared and educated in Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Stehly have six children, namely: Nicholas J., Michael W., Mary C., Frank J., Theodore H. and Leo P.

IVAN WILBUR GOODNER, of Pierre, a representative member of the bar of the state and president of the state board of regents of education, is a native of the state of Illinois, having been born in Washington county, on the 24th of July, 1858, and being a son of Rev. William Milton and Margaret Nancy (Edmiston) Goodner, natives respectively of the states of Tennessee and Kentucky, the former being of Holland Dutch lineage and the latter of English. Rev. William M. Goodner was a clergyman of the Methodist church for many years, and later was a Swedenborgian missionary in the western states, being a man of ripe scholarship and exalted integrity of character. The subject of this review received his early educational training in the public schools of the states of Illinois and Michigan, later attended Graham's Academy, in New York city, while he completed his technical law course in the law department of the University of Nebraska, at Lincoln, where he was graduated, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, in 1897. He had previously become an expert shorthand reporter, and to this vocation devoted his attention for a number of years. He came to what is now the state of South Dakota in 1884, and from 1880 to 1889 he followed the vocation noted. He was the first clerk of the supreme court of the state, resigning the office in 1896 to enter the practice of law. He was the official reporter of debates in the South Dakota constitutional conventions of 1885 and 1889, in 1898-9 was city attorney of Pierre, while he rendered most efficient service as state's attorney for Hughes county from 1900 to 1904. In 1901 he was appointed, by Governor Charles N. Herreid, a member of the state board of regents of education, being elected president of the board in 1903 and being still incumbent of that important office, in which connection his efforts have proved of great value in forwarding and conserving the educational interests of the state. He was admitted to the bar in 1885 and has won marked distinction both as a trial lawyer and a counsellor, having been identified with a large amount of important litigation, notably the long line of bond litigations in which the city of Pierre was involved. He carried these cases through the federal courts and to the supreme court of the United States, before which he was admitted to practice in April, 1901. In politics Mr. Goodner has ever been stanchly aligned as a radical Republican and has been an active worker in its cause in South Dakota. In the Masonic fraternity he has attained to the degrees of the commandery, was deputy grand master of the Masonic grand lodge of the state, and this year (1904) was elected grand master. He is also past grandmaster of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in South Dakota and is also identified with the Modern Woodmen of America.

On the 16th of September, 1880, Mr. Goodner was united in marriage to Miss Minnie Ada Perry, who was born in Bolton, Vermont, on the 24th of May, 1860, being a daughter of David and Emma (LeGro) Perry. Of their six children four are living, namely: Ivan E., Milton P., Grace E. and Ernest F. Those deceased are Mabel and Ruth.

JOHN GRAY, one of the sterling pioneers of the Black Hills, was born in Durham, England, on the 28th of February, 1846, and is a son of Henry and Elizabeth (Nelson) Gray, both of whom were born in Cumberland, England, as was also his grandfather, Henry Gray, who was there identified with mining during his entire business career. The father of the subject was reared in Cumberland and there followed the same vocation as did his honored sire. In 1840 he removed to Durham, where he continued the mining operations until his death, his wife also passing the closing years of her life there. Of their nine children six are living, while but one of the number is a resident of the United States.

The subject received somewhat limited educational advantages, since, as was customary with the majority of miners' sons in the locality, he early went to work in the mines. At the age of eight years he began work as a trapper in the Durham mines, and gradually rose step by step until he had attained the dignity of a full-fledged miner. He continued to be employed in the mines of his native county until he had attained the age of twenty-three years, when, in March, 1869, he came to America. He first located in Steubenville, Ohio, where he was engaged in mining for nine months, after which he went to the city of Pittsburg and there secured a position in the mines at Saw Mill run, on the Monongahela river, where he was employed until 1870, when he removed to the Scranton district and worked in the Dunmore mine for several months, after which he passed about six months in the Pittsburg district, where he had previously been employed. He then went to the Sugar Creek mines, in Ohio, and three months later went to Brazil, Clay county, Indiana, where the work of opening the first block-coal mines in this district was in progress, Mr. Gray being one of the first miners to be employed there. He remained until September, 1872, when he came west to Rock Springs, Wyoming, being one of the pioneer miners in that locality, and there organizing the first miners' union. In January of the following year he left for French Guiana, being one of a party of fifty-two men, recruited from Wyoming, Utah and Montana. They proceeded to Salem, Massachusetts, and there embarked on a sailing vessel, which in due time bore them to their destination. There they engaged in prospecting for gold, but owing to the peculiar laws in force in the country they found it practically impossible to secure title to any ground. John Murphy, with his wife and son, were the first to strike the pay streak, but conditions were such that they could not work the property to any profit, owing to the legal restrictions. Nine of the party died of yellow fever, and twenty-two were sent back to New York through the kindly interposition of the British consul, nineteen others scattered about in various localities and the four Wyoming men, John Hartler, John Brunskill, Edward Jeffries and Mr. Gray, sailed to Georgetown, British Guiana, where they remained four months and then set sail for New York, having been absent about nine months from the time of leaving Salem.

From the national capital the subject went into the Cumberland mountains in Tennessee, where he was employed for a while, and then he returned to Rock Springs, Wyoming, where he entered the employ of the Rock Spring Mining Company, by which he was sent to the mines in Carbon, that state. There he shortly afterward organized a company to start for the Black Hills, the intention being to make the trip under the guidance of "Tom's Son," a well-known stock man of Wyoming, but this individual received an offer of two thousand dollars from another party to compensate him for his services as guide, and as he accepted the proposition the other company abandoned the expedition. In the fall of 1875 Mr. Gray went to Des Moines, Iowa, where he remained until February of the following year, when he returned west to Cheyenne. In June following he started for the Black Hills with what was known as the Colorado Charlie and Wild Bill train, the first named being captain of the expedition, while Wild Bill and the husband of Madame Mustachio were his two lieutenants, the three being well-known characters on the frontier. They found a number of dead men at Indian creek and Red Canon, showing that the hostile Indians were in the proximity, but as their party was a large one, comprising one hundred and ninety persons, they were not molested by the savages while enroute, and arrived in Custer on the 14th of July. Among the women in the party were Calamity Jane (whose death occurred about a year ago), Madame Mustachio and Dirty Em., each of whom will be remembered by the old timers. Mr. Gray went to work in mine No. 79, below the smelter, on Whitewood creek, and Jack McCall was working on the next claim. On the 2d of August, 1876, McCall killed the man known as Wild Bill, the subject being at work at the time. He was intimately acquainted with the victim, and speaks of him as having been a square man, generous to a fault and possessed of many other admirable qualities. In April, 1877, Mr. Gray returned to Cheyenne for his wife, and they had a pleasant trip on the way back. After his return to the hills Mr. Gray purchased claim No. 2 above discovery in Deadwood gulch, and continued to work the same until November of the following year, when he found it unprofitable to continue operations, as it was virtually worked out. He realized a large sum from this claim. In December, 1878, he removed to Terraville, where he purchased what was then known as the Caledonia boarding house, which historic building he still occupies as his home, having modernized and otherwise improved the property. He continued to be identified with mining enterprises, having been for a time in the Carbonate camp in the Bald mountains, and in January, 1884, he left for the Coeur d'Alene mining district of Idaho, being one of the first in that now famous district. He bought the discovery claim on Pritchard creek, and there sunk what is known as the Combination shaft, this being the first sunk and drifted upon up to that time. The venture proved a distinctive failure and he sunk twenty thousand dollars as well as his unprofitable shaft, having remained there for a period of thirteen months. He then returned to the Carbonate camp, where he had heavy interests, and there remained until the enterprise went down. He then went on with his mining in the Ruby basin, and still owns valuable interests in that section. In 1896 Mr. Gray, in company with John Blatchford, D. A. McPherson and W. L. McLaughlin, purchased what was known as the McShane property, in the Yellow creek or Flatiron district, and this was operated thereafter under the general management of Mr. Blatchford, as a shipping proposition—that is, the ore was shipped out instead of being treated on the ground. In 1898 Mr. Gray became general manager and work was continued as before until 1900, when the company built a fifty-ton cyanide plant, whose ca-capacity was doubled five months later, and since that time the property has been working only quartzite, as a coarse-crushing proposition, quarter mesh. In 1900 the work was carried to a depth of only five feet into the quartzite ledge, and during the last year the company have penetrated to a depth of twenty feet, with a width of three hundred feet. The development is giving good returns and the subject is the largest individual stockholder, as well as general manager of the company, which is incorporated as the Wasp No. 2 Mining Company. Mr. Gray has maintained his home in Terraville since 1878 and is one of the honored and public-spirited citizens of the town and county. In politics he is found arrayed as a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and fraternally he has attained the thirty-second degree of Scottish-rite Masonry, being also a member of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine and the Order of the Eastern Star, while aside from the Masonic affiliations he has been identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows since 1870 and with the Knights of Pythias since 1871; while he also enjoys the goodfellowship implied in his membership in the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a member of the American Mining Congress and a director of the Mining Men's Association of the Black Hills. He is also an ex-president of the Black Hills Pioneer Association.

In 1875 Mr. Gray was united in matrimony to Miss Ellen Chamberlain, who was born in St. Ellens, Lancastershire, England, while her marriage to the subject was solemnized in the city of Chicago. She was summoned into eternal rest on the 13th of March, 1898, and is held in loving memory by all who knew her. No children were born of this union.

JOSEPH ELSOM, one of the representative business men and land owners of Spink county, is a native of England, having been born in Lincolnshire, on the 13th of December, 1840, and being a son of Wilson Elsom, who came with his family to America in 1853, passing the first winter in the province of New Brunswick, Canada, and then locating in the state of New York, where his death occurred two years later. The subject of this sketch was the second eldest of the eight children and was but thirteen years of age at the time of his father's death, so that he was thus early thrown to a large degree upon his own resources, also contributing to the support of the other members of the family. He had attended the schools of his native county in England, and also continued his studies when opportunity presented after coming to America. He was engaged in various occupations in the state of New York until the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion, when he gave significant evidence of his loyalty to the land of his adoption by enlisting, on the 13th of October, 1861, as a private in Company F, Eighth New York Volunteer Cavalry, which was commanded by Colonel Crooks and assigned to the Army of the Potomac. The subject was with his command when it cut its way out from Harper's Ferry, and thereafter was an active participant in the battles of Fredericksburg, Gettysburg, second battle of Bull Run, Antietam and Beverly Ford, where Colonel B. F. Davis, commander, was killed. Mr. Elsom continued as a member of the Army of the Potomac and in active service for three years and four months, making a record as a faithful and valiant soldier and taking part in forty-nine of the fifty-four engagements in which his regiment was in action. He received his honorable discharge on the 15th of December, 1864. His brother, Thomas, was a member of the same regiment, and was wounded in the engagement at Berksdale Junction, Virginia, in the Wilson raid, his death resulting from his injury some time later while on furlough.

After the close of his military career Mr. Elsom returned to the state of New York, where he remained until 1880, when he came to the present state of South Dakota and located on a tract of government land two miles south of Northville, Spink county, where he engaged in farming and also in the buying and shipping of grain, with which lines of industrial enterprise he has ever since been identified. To his original claim he has added until he now has a finely improved farm of eight hundred acres, his youngest son having the general management of the place, while the subject devoted the major portion of his attention to his grain business, until January 1, 1904. He is one of the progressive and highly honored business men and popular citizens of the county with whose annals his name has been linked for nearly a quarter of a century. He is a stalwart Republican in politics, and has served with ability and discrimination in the various township offices, while fraternally he is affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

In August, 1860, Mr. Elsom was married to Miss Jane Harmer, who was born in Norfolk, England, and of their children we enter the following brief record: Nancy N. is deceased; Emma Jane, deceased; Thomas H. is superintendent of construction for the Inland Telephone and Telegraph Company, with headquarters in the beautiful city of Spokane, Washington; Annie Laurie is the wife of Francis Kingsley, of Mansfield, Brown county, this state; Charles W. is engaged in business in Northville; Evert J. is residing in New York state; Wilson J. has charge of the old homestead, and Eliza J., deceased, and Mary E., twins, the latter the wife of John H. LeMay, editor of the Northville Journal.

GEORGE D. PARR, D. D. S., of Pierre, is a native of the state of New Jersey, having been born in Warren county, on the 25th of December, 1855, and being a son of Levi J. and Margaret (Deats) Parr, both of whom were likewise born in New Jersey, the ancestry of the former being of English extraction and of the latter sturdy Holland Dutch, while both families were founded in America in the colonial epoch. The paternal great-grandfather of the Doctor was a valiant soldier in the Continental line during the war of the Revolution, while the maternal ancestors were numbered among the very early settlers in New Jersey and New York.

Levi J. Parr became a successful farmer and was one of the influential citizens of his section, ever commanding the respect of all who knew him. He was twice married, and of the three children of the first union the subject of this sketch was the youngest. After the death of his first wife Levi J. Parr married Mrs. Lavina Huffman, and they became the parents of seven children, while of his ten children all are living except one.

Dr. Parr passed his boyhood days in New Jersey and when he was about fifteen years of age his parents removed to Michigan, locating in Wayne county, where the father continued to follow agricultural pursuits during the remainder of his life. The Doctor secured his early educational discipline in the public schools of his native county and later continued his studies in the schools of Wayne county, Michigan, where he remained a student until he had attained the age of twenty years. In the meanwhile he had determined to adopt the dental profession as his vocation in life, and with this end in view he entered the office of Dr. A. H. Lacey, of Clarks-ton, Michigan, under whose effective direction he gained a most excellent knowledge of all phases of dental work, both operative and laboratory, and, proving himself well qualified, he was admitted to practice in the Wolverine state. In 1874 he engaged in practice at Davisburg, Michigan, where he remained two years, after which he was successfully established in practice at Wayne, that state, until 1882, when he came to the present state of South Dakota and took up his residence in Pierre, being one of the first representatives of his profession in this part of the state. Here he has ever since been engaged in practice, and he now controls a very extensive and representative business, while his offices are equipped with the best of modern accessories and the methods utilized are of the maximum standard of excellence. The Doctor has manifested a lively interest in all that has touched the progress and material upbuilding of the capital city and has been largely interested in local real estate. At the present time he is the owner of valuable property on Folsom avenue, adjoining the grounds of the state capitol. In politics the Doctor has ever given an uncompromising allegiance to the Democratic party, in whose ranks he has been an active and valued worker. For the past decade he has been chairman of the Democratic central committee of Hughes county, and in the connection has ably marshalled the forces under his executive control. He was for two years incumbent of the office of city auditor, and prior to his removal to South Dakota, was a member of the village council of Wayne, Michigan. Fraternally he is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Knights of the Maccabees.

On the 8th of July, 1876, was solemnized the marriage of Dr. Parr to Miss Celia J. Post, who was born in Wayne county, Michigan, on the 6th of September, 1857, being a daughter of Cornelius and Eliza (Westerfield) Post, the former of whom was born in New York and the latter in New Jersey. Mrs. Parr was summoned into eternal rest on the 6th of September, 1903, and is survived by one child, Grace, who is the wife of John P. Erickson, a prominent business man of Pierre. Mrs. Parr was a woman of beautiful attributes of character and was held in affectionate regard by all who came within the sphere of her gracious influence. She was a devoted member of the Baptist church, and was a member of the choir of the local church of this denomination for a period of twelve years.

JOHN A. FYLPAA, a prominent merchant and valued citizen of Frederick, Brown county, was born in Norway, on the 5th of January, 1860, and there his parents maintained their home until their deaths. The father died in 1901, aged eighty-eight years, while the mother passed away in 1902, aged eighty years. He was reared and educated in his native land, where he remained until 1878, when he came to America and settled in St. Croix county, Wisconsin, where he continued to reside until 1882, having been for an interval engaged in the mercantile business at Deer Park, that state, in company with his brother Carl. In the year mentioned he disposed of his interests there and came to South Dakota, arriving in Frederick in September of that year. Here he opened a general store, beginning operations on a modest scale. By careful management and scrupulous attention to the demands of his patrons, he soon found his business increasing in scope and importance, and in 1884 his brother, Thomas H. Fylpaa, bought a one-half interest in the store, and they found it expedient to secure larger quarters and augment the stock of goods. In this second store they continued to do a successful business until November, 1894, when the establishment was destroyed by fire. The subject shortly afterward opened business in another store, which continued to be his headquarters until 1899, when he took possession of his present well-equipped store, which is twenty-six by seventy feet in dimensions, with excellent appointments and large and select stock in each of the several departments. He also has a commodious warehouse in connection. In 1901 Mr. Fylpaa also engaged in the real-estate business, in which he is associated with his brother, Thomas H., and they have built up an excellent enterprise in the line, having controlled a large amount of valuable farming land in the county, while at the present time they own or control about seventy-five quarter sections, all of which represent desirable investments.

In politics Mr. Fylpaa is a stanch Populist and the high confidence and esteem in which he is held has been signally manifested in the official preferment which has been accorded him. In 1890 he was elected county treasurer, and in 1896 he was again called to this office, while in 1898 he was chosen as his own successor, being elected on the independent or Alliance ticket. He is absolutely independent in voting, and will vote for the best man, regardless of party. He was elected the first city clerk of Frederick, at the time of its incorporation, and held this office two years, and he is at present time president of the board of education. Fraternally he is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and its auxiliary, the Degree of Honor, and also with the Modern Brotherhood of America. Mr. Fylpaa was married in 1892 and is the father of three children.

GEORGE HARRISON HOFFMAN, who is associated with his sons, Benjamin and John, in the ownership and management of the Park farm and stock range, near Bangor, Walworth county, was born in Adams county, Pennsylvania, on the 21st of January, 1838, and his father, George Rosenmiller Hoffman, was likewise a native of the old Keystone state and of stanch German ancestry, the family having been founded in Pennsylvania in the colonial epoch, as was also that of the mother of our subject, whose maiden name was Sarah Jane Cramer, and who likewise was born and reared in the state mentioned. In his earlier life George R. Hoffman was a teamster or freighter by vocation, and his six-horse teams were employed in doing heavy freighting to and from Baltimore, Maryland; Wheeling, Virginia (now West Virginia); Little York, Harrisburg and Gettysburg, Pennsylvania. Later he was engaged in teaching in town and village schools in Pennsylvania, being well educated in both German and English and being a man of superior mentality. In 1844 he removed with his family to Indiana and settled on a farm in Butler township, Dekalb county, the section at that time being an untrammelled wilderness and covered with a dense forest. With the aid of his three sturdy sons he cleared and improved his farm, and for a number of years was employed as teacher in the pioneer schools of the locality during the winter months. He was for many years incumbent of the office of justice of the peace, and also practiced law in the lower courts. Later he was elected auditor of Dekalb county, in which capacity he served two terms. In politics he was an old-line Whig and was an ardent supporter of William Henry Harrison for the presidency. He was present at the birth of the Republican party and was loyal to the party and the nation, and Abraham Lincoln was his ideal President. He died in 1889, at the venerable age of seventy-two years, his devoted wife having preceded him into eternal rest by many years, her death occurring in 1848. They became the parents of three sons and three daughters, concerning whom we incorporate the following brief record: Elmira E., who was married to Jonathan Weaver, died about a decade ago; Rev. Joseph O. is now a resident of Lima, Ohio, having been a clergyman of the Lutheran church of that city for many years; he graduated from the Lutheran college at Columbus, Ohio, and was ordained a minister of the gospel in 1860; John Henry, who is now a resident of Ligonier, Indiana, and who was a member of Company K, Forty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, during the Civil war, having been wounded in the battle of Shiloh and having been discharged from service by reason of resulting physical disability; was postmaster at Ligonier for eight years and is one of the substantial and influential citizens of his county; he was educated in the high schools of Dekalb and Noble counties and after the close of the war taught in the schools of Ligonier; George H. is the immediate subject of this sketch; Sarah J. Mathens is a resident of near Toledo, Ohio, and Rebecca Middleton is a resident of Joplin, Missouri. John Hoffman, the paternal grandfather of the subject, was born and reared in Pennsylvania and was a division wagon master in the Continental army during the war of the Revolution.

George H. Hoffman was reared to manhood on the pioneer homestead in Dekalb county, Indiana, and his education was secured principally at home and under the direction of his honored father. He thus conned his lessons by the light of the tallow candle and the blaze of hickory bark from the great fireplace, after the day's work on the farm was done. He also attended the common schools as opportunity afforded and was for one term, of six months, a student in Kells Academy, near Hunterstown, Allen county, Indiana, so that he laid substantial foundations for that broad fund of knowledge which he has gained in the practical school of experience and active association with men and affairs. Mr. Hoffman initiated his independent career as a farmer and carpenter in 1859 and continued to follow these occupations until 1864, when he enlisted in Company A, Thirteenth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, which became a part of the Third Brigade, Second Division, Tenth Army Corps, the division being commanded by General Ames, while the corps was commanded for a time by General Benjamin F. Butler and later by General Terry. Mr. Hoffman was an active participant in the engagements at Chapin's Bluff, near Richmond, Virginia, and in the campaign which thereafter extended through and including the engagements at Deep Bottom, Dutch Gap canal and Bermuda Hundred, and later was with the expedition which operated against Fort Fisher and Newbern, North Carolina. He took an active part in the battle at Fort Fisher, Fort Caswell being evacuated upon the fall of Fort Fisher, and assisted in the capture of Fort Anderson and Fort Sugarloaf, Wilmington, South Carolina; Mount Olive, Bentonville, Goldsboro and Raleigh, being stationed in the last mentioned city at the time of the surrender of Johnston's army. He was mustered out of the service, at Goldsboro, North Carolina, on the 5th of September, 1865, and received his honorable discharge, in the city of Indianapolis, Indiana, about two weeks later.

After the close of his faithful and valiant service as a soldier of the republic Mr. Hoffman returned to Dekalb county, Indiana, where he effected the purchase of the old homestead farm upon which his father had originally located and upon which he himself had been reared to manhood. Four years later he disposed of the farm and removed to Auburn, Indiana, where he engaged in the handling of agricultural implements, building up an excellent business and there continuing operations in the line for a period of seven years. In September, 1883, he came to what is now the state of South Dakota, and with his two eldest sons, William and Sigel, took up government land in Walworth county, and here they have improved a valuable estate, the same being the present home of our subject and his family. The home farm comprises six hundred and forty acres of good land, as does the stock farm, and the improvements on the property are of the best order, while they are known as the most valuable agricultural and stock farms in this section, and Mr. Hoffman has attained a high degree of success in his operations, in which he has been ably assisted by his sons.

When South Dakota was admitted to the Union, in 1889, Mr. Hoffman was nominated by the Republicans of the thirty-sixth senatorial district, composed of the counties of Walworth and Campbell, to represent the district in the upper house of the first general assembly of the new commonwealth. He was victorious at the polls and proved a valuable and popular member of the legislature, whose work was exacting, onerous and important in the formative period, when much was to be accomplished and planned for the well-being of the state. At the state Republican convention held in Mitchell in 1890 Mr. Hoffman was made the nominee of his party for the office of lieutenant governor, being elected to this office and serving one term, while in 1892 he was a candidate for governor and in the state convention of his party, at Madison, received the second highest vote of the convention on the first ballot, Hon. Charles Sheldon being finally accorded the nomination. Mr. Hoffman cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, in 1860 and has ever since given an unfaltering allegiance to the Republican party. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and he and his wife are Free Methodists.

On the 27th of September, 1860, Mr. Hoffman was united in marriage to Miss Sarah J. Crouse, who was born in Dayton, Ohio, in the year 1841, being a daughter of Charles F. and Barbra (Warbel) Crouse. In 1852 her parents removed to Fort Wayne, Indiana, and there she was reared and educated, the family home having been there for many years. To Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman have been born eleven children, concerning whom we offer the following brief record: William Elmer, who is now register of deeds of Walworth county; Sigel F., barber and confectioner at Selby, Walworth county; Laura M., the wife of Caleb Smithers, editor of the Bowdle Pioneer; George Henry died in 1888, at the age of twenty-one years; Charles Franklin and William are photographers and put in the first photograph gallery at the county seat of Walworth county; they both own farms of their own; Clara E. Clark is a resident of Selby; Edward C. owns and controls a farm of his own; Benjamin H. and John J. are associated with their father in the stock farm, consisting of six hundred and forty acres; Jessie Estella is at home, while Ethel Mabel is associate editor of the Pioneer and lives with her sister, Mrs. Smithers, at Bowdle, Edwards county, South Dakota.

SAMUEL O. OVERBY, United States Indian trader and dealer in general merchandise at the Cheyenne Agency, in Dewey county, is a native of Norway, where he was born on the 20th of October, 1865, being a son of Ole and Aaste Overby, the former of whom was a prosperous farmer in Norway. The subject was reared in his native land and received his educational discipline in the excellent national schools, being graduated in the high school in December, 1883. In 1884 he emigrated to the United States and came at once to South Dakota, taking up his residence in Campbell county, engaging in the mercantile business in Mound City. He was for three years a member of the board of county commissioners and for two years served as postmaster of Mound City, while for one year he was incumbent of the office of county treasurer, by appointment, and by election served two years as register of deeds of the county. In 1900 he removed to Cheyenne Agency, where he has since been the United States Indian trader, having a well-equipped general merchandise establishment and dealing in hats, caps, clothing, hardware, drugs, boots and shoes, saddlery and harness, buggies, etc. In politics he is a staunch adherent of the Republican party and takes a lively interest in the party cause, and his religious faith is that of the Lutheran church, of which Mrs. Overby likewise is a devoted member.

At Mound City, Campbell county, on the 11th of June, 1894, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Overby to Miss Annie Amundson, and they have one child, Alfa, born July 2, 1899.

REV. HUGH H. JONES, whose untimely death, on October 2, 1895, at the age of fifty-five years, was universally lamented throughout the community, was a native of Wales, born on May 2, 1840. He remained in his native land until he was sixteen years of age, and was educated there. In 1856 he came to the United States, and having chosen the Christian ministry as his profession, entered college and pursued a thorough course of theological training, at the end of which he was ordained to preach in the Methodist church. After preaching in towns of central Wisconsin for a number of years, he moved to Boone county, Iowa, in 1870, and did ministerial work there for three years. He then returned to Wisconsin and remained two years, after which he passed another year in Boone county, Iowa. In 1878 he brought his family to the Black Hills, arriving at Rapid City in July. Here he served as pastor of the Methodist church two years and also carried on a flourishing furniture business, continuing the latter until the spring of 1881, when he located a ranch on Rapid creek, about fifteen miles from the town. He settled on the land and devoted his energies to improving it and raising cattle and horses until his death. But while giving his attention to the promotion of his own business he never lost interest or withheld activity in matters of public concern, working faithfully and intelligently for the general good in all lines of religious and public usefulness. In politics he was an earnest Republican and a devoted servant of his party. His death was a great loss to the community in many ways, and his memory is cordially cherished by all classes of the people. Since the sad event his widow and children have continued to live on the ranch, together managing its affairs and carrying forward the development and improvements he had planned and begun. The sons are bright and capable, and meet every duty in a manly and courageous manner, devoting their energies to the farm work and their cattle interests, and taking their place in the community as forceful factors among the best of its people.

Mr. Jones was married on March 26, 1872, to Miss Maria M. Burkhart, a native of Pennsylvania, the marriage being solemnized in Boone county, Iowa, where both were living at the time. Ten children blessed their union, of whom eight are living, May (Mrs. Ehrler), William H., Centennial A. (Mrs. Hart), Catherine M. (Mrs. Payne), Arthur, Minnie, Gladys, Herbert. Ithel and Dio are deceased. The family has maintained the position in the esteem of the community won by their father, and by their course in life reflect credit upon him as well as upon themselves.

FRANK A. MORRIS was born on a farm near Nora, Illinois, on December 15, 1855, the son of Crowell E. and Nancy P. (Voris) Morris, and the seventh child of ten children. He received his education in the common schools of Jo Daviess county, the high school of Warren, and the Northwestern Normal, of Galena, Illinois. After leaving school he became a tenant on his father's farm for a period of five years. From that time on until 1882 he taught school and farmed. In 1882 he entered a homestead in Hutchinson county, Dakota territory, where he remained until March, 1892, when he rented his farm and entered the real-estate and banking business at Tripp, South Dakota; continued in the banking business, of which he was president, until 1896, when he sold his bank to his cashier. He remained in the real-estate business until appointed surveyor general for the district of South Dakota by President McKinley in 1898, being reappointed by Roosevelt in 1902. In politics he is a Republican and served in the seventeenth and eighteenth sessions of the territorial legislature. He is a member of the Parkston lodge of Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Lodge No. 444, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, at Huron, South Dakota.

Mr. Morris was married October 15, 1879, to Elizabeth A. Carpenter, and they have three children, Lulu B., Ada M. and Helen N., all living with the exception of the eldest daughter, who died September 26, 1902.

JUSTIN LEVI SPAULDING was born in Mooretown, Vermont, June 17, 1841. He was educated at the state normal school at Bloomington, Illinois, entering this institution at the age of sixteen. He pursued his studies here until the outbreak of the Civil war in 1861, when he enlisted in the Thirty-third Illinois Infantry, under Colonel Oglesby. He served in the army until his health became broken, when he was discharged, and returning to Bloomington, he re-entered the normal school, from which he soon graduated with high honors. After leaving the normal school he was elected city surveyor of Bloomington and county surveyor of McLean county, Illinois. Following this he was elected city clerk of Bloomington, which position he retained until 1865. In May, 1863, he was married to Miss Adra A. Stiles, also a graduate from the State Normal, in Rochelle, Illinois. Soon after his marriage he removed to Chicago where for two years or more Mr. Spaulding did court reporting in the criminal courts and gained a wide reputation as an expert stenographer, being second in speed in the United States. In 1882 Mr. Spaulding came to Huron, South Dakota, and took a position in the United States land office; this he filled for seven years or more, during which time he was elected a member of the board of county commissioners, serving as its chairman for two years. Meanwhile he was admitted to the South Dakota bar. In 1889 he was elected county clerk of Beadle county, and two years later he was re-elected to the same office. The following spring he was taken seriously sick, and on May 22, 1891, he passed away. He was survived by his wife and one daughter, Rose Blanche, who still reside in Huron. His daughter in later years has become quite prominent in the work of several of the state lodges and has been honored with the position of department secretary of the state Woman's Relief Corps, and with various offices in the Rebekah state assembly, and is at present the warden of that body. She is also a member of the local Order of the Eastern Star. At the time of his death, Mr. Spaulding was a prominent Odd Fellow, an influential Mason, and a leading member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. Spaulding was prominent in the political affairs of both Illinois and South Dakota during his life time, and was universally esteemed by all who were privileged to know him.

HARVEY J. RICE, receiver of the United States land office at Huron, and grand secretary of the Odd Fellows in South Dakota, was born at Freeport, Illinois, April 23, 1849, the son of John and Milvira (Williams) Rice. In his childhood his parents removed to Nauvoo, where Harvey attended the common schools, and later graduated from the University of Carlinville, in 1865. It was at this time his intention to become a lawyer and to that end he became a student in the law office of George Scoville, in Chicago, but developing taste along commercial lines he took the business course in the Bryant & Stratton College of Chicago and in 1869, in company with his brother John, engaged in the dry-goods business in Chicago, in which he continued until the fire in 1871. Soon after they engaged in general merchandise at Austin, Illinois, disposing of the same in 1875 to enter the employ of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway. When the Dakota divisions were under construction he was made storekeeper in charge of all material and in that capacity came to Dakota and established company headquarters in Huron in 1880. He continued with the railway company until 1887, when he resigned to become teller in the Huron National Bank and continued in this position until appointed railway commissioner for Dakota territory by Governor Mellette in the spring of 1889. This position he held through two terms, until March, 1893, when he engaged in the mercantile business in Huron, which he still conducts. In 1884 he was elected mayor of Huron and re-elected for five terms. In 1902 he was appointed receiver of the land office and continues in the position. He is an ardent Republican and is one of the party's safest counselors.

Mr. Rice is a thirty-second-degree Mason, a Knight Templar, and is a past grand master of the order in the state. He is also a prominent Odd Fellow and for four years represented the state in the sovereign grand lodge. He has been the grand secretary of the order for the past ten years.

Mr. Rice was married, December 25, 1873, to Miss Elizabeth Kimes. Two sons have been born to them, John A., who was drowned in the James river at Huron, and George H., who is engaged in business in Huron. South Dakota has no more competent, reliable, and useful citizen than Harvey J. Rice.

ROBERT HILL, M. D., a leading physician of Ipswich, South Dakota, was born in the north of Ireland (County Antrim), April 10, 1865, and is the son of Joseph and Harriett (Collins) Hill. The father was also a native of North Ireland, is a farmer by occupation, and still resides in Ireland, being now in his seventy-sixth year. The mother died in 1892.

Doctor Hill was reared in County Antrim, and during the period of his youth, between the age of eleven and fourteen years, he attended the Lesburn Academy. From this institution he matriculated into the Queen's University, Belfast, where he partially completed the medical course, spending about three years at the university. In 1885 he came to the United States and joined his brother in McPherson county, South Dakota, with whom he remained a few years, and then went to Keokuk, Iowa, and entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons in that city, where he was graduated in 1894. He began the practice of medicine at Leola, McPherson county, South Dakota, during the summer of 1894, following which he visited his old home in Ireland, where he spent most of that winter. In the spring of 1895 he returned to the United States and, stopping in New York and Chicago, spent some time in hospital work. He then located at Ipswich. The Doctor is a member of the Aberdeen District Medical Society, the South Dakota Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is a thirty-second-degree Mason, and also belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, the Knights of the Maccabees and the Ancient Order of United Workmen, being medical examiner for the three orders. He has served as coroner of McPherson county for the past eight years. He is a Republican in politics and in religion is a member of the Congregational church.

Dr. Hill was married, September 18, 1895, to Bird R. Roe, who was born in Michigan, and to them have been born three children, Helen Harriett, Ruth Elizabeth and Robert Roe.

FRED ANDREW SEAMAN, secretary of the Big Four Land and Cattle Company, incorporated, of Faulkton, was born at Arcade, Wyoming county, New York, on March 11, 1857. His parents were Andrew and Mary A. (Jackman) Seaman, the former a native of Holland, who came to America when he was seventeen years old with his people. The mother was born in Sardinia, Erie county, New York. The father died in 1882, and the mother has made her home in Faulkton, being now in her seventieth year. Her mother resides at Oshkosh, Wisconsin, and is in her ninety-first year.

Fred A. Seaman resided in Arcade, New York, until he was twenty-five years of age. He received a common-school and academic education. He then took a four-years course at reading law in the office of the district attorney's office of Wyoming county, and was admitted to practice both in New York and South Dakota. He came to South Dakota in 1883, and located at La Foon, which afterwards became the first county seat of Faulk county. He organized the Faulk County Bank in La Foon in 1885, of which he became cashier. He removed to Faulkton in the fall of 1886, moving the bank from La Foon. The bank was closed in 1890. He was on a ranch for five years, which ranch he still owns, it being seven miles southeast of Faulkton, and containing six hundred and forty acres.

Mr. Seaman was married December 2, 1886, to Miss Julia E. Smith, of La Foon, the daughter of Hon. D. S. Smith, who served in the South Dakota state senate. To the union two sons and five daughters have been born, of whom only the sons are living, Leonard A. and Paul S.

Mr. Seaman is a Mason, being a member of the blue lodge and chapter, Modern Woodmen of America, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Royal Arcanum. He is a member of the Congregational church, and is superintendent of the Sunday school for the past three years. For the last three years he has been secretary of the Big Four Land and Cattle Company. For seven years he was district collector for the Deering and McCormick Harvester Companies.

CHARLES A. BLAKE, register of the United States land office at Huron, is a native of Port Washington, Wisconsin, where he was born August 20, 1854. He is the son of Barnum and Christine Blake. He was educated in the Port Washington common schools, attended the Racine College and graduated from the academy at Winnetka, Illinois, and from Drew's Business College. He was a partner in the People's Bank of Chicago and also engaged in the coal business until 1878, when he became the Chicago correspondent of the New York Commercial Review, continuing in this position until he came to Dakota in 1882 and located at Wessington in the real-estate and insurance business. In 1890 he purchased the Wessington Times, which he still conducts. In 1898 he was appointed by President McKinley to his present position. Mr. Blake was always a Republican and has been prominent in party affairs during his long residence in South Dakota. He is a prominent Mason, belonging to the commandery and the Shrine, and is also a member of the Huron lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Mr. Blake was married, December 16, 1884, to Miss Minnie M. Barnes. They have four children, all excellent students in the Huron schools, George B., Ambrose B., Elma B. and Nellie M. The prominence which Mr. Blake has attained in the community is but a recognition of his integrity, ability and public spirit.

REV. S. H. STEVENS, an honored resident of Gregory county, is a native of the Empire state of the Union and a scion of stanch old New England stock. He was born on a farm in Cattaraugus county, New York, on the 18th of April, 1837, being a son of Levi and Nancy (Van Tassel) Stevens, the latter of whom was born in the state of New York, being of the sturdy Holland Dutch lineage. The father of the subject was born in Vermont, where he was reared to the age of twelve years, when he accompanied his parents on their removal to the state of New York, where he passed the remainder of his life, engaged in agricultural pursuits. His father was for many years engaged in the nursery business in the old Green Mountain state, his property in this line being destroyed during the war of 1812. He located in Niagara county, New York, where his death occurred, while his son Levi died in Cattaraugus county, where he was engaged in farming for many years. He was a Democrat in politics and was a devoted member of the Baptist church, having been identified with one church organization for the long period of sixty-one years, and having been eighty-four years of age at the time of his death, while his wife also passed away at the age of eighty-four years. They became the parents of five sons, all of whom are living.

Rev. S. H. Stevens was reared on the home farm and secured his elementary education in the common schools of his native county, supplementing this by a course of study in Adrian, Michigan, and early determining to prepare himself for the ministry of the Baptist church. He was ordained in 1866, at New Haven, Macomb county, Michigan, and in 1868 removed to Oakland county, Michigan, where he was engaged in the work of his noble calling for the ensuing four years, and thereafter he held for two years the pastorate of the Baptist church at Lenox, Ashtabula county, Ohio. At the expiration of this period he removed to Correctionville, Woodbury county, Iowa, and there continued his effective labors in the vineyard of the divine Master until 1895, when he came to South Dakota and became a pioneer of what is now Gregory county. Here he took up a homestead claim of government land, and on a portion of the same the thriving little village of Bonesteel is located. He was the first regular pastor of the first Free Baptist church organized in the county, and the Baptist church of Bonesteel was the first edifice of the sort erected in the county by the English-speaking people. The subject retired from the active work of the ministry in 1897, but still continues to exercise the functions of his ecclesiastical offices at intervals.

When the dark cloud of civil war obscured the national horizon, Mr. Stevens was among the first to tender service in defense of the Union. In July, 1861, he enlisted as a private in Company F, Sixty-fourth New York Volunteer Infantry, the command being stationed at Elmira until the following October, for the purpose of tactical discipline. The regiment then proceeded to the national capital, remaining in its defensive force until December, when it crossed the Potomac and camped near Alexandria, Virginia, during the winter. It took part in the engagement at Manassas Junction, in the following spring, and then moved onward to old Fortress Monroe and took part in the Peninsular campaign. The subject was an active participant, under General McClellan, in the engagement at Fair Oaks, where he received a wound in the neck, but joined his regiment in time to participate in the battles of Antietam and Chancellorsville, where before crossing the river he was taken ill with fever. He, however, recovered to start forward with his command on the way to Gettysburg, but while enroute suffered a sunstroke, which compelled him to enter the hospital, where he remained until about twenty days before his three-years term of enlistment expired, and received his honorable discharge at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in June, 1864. He retains a deep interest in his old comrades in arms and signifies the same by retaining membership in the Grand Army of the Republic, while he is also identified with the Independent Order of Good Templars. In politics Mr. Stevens has ever given his allegiance to the Republican party.

The subject has attained marked temporal success, and that through consecutive and indefatigable work. He is now the owner of seven hundred and twenty-three acres of valuable land, about three miles distant from Bonesteel, near which village he also owns an additional one hundred and twenty acres.

On the 5th of March, 1865, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Stevens to Miss Angeline Bassett, who was born in Cattaraugus county, New York, being a daughter of Daniel and Abigail (Libbey) Bassett. Daniel Bassett was born in Washington county, New York, on the 17th of September, 1806, and became a tanner and currier by vocation, while he eventually removed to Cattaraugus county, where he followed this line of enterprise until his retirement, his death there occurring in 1873, while his wife passed away in 1877. Of their nine children all are living except one. Mr. and Mrs. Stevens have two children, Howard, who is now foreman in the painting department of the Great Northern Railroad Company, in the city of St. Paul, Minnesota, and Mabel A., who is the wife of William Redmon, a successful farmer of Plymouth county, Iowa.

JOHN LONGSTAFF is the son of George and Mary (Bradbury) Longstaff and was born at Newport, New York, May 22, 1863. He received his education in the public schools and at twenty years of age landed in Huron, where for two years he was employed upon the Daily Times. He was then with the Davenport (Iowa) Gazette for a couple of years, but in 1887 returned to Huron and purchased an interest in the Huronite, and has since continued in that connection, since 1896 having been the sole owner of the establishment. Mr. Longstaff was appointed postmaster at Huron by President Harrison, and was appointed by Governor Lee member of the non-partisan committee to investigate all of the state institutions since statehood. He was chairman of the appropriation committee of the house of representatives in the legislature of 1903 and has since been reappointed postmaster of Huron by President Roosevelt. As a citizen and business man, Mr. Longstaff is public-spirited, clean, energetic, a leader in every movement for the advancement of his community. As a public official he has exemplified ideal, popular and economical government. As an editorial writer he has developed an individuality which has given to his newspaper, the Daily Huronite, a classification all its own; strong, trenchant, clean; a fearless advocate of righteousness in private and political life, which has given to it a place of the first influence in state affairs.

Mr. Longstaff is a member of Syracuse Lodge, No. 16, Knights of Pythias, and of Huron Lodge, No. 444, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He was married in 1887 to Miss Rose Schechtel, of Racine, Wisconsin, and they are the parents of three masterful boys, Ralph S., George Elbert and John Walter.

ARTHUR E. CLARK, cashier of the Bank of Hecla, is a native of the old Empire state, having been born in Onondaga county, New York, on the 2d of April, 1863, and being a son of Fayette and Priscilla (Spaulding) Clark, both of whom were likewise born and reared in that county, while Chester Clark, the paternal grandfather, was a native of Connecticut, whence he removed to New York state in an early day. The family is of English extraction and was founded in New England in the colonial epoch of our history, while it is interesting to note that our subject is in the sixth generation of direct descent from Joseph McCoy, who married Jerusha Sawyer, the latter being a member of one of the Puritan families that came over in the historic Mayflower. In 1875 the parents of Mr. Clark removed to Michigan and settled in Ionia county, where the father died in 1878, having been a farmer by vocation. His wife passed away in 1901, and of their three children all are living.

Arthur E. Clark, the second of the three children, secured his early educational discipline in the public schools of his native county, and continued his studies in the schools of Michigan, having been twelve years of age at the time of the family removal to the Wolverine state. In his youth he learned the art of telegraphing, which he followed for some time in Michigan, and in 1885 he came to the present state of South Dakota, first locating in Roscoe, Edmunds county, and being thereafter engaged in farming for a short interval. In October, 1885, he became a telegraph operator in the office of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad at Aberdeen, working at several points as relief agent and operator, until September of the following year, when he located in Hecla, as station agent and operator on the same line of railroad. From an interesting brochure issued by the bank of which he is cashier, we make the following excerpts, as apropos in connection: "In September, 1886, our present cashier, Mr. A. E. Clark, came to this town and opened the station, taking charge as agent and operator. He participated in some of the luxuries of pioneering, to the extent, at least, of sleeping in a pile of straw with a few boards laid on to make it feel like bedding. On December 9, 1887, he opened the books of the State Bank of Dakota, but waited until January 21, 1888, for its first depositor, who was John Quickborner, the agent for Stokes Brothers. In the fall of 1888, when the First National Bank of Columbia, Dakota territory, surrendered its charter, Mr. Charles A. Baker, a man of wealth, induced us to associate our interests and organize the Bank of Hecla, which was chartered December 7, 1888, with an authorized capital of thirty-five thousand dollars. With Charles A. Baker as president and A. E. Clark as cashier, the Bank of Hecla opened its doors in its new building, in which it is still located, on the 28th of May, 1889, with a paid-up capital of fourteen thousand dollars. The Russian thistle and hot winds of the season caused Mr. Baker to long for a more congenial atmosphere and society, and on December 27th of the same year he sold his interests in the bank to James Holborn, who was elected president. At this time the paid-in capital was reduced to ten thousand dollars, and January 1, 1891, a further reduction was effected, to the amount of five thousand dollars. On the 21st of October, 1892, Mr. Holborn resigned the presidency of the bank and P. C. Wright was elected his successor.

"Then followed the 'times that tried men's souls,' the whole country suffering from short crops and the effect of the panic of 1893, until we struck our low point on the 8th of June, 1895. Acknowledgment should be made of the true worth and work of B. S. Clark, who was elected vice-president on the 31st of August, 1893, and who has contributed no small share toward keeping and making the Bank of Hecla an institution of which to be proud."

The management of the bank has at all times been conservative and discriminating, and it is known as a solid and well conducted concern. From its statement rendered on March 2, 1904, we find that its capital is retained at five thousand dollars, while its individual deposits are in excess of seventeen thousand dollars; above thirteen thousand dollars are represented in certificates of deposits, while the undivided profits show an aggregate of nine hundred and three dollars and twenty-three cents. The banking office is a modern and attractive one, with the best of appointments and facilities, and the funds are protected by a Hall fire and burglar-proof safe.

Mr. Clark continued to be more or less identified with the management of the local railway station until 1893, since which time he has given his undivided attention to his banking and other interests. He has been for a number of years prominently concerned in the real-estate business, and has owned much valuable farming and grazing land, having at the present time three quarter sections under effective cultivation and supplied with fine artesian wells, while he also owns a large tract of grazing land. In politics he allies himself with the Socialistic party and is one of its wheelhorses in the state, while his name has appeared on its ticket in connection with nomination for important offices. He is the party candidate for the office of state treasurer at the time of this writing, the election to be held in November, 1904. He is in all senses a most eligible candidate, and his personal popularity is such that he will certainly receive a good endorsement at the polls. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and the Ancient Order of United Workmen, as well as with the auxiliary branch of the latter, the Degree of Honor.

On the 22d of January, 1888, Mr. Clark was united in marriage to Miss Bertha Wilmsen, who was born in Wisconsin. They have no children.

ORVIN J. ROE, editor and publisher of the Eureka Post, at Eureka, McPherson county, was born at Larabee's Point, in Shoreham township, Addison county, Vermont, on the 13th of November, 1851, said village being twenty-five miles north of Whitehall, New York. His father, Ambrose Thomas Roe, was born July 2, 1817, at Williamstown, Massachusetts, and his death occurred in 1873, while his wife, whose maiden name was Helen Mar Payne, was born at Alden, New York, and died in 1870. The father was a carpenter by trade and vocation, and about 1860 removed from New York to Michigan, locating finally in the city of Battle Creek, Calhoun county, where he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives. He was the tenth in order of birth of the eleven children of Elisha and Electa Roe, the maiden name of the latter having been Hill. So far as authentic data is accessible the first generation of the Roe family in America was headed by Hugh Roe, who was married in Weymouth, Massachusetts, in 1655, to Abigail — her maiden name not being recorded. They later removed to Hartford and finally to Suffield, Connecticut. Their son, Peter, was married in 1689, to Sarah Remington, and they had ten children. He died February 4, 1739. The ninth of the children, and the one through whom the direct line is traced to the subject of this review, was Thomas Roe, who was born July 28, 1708, at Suffield, Connecticut, and was married, December 26, 1728, at Enfield, Connecticut, to Elizabeth Purchase. Their seventh child was Thomas, Jr., who was born in November, 1739, and who died in 1823, his wife dying about the same year. Her maiden name was Mary Welles. They removed to Williamstown, Berkshire county, Massachusetts. Thomas Roe, Jr., the great-grandfather of our subject, was a private in Captain Jeremiah Pettibone's company at the time of the French and Indian wars in 1755, and also rendered valiant service as a Continental soldier in the war of the Revolution, having been a member of a Berkshire county regiment and having taken part in the battle of Bennington, on the 16th of August, 1777. His first child was Elisha Roe, grandfather of the subject of this sketch. Elisha Roe was born in Williamstown, Massachusetts, on the 5th of December, 1768, and on the 5th of March, 1798, married Electa Hill. He died on the 12th of January, 1830, at Medina, New York.

Mary (Welles) Roe, great-grandmother of the subject in the agnatic line, was born August 7, 1739, and was a daughter of William and Mary (Hume) Welles, the ancestry in the paternal line being traced back to Thomas Welles, Sr., who came to Salem, Massachusetts, in 1629. He was born in Rothwell, England, in 1598, and his first wife bore the maiden name of Elizabeth Hunt, and was a native of Rutland, England. Said Thomas Welles was the second governor of Connecticut, and also its first treasurer and secretary. He died January 14, 1660. His son, Captain Samuel, was killed by Indians, on the 15th of July, 1675, having commanded the Weathersbury, Connecticut, training band in the great fight with King Phillip and having been killed in this historic engagement. He married Elizabeth Hollister, and their son, Captain Thomas Welles, who was born July 29, 1662, died December 7, 1711. For his second wife he married Jerusha Treat, a daughter of Lieutenant James Treat, a son of Richard Treat, who was one of the nineteen men to whom the charter of Connecticut was issued and who was a brother of Governor Robert Treat. Ambrose Hill, the great-grandfather of the subject in the maternal line, was born March 1, 1744, and was of the fifth generation of the family in America. He made an honorable record as a patriot soldier in the Revolutionary war. He became captain and he served at Bunker Hill and Saratoga, under General Paterson.

Orvin J. Roe was about nine years of age at the time of his parents' removal to Michigan, and the circumstances of the family were such that he was soon thrown upon his own resources, while his early educational discipline was secured in the public schools of the city of Battle Creek. He early manifested a predilection for mechanical pursuits, and in 1864 secured a position in the woolen mills at Battle Creek. He removed with his parents from Shoreham, Vermont, to Lockport, New York, in 1858, and two years later to Battle Creek, Michigan. In 1868 he went to Kalama, that state, and in 1877 removed to the city of Jackson, where he continued to reside until 1883, when he came as a pioneer to what is now the state of South Dakota, arriving in Leola, McPherson county, on the 28th of May, and there continuing to make his home until October, 1896, when he removed to Eureka, where he has since resided. He was engaged in mercantile pursuits from 1869 until 1883, when his health became much impaired and this was the primary cause of his coming to South Dakota, since he hoped that the change of climate might prove beneficial. At Leola he was engaged in the general merchandise business from the autumn of 1885 until 1888, being associated with L. H. Moulton, under the firm name of Moulton & Roe. He was clerk of the courts of McPherson county from November 2, 1889, until January 1, 1896, having been appointed to this position upon the admission of the state to the Union, and having thereafter been three times elected to the office. In October, 1896, he purchased the Eureka Post, which is published in both English and German editions, and which was at the time enlisted in support of the Populist party. He changed the political policy of the papers, making them exponents of the cause of the Republican party, and they exercise important functions in a political way, and also in the furthering of local interests, while he has succeeded in increasing the circulation from three hundred and fifty to eighteen hundred copies, showing the popular estimate placed upon the man and his efforts. He has ever been an uncompromising advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and is one of its leaders in McPherson county, where he is held in high regard as a citizen and business man. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church in their home town, and fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Ancient Order of United Workmen, in each of which he has passed nearly all the official chairs in the local organizations.

On the 21st of August, 1872, Mr. Roe was united in marriage to Miss Dilla M. Sears, of Bennington, Vermont, a daughter of Benjamin F. Sears, who owned the property known as the State Arms, in that place, and upon whose grounds now stands the Bennington monument. Mrs. Roe was summoned into eternal rest on the 13th of November, 1893, in the city of Chicago, and her remains were interred in the old family burying grounds, in Center village, Bennington, Vermont. On the 27th of November, 1895, Mr. Roe married Miss Pauline Ansmus, of Rockford, Illinois, and they have one child, Ramona, who was born August 23, 1898.

SALOMON ISAAK, one of the leading business men of Eureka, being the senior member of the well-known firm of Isaak & Keim Brothers, was born near Odessa, Russia, in the year 1865, and is a son of Gottlieb Isaak, who was born one hundred miles west of the city mentioned, his father having there taken up his abode upon his immigration from Germany. In 1878 Gottlieb Isaak came with his family to America and located in what is now South Dakota. He took up government land ten miles east of the present town of Parkston, Hutchinson county, becoming one of the first settlers in the county and there continuing his residence for a period of eight years. He then removed with his family to Mercer county, North Dakota, where he continued to be engaged in farming and stock growing during the ensuing seven years, at the expiration of which he and his family returned to South Dakota and located in Eureka, where the honored father and mother of our subject now maintain their home, the former being practically retired from business.

The subject of this sketch secured his elementary education in his native land and supplemented this by attending school as opportunity afforded after the family came to the territory of Dakota, while it should be said that he has broadened his education through the associations and experiences of a signally active and successful business career. In 1888 Mr. Isaak initiated his independent career by engaging in farming in Mercer county, North Dakota, where he remained seven years. His place was fifty miles from the railroad and he preferred not to be thus isolated from civilization for a longer period, and he accordingly disposed of his live stock, rented his farm and then came to South Dakota, once more and took up his abode in Eureka. Here he was for four years engaged in clerking in a mercantile establishment, and he then began buying and shipping live stock on his own account, continuing operations two years and meeting with success, while he also began buying grain. In 1900 he entered into partnership with John and Jacob Keim, under the firm name of Isaak & Keim Brothers, which has since continued, and at that time they purchased a grain elevator in Eureka, while they have since acquired two others, located at eligible points, so that they control a large business in the buying and shipping of grain. In 1902 the firm also purchased the feed store of William Robb, in Eureka, and have since continued the enterprise, which has increased in scope and in profits, the store being fifty by seventy-five feet in dimensions, and eligibly located on Main street. Mr. Isaak exchanged his land in North Dakota for land in Franklin county, Washington, where he now owns a half section. He is progressive in his methods and is held in high regard as a citizen and business man. His political adherency is with the Republican party, but he has never aspired to public office.

On the 23d of December, 1889, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Isaak to Miss Mary Muller, who was likewise born in Russia, whence she came with her parents to America when a child. Of this union have been born eight children, all of whom are living except one: Paulina (deceased), Henry, Walter, Edwin, Otto, Lydia, Matilda and Anna.

JOHN KEIM, one of the representative business men of Eureka, McPherson county, was born at a point about one hundred miles west of the city of Odessa, Russia, on the 20th of November, 1864, and his father, Jacob Keim, was likewise born in the same district, where he passed his entire life, being a farmer by vocation. He came of stanch old German stock, his father having removed from Wurtemberg, Germany, to Russia and settled in a locality in which were found many of his countrymen.

The subject of this review secured his early education in the excellent schools of his native land and continued to there maintain his home until 1889, when, at the age of twenty-five years, he came to America and forthwith took up his abode in McPherson county, South Dakota, where he has ever since maintained his home and where he has gained success and popularity, being one of the progressive and able young business men of the town of Eureka. For the first six months after his arrival in the state he was employed in farm work, and he then took up a tract of land and engaged in farming and stock growing on his own responsibility, continuing to be successfully identified with these lines of enterprise until 1900, while he still owns the farm, which is located two miles north of Eureka, and which now comprises six quarter sections of land, arable and productive and devoted principally to the raising of wheat, corn and live stock, while he has made excellent improvements of a permanent nature.

In 1901 Mr. Keim entered into partnership with Salomon Isaak, and they have been ever since associated in the ownership and operation of an excellently equipped and conducted grain elevator in Eureka, while they also have two other elevators in this section of the state and are the owners of a feed store in Eureka, and are engaged in the handling of all kinds of farming machinery and implements in the same town. The subject's brother, Jacob, is also an interested principal in each of these enterprises and the same are conducted under the firm name of Isaak & Keim Brothers. The members of the firm are men of sterling integrity and indomitable perseverance and energy, and they have naturally commended themselves to the confidence and good will of all with whom they have come in contact in either a business or social way, being numbered among the valued citizens of the village and county. In politics Mr. Keim gives his support to the Republican party, while he is most loyal to the land of his adoption and appreciative of the advantages here afforded.

In November, 1885, Mr. Keim was united in marriage to Miss Christiana Schanzenbach, who likewise was born and reared in Russia, and they have four children: Freda, Rosa, Gustave and Theodore.

HAMPTON RAY KENASTON, M. D., who is successfully engaged in the work of his profession in Bonesteel, Gregory county, was born near Elmwood, Cass county, Nebraska, on the 24th of March, 1870, and is a son of Dr. James and Caroline Kenaston, the latter being now deceased. They became the parents of twelve children, of whom eight were sons, and of the number ten are yet living. The ancestors of the Doctor in the agnatic line came from Scotland to America in the colonial epoch of our national history, the original orthography of the name having been McKenaston, and the prefix having been dropped by the American branch. At the outbreak of the war of the Revolution the grandfather of the subject was but eight years of age, his parents being at the time residents of Vershire, New Hampshire. His eldest brother was a member of the famous Boston "tea party," and, with others of the older brothers, rendered valiant service in the cause of independence, as a soldier in the Continental line. The Kenaston family followed the march of civilization westward through Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin, and the year 1855 found them in Warren county, Iowa, while the father of our subject served as a valiant soldier in the war of the Rebellion. He removed from Iowa into Nebraska, locating in Elmwood, Cass county, where he engaged in the practice of his profession, and where he passed the remainder of his life. The subject of this review secured his early educational discipline in the public schools of his home town and there remained until the death of his mother, in 1889, after which he accompanied two of his brothers to the Pacific coast, passing a year in Washington and Oregon, and returning home through the Canadian northwest. The Doctor then located in Butte, Boyd county, Nebraska, where, in the spring of 1891, he began the study of medicine under the able preceptorship of Dr. A. S. Warner, of that place: In 1893 he was matriculated in the Sioux City (Iowa) College of Medicine, where he continued his studies for one year, completing his technical course in the medical department of the U. S. Grant University, at Chattanooga, Tennessee, where he was graduated with honors, receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine on the 22d of March, 1898. In the following month he came to South Dakota, and located in Bonesteel, Gregory county, where he at once began the practice of his chosen profession. He has been most successful as a general practitioner and has built up a large and representative professional business, while he has the confidence and high regard of the people of the community. In 1902 he received a certificate as a registered pharmacist, after examination before the state board of pharmacy, and has since conducted a drug store as a complement to and base of supplies for his professional work. When the Citizens' Bank of Bonesteel was incorporated in May, 1902, the Doctor was one of its incorporators and was chosen a member of its directorate, while in May of the following year he was elected vice-president of the institution. In 1902 he was appointed local surgeon for the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad. In the autumn of 1903 he took a post-graduate course in the New York Polyclinic medical school and hospital, in New York city. In 1900 Dr. Kenaston was appointed vice-president of the Gregory county board of health, and the following year was made superintendent of this board, which incumbency he still retains. He is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party; and upon the organization of Gregory county was elected coroner, in which office he has ever since continued to serve efficiently. He is a member of the South Dakota State Medical Society and of the American Medical Association, while on February 20, 1904, he was appointed a member of the national auxiliary congressional and legislative committee of the latter association. He is identified with the Masonic fraternity.

The Doctor has an especially well-equipped office, in which is found a fine sixteen-plate X-Ray machine and several other electrical instruments. He is essentially a self-made man, having depended entirely upon his own efforts and resources in securing his education. He has ever been foremost in lending his support to those measures and enterprises which have for their object the enhancement of the material prosperity of the community and the bettering of humanity. He is imbued with distinctive literary taste and has a splendid library.

On the 8th of November, 1899, Dr. Kenaston was united in marriage to Miss Jean May McKee, who was graduated in the State Normal School at Clarion, Pennsylvania, as a member of the class of 1892, and who was prior to her marriage a teacher in the public schools of Butler, that state. Dr. and Mrs. Kenaston have one son, Hampton Ray, Jr., who was born on the 13th of October, 1902.

JAMES M. BROWN, judge of the county courts of McPherson county, comes of staunch old colonial stock, the genealogy in the paternal line showing that the family was founded in America in 1500. The ancestors were driven out of England during the persecution of those identified with the Society of Friends, or Quakers, and they fled to Holland and thence to America at the opening of the sixteenth century, as previously noted, the original settlement having been made either in New England or Rhode Island, while the name was for many generations more particularly identified with agricultural pursuits than any other vocation. Judge Brown was born on a farm in Oneida county, New York, on the 10th of January, 1861, and is a son of John and Hannah (Mitchell) Brown, both of whom were born and reared in that same county, and both of whom are now deceased. The paternal grandfather of the subject likewise bore the name of John, and he likewise was born in the state of New York, whither his father, Thomas J. Brown, removed from Rhode Island, the place of the latter's nativity. Thomas J. was an active participant in the war of the Revolution, and this implies that he must, in a sense, have deviated from the principles of his ancestral faith, since the Quakers are opposed to warfare. The father of our subject became a successful farmer of Oneida county, was public-spirited, his integrity was beyond question and he wielded no little influence in his community, having been called upon to serve in various county offices. In his family were two children, James M., the subject of this sketch, and Minnie B., a resident of Chicago, Illinois. The parents were consistent and devoted members of the Friends church.

Judge Brown received his early educational training in the public schools of his native county, and then entered Hamilton College, in the same county, in which famous old institution he continued his studies until his health became so impaired as to compel him to abandon his course and seek a change of climate. Accordingly he went to the south, and at Galveston, Texas, in 1876, he joined the engineer department of the government and was identified with its field work for the ensuing six years, in various portions of the south and west. In 1883 he came to South Dakota and located in La Grace, Campbell county, where he remained three years, at the expiration of which he removed to Eureka, McPherson county, where he has since maintained his home, having been one of the early settlers of the town and having been closely identified with its material, civic and political development and progress. In the meanwhile he had taken up the study of law and so thoroughly covered the field of jurisprudence as to secure admission to the bar of the territory of Dakota in 1887, while he has ever since continued to be identified with legal affairs in this section of the state, either as a general practitioner, public prosecutor or as judge. He was state's attorney of the county for several years, and has served on the bench of the county court for a total of three terms, though not absolutely in a consecutive way, while he is incumbent of this responsible office at the time of this writing and has made a record for fair and impartial rulings, based upon the law and evidence, so that he has had few reversals of his decisions by the higher tribunals. In 1901 he was appointed by Governor Herreid as one of the three code commissioners to revise and codify the laws of the state of South Dakota, the other two commissioners being Judge Bartlett Tripp and the late Judge Gideon C. Moody. The Judge is a Knight Templar Mason and identified with the Order of the Eastern Star, the Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen of America.

On the 9th of January, 1895, Judge Brown was united in marriage to Miss Hattie A. Van Gorder, who was born and reared in Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin.

JOHN R. BONNER, who has a well-improved and valuable farm of three hundred and twenty acres, eligibly located five miles northeast of Pierpont, Day county, was born on a farm in DuPage county, Illinois, on the 13th of August, 1859, the old homestead being within sight of the city of Chicago. He is a son of Charles and Sarah (Rooke) Bonner, both of whom were born and reared in Lincolnshire, England, while their marriage was solemnized in March, 1855. Upon coming to America Charles Bonner settled in DuPage county, Illinois, being numbered among its pioneer farmers, and there he continued to reside until 1884, when he removed to Remington, Indiana, where he and his devoted wife now maintain their home, being venerable in years, but in excellent health and spirits. They became the parents of eight children, of whom five are living, the subject of this sketch having been the third in order of birth.

John R. Bonner was reared on the old homestead farm and early became inured to the labors involved in the cultivation, while in the connection he gained that intimate knowledge of the practical details of the great basic art of agriculture which has so signally conserved his success in the line during the years of his residence in South Dakota. He initiated his independent career in 1881, having received his educational training in the public schools of his native country. He there remained two years subsequently to starting out for himself, and then, in 1883, came as a pioneer to the present state of South Dakota, where he secured homestead and tree claims, the two constituting his present fine farm, which has been his home during the long intervening years, within which he has contributed his share to the work of developing the county and its resources, taking a proper interest in public affairs and ever standing ready to do his part in pushing forward the work of progress and material and social advancement, while his efforts have been so ably directed that he has not been denied a full measure of success. His farm is improved with good buildings and practically the entire tract is under cultivation, yielding large crops of wheat and other grains. Mr. Bonner has not had a crop failure in the past twenty years, and the productive integrity of the soil of his farm seems not in the least impaired. He has an excellent supply of water on the place and in addition to diversified agriculture makes somewhat of a specialty of raising an excellent grade of swine. He is a staunch adherent of the Republican party and has served in the various township offices, having been chosen to such preferment soon after locating in the county. Fraternally he is a master Mason and identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Knights of the Maccabees.

On the 14th of September, 1889, Mr. Bonner lead to the hymeneal alter Miss Stella Burt, who was born in the state of Michigan, and who has proved a devout wife and helpmeet. They have five children, James, Sarah, Joseph, Susan and Helen.

CHALKLEY W. DERR, a representative business man of Turton, Spink county, is a son of Judge Chalkley H. Derr, one of the distinguished and honored citizens of Faulkton, Faulk county, of whom specific mention is made on other pages of this compilation. The subject of this sketch was born in Jones county, Iowa, on the 27th of August, 1868, and he was there reared to the age of fourteen years, having received his educational discipline in the public schools of Olin, that county. He accompanied his parents on their removal to Faulkton, this state, where, in 1887, he engaged in the buying and shipping of wheat, with which important line of enterprise he has ever since been identified. In 1888, he removed from Faulkton to Turton, with whose business interests he became closely identified. In 1890 he established a lumber business here, and in 1900 opened a hardware store and warehouse for the sale and storage of agricultural implements and machinery, and he has since continued to successfully conduct the three enterprises, showing marked executive ability and facility in the management of his affairs, which are of wide scope and importance, while he is recognized as one of the most progressive and public-spirited men of the county, contributing to the general prosperity through the individual business activities with which he is identified. He has a well-equipped hardware store, and his business in all lines is constantly increasing, while he commands the uniform confidence and esteem of all with whom he comes in contact, his genial nature and unvarying courtesy doing much to conserve his personal popularity, while both he and his wife are leaders in the social life of the community. In politics Mr. Derr is a stanch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, but has never sought official preferment, and fraternally he is identified with the following named organizations: Lodge No. 134, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Conde, South Dakota; the chapter, Royal Arch Masons, at Clark, South Dakota; Damascus Commandery, No. 10, Knights Templar; Aberdeen Consistory, No. 4, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, at Aberdeen, and El Riad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Sioux Falls, while he is also affiliated with Turton Lodge, No. 96, Ancient Order of United Workmen, and Turton Camp, No. 6067, Modern Woodmen of America, in his home town. Religiously he is affiliated with the Congregational church.

ANDREW FEENEY, a prosperous and honored stock grower of Stanley county, his well-improved ranch being located fifteen miles west of Fort Pierre, is a native of the fair Emerald Isle and a representative of stanch old Irish stock. He was born in Hollygrove, County Galway, Ireland, on the 28th of May, 1870, and is a son of Patrick and Margaret Feeney, the former of whom died in 1876, in Ireland, where he devoted his life to stock raising, while the latter died in South Dakota, in 1900, having been one of the noble pioneer women of the state. The subject of this sketch received his early educational training in the parochial schools of his native land, and was about six years of age at the time of his father's death. In 1881, when eleven years old, he accompanied his mother and the other members of the family to America, and they forthwith came to what is now the state of South Dakota and located on a pioneer ranch one mile northwest of Harrold, Hughes county. There they secured a pre-emption claim, upon which our subject continued to reside about six years, doing most strenuous work in connection with its improvement and development. The family then removed to a ranch three and one-half miles northeast of Pierre, in the same county, where they remained for the ensuing six years, since which time the subject has resided on his present ranch, which comprises six hundred and forty acres and which is eligibly located fifteen miles west of Fort Pierre, Stanley county, as has already been noted. He gives his attention principally to the raising of cattle and horses, and has steadily pressed forward toward the goal of success, being now numbered among the substantial, progressive and popular stock growers and valued citizens of Stanley county. He has retained his residence in Fort Pierre since 1902, in which year he was elected sheriff of the county, an office of which he has ever since remained incumbent, while his administration has been a most discriminating and able one, gaining to him unequivocal commendation. He is a stalwart advocate of the principles of the Democratic party, and has taken an active part in forwarding its cause in a local way. He was reared in the faith of the Catholic church, of which both his father and mother were communicants. Mr. Feeney remains a bachelor.

JOHN N. ELLERMAN, one of the prominent young business men of Fairfax, Gregory county, not only has the distinction of being a native of the state of South Dakota, but also that of being the youngest county treasurer in this commonwealth, which has been his home throughout his entire life. Mr. Ellerman was born at Jamesville, Yankton county, this state, on the 18th of June, 1878, and the date signifies plainly that he is a representative of one of the pioneer families of South Dakota. He is the son of Herman and Emily (Rudolph) Ellerman, both of whom were born in Germany, whence they came to America in their early childhood. Their marriage was solemnized at Jamesville, South Dakota, where the father of the subject took up a homestead claim of government land, which he improved and placed under cultivation. In the years following this settlement Herman Ellerman took an active part in the politics of Yankton county and held several positions of trust, among them being county treasurer and county assessor. He now is the United States collector of internal revenue for the district of North and South Dakota, to which position he was appointed during McKinley's administration and in which he has continued ever since.

John N. Ellerman, the immediate subject of this review, secured his early training in the public schools of the city of Yankton, being graduated in the high school as a member of the class of 1898. In September of that year he entered the celebrated University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, and in this institution continued his studies for two years, at the expiration of which he returned to his home at Yankton. In 1900 he was appointed deputy county treasurer, in which capacity he continued to serve nearly two years, after which he became business manager of the Dakota Free Press and devoted his attention to newspaper work until May, 1902, gaining prestige and success in this field of endeavor. In May, 1902, he took up his residence at Fairfax, the capital of Gregory county, and here established himself in the real-estate and loan business. He has been successful in his labors and is known as a progressive and public-spirited citizen. Only four months after his arrival in the county Mr. Ellerman was nominated on the Republican ticket for the office of county treasurer, and in the autumn of the same year, 1902, he was elected to this responsible office. He entered upon the active discharge of his official duties on the 1st of January, 1903, and as an executive and citizen spares no pains to further the best interests of the new and thriving county with whose people he has cast his lot. He still continues his real-estate and loan business and enjoys the liberal patronage of the people of the county. At the time of his nomination for county treasurer he was incumbent of the office of justice of the peace, resigning the same to take up the work of his present office. In politics Mr. Ellerman gives an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party, and fraternally he has attained high advancement in the time-honored Masonic order, in which his affiliations include membership in St. John's Lodge, No. 1, Free and Accepted Masons, in Yankton, and Oriental Consistory, No. 1, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, in which he has attained the thirty-second degree at the time of this writing. Mr. Ellerman enjoys a marked popularity in Gregory county, as does he also in his old home in Yankton county, and he is one who well exemplified the progressive spirit so manifest in his native commonwealth.

CRIST GRUE, the able and popular register of deeds of Day county, was born not far from the picturesque old city of Christiania, Norway, on the 19th of September, 1863, and is a son of Andreas Grue, who was born in the same place and who passed his entire life in his native land. Our subject was reared in his native city, where he duly availed himself of the advantages of the excellent national schools, and he there continued to reside until 1881, when, in company with his four brothers, he immigrated to the United States. They came at once to South Dakota, and located near Canton, Lincoln county. There the subject continued to be engaged in farming and stock growing until 1890, when he removed to Day county and purchased a quarter section of land four miles west of Bristol, and here he continued in the same line of industry, conserving his resources and working with indefatigable energy, so that he was prospered and enabled to add to the area of his landed estate. He now has a finely improved farm of four hundred acres, of which his original quarter section is an integral part, and about one-half of the tract is under a high state of cultivation, the remainder being utilized for grazing purposes.

Upon coming to America, Mr. Grue soon realized the necessity of gaining a more adequate knowledge of the language of the country than could be attained by absorption, and he continued his studies in the public schools for some time, making rapid progress in English and in the other branches of the curriculum. He is a stanch Republican in politics and has taken a lively interest in public affairs of a local interest, while he has held various township offices. In the autumn of 1902 he was elected register of deeds of the county and thereupon took up his residence in Webster, and his re-election to the office is assured in the fall of the present year, 1904, since he has given a most able administration and even more firmly cemented his hold upon popular esteem and approval. He is identified with the Improved Order of Red Men and the Brotherhood of American Yeomen.

On the 31st of March, 1890, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Grue to Miss Julia Sogn, of Lincoln county. They have no children.

SAMUEL P. HOWELL, of Frederick, Brown county, is a native of the old Buckeye state, having been born on a farm in Licking county, Ohio, on the 23d of December, 1837, and being a son of George P. and Matilda (Preston) Howell, the former of whom was born in New Jersey and the latter in Pennsylvania. Elias Howell, grandfather of the subject, was likewise a native of New Jersey, where the family was early established, and he removed thence to Ohio, in the pioneer epoch in that great commonwealth, becoming a man of prominence and influence in public affairs and having represented his district in congress for two terms. He passed the closing years of life in that state. George P. Howell was reared to manhood in Ohio and was there married. He continued to be identified with agricultural pursuits in Licking county until 1852, when he removed with his family to McLean county, Illinois, where both he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives. They became the parents of six sons and three daughters, the subject of this sketch having been the third in order of birth, while of the number five are living. Captain Howell received his early educational training in the common schools of his native state and later prosecuted his studies in the schools of Illinois. With the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion his patriotism was roused to responsive protest, and on the 25th of August, 1862, he enlisted as a private in Company I, Ninety-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, commanded by Colonel W. W. Orm. His command was assigned to duty on the frontier and there remained during a considerable portion of its service. The regiment was in active service in the various operations in Missouri and Arkansas, later took part in the siege of Vicksburg and was present at the capitulation of Mobile and Spanish Fort. The Captain continued with his command until the close of the war, receiving his honorable discharge in August, 1865. Immediately after the organization of his company he was chosen second lieutenant, later was promoted first lieutenant and finally became captain of his company, over which he was in command at the time of the close of the great conflict, while he was discharged with the brevet rank of major.

After having thus proved by faithful service his loyalty to the Union, Captain Howell returned to the old homestead in McLean county, Illinois, where he remained until 1869, when he removed to the eastern part of the county and engaged in farming on an extensive scale, opening up a farm of two thousand acres. He improved a most valuable property and there continued operations until the spring of 1883, when he located in McPherson county, South Dakota, having made an investigating trip through this section the preceding autumn. He became the owner of twenty-four hundred acres, twelve miles north of Leola, and there gave his attention principally to the raising of cattle and horses, while three hundred acres of the property were placed under effective cultivation. He maintained an average of seven hundred head of cattle on the ranch, which he still owns and operates, the property having been well improved and having greatly appreciated in value during the intervening years, which have witnessed the settling of the country and the rapid development of all resources and industries.

The Captain has retained his residence in the village of Frederick in the winters, living on the McPherson county farm of summers, since 1898, and was one of the owners of the Bank of Frederick, of which he has been president since January, 1894, while he is also part owner of the Frederick flouring mill, which is equipped with the most modern machinery and has a capacity for the output of two hundred barrels daily. He also has other capitalistic interests of importance, owning controlling interests in sixty-seven hundred acres of Brown county farms, and is known as one of the public-spirited men of this section of the state, being at all times ready to lend his aid and influence in the support of enterprises and measures which inure to the general good. In politics he gives an unwavering allegiance to the Republican party, having cast his first vote for Lincoln in 1860. Though he has never been ambitious for political preferment he has served in various local offices, having held the office of county commissioner for McPherson county for an entire decade, and having been a member of the first board of commissioners of the county. He has attained to the thirty-second degree in the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry and is also identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On the 8th of February, 1872, Captain Howell was united in marriage to Miss Mary Brooke, who was born in Media, Pennsylvania, being a representative of old colonial stock. They have six children, namely: Helen, who is now the widow of Bertine D. Gamble, of Milbank, and George Brooke, Mamie F., William E., Margaret and Jessie, who remain at the parental home, the elder son being the manager of the Frederick flouring mill.

JOHN BIBELHEIMER, the efficient and popular superintendent of schools for Walworth county, was born in southern Russia, province of Cherson, on the 22d of July, 1876, being a son of Heinrich and Katherina (Hirning) Bibelheimer, both of whom were likewise born in that part of the great domain of the czar, while both are of staunch German lineage. The father of the subject was engaged in agriculture or farming in his native land until 1890, when he immigrated to the United States, accompanied by his family, and after landing in New York came directly to South Dakota, arriving in Walworth county in April of that year. He and his wife now reside on a farm in Hiddenwood township, this county, and he has been prospered in temporal affairs and is one of the honored citizens of this section of the state. He is a Republican in politics and he and his wife are members of the German Baptist church. Of their thirteen children seven are living, the subject of this sketch having been the sixth in order of birth.

John Bibelheimer secured his preliminary educational discipline in the village schools of his native land, and there became familiar with both the German and Russian languages. He was a lad of fourteen years at the time of the family arrival in South Dakota, and he continued to attend the public schools of Walworth county until he had attained the age of eighteen years, after which he was engaged in teaching for two years, his eligibility in a pedagogic way showing beyond peradventure that he had made good use of the advantages afforded him here, since he was unable to speak the English language at the time he began attending school in the county. His success in teaching and his enthusiastic interest in the work led him to determine to definitely fit himself for the profession, and after taking a preparatory course of study in the Baptist College, in the city of Sioux Falls, he was matriculated in the State Normal School at Madison, where he completed a thorough course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1901. He thereafter taught one year in the schools of Walworth county, and in 1902 was nominated on the Republican ticket for the office of county superintendent of schools, being elected in November of that year, by a gratifying majority, while he has demonstrated the wisdom of the voters of the county in calling him to the office, for he is doing most effective work and greatly advancing the interests of the schools in his jurisdiction.

He is a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, his religious faith is that of the German Baptist church, in which he was reared, and fraternally he is affiliated with Bangor Camp, No. 39, Knights of the Macca-bees, in Selby, where he now resides, being one of the popular young men of the county and one who has the high esteem of all who know him.

JOHN W. ARTHUR, one of the representative business men of Webster, Day county, is a native of the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he was born on the 30th of June, 1858, being a son of Robert and Mary (Scott) Arthur, both of whom were born in Ireland. As a young man the father of our subject left his old home in the northern part of the Emerald Isle and came to America, settling in Philadelphia, where he was for many years engaged in the coal business, becoming successful in his endeavors and continuing to reside in the fair old City of Brotherly Love until his death, which occurred in 1902, his wife having passed away in 1871.

John W. Arthur, the immediate subject of this review, completed the curriculum of the public schools in his native city and then entered Crittenden College, in the same city, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1875. He then learned the drug business, with which he there continued to be identified until 1884, when he came to South Dakota, bringing a number of car loads of live stock and settling in Day county, where he continued to be engaged in the raising of stock for a number of years, after which he became identified with newspaper work. He purchased an interest in the Reporter and Farmer, published in Webster, South Dakota, and continued to be associated in its editorial and business management until 1901, when he disposed of his interests in the line. In 1898 he was appointed postmaster of Webster, retaining this incumbency until 1902, and giving a most satisfactory administration. Since that time he has been established in the real-estate business, controlling valuable farming and grazing lands in this section of the state, as well as improved and unimproved town property, and having at all times represented on his books many desirable investments. He is specially interested in realty in Webster, where he has built a large number of houses. In politics Mr. Arthur is a staunch and uncompromising advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and he has taken an active part in the promotion of its cause in the state of his adoption, having held membership on both the county and state central committees and been a delegate to the various conventions of his party. He is affiliated with the lodge and chapter of the Masonic fraternity and also with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

In 1885 Mr. Arthur was united in marriage to Miss Clara F. McDougall, who was born in Sparta, Wisconsin, being a daughter of Peter and Elizabeth (Farrington) McDougall, who were born and reared in Maine, being representatives of staunch old colonial stock, while the records establish the fact that members of the Farrington family were soldiers of the Continental line during the war of the Revolution. Mrs. Arthur was summoned into eternal rest on the 29th of December, 1897, and is survived by three children, Robert, Irene and Walter Scott. The elder son is now attending the United States Military Academy at West Point, being one of the youngest cadets in the institution. On the 30th of June, 1903, Mr. Arthur wedded Mrs. Mary Ella Whitmore, of Stillwater, Minnesota.

HENRY R. DE MALIGNON, who is successfully engaged in the farm implement business at Selby, Walworth county, has maintained his home in this county since 1886 and is one of the popular and representative citizens of the town and county.

Henry Richard de Malignon has the distinction of being a native of the national metropolis, having been born in New York city, on the 19th of February, 1860, and being a son of Francis and Margaret de Malignon, the former of whom was born in Germany, of French ancestry, while the latter was born in England. The father of our subject came to America as a young man and was for many years engaged in insurance in New York city. Henry R. received his educational discipline in the public schools of the metropolis and gave inception to his independent career when a lad of but fourteen years. He continued his residence in the east until 1886, when he followed the star of empire toward the west and in 1886 took up his residence in Walworth county, South Dakota, where he has put forth well-directed effort and gained success and prosperity as a business man. He is a staunch Republican in his political proclivities and was elected and served as county auditor during 1893-1897; county judge, 1898-1900, and representative in the legislature from the thirty-ninth district, 1902-1904. While he has a high respect for the spiritual verities, he is an avowed agnostic. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of the Maccabees, the Brotherhood of American Yeomen and the Modern Woodmen of America.

On the 29th of March, 1884, Mr. de Malignon was united in marriage to Miss Minnie Hofmeyer, who was born in London, England, on the 30th of November, 1862, being a daughter of August and Maria Hofmeyer. They have four sons, Harry, Frank, Arthur and Robert.

CHARLES A. KELLEY, one of the representative members of the bar of Beadle county, being engaged in the practice of his profession in the city of Huron, and being also incumbent of the office of state's attorney of the county, is to be noted as one of the progressive and influential business men of this favored section of the state, being president and manager of the Kelley Land Agency, one of the leading real-estate concerns of the state. Mr. Kelley is a native of the state of Illinois, having been born in Lemont, Cook county, on the 21st of November, 1873. He is a son of M. F. and

Bridget Kelley. When the subject was eleven years old he came with his parents to the present site of South Dakota, where he has ever since retained his home, having literally grown up with the country and being a representative of one of sterling pioneer families of the commonwealth. He received his education in the public schools of Huron and the University of Wisconsin. Shortly after finishing his law course he located in Huron and initiated the active practice of his profession, opening an office here in May, 1900. A man of most alert mentality and mature judgment, he forthwith proved his mettle as a member of the bar, and his success has been cumulative and gratifying, while the professional prestige which he has attained is indicated in the official position which he holds. As state's attorney he has made an excellent record, being known as a strong trial lawyer and as one thoroughly well informed in the minutiae of the science of jurisprudence. Mr. Kelley has been progressive and resourceful, and has shown much initiative and executive ability, so that he has found it expedient to identify himself with much that has to do with the development of the resources of his town, county and state. Kelley's Land Agency, of which he is president and manager, controls a large and important real-estate business, having headquarters in Huron. The most desirable investments are at all times represented on the books of the agency, in the way of South Dakota farm lands, stock ranches and dairy farms, while a specialty is made of high-grade farm mortgages and of the exchanging of properties. For the facilitating of the operations of the concern offices are maintained in all of the principal cities of the state, and the agency controls valuable lands in all sections of the commonwealth. Mr. Kelley has proven himself loyal and helpful as a citizen, and is one of Huron's most public-spirited men. He is the owner and publisher of the Journal-World, the leading paper of Beadle county, and in politics he is a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, to which he has accorded an unwavering allegiance from the time of attaining his legal majority, while he is an active factor in the promotion of the interests of the party in a local way. As touching his fraternal relations, it may be said that he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Modern Brotherhood of America, while he is held in the highest esteem in both business and social circles, being one of the well-known and popular citizens of Beadle county.

On the 12th of November, 1899, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Kelley to Miss Alice C. Issenhuth, who was born in Shellsburg, Iowa, on the 12th of November, 1881, being a daughter of Martin and Margaret Issenhuth, who became pioneers of South Dakota, in which state their six sons are prominent business or professional men.

As a lawyer Mr. Kelley evinces a familiarity with legal principles and a ready perception of facts, together with the ability to apply the one to the other, which has won him the reputation of a sound and safe practitioner. Conscientious work has not only brought with it increase of practice and reputation, but also that growth in legal knowledge and that wide and accurate judgment the possession of which constitutes marked excellence in the profession. In the trial of cases he is uniformly courteous to court and opposing counsel, caring little for display, but seeking to impress the jury rather by weight of facts in his favor and by clear, logical argument than by appeal to passion or prejudice. By a straightforward, honorable course he has built up a large and lucrative legal business and his life affords a splendid example of what an American youth, plentifully endowed with good common sense, energy and determination, may accomplish when directed and controlled by earnest principles.

HON. GEORGE W. SNOW, of Springfield, Bon Homme county, lieutenant governor of the state of South Dakota, is a native of the state of Indiana, having been born in Posey county, on the 13th of December, 1842. His father, Augustus F. Snow, was born in the city of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, on the 21st of March, 1816, and was a miller by trade and vocation, having been the owner of a flouring mill in Grant county, Wisconsin, at the time of his death, which occurred on the 13th of February, 1886. His wife, whose maiden name was Catherine M. Feit, was born in Baltimore, Maryland, on the 28th of July, 1819, and their marriage was solemnized on the 9th of April, 1837. She died near Montfort, Wisconsin, December 11, 1848. They became the parents of four sons, all of whom are dead except the subject of this sketch. The genealogy in both the paternal and maternal lines traces back to stanch German origin. Governor Snow was about two years of age at the time of his parents' removal from Indiana to Wisconsin, in which state he was reared and educated, completing the curriculum of the common schools and a local academy and taking a thorough course in a commercial college in Madison, the capital of the state, in which institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1866. The father of our subject located on a farm in Grant county, Wisconsin, at the time of taking up his residence there, in 1845, and in 1854 he engaged in the general merchandise business at Montfort, that county, where he remained until 1858, when he removed with his family to Beatrice, Nebraska, but returned to Grant county, Wisconsin, the next autumn and again resumed agricultural pursuits and milling. The subject of this review remained on the homestead farm until his father engaged in the mercantile business, when he became an assistant in the store, while after the return of the family to Grant county he aided in the work and management of the farm until there came the call to higher duty, the rebellion of the south having caused the tocsin of war to be sounded. In August, 1862, Mr. Snow enlisted as private in Company F, Twentieth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, for a term of "three years or until the close of the war." He continued in active service with his command until victory had crowned the Union arms, having been mustered out and having received his honorable discharge in August, 1865. He participated in several important and hotly contested battles, including that of Prairie Grove, Arkansas, and took part in the memorable sieges of Vicksburg, Spanish Fort and Mobile, being present at the capitulation of the last named city, while he was also with his command in numerous skirmishes and other minor engagements, proving himself a valiant and faithful soldier of the republic whose integrity he thus aided in perpetuating.

After the close of his military service Mr. Snow returned to Wisconsin and completed a course in a commercial college in Madison, as previously noted. Thereafter he was employed as clerk in a general store at Dodgeville, that state, until 1869, when he came as a pioneer to what is now the state of South Dakota, settling in Springfield, Bon Homme county, which was then a mere straggling frontier village, and here he has thus maintained his home for thirty-five years, being one of the pioneers of the town and state and having ever been loyal to both. Here he became identified with the operation of a sawmill and for a time was clerk in one of the first general stores in the town, while he availed himself of the opportunities which presented in connection with the development and material progress of the state, and soon found himself well advanced on the highway of definite and distinctive success. He began dealing in real estate in the early years of his residence here and largely through this medium has he gained independence and prosperity, while he is at the present time the owner of several thousand acres of valuable land in Bon Homme and adjoining counties. He has shown a public-spirited interest in all that has appertained to the civic and material advancement of his home town and has aided liberally in the support of all legitimate public enterprises, having been largely instrumental in securing the location of the State Normal School in Springfield. In politics he has given an unequivocal allegiance to the Republican party from his early manhood to the present time. He has served in various offices of public trust and responsibility, including that of justice of the peace, member of the board of education and county treasurer, to which last he was incumbent two terms of two years each. He was a member of the constitutional convention of 1885, while in 1890-1 he represented his district in the state senate, as did he again in 1897-8, and in 1901 he was elected lieutenant governor of the state, serving with signal ability and being chosen as his own successor in the election of November, 1903, so that he remains in tenure of this important office at the present time. Mr. Snow effected the organization of the Bank of Springfield in 1883, and is its principal stockholder, giving personal supervision to its management and being its president, while he is also a large stockholder in the Bank of Monroe, at Monroe, Nebraska. He still continues to deal extensively in real estate and controls a large amount of valuable realty, offering most attractive investments. He and his wife are attendants and supporters of the church of the Ascension, Protestant Episcopal, of which the latter is a communicant. Mr. Snow has been identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows since 1867, and is past grand master of the grand lodge of the order in the state, while he is at the present time grand treasurer. He has attained to the thirty-second degree in the Masonic fraternity, with which he has been identified since 1881, and is past grand treasurer of the grand lodge, while he is also past grand patron of the allied organization, the Order of the Eastern Star. He is one of the appreciative and honored members of General Steadman Post, No. 38, Grand Army of the Republic, and the hold which he has upon the esteem and confidence of his comrades in the same is significantly intimated in the fact that he has served as commander of the post for the past fourteen years, while during 1901-2 he had the notable distinction of being department commander of the order in South Dakota.

In Yankton, this state, in April, 1874, Mr. Snow was united in marriage to Miss Sylvia L. Tyler, who died in May, 1878, leaving one child, Harry, whose death occurred in the following August. In February, 1882, he consummated a second marriage, being then united to Mrs. Alberta M. Davison, nee Mead, and they have two sons, George G., who was born on the 4th of January, 1884, and who is a member of the class of 1903 in the celebrated University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, and Frank M., who was born on the 6th of August, 1888, and who is now a student in the South Dakota State Normal School, in his home town.

JAMES C. BLAIR was born November 23, 1837, in Pocahontas county, West Virginia, and grew to manhood in that state, receiving a common-school education and assisting his father on the farm until twenty-two years of age. In 1859 he went to Iowa, thence, after a short time, to Missouri, and in 1861 crossed the plains to Colorado, where he prospected for a while, later engaging in freighting there and in Utah territory. In the spring of 1864 he accompanied, in the capacity of a teamster, a freight train from Salt Lake to Virginia City, Montana, arriving at the latter place in the month of May, and for some time thereafter he prospected and mined in Alder gulch and the Belt district, meeting with fair success in his search for gold. Later he traveled over barren parts of Montana, mining and prospecting, but in 1869 returned to his native state, where he remained until the following spring, visiting his parents and renewing the acquaintances of his childhood and youth. The next year he again started west, with Missouri as his objective point, and from there he subsequently went to Texas, where he purchased cattle, which he drove to New Mexico to winter. The following spring he took his cattle to Colorado, where they were disposed of at good prices, after which he again turned his attention to prospecting in that and adjoining states and territories until the opening of the Black Hills country, when he proceeded thither, being among the first arrivals in the spring of 1877. In May of the same year Mr. Blair came to Whitewood creek and settled on public land, six miles from the town of Whitewood, which in due time he converted into a fine ranch, and since that date he had made his home on the same, devoting his attention the meanwhile to the live-stock business, being now among the enterprising and successful horse raisers of Lawrence county. By industry and thrift he has acquired not only the valuable ranch on which he lives, but a sufficient amount of material wealth to make him practically independent, his place being well stocked with horses and other domestic animals, from the sale of which he realizes liberal returns.

PHILIP DuFRAM comes of stanch French lineage and is a native of Dubuque county, Iowa, where he was born on the 26th of May, 1856, being a son of John B. and Lenora DuFram, both of whom were born in the province of Quebec, Canada. John DuFram took up his residence in Iowa in 1840, being one of the early settlers of that state, where he remained, engaged in farming until 1861, when he came to what is now the state of South Dakota, and located near Elk Point, in Union county, having brought his family through by way of Fort Dodge, and making the entire trip with teams. He engaged in farming in the county mentioned and also became identified with the freighting business, transporting supplies to the various government military posts, in which connection he met with many narrow escapes from the hostile Indians. He continued to be engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred in 1894, and his widow now resides in the city of Yankton, having attained the venerable age of eighty-six years. Of their fourteen children eleven are yet living, the subject of this sketch having been the seventh in order of birth.

Philip DuFram, whose name introduces this article, passed his boyhood days at Elk Point, this state, and Sioux City, Iowa, and owing to the exigencies of time and place his educational advantages were limited. At the age of twelve years he became connected with his father's freighting business to the different army posts and was thus engaged until 1871, when he took charge of the government herd of cattle at Yankton Agency, and retained this position until the autumn of 1876, when he went to Nebraska and became the foreman for the Durfee Cattle Company, in whose employ he remained until the spring of 1882, when he went to the head of the Powder river, in the Big Horn mountains of Montana, in charge of the stock of the Frontier Land and Cattle Company, and he was a prominent figure in the contest between the reliable and law-abiding stockmen with the "rustlers" in the cattle war in Johnson county, Wyoming. He was a member of the party of forty-seven stockmen who were at this period surrounded at the "T. A." ranch and besieged for five days, being finally relieved by the government troops from Fort McKenna, this being during the invasion of Wyoming, in 1892. Prior to this he had charge of the stock of the Frontier Land and Cattle Company, utilizing the range in the famous "Hole in the Wall" country, and here he met with many exciting experiences through the hostility of the same class of invaders. On one occasion he made a most hazardous trip to Buffalo, Wyoming, to reconnoiter, and though hard pressed succeeded in making his escape. His is a nature without an iota of cowardice, and this has been proved time and again in the face of dangers which could not but test the mettle of the most daring and venturesome. In 1875 Mr. DuFram took a pack outfit into the Black Hills, being accompanied by old Grey Face and three other Indians, and he devoted six months to exploring the country, while in the following year he transported supplies from Fort Pierre to the Hills for Major Clarkson, of the United States army, while in the fall of that year he went to Nebraska, as has been already noted. In 1892 he was appointed state brand inspector for Wyoming, and in the following year he went to Arizona, where he remained one year, being foreman for the Aztec Land and Cattle Company. He then returned to Montana, where he was employed by the Standard Cattle Company until 1900, when he was appointed brand inspector at Fort Pierre for the Black Hills Stock Association, retaining this incumbency eighteen months, at the expiration of which he took charge of the stock of the Minnesota and Dakota Cattle Company, on the White river. While attending to his duties in this connection he became snow-blind and also suffered an attack of smallpox, the result being he lost the sight of his left eye, and upon his recovery he was made representative of the interests of the well-known and extensive firm of stock commission merchants, Rosenbaum Brothers & Company, of Chicago, for the territory from the Missouri river to the Black Hills in South Dakota, in which capacity he is rendering most efficient service at the time of this writing. He is a man of genial personality and has a host of friends throughout the great northwest, while his name is a synonym of honor and integrity. He maintains his headquarters in Evarts, Walworth county. In politics Mr. DuFram is a staunch Democrat. He is not married.

JOHN A. BUSHFIELD, editor and publisher of the Pioneer Press, at Miller, Hand county, is a native of the old Buckeye state, having been born in Cambridge, Guernsey county, Ohio, on the 9th of August, 1856, and being a son of John M. and Sarah E. (Moore) Bushfield. He received his early educational discipline in the public schools of his native town, and there served an apprenticeship at the printer's trade, gaining a thorough knowledge of the mysteries of the "art preservative of all arts," and securing incidentally that training which has been well said to be equivalent to a literal education—the discipline of a newspaper office. He continued his residence in Ohio until 1878, when he located in Atlantic, Cass county, Iowa, where he was identified with newspaper work until 1883, when he came to the present state of South Dakota and cast in his lot with the early settlers of Miller, which was then but a small and primitive frontier village. Here he purchased a half interest in the Pioneer Press, which had been established the preceding year, and in 1889 he purchased his partner's interest in the enterprise, which he has since individually conducted, the paper being a model country journal and wielding much influence in the local field, both in a political and civic way. The Pioneer Press is issued on Thursday of each week, is a six-column quarto and is the official paper of the city and county in which it is published. Mr. Bushfield is a member of the State Press Association and is popular in the circles of the newspaper fraternity of the state, as is he also in business and social circles in his home city. In politics he has ever accorded an unequivocal allegiance to the Republican party, and both in a personal way and through the columns of his paper he has done much to further its interests in a local way. In January, 1899, the late lamented President McKinley appointed him postmaster of Miller, and in January, 1903, he was reappointed, by President Roosevelt, so that he is incumbent of the office at the time of this writing. He is identified with the local lodge of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

On the 9th of November, 1880, Mr. Bushfield was united in marriage to Miss Cora E. Pearson, of Atlantic, Iowa, and they have three children, Harley J., Laura D. and Anna M.

FRANCIS WILLIAM RYAN, of Jefferson township, Union county, was born on his present farm, on the 9th of March, 1862, and his boyhood days were passed amid the scenes and conditions incidental to life on the frontier, while he has reason to recall the privations endured and the obstacles surmounted in the early days, including the scourge of grasshoppers and the havoc wrought by the overflowing of the Missouri river. He is now the owner of the old home farm, which is well improved and under a high state of cultivation, his entire landed estate comprising one hundred and sixty acres. His educational privileges were such as were afforded in the public schools, while he has effectually rounded out his training under the instruction of the wisest of headmasters, experience.

The subject is a son of Michael and Mary (Edwards) Ryan, both of whom were born in the Emerald Isle, the former being a native of Queens county, where he was born in 1827, while the latter was born in Kilkenny county, their marriage having been solemnized in 1851. The devoted wife and mother died in 1896, and is survived by her husband and four children. In 1860 Michael Ryan emigrated to America and came to the territory of Dakota, settling on the farm now owned by his son, subject of this review, the same being the northwest quarter of section 29, Jeffers township. The land was at the time in its wild state, and there were but few settlers in the county. After completing his primitive log house he instituted the work of reclaiming his land to cultivation, and in due course of time success attended his earnest efforts. He resided on the homestead until 1873, when he removed to the village of Jefferson, this county, where he erected one of the first stores in the town, and there established himself in the general merchandise business, simultaneously acting as station and express agent and postmaster, and also buying and shipping grain. He continued to be actively engaged in business until about 1886, when he retired and has since been enjoying the rewards of his former toil and endeavor, being still a resident of Jefferson and one of its most honored pioneers.

Hon. Francis W. Ryan, whose name initiates this sketch, has ably upheld the prestige of the name which he bears and is one of the representative men of his native county. He was a member of the school board of his district from 1899 until 1902, and was honored with election to the legislature of the state in 1899, serving with ability through the general assembly of 1900 and that of 1902, and in the autumn of the latter year received further evidence of the popular appreciation of his efforts in his reelection to the same office, and he has rendered valuable service during the session of 1903. In politics he gives an unqualified support to the Republican party and its principles and has been one of its leaders in the county for a number of years past. His religious faith is that of the Catholic church, in which he was reared, and fraternally he is a member of Lodge No. 2758, Modern Woodmen of America, at Jefferson.

On the 10th of February, 1886, Mr. Ryan was united in marriage to Miss Hattie Brow, who was likewise born in Union county, being a daughter of Joseph Brow, and of this union have been born five children.

REV. JOSEPH B. VARNUM was born in the village of Berlin, province of Ontario, Canada, on the 19th of May, 1830, his parents at the time being citizens of the United States, and he passed his youthful years in the state of Michigan, completing his education in Albion College, at Albion, that state, the same being one of the leading institutions of the Methodist Episcopal church in the western division of our country. He became a member of this church in 1849, prosecuted a thorough theological course and was ordained to the ministry in 1854. He continued in the work of his noble calling until the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion, when he signalized his patriotism by tendering his services in the defense of the Union, enlisting as a private in a regiment of Michigan volunteers and continuing in service until the close of the war, having been wounded in the engagement at Petersburg, Virginia, while his record was that of a faithful and loyal soldier. After the war he resumed his ministerial labors, in which he continued until his removal to what is now the state of South Dakota, while during the greater portion of the time he held pastoral charges in Michigan. His life was gentle, and kindly; he was tolerant in his judgment, understanding the wellsprings of human thought and action, and his was the faith which makes faithful and which is ever a source of inspiration to others. The following paragraph, quoted from a previously published article, is well worthy of reproduction in this connection: "While in South Dakota Mr. Varnum sustained a superannuated relation with the church, but his influence and pious example had much to do with building up and strengthening the cause. His character was marked by a stanch integrity of purpose, strong will, optimistic hope, intense patriotism and unswerving devotion to his God."

In 1884 Mr. Varnum came with his family to South Dakota and took up government land in the immediate proximity of the present village of Gale, Campbell county, where he eventually developed a fine farm, being the owner of three hundred and twenty acres at the time of his death. He was a man of influence in the community and his aid was ever given in support of all measures for the advancement of the general weal, his influence being felt in the civic, moral, educational and political affairs of his section. In politics he gave an unqualified allegiance to the Republican party, and he has the distinction of representing Campbell county in the first state legislature, in 1889. His death occurred on the 26th of May, 1896, and he "rests from his labors," while his name is venerated by all who knew him.

On the 8th of November, 1856, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Varnum to Miss Maroa E. Vibbert, who was born in Chittenango, Madison county, New York, on the 3d of March, 1835, and she survives him, as do their three children, namely: Olin B., Wewoka, Indiana, engaged in the general mercantile business; Lelia, teacher in the Herreid school; Wilbur E., general manager of the Herreid Milling Company, Herreid. Nettie died at Gale, South Dakota, May 18, 1899.

Hon. Wilbur F. Varnum, the third child of the honored subject of this memoir, was born in Rochester, Oakland county, Michigan, on the 27th of May, 1868, and he received his early educational discipline in the public schools of his native state, being sixteen years of age at the time of the family removal to South Dakota, where he was reared to manhood on the old homestead farm, to whose development and improvement he contributed his quota, proving a capable coadjutor to his father. On the 20th of July, 1895, he engaged in the general merchandise business at Gale, in the meanwhile continuing to superintend the home farm of eight hundred acres, where he carried on general farming and stock growing up to the time of his removal to Herreid. He built up a very prosperous business in Gale and there continued operations until 1900, when he disposed of his business there and removed to the newly founded town of Herreid, where he became one of the organizers and principal stockholders of the Herreid Milling Company, of which he has since been general manager. The company has a fine mill, equipped with the latest improved machinery and having a capacity for the output of one hundred barrels of flour a day. The enterprise has been most successful and is one of the leading business industries of this section of the state, while the facilities afforded are greatly appreciated throughout the wide territory tributary to the thriving village in which the mill is located. Mr. Varnum is a stalwart advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and in 1896 he was elected to represent Campbell county in the state legislature, making an excellent record and being chosen as his own successor in 1898, while in 1900 still higher honors were accorded him, in his election to the state senate, as representative of the thirty-seventh senatorial district, comprising the counties of Campbell and McPherson. He and his wife are prominent and zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and fraternally he is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 21st of October, 1895, Mr. Varnum was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Pollock, who was born in Kansas, and who is a daughter of Robert Y. Pollock, one of the prominent and influential pioneers of Campbell county, South Dakota, where the town of Pollock was named in his honor. Mr. and Mrs. Varnum have three children, Joseph Emerson, Robert Dewey and Evelyn.

GRANVILLE J. COLLER, M. D., one of the pioneer physicians of Brookings, is a native of the state of Michigan, having been born on a farm in Lenawee county, on the 6th of November, 1854, and being a son of James L. and Amanda M. (Richart) Coller. James L. Coller was born in the state of New York, a son of Jesse B. Coller, who was of English lineage. When the father of our subject was a child he accompanied his parents on their removal to Michigan, which was then considered on the frontier, and the parents were numbered among the pioneers of the state. James L. was reared to manhood in Lenawee county and after his marriage he continued to be engaged in farming in that county for a few years, after which he removed to Calhoun county, where he continued in the same vocation until his death, which occurred in 1861. He was survived by his wife and their six children, the youngest being but one year of age, while the subject of this sketch was eight years old at the time when he was thus deprived of the care and guidance of his father. The family remained on the homestead farm, and much of the responsibility of carrying on the work devolved upon the youthful shoulders of our subject and his brother Edgar, the latter being at the time about eleven years of age. Here the devoted mother reared her children to years of maturity and here remained until 1899, when she came to Brookings and was made a welcome acquisition to the family circle of her son, the subject of this review, who accorded her the utmost filial solicitude until she was summoned to the life eternal, in October, 1901, at the venerable age of seventy-four years. Of the children we enter the following epitomized record: Sarah, who became the wife of Wheeler Collins, died of consumption, in 1901, at the home of the subject, whither she had come from her home in Colorado; Edgar is a successful farmer living in Michigan; Lafayette continues to reside on the old homestead farm in that state; Granville J. is the immediate subject of this review; Chester is likewise a resident of Brookings; and William is engaged in farming in Michigan.

Dr. Coller was reared to manhood in Calhoun county, Michigan, where he worked on the home farm until he had attained the age of eighteen years, while in the meanwhile he pursued his studies in the public schools during the winter months. At the age noted he was matriculated in Adrian College, at Adrian, Michigan, where he was a student for three years, in the meanwhile teaching one winter term of school, while after leaving the college he continued to follow the pedagogic profession for two years. At the age of twenty-one years he was elected superintendent of the township schools of his native county, rendering effective service, while it may be said that he has ever maintained a lively interest in the cause of popular education. In 1877

he entered the medical department of the University of Michigan, where he completed the prescribed course in the autumn of 1880, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine and coming forth well equipped for the work of his noble profession. Shortly after his graduation the Doctor came to Brookings, South Dakota, the town having at the time but three dwelling houses, while the business places were represented by a relative parity. When he arrived in his new field of labor he was five hundred dollars in debt, having utilized this amount in completing his technical education, and when he took up his residence in the embryonic town his cash capital was summed up in five dollars. He was, however, endowed with boundless energy, determination and pluck, and his pleasing personality and professional ability soon gained him appreciative recognition in the pioneer community. During nearly a quarter of a century of active practice here he has ever been faithful and self-abnegating and his name is deserving of an enduring entry on the roll of the honored pioneers of the medical profession in the state. He has continued a close student of his profession and has availed himself of post-graduate work, keeping abreast of the advances made in medical and surgical science. In the spring of 1900 Dr. Collier established a private hospital in Brookings, the same proving a success, but by reason of his own impaired health and the insistent demands of his outside professional work he was compelled to abandon the enterprise. The Doctor has been justly prospered in temporal affairs, He is a member of the State Medical Society, American Medical Association and American Association of Railway Surgeons. He is fraternally identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. His religious views are in harmony with the tenets of the Presbyterian church, of which his family are members. In politics Dr. Collier has ever been a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, in whose cause he has been an active worker. He was for three successive years incumbent of the office of mayor of Brookings, while his also was the distingtion of having been chosen to represent his district in the senate of the first legislature of South Dakota after its admission to the Union. He has also served as a member of the board of regents of the State Agricultural College and is president of the board of health of Brookings county and has been at intervals for a number of years.

On the 2d of October, 1884, was solemnized the marriage of Dr. Collier to Miss Helen Underwood, who was born in Calhoun county, Michigan, on the 8th of October, 1856, being a daughter of Amasa and Jane Underwood, both of whom were natives of the state of New York, whence they accompanied their parents to Michigan in their childhood days. Amasa Underwood was a son of Thaddeus and Phoebe Underwood, the agnatic line tracing back to English origin, while on the maternal side the lineage is of Scotch-Irish extraction. Mrs. Collier was graduated in the Chicago Ladies' Seminary, in the city of Chicago, as a member of the class of 1876, and was thereafter, for six years, a successful and popular teacher in the same institution. She is a member of the Degree of Honor and also of the Woman's Club of Brookings. To Dr. and Mrs. Collier have been born five children: Frederick A. is a member of the class of 1906 in the State Agricultural College; Helen is attending the public schools; Granville C. died at the age of five years; Clara J. is attending the schools of her native city; and James died in infancy.

SHERMAN FREDERICK LUCAS, of Bonesteel, Gregory county, was born in Waverly, Bremer county, Iowa, on the 17th of September, 1864, and is a son of William V. and Sophronia M. (Lowe) Lucas, both being of Scotch-Irish lineage. William Vincent Lucas was born in Carroll county, Indiana, on the 3d of July, 1835, and was there reared and educated. In 1856 he was united in marriage to Sophronia M. Lowe, who was born in the same county, in 1835, and in the same year they removed to Iowa and became numbered among the pioneers of Bremer county. The father of the subject was a presidential elector from that state in 1876, served as treasurer of Bremer county for four years, and was a man of much influence in his community, while in 1880-81 he had the distinction of serving in the office of auditor of the state of Iowa. In 1883 he removed with his family to South Dakota and located in Brule county, of which he was treasurer for one term. He was a member of congress from South Dakota for the term of 1893 and 1894 and was for several years commandant of the State Soldiers' Home, at Hot Springs, being himself a veteran of the Civil war, and he resigned this office on the 1st of July, 1903, and removed to California, being now a resident of Santa Cruz, that state. His cherished and devoted wife was summoned into eternal rest in August, 1896. She was a woman of noble and gracious character, a zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal church and was held in affectionate regard by all who came within the sphere of her influence.

Sherman F. Lucas secured his early educational discipline in the public schools of Waverly and Mason City, Iowa, and learned the printer's trade in the newspaper office of his father, in the latter place. In May, 1883, he came to the present state of South Dakota and located in the village of Castalia, where in the following month, in association with his brother, Aaron B., he engaged in the newspaper business, establishing the Castalia Republican, the pioneer paper of the town. In 1888 he disposed of his interest in this enterprise and accepted a position as assistant cashier in the Charles Mix County Bank, at Castalia. In 1890 he was appointed clerk of the courts of that county and served one year, being defeated for re-election in the Populistic landslide of that year, though he ran eighty votes ahead of his ticket and was defeated by only eleven votes. He passed the year 1891 in Fort Randall, being placed in charge of the post trader's store by the receiver. He was chief clerk of the enrolling and engrossing force of the lower house of the state legislature during the general assembly of 1893, and during the summer of 1895 was second clerk on the Diamond Joe line of steamers, plying between St. Louis and St. Paul. In 1896 he was appointed assignee of the Charles Mix County Bank, continuing his residence in Castalia, that county, until 1899, when he removed to Bonesteel, Gregory county, and here established the Gregory County News, disposing of the same in May, 1903, to S. P. Ayres & Son. On the 1st of April, 1899, he was appointed postmaster of the town and has since remained incumbent of this office. In 1899 he was admitted to the bar of the state upon examination before the supreme court, and gives considerable attention to the practice of his profession. He was the candidate on his party ticket for county judge in 1900, but was defeated by the Democratic candidate, Edwin M. Starcher. He served two years as a member of the board of trustees of the village of Bonesteel and is known as one of its most loyal, progressive and public-spirited citizens, while he gives an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party, as may be inferred from preceding statements. At the time of the Spanish-American war Mr. Lucas raised in Charles Mix county a company of volunteers, but they were not mustered into the United States service, by reason of the fact that the state's quota of soldiers was fully supplied from the members of its National Guard. Mr. Lucas was affiliated with Doric Lodge, No. 93, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Castalia, of which he was master for one year. A lodge is about to be constituted at Bonesteel and Mr. Lucas has been selected as its first worshipful master. He is also identified with the Royal Arch Masons, at Mitchell; is venerable consul of Bonesteel Camp, No. 4793, Modern Woodmen of America, and also affiliated with the Brotherhood of American Yeomen. Mrs. Lucas is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and the subject contributes to the support of the same.

On the 24th of June, 1899, Mr. Lucas was united in marriage to Miss Cora B. Johnson, who was born at Fredericksburg, Bremer county, Iowa, in March, 1875, being a daughter of Marcellus M. and Ella M. Johnson, early and honored pioneers of Dakota territory. Mr. and Mrs. Lucas have two children, Vincent Lowe, who was born April 20, 1900, and Arthur Wayne, who was born May 9, 1902.

CHARLES A. CONKLIN was born in Greenwood, Steuben county, New York, on the 1st of August, 1853, and is a son of Hon. S. J. and Maria Conklin, who came to the west in 1857 and located in Waterloo, Wisconsin, where the father became prominent in the pioneer history of the state, being successfully identified with agricultural enterprises and also becoming one of the distinguished members of the bar of that commonwealth. He served as quartermaster in the Forty-eighth Wisconsin Regiment and was adjutant general for South Dakota for four years. He died in South Dakota in November, 1872, while his wife died at Clark. The subject has one brother, who lives in Chicago, and a sister, who lives in Hammond, Indiana.

Charles A. Conklin was a lad of five years at the time of his parents' removal to Wisconsin, where he was reared to maturity, securing such advantages as were afforded in the excellent public schools of Waterloo, that state, and remaining at the parental home until 1873, when he went to Freeborn county, Minnesota, where he engaged in farming until 1876, when he disposed of his interests there and came as a pioneer to South Dakota. He proceeded by railroad as far as Watertown, which was then the terminus of the line, and then located in the village of Clark, in the county of the same name, where he engaged in buying grain for the Porter Milling Company, of Winona, and there he continued to make his headquarters, continuously connected with the line of enterprise noted, until 1892, when he removed to Cherry creek and was there engaged in the capacity of government farmer on the Cheyenne Indian reservation for the ensuing two years, at the expiration of which he opened up his present fine stock ranch, on the Cheyenne river, fifty miles from Fort Pierre and two miles distant from Lindsey, which is his postoffice address. He has here been since engaged in the raising of cattle and horses, carrying forward the enterprise with characteristic energy and discrimination and having an ample range, well-watered by the river as well as a number of natural springs of pure water. He gives his preference to the Hereford breed of cattle and to Morgan horses, and on his ranch may be usually found about three hundred fine specimens of the former and one hundred and fifty or more of the latter. In politics Mr. Conklin has ever given an unfaltering allegiance to the Republican party, but he has refused to permit the use of his name in connection with political office of any description. He is a member of the Masonic and Pythian fraternities.

On the 28th of April, 1876, Mr. Conklin was united in marriage to Miss Martha Austin, who was born and reared in Wisconsin, being a daughter of Samuel Austin, and she was summoned into eternal rest in April, 1888, and is survived by four children, namely: Roy, Rena, Samuel and Clyde. On the 2d of October, 1890, Mr. Conklin was united in marriage to Miss Ida Geyer, who was born in the state of Illinois, being a sister of Isaac M. Geyer, who is the subject of an individual sketch on another page of this work. To said article reference may be made for data concerning the family. Of this union has been born one child, Wanita, who was born in Clark, Clark county, South Dakota, July 21, 1891, and is now twelve years old and has been attending school at Pierre for the last four years.

JAMES W. JOHNSTON, secretary and general manager of the Faulk County Land and Title Company, is a well-known citizen of Faulkton. He was born in Center county, Pennsylvania, on the 4th of October, 1854, being a son of William and Agnes (Watson) Johnston, both of whom were likewise born and reared in Pennsylvania. The father of the subject was a successful farmer of Center county, where he continued to reside until 1869, when he removed with his family to Lee county, where he and his wife resided until their deaths.

James W. Johnston passed his youth on the family homestead farm in Pennsylvania, and received a common-school education. He accompanied his parents on their removal to Iowa. In 1879 he came to South Dakota, so that he may be consistently termed a pioneer of the state, and shortly after his arrival he entered claim to one hundred and sixty acres of government land ten miles north of Watertown, which he proved up. He then assisted on the government surveys of the territory until January, 1883, when he removed to Faulk county, which was then unorganized, and filed a pre-emption on one hundred and sixty acres of land joining the town site of La Foon, which afterwards became the first county seat of Faulk county. At the first general election held in Faulk county, November 8, 1894, he was elected to the office of register of deeds, being the first chosen to this position by popular vote. He served one term, while subsequently he was again elected to this office, serving one term. His long experience in the office has made him thoroughly familiar with land values in this section and this knowledge has been of great benefit to him in his real-estate operations. In 1886, when the railroad was completed to Faulkton, the present county seat, he removed to the new town, with whose interests and upbuilding he has since been identified. He continued his business individually until 1893, when he effected the organization of the Faulk County Land and Title Company, of which he has been secretary and general manager from the start. The company own a complete set of abstracts of land titles of Faulk county. Mr. Johnston is a member of the Republican party, and for the past eight years has served as chairman of the Republican county central committee. He served two terms as a member of the city council, and for three years as a member of the board of education. Fraternally he is identified with Faulkton Lodge, No. 95, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Faulkton Chapter, No. 30, Royal Arch Masons, of which he is high priest at the time of this writing; the order of Knights of the Maccabees and Modern Woodmen of America.

On the 5th of November, 1885, Mr. Johnston was united in marriage to Miss Lizzie M. Cochrane, of Des Moines, Iowa, who was born and reared in that state, being a daughter of J. C. Cochrane. In the spring of 1883 Mrs. Johnston came to South Dakota with her uncle, Joseph Cochrane, and filed a pre-emption claim. She may be termed a pioneer of Faulk county, having settled on her land prior to the time it came into the market. In December, 1884, Judge Seward Smith appointed her clerk of the district court, in which office she served about two years, having been the first woman to hold the office in the state. She resigned the position at the time of her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have had born to them ten children, of whom but four are living: Belle, Lloyd, Laura and Ralph. Mr. and Mrs. Johnston are members of the Congregational church.

PATRICK H. O'NEIL, who has a large and finely improved stock farm in Faulk county, is a native of the Badger state, having been born in New Richmond, St. Croix county, Wisconsin, on the 16th of February, 1866, and being a son of Thomas O'Neil, who was born and reared in Ireland, when he came to America as a young man and located in Wisconsin, where he has maintained his home for the past forty years. The subject was reared and educated in his native county and continued to reside in Wisconsin until he had attained his legal majority, when, in 1887, he came to South Dakota and located in Faulkton, where he engaged in the meat-market business, in which he continued until 1898. Soon after his arrival in the county he also identified himself, on a modest scale, with the livestock industry, to which he has given his exclusive attention since the year mentioned. He has twenty-two thousand acres under fence, and in the connection it may be stated that for his purpose fully eighty miles of fencing are used, while of his land he has deeded title to twelve thousand acres. He raises both cattle and sheep and has the best graded stock, so that he is enabled to command the highest market prices. In the summer of 1892 he sold ninety-seven thousand eight hundred dollars' worth of stock at one sale and to one man. His average run of sheep is about fifteen thousand head and in 1903 he sold seventy-two thousand nine hundred pounds of wool to one buyer, the Shropshire type of sheep being his favorite. All of his land is in Faulk county, and he has the best of facilities for the care and handling of his stock, an abundant supply of pure water being secured from three artesian wells. In politics he is a staunch adherent of the Republican party and both he and his wife hold the faith of the Catholic church.

On the 13th of June, 1887, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. O'Neill to Miss Annie Carlin, who was born in McLean county, Illinois, and they have five children, namely: Aloysius, Mary, Ignatius, John and Henry.

JOSEPH H. BOTTUM, state senator from Faulk county, comes of sterling old colonial stock in both the paternal and maternal lines and both families are of staunch English extraction. Records extant show that two of the maternal ancestors were valiant soldiers in the Continental line during the war of the Revolution, having been participants in the historic battle of Bunker Hill. The original patronymic in the agnatic line was Longbottom, the initial syllable having been dropped after the establishment of the family in America.

The subject of this sketch is a native of the Empire state, having been born in West Bloomfield, Ontario county, New York, on the 26th of September, 1853, and being of the eldest of the eight children of Henry C. and Helen M. (Burnham) Bottum, both of whom were born and reared in Vermont, as was also the paternal grandfather of our subject, Roswell Bottum, who was a man of prominence and influence in the old Green Mountain state, having served for a number of terms as a member of its legislature and also held other offices of distinctive public trust and responsibility. The original American progenitors settled in the Massachusetts colony and the name has been long and honorably identified with the annals of New England. As a young man the father of the subject removed to the state of New York, locating in Ontario county, where he was engaged in the mercantile business until 1854, when he came west to Wisconsin, settling in Fond du Lac county, and became one of the pioneers of that section. He was prospered in his efforts and developed a large and valuable farm, which he still owns. He has always taken a prominent part in the politics of the county and state and was for three years a member of the Wisconsin legislature. He has attained the age of nearly eighty years and is admirably preserved in mind and body, while he is honored as one of the venerable pioneers of the Badger state.

Joseph H. Bottum passed his boyhood days on the homestead farm in Wisconsin, having been an infant in arms at the time of his parents' removal to that state, and his early educational discipline was secured in the public schools, after which he completed a course of study in Ripon College, in the town of that name, being there graduated as a member of the class of 1877 with the degree of Bachelor of Science. Shortly afterward he entered the law office of the firm of Shepherd & Shepherd, of Fond du Lac, the interested principals being leading members of the bar of Wisconsin, and under their able preceptorship he continued his technical study of the law until 1880, when he was duly admitted to the bar. He immediately came to what is now the state of South Dakota, locating in the city of Sioux Falls, where he remained until the spring of 1882, when he removed to Spink county, where he was engaged in newspaper work until March, 1883, when he located in the village of La Foon, five miles east of the present county seat, and was there engaged in the practice of his profession until January, 1887, when the railroad was completed through Faulkton, whereupon he removed to this point, where he has ever since been prominent in professional work and public and civic affairs, being one of the most successful members of the county bar and being held in the highest regard in the community, as is evident from the dignified official position which he has been called upon to fill, in the gift of the people. The county was organized in 1883, and Mr. Bottum had the distinction of being its first register of deeds, La Foon being then the county seat, while he served as state's attorney for the county from 1890 to 1894, inclusive, making an enviable record as a public prosecutor. In 1898 he was elected to represent his county in the state senate, serving during the sixth general assembly, and in 1902 he was again chosen for this responsible preferment, being a member of the assembly at the time of this writing and having gained a reputation as a conservative and conscientious legislator and as one thoroughly devoted to the interests of the people of the state. Fraternally he is a Royal Arch Mason, and is also identified with the Knights of Pythias and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Senator Bottum has taken a deep interest in local affairs, particularly in the cause of popular education, and at the present time he is president of the board of education.

In June, 1885, Senator Bottum was united in marriage to Miss Sylvia G. Smith, who was born and reared in Missouri, and who is a daughter of Judge Darius S. Smith. Of this union have been born seven children, namely: Nellie, Fannie, Dora, Emily, Julia, Roswell and Joseph H. Both parents are members of the Congregational church.

H. T. MEACHAM, one of the leading merchants of Gettysburg, Potter county, is a native of the beautiful Wolverine state, having been born in Adamsville, Cass county, Michigan, on the 19th of November, 1861, and being a son of G. A. and Helen M. Meacham, natives respectively of New York and Ohio. The father now resides in Adamsville, Michigan, where he has been engaged in farming for many years. The mother died in 1900. The subject was reared in his native town and there completed the curriculum of the public schools, being graduated in the high school at Elkhart, Indiana, as a member of the class of 1881, while he then put his scholastic acquirements to practical test and use by his attention in teaching, to which profession he gave his attention about three years. He then decided to try his fortunes in what is now South Dakota, whither he came in 1883, arriving in Gettysburg on the 29th of August. He entered claim to three hundred and twenty acres of government land seven miles south of the town, and remained on the same for a number of months and then returning to his home in Michigan for the winter. In the spring of 1884 he came once more to his claim, upon which he made improvements, placing a considerable portion of the land under cultivation and in due time perfecting his title. In the fall of 1884 he was elected county treasurer, on the Republican ticket, and the hold which he had gained upon popular confidence and esteem was shown in the fact that he was the only successful candidate on the ticket, while he also had the distinction of being the first county treasurer elected, his predecessor having been appointed at the time of the organization of the county and having served until the first general election provided regular incumbents for the various offices. Mr. Meacham gave a most able and satisfactory administration of the fiscal affairs of the county during the formative period, and was continued in the office for three successive terms, of two years each. Upon retiring from office he engaged in the real-estate business, to which he gave his attention until 1893, when he went to Chicago, Illinois, where he remained about two years, at the expiration of which he returned to Gettysburg and established himself in the general merchandise business, in which he has ever since successfully continued, controlling a large trade and having a select and comprehensive stock in the various departments.

Mr. Meacham has taken a particularly active interest in public affairs of a local order and has been prominent in the councils of the Republican party contingent in the state. In 1896 he was a delegate to the national convention, in St. Louis, which nominated the late and lamented William McKinley for the presidency, and since that time he has served as a member of the Republican state central committee. Fraternally he is identified with Ionia Lodge, No. 83, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, in Gettysburg, having been the first candidate initiated in the same; with Faulkton Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, and with Huron Lodge, No. 444, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, at Huron, South Dakota. Mr. Meacham is a bachelor.

EVAN FREDERICK GROSS, a representative business man of Gettysburg, Potter county, has the distinction of being a native of the metropolis of the nation, having been born in New York city, on the 19th of October, 1853, and being a son of G. F. Gross, born in Hall, Wurtemberg, Germany, and Theresia Gross, born in Niederlies, Lower Austria. Shortly after their marriage, in 1852, they emigrated to America, and the subject, the eldest of their five children, was born soon after their arrival in New York city. They remained there for a short time and then removed to Reading, Pennsylvania, which continued to be their home until about 1861, when they removed to the city of Chicago, Illinois, where they passed the remainder of their lives. The father of our subject was a printer by trade and vocation, having learned the art in his native land, and he followed the same until his death, which occurred in 1884, while for a number of years he owned and conducted a job office in Chicago. In his family were four sons and one daughter, and all are still living. The mother is still living in Chicago.

Evan Frederick Gross, the immediate subject of this sketch, was about eight years of age at the time of his parents' removal to Chicago, and there he was reared to maturity, securing his education in the public schools, and entering upon an apprenticeship at the printer's trade under the direction of his father. He became a skilled workman, while he continued to be identified with the work of his trade in Chicago until 1883, when he removed to Potter county, South Dakota, where he filed entry on a pre-emption claim in Lincoln township, Potter county, where he improved a good farm and there devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits until 1887, when he was at first appointed and afterwards elected county auditor, in which capacity he served six consecutive years, having been twice re-elected. He then established himself in the hardware business in Gettysburg, the county seat, beginning operations upon a somewhat modest scale, and in the intervening years he has built up a large and prosperous enterprise in the line, controlling a representative patronage throughout this section and having a large and well-equipped store and also ample warehouse accommodations. He carries a large and comprehensive stock of heavy and shelf hardware, stoves, ranges, etc., has a well-equipped tin and repair shop, and also handles a full line of agricultural implements and machinery, while he is known as a reliable and straightforward business man and commands unequivocal confidence and regard in the county in which he has so long made his home and with whose industrial, business and civic affairs he has been so prominently identified. He has been an active factor in local political affairs ever since coming to the county, is a man of broad intellectual grasp and mature judgment, and thus he has become naturally a leader in thought and action. He is a Democrat in his political faith, and in 1900 was elected to represent his district in the state legislature, where he made a most excellent record, the popular endorsement of which came in his re-election in the fall of 1902, so that he is a member of the general assembly at present. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

In 1874 Mr. Gross was united in marriage to Miss Marianne Augustine, who was born in Alsace, being of French ancestry, and her death occurred in 1879. She is survived by two children, Robert A., who is successfully engaged in the real-estate business in Gettysburg, and Alma, who is the wife of Frank G. Carpenter, of Sour Lake, Texas.

On the 15th of June, 1890, Mr. Gross wedded Miss M. Helen Williams, who was born and reared in Harrison, Illinois, being a direct descendant of Roger Williams, the founder of the state of Rhode Island, and at the time of her marriage she was superintendent two terms of the public schools in Potter, this county. Of this union has been born one son, to whom has most consistently been given the name of Roger Williams, and a daughter, Theresia Marie.

ROY L. HOPKINS, one of the well-known citizens of Redfield, South Dakota, where he is president of the Redfield Cement Brick and Tile Manufacturing Company, was born near Cleveland, Ohio, on April 23, 1853. He is the son of William W. and Louise (Sumner) Hopkins. The father was born in New York state, and is the son of Cyrus Hopkins. The Hopkins are of English stock, but have been in America many generations. The mother was born in Ohio. The genealogy of the Sumner family runs back to the colonial period. Three brothers of the family came from England prior to the Revolutionary war. One of them, the great-grandfather of the subject, held three commissions under the crown of Great Britain and for service was granted a tract of land composing six hundred and fifty acres on which the city of Rochester, New York, now stands. He was a strong Tory, and during the war for independence he fled to Canada. He had prepared to return to his possessions, but was taken sick and died. The treaty between England and the United States provided that all confiscated property should be returned to the original owners. Not returning, however, the property fell into other hands, but even today their titles are clouded by the fact that the property really belongs to the said Thomas Sumner, and no absolutely clear title can be given to Rochester city property. The grandfather of the subject, Azor Betts Sumner, was a native of Vermont state. He removed from Vermont to New York state, thence to Ohio and served in the war of 1812, and then, at the age of ninety-three years, he went alone to Missouri, in which state he died at the age of ninety-six years. Cyrus B. Hopkins, paternal grandfather of the subject, was born in the year of 1781 at Great Barrington, Massachusetts, was in the war of 1812 and died September 6, 1863. Charlotte Bissell Hopkins, his wife, was born at Randolph, Vermont, October 30, 1791, and died in 1885. Persis

Warren Sumner, grandmother, was born at Granville, New York, May 11, 1785, and died March 26, 1861. From Ohio the parents of the subject removed to Beloit, Wisconsin, in 1853, and from that state he removed to Rockford, Illinois, and from there came to Redfield, South Dakota, in 1883, and here he and his wife have since resided. He is now seventy-seven years old, while his wife is in her seventy-fifth year.

Roy L. Hopkins was educated in the common and high schools, and finished the same with a course at Arnold's Business College, at Rockford, Illinois. He learned the baker's trade, and opened his first shop at Marengo, Illinois, where he was burned out. In 1880 he came to South Dakota and settled in Spink county, near the camping ground of the Indians on the James river, four miles northeast from Redfield, which locality he reached on March 2, 1880. The following August he went to Redfield, or what is now that city, for at that time there was not a building on the site. He opened the Star Restaurant and Bakery in the summer of 1881, and following that he ran the Central Hotel at Redfield. He next erected a building and opened a restaurant, fruit store and bakery, to which he later added groceries, and managed the same until 1889. His wife's health failing at this time, he returned to Illinois, where he was engaged for eighteen months in the butcher business, at the expiration of which period he returned to Redfield and his old business, being associated with his brother, G. S. Hopkins. In 1897 he took charge of the local telephone lines and exchange in connection with his store, and two years later he sold out his store and gave his entire attention to the telephone business, of which he was the owner. He built and operated lines in Redfield and the county until 1904, when he sold out to the Citizens' Company. In 1904 he began the cement business, getting in machinery, etc., and in the same year he organized the company and began the manufacture of cement brick and tile. The machine they use was patented in Canada, and is the first one turned out in the United States. Mr. Hopkins served four years in the Redfield city council.

In September, 1874, Mr. Hopkins was united in marriage to Miss Minnie Lanaghen, who was born at Lyons, Iowa. She died June 27, 1902, leaving two sons, Clarence and Roy, Jr.

CHENEY C. GROSS, M. D.—To achieve state reputation within a comparatively short time, in one of the most exacting of the learned professions, is evidence of intellectual capacity of a high order and superior professional training, both of which, in an eminent degree, characterize the learned and successful physician whose name appears at the head of this article. The distinction of being the leader of his profession in Yankton is freely conceded to him and that he is also widely and favorably known in other parts is attested by the worthy prestige he enjoys in medical circles throughout the entire state of South Dakota.

Dr. Cheney C. Gross, of Yankton, is a native of Naperville, Illinois, and the second in a family of five children, whose parents were Daniel N. and Mary E. (Dudley) Gross. The Doctor's paternal grandparents, Conrad and Salome Gross, came to America a number of years ago from Bavaria, Germany, and settled in Pennsylvania, thence about 1833, emigrated to Dupage county, Illinois, where they spent the remainder of their lives. The Dudleys, who came from New Hampshire and Vermont, were also early pioneers of Dupage county, their settlement being contemporaneous with that of the Gross family, both locating near the town of Naperville, where they engaged in agricultural pursuits. Grandfather Gross was a devout member of the German Evangelical church, and a man of high character and excellent standing. The Dudleys were Congregationalists, of the most orthodox New England type, the Doctor's grandfather having been a leading spirit in organizing the church of that denomination in Naperville, of which society he was a charter member, and for a number of years one of its most liberal supporters. John Dudley, the Doctor's great-grandfather, was a Revolutionary hero, and the old flint-lock musket which he carried during the war was retained as a precious relic for many years. This branch of the family came originally from England, the ancestors being among the "Mayflower" pilgrims, others immigrating to America at a later date. Daniel N. Gross, the Doctor's father, was born in Naperville, Illinois, in 1837. He enjoyed but limited educational advantages, never attending school after his thirteenth year, and when quite young he apprenticed himself to learn the carpenter's trade, which in due time he mastered and became a skillful mechanic. For some years prior to the breaking out of the great Civil war he was foreman in a carpenter's shop, at Naperville, but when the President called for volunteers to put down the rebellion he was one of the first in that town to respond, joining Company E, Eighth Illinois Cavalry, with which he served until made an aide on General Sumner's staff, some time later. His command was attached to the Army of the Potomac, and took part in a number of Virginia campaigns, participating in many of the bloody battles which made the war in that section historic. Upon the occasion of the seven days' battle before Richmond he was one of those who volunteered to carry an important dispatch in the face of a deadly fire to the commander of another division, with an order to retreat, the mission being attended with great danger, and to all appearances almost certain death. Of the three he was chosen for the dangerous service, and after proceeding as far as he dared on horseback, he left his animal and, crawling directly under the fire of the enemy, finally reached his destination in safety and delivered the message. Returning, he reached his horse without injury, but in attempting to mount he was shot through the leg, the missile killing the animal, thus leaving him to make his way as best he could to a place of safety. After hastily dressing the wound, he was assisted by a comrade, S. V. Hoang, now living near Fargo, North Dakota, who, helping him mount another horse, led the animal, and in this way the two followed the retreating army until arriving at Pittsburg Landing on the shore of Chesapeake bay, where they found the force already embarked, and the last of the transports just leaving the shore. The commander of the transport was not disposed to return for them until Surgeon Hord, of Aurora, Illinois, threatened to report him, when he reluctantly yielded and the vessel approached sufficiently close to enable the wounded man to be swung on board in a blanket, their rescue being just in time to prevent their capture by the pursuing enemy. A storm came on and it was several days before Mr. Gross could be taken to a hospital in Baltimore, when, in order to save his life, it was found necessary to amputate his wounded limb. After remaining something like six months under treatment, he was discharged from the hospital, and immediately thereafter returned home, where a short time later, January 14, 1864, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Dudley. This union, as already stated, resulted in the birth of five children, four of whom are living, at the present time, namely: Bertha C., a kindergartener in Riverside, California; Dr. Cheney C., of this review; Dean D., a hardware merchant of Yankton, South Dakota, and Mary S., an unmarried lady, who is still under the parental roof. Fred A. Gross, the youngest child, died in San Diego, California, June 28, 1900, at the age of eighteen years, after an illness of two years.

Daniel N. Gross served three terms as treasurer of Dupage county, Illinois, and for a period of fourteen years was postmaster at Naperville. In 1883 he moved his family to Yankton, South Dakota, where he became associated with other partners in the hardware business, continuing a member of the firm until his death, which occurred November 28, 1889. One year prior to that date, he was elected auditor of Yankton county, and he had fairly entered upon the duties of the office when the dread messenger summoned him to the great beyond. Mr. Gross was a man of influence in his various places of residence, and filled ably and worthily every position with which honored. He was prominent in the Masonic order, having been a leading member of the Oriental Consistory at Yankton, and was also active in religious circles, having been identified with the Congregational church at the time of his death, being a pillar of the First church of that denomination in Yankton. Mrs.

Gross is still living and at this time makes her home in Yankton with two of her children, the subject of this sketch and the youngest daughter, Mary S.

Referring specifically to the career of Dr. Cheney C. Gross, it is learned that he was born in Naperville, Illinois, on February 15, 1868, and that he grew up at home, receiving his early education in the schools of his native place, and later, 1886, graduating from the Yankton high school. The Doctor was a youth of about fifteen when his parents moved to South Dakota and since that time his life has been very closely interwoven with the history of this city. After finishing his high-school course, he continued his literary education for three years in Yankton College, subsequently, in the fall of 1890, entering the medical department of the Northwestern University at Chicago, from which institution he was graduated in the summer of 1895. For one year of the above period he was connected with the drug house of G. W. Frostensen, in Yankton, but immediately after receiving his degree abandoned all other pursuits for the practice of his profession, which he has since prosecuted with distinguished success, having not only risen to an eminent position in his own city, but achieved a reputation far beyond the limits of his present field of endeavor. The Doctor's progress since opening an office in Yankton has been rapid and marked, and by common consent he is now recognized as the leading physician in this section of the state, his abilities in all branches of the profession creating a demand for his services which taxes his utmost powers to meet. A close and critical student, as well as a skillful and successful practitioner, he keeps abreast of the times in all matters relating to medical science, belonging to a number of professional societies and associations, and taking a leading part in their deliberations. Among these are the American Medical Association, the South Dakota Medical Society, Sioux Valley Medical Association and the Aberdeen Medical Association, in addition to which he has also filled several positions in the line of his calling, to-wit, that of health officer of Yankton, superintendent of the county board of health, which post he has held during the past six years, and county coroner, serving two terms in the last named office. For several years he has held the position of surgeon for the Great Northern Railway Company at Yankton and is also medical examiner for several of the leading old-line life insurance companies.

Few physicians of his age and experience have come so prominently to the front as has Dr. Gross, and none have discharged their duties more ably or faithfully. He is a gentleman of scholarly habits and refined tastes, extensively acquainted with general literature and, as already indicated, a profound student of medicine. In private life he is quiet and unobtrusive, yet of a social disposition, a ready and fluent conversationalist and impresses all with whom he comes in contact by the depth and wide range of his intelligence. It is in these humble relations that characters are most fully tested, and here, as in his professional labors, the Doctor has always been governed by principles of virtue and duty. Dr. Gross has never seen fit to assume the duties and responsibilities of matrimony, being still an unmarried man and making one of a happy home circle of which his mother and a sister are the members. In religion he is a Congregationalist, being an active member of the First church of that name in Yankton, and he is also identified with the Pythian fraternity, belonging to Phoenix Lodge, of this city.

The subject's maternal grandmother Dudley bore the maiden name of Mary Barrows and was a native of Middlebury, Vermont. Her family originally came from England, settling in this country about 1630. She was a woman of exceptionally strong character and unusual intellectual attainments. In 1832 she left her home in Middlebury, Vermont, with a married sister, Mrs. Rev. N. C. Clark, whose husband had been appointed by the American Home Missionary Society to the then new field of Illinois. They arrived in Chicago when that city was a mere village, boasting but one frame house. Here she and a Miss Chapin founded a school, which was to be the basis or origin of the present public-school system of that great city. Miss Chapin later married Rev. Jeremiah Porter, an appointee of the American Home Missionary Society and who served as chaplain to the United States troops stationed at old Fort Dearborn and whose name is prominently mentioned in the history of the early settlement of Illinois. Here Miss Mary Burrows first met her future husband, John Dudley, whom she married December 19, 1836. Her niece, Miss Martha J. Barrows, has been a missionary at Kobe, Japan, for many years, where, in 1893, she and the subject's aunt, Miss Julia E. Dudley, founded the Woman's Evangelistic School of Kobe, Japan, a Bible training school under the supervision and control of the American Board of Foreign Missions.

The subject's mother, Mrs. Mary D. Gross, is a woman of strong, earnest and sincere Christian character, and also of unusual intellectual strength and abilities. To her Dr. Gross is probably indebted mainly for his mental and intellectual ability. She was favored in her youth with superior educational advantages, having attended the public schools and a private academy at Naperville, Illinois, and also the Rockford Female Seminary at Rockford, Illinois. Her sister, Miss Julia E. Dudley, who is still living in California, was for thirty years a missionary in Japan, being superintendent of the Bible training school for women, at Kobe, Japan, under the American Board of Foreign Missions.

HON. CHARLES HENRY BURKE, of Pierre, is a New Yorker by birth, descended on the father's side from an old and noted Irish family, and through his mother his ancestry is traceable to an early period in the history of New England. His grandfather, Dr. Myles Burke, a physician of wide repute, was born and reared in Galway, Ireland, and after practicing his profession in that country for a number of years, came to America and took up his residence in New York city, where he spent the remainder of his days. Walter Burke, son of the Doctor and father of the subject, was also a native of County Galway, where his birth occurred on November 10, 1820. He accompanied the family to this country in 1830 and in 1856 married Miss Sarah T. Beckwith, who was born October 17, 1828, in the state of Connecticut, where, as above indicated, her ancestors settled in an early day. Walter Burke and wife spent the greater part of their married life on a farm near Batavia, Genesee county, New York, and it was there that their son, the subject of this review, first saw the light of day, on April 1, 1861.

Charles Henry Burke was reared under the wholesome discipline and healthful influence of outdoor life on the farm, early became accustomed to the rugged labor of the same, and at the proper age entered the public schools of Batavia, where he pursued his studies until finishing the high-school course. The training thus received was supplemented by an academic course, which he completed in the spring of 1881, and after teaching the following winter in a country district in western New York, he started west, arriving in Dakota territory in the spring of 1882 and settling on a homestead near Broadland, in what is now Beadle county. After spending one year on his claim, Mr. Burke, in the spring of 1883, located at Blunt, Hughes county, where he opened a land and real-estate office, forming a partnership with Smith & Caldwell, of Huron, the firm thus constituted building up in due time an extensive and lucrative business. While thus engaged the subject took up the study of law and prosecuted the same as opportunities offered, until his admission to the bar in 1886, after which he practiced at Blunt in connection with real-estate business until September of the following year, when he came to Pierre and entered the employ of the Security Mortgage and Investment Company, of this city. Later Mr. Burke became manager of the company and continued as such until he closed up its affairs. Subsequently he became a member of the law firm of Burke & Goodner, of Pierre, but upon his election to congress this partnership was dissolved.

Mr. Burke has been a forceful factor in political circles ever since becoming a citizen of South Dakota and in 1894 was elected on the Republican ticket to the legislature, in which body he served two terms, having been chosen his own successor in the year 1896. His record as a law-maker proved eminently satisfactory to his constituents, and in recognition of his ability as well as by reason of distinguished services rendered his party, he was honored in 1898 by being elected to the national house of representatives. Mr. Burke's first term in congress fully met the high expectations of his friends and the public, and his zeal in looking after the interests of his district and state, and his ability in matters of national import were such as to lead to his renomination and triumphant re-election in 1900, there being no opposition to him in the convention. In 1902 he was again renominated by acclamation and, his election following as a matter of course, he is still ably representing his constituency and laboring for the welfare of the country, putting patriotism above party and proving by distinguished public service that the confidence reposed in his integrity and worth has not been misplaced.

Previous to his legislative and congressional experience, Mr. Burke took an active part in local and state affairs and in 1890 was a member and secretary of the Pierre capital committee, in which capacity he devoted about eight months exclusively to the campaign work of that year. His labors were influential and highly appreciated and to his judicious counsels and efficient leadership is largely due the successful issue of the state capital questions.

Faternally Mr. Burke is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, which organization he joined at Blunt in the year 1885. He was made a Mason in 1898 and at the present time belongs to the blue lodge and chapter at Pierre and he is also identified with Sioux Falls Lodge, No. 262, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Although a member of no church, he believes in religion and respects all organized efforts for its dissemination, his preference among creeds being the Episcopal. He is a loyal attendant of the church of this name and a liberal contributor to its various lines.

In concluding this brief sketch, reference is made to the domestic life of Mr. Burke, the history of which dates from January 14, 1886, when he was married, at Blunt, South Dakota, to Miss Caroline Schlosser. Mr. and Mrs. Burke are the parents of five children, whose names and dates of birth are as follows: Grace F., July 2, 1887; Bessie, February 18, 1889; Walter H., October 5, 1890; Charles Elmer, February 17, 1893, died May 3, 1898, and Josephine Louise, who was born in Washington City, D. C., on January 1, 1900.

As stated in a preceding paragraph, Mr. Burke on the father's side comes from an old and highly esteemed Irish family, several representatives of which have achieved honorable distinction in various spheres of endeavor. Joseph Burke, an uncle of the subject, acquired renown, both in Europe and America, by his wonderful versatility as an actor as well as a violinist. When a mere infant he displayed astounding musical and histrionic talents and long before he was out of dresses he was receiving instructions both in music and elocution from private tutors. He was but three years of age when he began appearing before the public as a violinist and his success was instantaneous. His career as an actor began when he was six years old and at the age of twelve he was acknowledged by the best critics of the day to be the most accomplished violinist in the united kingdom. When a mere child he toured England, Scotland and Ireland, playing in the larger cities before overflowing audiences and later he repeated his success in the United States, whither his fame had preceded him. He was without doubt the most astonishing instance of precocious talents the musical world has ever known, but, unlike so many youthful prodigies whose skill disappears with advancing age, he not only retained unimpaired his wonderful genius throughout a prolonged and remarkably distinguished career, but added to his skill and efficiency as long as lived as an artist. When Jenny Lind made her tour of the United States in 1850 young Burke accompanied her in the role of violinist and afterwards became her treasurer and private secretary as well as the leader of her orchestra. She visited him several times at his beautiful home near Batavia, New York, and between the two a lifelong friendship existed. The success which everywhere attended Mr. Burke was unprecedented and his fame was equally as great on the continent of Europe as it was in England and the United States. He was born in Galway, Ireland, in 1817, began his professional career in Dublin in 1824 and after playing the different roles in all the leading theaters, spent the remainder of his life, dying at his home in Genesee county, New York, in the year 1902.

JOHN STOLLER, one of the leading representatives of the Russo-German families early settled in McPherson county, was born near Odessa, Russia, on the 24th of June, 1862, and is a son of Dominick Stoller, who was born and reared in that same locality. In 1872 the Stollers, in company with about forty other families from the same district, came to America, proceeded west from New York to Sandusky, Ohio, where they temporarily located, until such time as a selection of a place of permanent abode could be determined upon. Dominick Stoller and three other men of the company of sturdy and worthy immigrant party set forth in search of a location, making an investigating tour through Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas and other states, and they finally decided to colonize in what is now the state of South Dakota. The entire company came forward to the new home on the frontier, arriving in Yankton on the 22d of April. Previously to coming to America the father of the subject had been engaged in farming and sheep growing, and he continued in the same lines of industry after coming to South Dakota. He and his elder sons took up land about eighteen miles north of Yankton, and there the honored father died on the 11th of January, 1876, leaving seven children, of whom the subject of this review was the fourth in order of birth.

John Stoller received his rudimentary education in the schools of his native land and was a lad of about ten years at the time of the immigration to America. He assisted in the improvement and cultivation of the homestead farm in Yankton county, and in the meanwhile availed himself of such educational advantages as were offered in the public schools of the locality. He remained on the old homestead until 1884, and in the spring of the following year came to McPherson county, taking up a quarter section of land in the center of the county, and there remaining for two years, engaged in farming and stock raising. He then removed to the embryonic village of Eureka, being one of the first settlers in the town, and here for three years and seven months thereafter he was employed on salary in a local mercantile establishment. He then engaged in the hardware business in Eureka, forming at the time a partnership with C. J. Hazel, manager of the Golden Rule mercantile house in Aberdeen, and this association continued until 1893, when Frederick Heppler, now mayor of Eureka, purchased Mr. Hazel's interest in the enterprise, and the firm of Stoller & Heppler has ever since continued, while its interests have greatly expanded in scope and importance through wise management and fair dealing. In 1896 the firm added dry goods and other lines of general merchandise to their stock, and they have at the present time a large and well-appointed store, in which is carried a comprehensive and select stock. In 1900 they established a branch store in Artis, and in 1902 they opened a second store in Eureka, the same being located one and one-half blocks south of their original and still retained quarters, and in this second establishment they also carry a full line of general merchandise, running the two stores in conjunction. Mr. Stoller is a staunch Republican, and besides having held various village offices, he has also served as school commissioner and justice of the peace, while in 1902 he was elected to represent his district in the state senate. In this dignified body his course was such as to amply justify the popular confidence and esteem which led to his being chosen for the important office. He and his wife are consistent members of the Lutheran church. It should be said that the father of the subject was of German lineage, being a scion of one of the numerous German families which went into Russia during the reign of Czarina Catherine, who was herself a German and who accorded special governmental provisions for the continuous protection of her countrymen for a period of one hundred years. This limitation expired some few years ago, and the oppressive measures then adopted led to the emigration of many of the leading Russo-German families to America, the colony mentioned in this article having been among the first to thus leave the fatherland, and it is pleasing to note that South Dakota thus gained a valuable element of citizenship.

On the 9th of January, 1883, Mr. Stoller was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Kost, who was born in Odessa, Russia, and who accompanied her parents on their immigration to America when a child, the family coming to South Dakota in the autumn of 1874, thus being numbered among the early pioneers of the present state. Mr. and Mrs. Stoller have five children, namely: Emilia, Margaretta M., John F. W., Rosetta K., and Hildegard M.

FRED HEPPERLE, the popular mayor of Eureka, McPherson county, and junior member of the well-known mercantile firm of Stoller & Hepperle, was born near Odessa, Russia, on the 2d of February, 1863, and comes of staunch German lineage. He is a son of John Hepperle, who was likewise born in Russia, to which country his father removed with his parents from Germany when a lad of ten years, this being in 1817. The father of the subject became a successful farmer in Russia and there passed his entire life, his death occurring in 1902. Fred Hepperle was reared and educated in his native land, where he remained until 1885, when he came to America, landing in New York and thence coming west to Nebraska, where he spent one year, at the expiration of which, in 1886, he came to South Dakota. He located in Campbell county, where he was identified with agricultural pursuits until 1888, when he took up his residence in Eureka, where he has ever since maintained his home. He became an interested principal in the conducting of the Eureka Bazaar, disposing of his interests in the same in 1893, and purchasing C. J. Hazel's interest in the hardware establishment conducted under the title of Hazel & Stoller, and the new firm name became Stoller & Hepperle. They continued the hardware business unchanged until 1896, when they installed a stock of general merchandise, while in 1902 they opened a second store in the town, which is likewise devoted to a miscellaneous and select stock, the business controlled being of an extensive and representative sort. For further data in regard to the enterprises of this popular firm we refer the reader to the sketch of Hon. John Stoller, the senior member of the firm.

In politics Mr. Hepperle gives an unqualified allegiance to the Republican party, and he is essentially loyal and public-spirited in his attitude, and takes a helpful interest in all that makes for the well-being of the community. He served two terms as county treasurer and is at the present time giving a most admirable administration as mayor of Eureka.

In August, 1893, Mr. Hepperle was united in marriage to Miss Matilda Weber, who was born in Austria, and who came with her parents to America when a child. Mr. and Mrs. Hepperle have three sons, namely: Bruno, Herbert and Carl.

JAMES W. MORSE, the efficient clerk of the courts of Hughes county, comes of stanch old colonial stock in both the paternal and maternal lines, the respective families having been established in New England at an early epoch in our national history, while the genealogical records of the Morse family have been carefully compiled and preserved through the various generations, Professor Samuel F. B. Morse, the distinguished inventor of the electric telegraph, having been a member of the family.

James W. Morse was born in Springfield, the attractive capital city of the state of Illinois, on the 3d of September, 1853, and is a son of James M. and Emma M. (Gregory) Morse, the former of whom was born in Newburyport, Massachusetts, and the latter in Danbury, Connecticut, while they were numbered among the early settlers of Sangamon county, Illinois, the father having been for many years engaged in business in Springfield, where both he and his wife died. The subject secured his early educational discipline in the public schools of his native city, and as a youth learned the art of telegraphy, but shortly afterward learned the watch-making trade to which he devoted his attention for eighteen years. He came to Pierre in 1889 and here engaged in the cigar and tobacco business, and in 1893 was appointed deputy postmaster, in which capacity he continued to serve until November, 1894, when he was elected to his present office of clerk of the courts, having held the same continuously for nearly a decade, through successive re-elections, and having handled the exacting affairs of the office with marked ability and discrimination. In politics he accords an unwavering support to the Republican party, and is at the present time worshipful master of Pierre Lodge, No. 27, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, while he is past master of the local lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and past venerable consul of the Pierre Camp of the Modern Woodmen of America.

On the 29th of December, 1878, Mr. Morse was united in marriage to Miss Mary J. Schlipf, who was born and reared in Sangamon county, Illinois. They have three children, Bernice W., aged twenty-four years, who holds a clerical position in Pierre postoffice; Dorothy L., aged twenty-two, who is a stenographer in the office of the secretary of state in her home city; and Kathryn H., at this writing three years of age. The subject's musical abilities are evidenced by the popularity of his productions, among which may be mentioned, "The Soldier's Dream of Home," "Tell my Boy to Meet Me There," "My Boyhood's Home in Sunny Tennessee," and many others of equal merit.

ERNEST A. MOOSDORF is known as one of the most enterprising and successful business men of the thriving village of Tulare, Spink county, where he began operations on a most modest scale and has pushed steadily forward until he has interests of distinctive importance in a commercial and industrial way and stands as one of the honored and representative citizens of the community.

Mr. Moosdorf was born in the province of Saxony, Prussia, on the 23d of March, 1862, and is a son of Traugott and Rosina Moosdorf, both of whom were born in the same province, where they passed their entire lives, the former having been a miller and farmer by vocation. He died in 1871 and his wife passed away in 1886. They became the parents of twelve children, of whom the subject of this sketch is the youngest and the only one who came from the fatherland to America. His eldest brother took charge of the mill after the death of their father, and a son of this brother now operates the same. Mr. Moosdorf secured his early educational discipline in the excellent national schools of Germany and thereafter served a four-years apprenticeship at the tinner's trade. In 1879 he enlisted in the Seventy-second Infantry Regiment in the Prussian army, and served three years, at the close of which he received his honorable discharge. He thereafter followed the work of his trade until 1883 when he came to America and joined his cousin in Wisconsin, whence, two months later, he accompanied said cousin and his family on their removal to Texas. He located in Marlin county, and there was engaged in farming, the major portion of the time on his own responsibility, until 1886, when he returned to Wisconsin, arriving in the month of January and being there married in the following March, while he continued his residence in the Badger state until March, 1887, when he came to South Dakota and located in Spink county. After being identified with farming a few months he secured a position in a tin shop in Redfield, where he remained until 1889, when he came to Tulare, where he purchased a small store, his cash capital at the time being represented in the sum of sixty-two dollars, while he also owned a pony. In his store he engaged in the hardware business on a small scale, and in the same fall added a stock of groceries, while in the following year he still further augmented the facilities of his establishment by the installing of a small stock of dry goods. His success continued to be cumulative, and in 1891 he purchased his present well-appointed store, which is forty-four by fifty feet in dimensions, and equipped with a large and select stock of general merchandise. In 1896 Mr. Moosdorf erected a grain elevator in the town, and has since devoted his attention each season to the buying and shipping of grain. In 1900 he added a lumber yard to his business enterprises in the village, and still conducts the same, while since 1897 he has been associated in his efforts with C. H. Petersmeyer, whom he admitted to partnership in that year, under the firm name of Moosdorf & Company, the junior member being of American birth and German parentage. In politics the subject gives his support to the Republican party, and he has filled various town and school offices, while he has been postmaster of Tulare since 1900. He and his wife are members of the German Methodist Episcopal church. He and his partner own a well-improved farm in Crandon township, and lease the property to a good tenant.

On the 23d of March, 1886, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Moosdorf to Miss Minnie Wieting, who was born and reared in Wisconsin, being a daughter of John Wieting. The subject and his wife have five children, the eldest of whom is attending college at the time of this writing, while the names, in order of birth, are as follows: Albert, Clarence, Viola, Harvey and Milton.

FREDERICK A. BURDICK, one of the pioneer stockmen of Stanley county, comes of staunch Scottish lineage, and the family was founded in America in the colonial epoch, while representatives of the name were found among the valiant soldiers in the Continental line during the war of the Revolution.

Mr. Burdick was born in Brasher Falls, St. Lawrence county, New York, on the 17th of October, 1864, and is a son of Charles B. and Alice L. (Smith) Burdick, both of St. Lawrence county, New York. John Burdick, the grandfather of the subject, was born in Chateaugay, Franklin county, that state, and was a son of John Burdick, who came from Scotland prior to the Revolution and settled in the old Empire state, with whose history the name has been ever since identified. The father of the subject was a machinist by vocation and devoted the greater portion of his active life to this line of enterprise. In 1864 he enlisted in the Sixth New York Artillery, and met his death in an engagement in the Shenandoah valley of Virginia about six months later. In 1867 his widow removed with her family to South Bend, Indiana, where they remained about eleven years, and then removed to Minneapolis, where she passed the remainder of her life, her death occurring in 1885.

F. A. Burdick received his early education in the public schools of South Bend, Indiana. He then learned the trade of plumbing, and was engaged in this line of business for himself, at Minneapolis, Minnesota, until February, 1892, when he started for Fort Pierre, South Dakota. Upon his arrival he engaged in the raising of sheep, securing a tract of excellent grazing land in Stanley county, and he continued in this line of industry for six years, at the expiration of which he disposed of his sheep and turned his attention to raising of horses and cattle, in which he has since been successfully engaged. His well-improved ranch is located on the Cheyenne river at the mouth of Big Plum creek, so that an ample supply of water is afforded. The ranch is located five miles south of the village of Leslie, which is the postoffice address of Mr. Burdick. He gives preference to the Hereford breed of cattle, his range stock in the line being three-fourths Hereford blood. He is a man of progressive ideas and superior business judgment, and is one of the loyal and enthusiastic advocates of the advantages and great resources of South Dakota, having selected this state as his place of residence in preference to the many other sections of the Union in which he has been. When he and his family took up their residence on the present homestead ranch their nearest neighbor was one mile distant, while no others were to be found save at distances varying from ten to forty miles. The famous Dupree herd of wild buffaloes grazed in the vicinity, while deer, antelope, wolves and coyotes were in evidence on every side. The family lived an isolated and somewhat lonely life for the first few years, but manifested the courage and determination which have been so characteristic of the sturdy citizens who have developed the great resources of the state. Mrs. Burdick is a lady of education and distinctive refinement. She completed her education in Tabor College, at Tabor, Iowa. In politics Mr. Burdick gives his support to the Republican party.

On the 7th of May, 1886, Mr. Burdick was united in marriage to Miss Alice L. Percival, who was born in the province of New Brunswick, Canada, being of stanch English lineage. She is a daughter of George and Elizabeth (Loye) Percival, who are now dead, and at the time of her marriage was a resident of Minneapolis. Of this union have been born five children, all but one of whom are living, namely: Henry M., Percival S., Samuel L., Grace A. and Frederick A., Jr.

REV. LUCIUS KINGSBURY comes of stanch old New England stock and is a native of Connecticut, having been born in Andover, Tolland county, on the 20th of September, 1828, and being a son of Joseph and Amelia (Reynolds) Kingsbury. He received his early educational training in the schools of Andover and Hartford, Connecticut, and in 1851 was graduated in the Massachusetts State Normal School, at Bridgewater. At the age of seventeen years he engaged in teaching, and he continued to follow the pedagogic profession for the long period of thirty-one years, accomplishing most effective work and proving a valuable integer in his chosen field of endeavor. In 1852 he left his New England home and removed to St. Louis, Missouri, where he became principal of the Benton school, and later an instructor in the high school. In 1862 he was principal of a school in Springfield, Illinois, where he remained until 1868, after which he was for a decade incumbent of the position of superintendent of schools of Havana, that state. Thereafter he resided for two years in Lincoln, Illinois, still engaged in teaching, and in June, 1878, he came as a pioneer to South Dakota, first locating in Sioux Falls, which was then a mere frontier village. He was here ordained as a minister of the Congregational church and became pastor of the church at Canton, Lincoln county, where he continued to serve until 1886, when he accepted the pastorate of the Congregational church at Clark, Clark county, where he remained two years. He then returned to Sioux Falls and for several years was pastor of the Livingston Memorial Reformed church, with whose upbuilding he was most prominently identified, infusing much of vitality into its spiritual and temporal affairs, and continuing to serve as its pastor until he had attained the age of seventy years, when he resigned the active pastoral duties to younger men and has since living retired, retaining his home in Sioux Falls, and being held in unqualified esteem by all who know him. In politics he is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and he has always taken a proper interest in public affairs and stood for the highest type of loyal citizenship.

On the 8th of July, 1855, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Kingsbury to Miss Lucy A. Carpenter, of Pawtucket, Rhode Island, and of their children we enter the following brief data: Frederick G. was drowned in the Sioux river, in the summer of 1879, at the age of twenty-one years; Mary Amelia, is the wife of Rev. W. S. Bell, superintendent of Congregational missions in Montana; Howard E. died at the age of three years; and Alice R. is professor of French and German in Yankton College, at Yankton, South Dakota.

CONRAD L. HOLMES, one of the assistant general agents of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, with headquarters in the city of Sioux Falls, is known as one of the able young insurance underwriters of the state, and has gained advancement in this field of endeavor by his signally well-directed efforts. Mr. Holmes was born in Rushford, Minnesota, on the 4th of August, 1875, being a son of Olaf and Mary (Hardevet) Holmes. The subject secured his rudimentary education in the public schools of his native place and when but fifteen years of age became a student in the college at Winona, Minnesota. His parents removed to Sioux Falls in 1889, and here he continued to prosecute his educational work in the high school. He was thereafter employed on a farm for some time and later was engaged in clerical work in mercantile establishments in Sioux Falls. In 1898 he identified himself with the life-insurance business, in connection with which he has made a splendid record, being known as one of the best solicitors in the state, and ever commanding the confidence and esteem of those with whom he comes in contact. His political allegiance is given to the Republican party and fraternally he is identified with Sioux Falls Lodge, No. 262, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On the 11th of November, 1889, Mr. Holmes was united in marriage to Miss Mary Mallanney, of Sioux Falls, and they have two winsome little daughters, Helen and Hortense.

WILLIAM H. WILLIAMS, cashier of the Merchants' Bank, of Woonsocket, is a native of the Badger state, having been born in Grant county, Wisconsin, on the 1st of February, 1859, a son of John S. and Susan Williams, to whom were born eleven children, namely: Susan is the wife of Frank Lightcap, of Winnipeg, Manitoba; Honor, who is the widow of Joseph Thomas and resides in Aurora, Illinois; Hannah, who is the wife of James Rogers, of Georgetown, Wisconsin; Sadie, who is the wife of Thomas E. Mann, of Sutherland, Iowa; Mary, who is the wife of Richard Brown, of Minneapolis, Minnesota; John, who is a resident of Plattville, Wisconsin; Roy, who maintains his home in Sioux Falls, South Dakota; Grant, who resides in the city of Chicago; Arthur, who is a resident of Sibley, Iowa; Alfred, whose home is in Hazel Green, Wisconsin; and William H., who is the immediate subject of this review. The parents were born in Cornwall, England, where their marriage was solemnized, and shortly afterward they came to the United States and located in Hazel Green, Wisconsin, there taking up their abode in 1847. Having been reared in the great mining district of England, the father of our subject naturally became a workman in the Cornish mines, and after coming to America he followed the vocation of miner, in Wisconsin, until 1850, in which year he went to California, where the gold excitement was then at its height. He made the trip by way of the isthmus of Panama, proceeding on a vessel from New York city and crossing the isthmus on foot, and nearly perishing for lack of water during the journey. He passed two years in the gold fields of California, meeting with fair success, and then returned to Grant county, Wisconsin, where he purchased a farm, to whose cultivation he thereafter gave his attention until within twelve years prior to his death, having retired and taken up his residence in the village of Hazel Green, where he died on the 7th of April, 1900, at the venerable age of eighty-two years, secure in the esteem of all who knew him. He was a staunch Republican from the time of the organization of the party until his death, having previously been a supporter of the Whig party. He and his wife were earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal church, she having preceded him into eternal rest by many years, passing away on the 25th of February, 1885, at the age of fifty-seven years.

William H. Williams was reared on the homestead farm and early began to contribute his quota to its operation, while he secured a good public-school education, completing the course in the high school at Hazel Green. He remained at the parental home until 1885, in March of which year he came west and located in Sanborn county, South Dakota, where he purchased a relinquishing claim of one hundred and sixty acres, three miles east of Letcher, and there he was engaged in agricultural pursuits and stock raising until the fall of 1890, having in the meanwhile purchased another quarter section near his home place. In the autumn of 1890 he was elected treasurer of Sanborn county, entering upon the discharge of his official duties in January following, at which time he took up his residence in Woonsocket, where he has since made his home. He served two terms as county treasurer, retiring from office on the 1st of January, 1895, after which he was variously employed until the 1st of January, 1899, when he became associated with W. A. Loveland in the establishing of a state bank in Woonsocket. One year later he purchased his partner's interest and brought about a reorganization of the bank, which has since that time been conducted under the title of the Merchants' Bank of Woonsocket, while its business is a most prosperous one, the institution having a strong hold on popular favor and being known as one of the solid and ably conducted banking houses of the state. Mr. Williams is a staunch Republican in his political proclivities and is recognized as one of the loyal and public-spirited citizens of his adopted county and state, where he has attained a high measure of success through his well-directed efforts. In connection with his banking operations he is also engaged in the real-estate business, in which he has made many important transactions, and he is personally the owner of ten hundred and eighty acres of valuable land.

On the 18th of February, 1885, Mr. Williams was married to Miss Sally Price, of Galena, Illinois, and they have one daughter, Elsie.

BURRE H. LIEN merits consideration in this history by reason of his standing as one of the most progressive and public-spirited citizens of Sioux Falls and as one who has been prominent in the public and civic affairs of the state. Mr. Lien was born near Spirit Lake, Iowa, on the 21st of December, 1859, being a son of Hans and Gertrude (Bureson) Lien, both of whom were born in Norway. An uprising of the Indians in the vicinity caused the parents to leave their home in Jackson, Minnesota, in 1863, and they removed to Decorah, Iowa, where they remained until 1873, when they removed to Faribault county, Minnesota, where the father continued to be identified with farming until the time of his death.

The subject of this review received his rudimentary education in the public schools of Iowa and Minnesota, and supplemented the same by a course in the normal school at Mankato, Minnesota. In 1879 he came to Brookings county, South Dakota, where he engaged in teaching school, becoming one of the pioneer educators in that section, where he also took up government land and engaged in farming, continuing to follow the two vocations until 1883, and thereafter serving two years as deputy register of deeds of that county. In November, 1885, he was elected judge of probate and at the next general election was chosen register of deeds of the county, in which capacity he served two terms, or four consecutive years, while for three years he was a valued member of the city council of Brookings. In June, 1891, Mr. Lien took up his residence in the city of Sioux Falls.

In politics Mr. Lien gives an uncompromising allegiance to the Democratic party, in whose councils he has been an important factor in the state. In 1894 he was elected to represent the third ward of city of Sioux Falls in the municipal board of aldermen, while in 1898 he was elected mayor of the city, giving a business-like and able administration and accomplishing much in improving and extending the public utilities. In March, 1899, he was appointed a member of the state board of charities and corrections, of which he was chosen chairman, and he continued to be a member of this important board until 1901. In 1900 he was made the candidate of his party for the office of governor of the state, and while he gained that endorsement at the polls which indicated his personal popularity, he met the defeat which attended the party ticket in general throughout the state in that year. Mr. Lien has ever shown a deep interest in the welfare and advancement of his home city, and his civic pride prompted him to a most valuable and timely donation to the city in April, 1903, when he presented to the municipality nine acres of land for a city park, the same being most eligibly and attractively located and being the first and only land provided for park purposes in the city. Externally he is identified with the following named Masonic bodies: Minnehaha Lodge, No. 5, Free and Accepted Masons; Sioux Falls Chapter, No. 2, Royal Arch Masons; Cyrene Commandery, No. 2, Knights Templar; Oriental Consistory, No. 1, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, in which he has attained the thirty-second degree; and El Riad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He also holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On the 15th of May, 1881, Mr. Lien wedded Miss Anne Udseth, of Brookings county, this state, and they have six children, namely: Henry L., George O., Florence, Agnes, Harold and Eva.

CHARLES OLIN BAILEY was born at Freeport, Stephenson county, Illinois, July 2, 1860. His ancestry is English on the paternal and Welsh on the maternal side. All of his ancestors living at the time of the signing of the Declaration of Independence were residents, and the most of them natives of the colonies. His father was Joseph M. Bailey, formerly chief justice of Illinois, and his mother, Anna O. Bailey, he being their oldest son and child. He was educated in the public schools at Freeport and entered the University of Rochester in the fall of 1876 as a member of the class of 1880, being graduated from the university in June, 1880, a few days before he became twenty years of age. He is a member of the Alpha Delta Phi college fraternity.

Mr. Bailey commenced the study of law in the office of Neff & Stearns, at Freeport, in July, 1880, and in March, 1881, he became a student in the office of Rosenthal & Pence in Chicago, where he had remained but a short time when he was offered and accepted the position of garnishee clerk in the law department of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company in Chicago. He continued his legal studies while occupying this clerkship under Burton C. Cook, the general solicitor, and Augustus M. Herrington, the assistant general solicitor of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company, until the spring of 1882, when he was admitted to the bar.

In March, 1883, Mr. Bailey removed to Eagle Grove, Iowa, where he occupied the position of division attorney for the Northern Iowa division of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company. In 1884 he was elected the member of the Iowa Democratic state central committee for the tenth congressional district and upon the election of President Cleveland had charge of the distribution of the federal patronage for the thirteen counties comprised in his district. In 1885 he was re-elected a member of the state central committee and was also elected mayor of the city of Eagle Grove.

In January, 1886, Mr. Bailey removed from Iowa to Chicago, where he engaged in the law practice in partnership with Allan C. Story and William H. Witherell. This partnership lasted for one year, when it was dissolved. Mr. Bailey then came to the territory of Dakota, locating in Sioux Falls, April 1, 1887. He opened a law office, practicing alone for a few months, and in August, 1887, forming a partnership with H. T. Root, which lasted until February, 1888. In the fall of 1888 he was nominated as the Democratic candidate for district attorney of Minnehaha county, and was elected to that office in November, running about fifteen hundred votes ahead of his ticket. He held the office until the summer of 1890, when he resigned, on account of the refusal of the county commissioners to make a sufficient appropriation for the enforcement of the prohibition law. Since that time he has not held, or sought any public office.

In January, 1889, he became associated with Captain William H. Stoddard and with William H. Wilson in law practice under the firm name of Bailey, Stoddard & Wilson. This partnership continued until May, 1890, when Mr. Wilson retired from the firm and the business was continued under the name of Bailey & Stoddard. This firm was dissolved in January, 1892, and Bailey entered into a partnership with John H. Voorhees under the firm name of Bailey & Voorhees. In July, 1895, Judge F. R. Aikens became a member of the firm, which was then known as Aikens, Bailey & Voorhees. Judge Aikens withdrew from the firm on October 25, 1897, and the old firm name of Bailey & Voorhees was resumed and has continued up to the present time.

Mr. Bailey has been admitted to the bar of the states of Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, South Dakota and the territory of Dakota. He was admitted to practice in the supreme court of the United States in October, 1893, and has since that time been employed in a number of important cases before that court. He has the largest law library in either of the Dakotas, and one of the largest private law libraries in the United States, it consisting of some eight thousand and over volumes of reports, text-books and statutes. He also possesses a private general library of over six thousand volumes. His firm represents in a legal capacity the Illinois Central Railroad Company in the state of South Dakota and also the Western Union Telegraph Company, and the Mercantile Agency of R. G. Dun & Company.

Mr. Bailey was married at Chicago, Illinois, on March 28, 1887, to Mary Emma Swan. They have had four children, of whom three, Theodore Mead, Charles Olin, Jr., and Anna Elida, are living, and one, Joseph Mead Bailey III, is dead.

Mr. Bailey is a member of the various Masonic bodies and is also a Knight of Pythias, an Odd Fellow and an Elk. He is prominent in Masonic circles and has been high priest of Sioux Falls Chapter, No. 2, Royal Arch Masons, eminent commander of Cyrene Commandery, No. 2, Knights Templar, master of Minnehaha Lodge, No. 5, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, thrice illustrious master of Alpha Council, No. 1, Royal and Select Masters, and venerable master of Khurum Lodge of Perfection, No. 3, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite. He has also occupied the positions of grand warden, grand sword bearer and grand standard bearer, and is now (1904-5) grand senior warden of the grand commandery, Knights Templar, of South Dakota.

Mr. Bailey is a member of the Iroquois Club of Chicago and of the Dakotah Club of Sioux Falls. He has been for many years a member of the American Bar Association and during several years has been the vice-president of the association for the state of South Dakota.

JOSEPH MEAD BAILEY, JR., was born at Freeport, Stephenson county, Illinois, November 7, 1864. He was the third son of Joseph Mead Bailey (former chief justice of Illinois) and Anna Olin Bailey. He attended the public schools of his native city and also the Mount Morris Academy, of Mount Morris, Illinois, and the preparatory school of the (old) University of Chicago. In 1881 he entered the University of Rochester in the class of 1885, but on account of ill health was obliged to leave college before finishing his course. Subsequently the degree of Bachelor of Arts was conferred upon him by the University of Rochester as of the class of 1885.

After leaving college "Joe" Bailey, as he was commonly and popularly known, became engaged in adjusting the claims of Iowa, Illinois, Ohio and other states against the government under what is known as the swamp land act. He also became interested in land speculations in northwestern Iowa. In 1884 he came to Sioux Falls, Dakota, and obtained from the territorial authorities the contract for the convict labor in the territorial penitentiary. In 1885 he organized the German-American Loan and Investment Company, which in 1887 was re-incorporated as the German-American Loan and Trust Company. Among the stockholders of this company were many prominent men, among them General John A. Logan and William Windom, formerly secretary of the treasury. In 1886 the private bank of Hills & Beebe, of Sioux Falls, was incorporated as a national bank under the title of the Citizens' National Bank, and J. M. Bailey, Jr., became its vice-president. In 1888 the Citizens' National Bank was consolidated with the Minnehaha National Bank of Sioux Falls and he became the president of the consolidated institution, he being the youngest national bank president in the United States at that time.

In 1884 Mr. Bailey was one of the pages in the Republican national convention at Chicago. In 1888 he was one of the delegates to the Republican national convention at Minneapolis from the territory of Dakota. In 1889 he was appointed by Governor A. C. Mellette as treasurer of the territory of Dakota and held this position until the admission of the state of South Dakota, in November, 1889. At the Republican state convention at Mitchell in 1890, he was a candidate for the Republican nomination for state treasurer. After one of the hardest political contests ever carried on in South Dakota, he was defeated by W. W. Taylor, who subsequently defaulted with the major portion of the moneys in the state treasury. Had the result of the nominating convention been different, the state would have been spared the most disgraceful episode in its history.

Mr. Bailey was active in all matters pertaining to the welfare of Sioux Falls, the city of his residence, and served as a member of the school board and upon various other organizations instituted for the purpose of furthering the material interests of the city. In 1890 he was appointed by President Harrison as one of the commissioners to examine the coinage of the mints of that year.

J. M. Bailey, Jr., was married in June, 1886, at Aurora, Illinois, to Corolyn Currier Tanner. He died September 12, 1891, at the home of his father at Freeport, Illinois. At the funeral, which was held at Freeport, there were in attendance many of his friends and business and political associates from South Dakota. He left no children. His widow is remarried to John Kimberly Mumford and now resides in New Jersey. His mother, Anna O. Bailey, is still living and resides at Freeport, Illinois. His only living brother, Charles O. Bailey, is a practicing lawyer of Sioux Falls.

CHARLES E. MCKINNEY, who has been president of the Sioux Falls National Bank from the time of its organization and who has been a resident of the city for nearly a quarter of a century, claims the old Keystone state as the place of his nativity, having been born in Ulster, Bradford county, Pennsylvania, on the 16th of March, 1858, and being a son of Russel and Elizabeth McKinney, the father being a farmer by vocation. The subject worked on the farm during his youth. After completing the limited curriculum of the district schools he was matriculated in Cook Academy, at Havana, that state, which he attended for three years, going from there to Colgate Academy, Hamilton, New York, where he was graduated in 1878. He took one year at Madison University, also one year in the law department of Michigan University, at Ann Arbor. In 1880 Mr. McKinney located in the city of Detroit, Michigan. In November, 1880, he came to Sioux Falls, which was then but a frontier village. Here he became a member of the firm of Easton, McKinney & Scougel, and they established banks in Sioux Falls, Yankton and Dell Rapids. In December, 1882, Mr. McKinney further showed his sagacity and enterprising spirit by effecting the organization of the Sioux Falls National Bank, one of the early institutions of the sort in the state and one that has had a history of successful operations, and most able and conservative management. He was made president of the bank at the time of its incorporation and has ever since continued as its chief executive, while the prosperity and prestige which mark the institution are due in large measure to his wise counsel and the discriminating business policy which he has enforced in his official capacity. Mr. McKinney was admitted to the bar of the territory of Dakota, in 1889, but has given but little attention to active professional work. A previously published sketch of his career has spoken of him as follows: "Mr. McKinney has always been an active, enterprising, energetic citizen, occasionally taking a hand in local and state politics, but devoting his time principally to financial matters, in which he has the reputation of being cool-headed and successful. He has been a member of the board of education of his home city and was a member of the commission appointed to adjust the financial matters between North and South Dakota when they assumed statehood. In 1891-2 he was one of the railroad commissioners of South Dakota." In 1902 he was appointed by President Roosevelt a member of the United States mint commissioners. It may be further stated that Mr. McKinney is a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party, in whose cause he has ever shown a deep interest.

Mr. McKinney was married in December, 1880, to Miss Allie A. Waterman, of Coldwater, Michigan. Fraternally he is a Mason and has attained all the York and Scottish-rite degrees, and he also belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

JONAS H. LIEN was born in Faribault county, Minnesota, on the 12th of December, 1874, being a son of Hans and Gertrude (Burrenson) Lien, of whom more specific mention is made in the sketch of the life of his brother, Burre H. Lien, on another page of this work. When he was but ten years of age his father died. He attended the public schools and continued his studies in the State Agricultural College of South Dakota, at Brookings, where he fitted himself for the university work. In 1894 he was matriculated in the Nebraska State University, at Lincoln, where he remained until 1896, when he withdrew to take part in the presidential campaign of that year. Of his work in the connection another sketch has spoken as follows: "He was employed by the state central committee of the Populist party in South Dakota, and during the campaign spoke in almost every county in the state east of the Missouri river, being at once recognized as a strong political speaker. Such was his success in this campaign that he soon became known as the 'Boy Orator of the Sioux.'" At the next session of the legislature he was elected chief clerk of the assembly, and thereafter for a short time was the city editor of the Sioux Falls Daily Press. In the spring of 1897 he resumed his studies in the Nebraska University, where he was graduated in the spring of 1898. Again, for a short time, he was a member of the editorial corps of the Daily Press, but when the war with Spain broke out he enlisted in Company I, First Regiment of South Dakota Volunteer Infantry, being mustered into service on the 4th of May, 1898, as first lieutenant and adjutant. His purpose had been to become a private and earn promotion if possible. His friends persuaded him to accept the commission, and he entered upon the discharge of his duties with the energy and ability which always characterized him. In the Philippines he was in the hottest of every fight, from Block House No. 4, where the first battle occurred between the Americans and Filipinos on February 4 and 5, 1899, to Marilao, where he was killed on the 27th of March of that year." Well may it be said that "death lay upon him like the untimely frost upon the fairest flower of all the field," and yet in the true perspective of his life we can not call its end inconsistent, and the memory of all he was brings its measure of compensation and reconciliation to those who knew and loved him. The colonel of his regiment spoke feelingly of the youthful martyr as follows: "He was the bravest man I ever knew, and one of the best officers." He had been promoted to the rank of captain, but had not received his commission as such at the time when he met his death. No one of his age was better or more favorably known throughout the state, and his untimely death was most sincerely deplored by all who knew him, his friends being in number as his acquaintances.

JOHN H. SHELDON, one of the able and popular young business men of Sioux Falls, is a native of the state of Wisconsin, having been born in Okee, Columbia county, on the 21st of December, 1860, and being a son of Harmon B. and Mary E. (Woodley) Sheldon, who later became pioneers of South Dakota. Our subject attended the public schools of his native town and later pursued his studies at Devil's Lake, Wisconsin, while in 1876 he accompanied his parents on their removal to the present state of South Dakota, and was graduated in the high school at Lennox, Lincoln county, as a member of the class of 1882. In 1885-6 he took a commercial course in the Sioux Falls Business College, and in the latter year was graduated in stenography, having received his technical instruction under the tutorage of E. P. White, court reporter. In 1882 Mr. Sheldon taught in the district schools in Lincoln county, following his vocation two years, and being thereafter for a short time in the employ of H. M. Avery, of Sioux Falls. In 1888 he entered the employ of the firm of Burnham, Trevett & Mattis, at Huron, where he served as stenographer for two years. He then returned to Sioux Falls and secured a position in the law office of Winsor & Kittredge, remaining with this concern until 1901, and having been private secretary to Mr. Kittredge during his political career. Mr. Sheldon's health became much impaired and he resigned his position with the firm and engaged in the loan and fire-insurance business, while he still continues the latter portion of the enterprise. On the 1st of August, 1903, he purchased the Cataract Book Store, representing the leading enterprise of the sort in Sioux Falls, and this he has since conducted most successfully. On the 1st of May, 1904, he was appointed general agent for South Dakota for the National Surety Company, of New York. From March, 1903, until January, 1904, he was local cashier for the Provident Savings Life Assurance Society, of New York.

On the 18th of February, 1891, Mr. Sheldon was united in marriage to Miss Esther E. Lutz, of Doland, Spink county. Mrs. Sheldon was born in Illinois, being a daughter of John S. and Mary (Davis) Lutz. She was graduated in an excellent school at Knowledge Point, Illinois, and at an early age accompanied her parents on their removal to South Dakota. She continued her studies in a select school at Doland, and has since successfully engaged in teaching for a period of about twelve years. Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon have two children, Hazel Gladys, who was born on the 7th of November, 1893, and Esther Erminie, who was born on the 28th of May, 1898. In politics Mr. Sheldon is a Republican.

JAMES PHILIP is one of those sturdy characters to whom success has come through individual effort in connection with the industrial development of the great northwest, where he has resided from the early pioneer days working his way upward to a position of definite independence and prosperity and being now one of the influential citizens of the city of Fort Pierre and one of the extensive stock growers of the state, while his is also the distinction of being the owner of the largest head of the American, bison, or buffalo, in the Union. Mr. Philip is a Scotsman and is endowed with the sterling characteristics of the race from which he is sprung. He was born in Morayshire, Scotland, on the 30th of April, 1858, and there passed the early years of his life, his educational advantages being such as were afforded in the national schools of the land of hills and heather and being somewhat limited, as he early began to depend on his own resources. In 1874, at the age of sixteen years, he came to America, determined to identify himself with the free and unconstrained life of the great west and coming to Cheyenne, Wyoming, in which state he was employed as a cattle herder until the following year, when he came to the Black Hills, where he passed one winter among the pioneer prospectors and miners. He then returned to Wyoming and made his headquarters at Fort Laramie, where he secured employment as a teamster in the government service, remaining thus engaged until 1877, when he went to Fort Robinson, Nebraska, and there secured employment as cowboy with the first cattle outfit that utilized the range on the Running Water, remaining there until the winter of 1878-9, when he entered the service of the quartermaster of Fort Robinson, in the capacity of dispatch carrier and guide, being thus employed until January, 1879, after which he devoted his attention to freighting and cattle herding in Nebraska and South Dakota until 1881, when he took up his permanent abode in Stanley county, this state, where he began trading in cattle on his own responsibility, his success becoming greater with the passing of the years, as he showed marked capacity in a business way. In 1896 Mr. Philip effected the organization of the Minnesota and Dakota Cattle Company, with headquarters at Fort Pierre, being made general manager of the same and continuing to be identified with the company until 1890, when he disposed of his interests. He is still prominently engaged in the raising and handling of cattle and is the owner of an excellent ranch of ten thousand acres in Stanley county, while, as before stated, he owns the largest herd of buffaloes in the Union, taking much pride in the same and having shown much appreciative judgment in thus preserving the few remaining specimens of this noble animal, whose vast numbers were ruthlessly swept away with the advance of civilization across the great western plains. He has over one hundred head of the buffaloes. Mr. Philip is also interested in the mercantile and real-estate business in Fort Pierre and is a member of the directorate of the Stockgrowers' National Bank, of this place. In politics he is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Democratic party, and in 1898 was elected to represent his district in the state senate, where he made an excellent record, while he also served one term as a member of the board of county commissioners. He is a Knight Templar Mason and has also attained to the thirty-second degree in the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite division of this time-honored fraternity.

Mr. Philip was married in the spring of 1879 and has six children, the three eldest having been educated in All Saints' School, in the city of Sioux Falls. The names of the children are here entered in order of birth: Emma, Olive, Hazel, Clara, Stanley and Roderick. Mr. Philip is a loyal and progressive citizen and is held in high esteem by all who know him and have recognition of his sterling attributes of character.

THEODORE W. DWIGHT, one of the representative business men of the city of Sioux Falls, and an ex-member of the state legislature, was born in the town of Oregon, Dane county, Wisconsin, on the 12th of March, 1865, being a son of E. W. and Elizabeth (Foote) Dwight, both of whom were born in the state of New York, the respective families having been long and prominently identified with the annals of American history. In the agnatic line the subject of this sketch is a direct descendant of Rev. Jonathan Edwards, a distinguished historical figure in New England, and also of Timothy Dwight, D. D., one of the early presidents of Yale College. The subject still lives at Oregon, Wisconsin.

Theodore W. Dwight attended the public schools of Red Wing, Minnesota, until he had completed the course in the high school, being graduated as a member of the class of 1885. At the age of twenty years he became a clerk in a general store at Brooklyn, Wisconsin, where he remained until 1888, when he came to South Dakota and established himself in the general merchandise business at Bridgewater, McCook county, where he continued to reside until 1901, having built up a prosperous business in the intervening years. He then disposed of his interests there and took up his residence in Sioux Falls, where he became identified with the wholesale confectionery business, as secretary and treasurer of the Anthony-Dwight Company, which is incorporated under the laws of the state and which controls an excellent and constantly expanding trade throughout the territory normally tributary to Sioux Falls as a wholesale and jobbing center. Mr. Dwight is also the owner of two general stores, one at Canastota and the other at Emery, and these are conducted under his supervision. He is also treasurer of the Retail Merchants' Fire Insurance Company, of South Dakota, having held this office since its organization. In politics he gives a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, as the candidate on whose ticket he was elected to represent his district in the state legislature in 1899, proving a valuable working member of the legislative body. He is affiliated with Unity Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, and Salem Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, at Salem, South Dakota, and his religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church, of which Mrs. Dwight likewise is a member.

On the 20th of August, 1889, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Dwight to Miss Jennie M. Brink, daughter of L. S. and C. R. Brink, of Red Wing, Minnesota, and they have one daughter, Helen, who was born on the 6th of February, 1895, and one son, born November 24, 1899.

CHARLES L. NORTON, one of the prominent and influential citizens and leading business men of the city of Sioux Falls, holding at the present time the office of cashier of the Sioux Falls National Bank, and also of the Security Savings Bank, claims the old Empire state as the place of his nativity, having been born in Warren county, New York, on the 26th of May, 1852, and being a son of Lindsey D. and Electa S. (Squiers) Norton, both of whom were born and reared in that state, where they remained until about 1860, when they removed to Wisconsin and located in the village of Edgerton, Rock county, where the father engaged in farming.

The subject received his elementary educational training in the schools of his native county, and was about eight years of age at the time of the family removal to Edgerton, Wisconsin, where he continued to attend the public schools until he had attained the age of fourteen years, when he started to learn the art of telegraphy, in which he became an expert. From 1869 to 1878 he served as station agent at various points on the St. Paul & Sioux City Railroad in Iowa and Minnesota, from which latter state, in August, 1878, he came to South Dakota and located in Sioux Falls, as representative of the St. Paul & Sioux City Railroad, retaining this office until 1880, when he resigned the same. In the meanwhile, in 1880, Mr. Norton was chosen assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Sioux Falls, and in the following year was elected cashier of the Sioux Falls National Bank, of which position he has ever since remained in tenure, having gained a high reputation as a conservative financier and able executive officer. In December, 1902, he was one of the organizers of the Security Savings Bank of Sioux Falls, of which he was chosen cashier at the time of its incorporation, while he still holds this office and is a member of the directorates of each of these important and popular institutions. He is a loyal and progressive citizen and has ever shown a deep interest in local affairs of a public nature, and has lent his aid and influence in support of all worthy objects for the general good. In politics he has been a staunch supporter of the Republican party from the time of attaining his majority, and he has served four terms as treasurer of Minnehaha county. He was elected in April, 1904, treasurer of the city of Sioux Falls. He represented the second ward on the board of aldermen for one term, and was for two years a member of the board of education. Fraternally he is an appreciative and popular member of the Masonic order, being affiliated with Minnehaha Lodge, No. 5, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Sioux Falls Chapter, No. 2, Royal Arch Masons; and Cyrene Commandery, Knights Templar.

In September, 1874, Mr. Norton was united in marriage to Miss Abigail S. Frost, a daughter of Hon. James C. Frost, at that time resident of Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Norton have three children, James L., Edith B. and Maxfield W.

EDGAR J. KINGSBURY, who was one of the honored pioneers of Minnehaha county, and who died in Sioux Falls on the 18th of November, 1903, came of sterling old Puritan lineage and was himself a native of New England, having been born in Andover, Tolland county, Connecticut, on the 3d of April, 1831, and being a son of Joseph and Amelia (Reynolds) Kingsbury. He was a brother of Rev. Lucius Kingsbury, of whom individual mention is made on other pages of this work. Mr. Kingsbury was reared to the sturdy discipline of the farm and secured his early education in the common schools, after which he continued his studies in the high school at East Hampton, Massachusetts. At the age of seventeen years he engaged in teaching, and during the ensuing eight years followed this vocation during the winter, while in the intervening summers he worked on the farm. Thereafter he had charge of the old homestead farm in Andover until 1880, when he came to South Dakota, arriving in Sioux Falls on the 28th of March and passing the first two years in this city, while he devoted his attention to farming and stock raising. He became the owner of a valuable landed estate of three hundred and twenty acres, in Mapleton township, and there resided for a number of years, then building a fine residence on section 3, Sioux Falls township, where he made his home. He was a man of much enterprise and administrative ability and gained unqualified success in connection with the industrial affairs with which he identified himself, while he so ordered his life as to ever retain the unqualified confidence and esteem of his fellow men. In politics Mr. Kingsbury accorded an unwavering allegiance to the Republican party, and took a lively interest in all that tended to conserve the best interests of his county and state. He served for some time as assessor of Mapleton township, having also held this office while a resident of Connecticut. He was a faithful and zealous member of the Congregational church, and was ever active in good works, being charitable and kindly in his judgment and ever striving to uplift and otherwise aid his fellow men. He was a deacon in the church in Sioux Falls, for a number of years, and had also served most efficiently as superintendent of the Sunday school in Mapleton township. He was upright and conscientious in all the relations of life and was a man who richly merited the high respect in which he was held.

On the 25th of December, 1867, Mr. Kingsbury was united in marriage to Miss Maria Reynolds, of Houston, Illinois, and she died on the 18th of December, 1899, being survived by two children, Amelia J. and Horace R.

WILLIAM T. DOOLITTLE was born in Loudenville, Ohio, March 30, 1849. He attended school until he was fourteen years of age, and then entered a railroad machine shop as an apprentice. When nineteen years old he became engineer, and since March, 1873, has been engineer on passenger trains. He was in charge of the first passenger engine that ran into Sioux Falls, and, except for a little more than a year, has been the engineer on the passenger train between Sioux Falls and Worthington, Minnesota, since then.

In 1879, an incident occurred which gave him an unexpected vacation for thirty days. He was the engineer of the train which during that year started out from Worthington with R. F. Pettigrew and a Mr. Bottineau on board, each of them having in his pocket a deed which he was particularly anxious to get on record in Sioux Falls first, and was induced by Mr. Pettigrew to detach the engine at Brandon east of the city and bring Mr. Pettigrew in on the engine. Mr. Pettigrew explained to Mr. Doolittle that the attorneys on the other side were on the train with a snap judgment and were making every effort to get it on record before his, and that if they succeeded in doing so it would work a hardship on the people of Sioux Falls who had bought their homes, as they would be compelled to relinquish them without recompense. Mr. Doolittle replied that he would do nothing of the kind for Mr. Pettigrew, but he would do it for the people of Sioux Falls. Mr. Bottineau made complaint to the superintendent of the road, John F. Lincoln, stating the facts and demanding fifty thousand dollars damages. Superintendent Lincoln sent for Engineer Doolittle, and when he appeared the following colloquy took place: "William, if what is told is true, I am afraid you have gotten the company into trouble. I am told you detached your engine and took a party into Sioux Falls that he might get a deed on record before another passenger who had a deed to the same property, could do so. Is this true?" Mr. Doolittle replied, "It is." Mr. Lincoln then said: "I could not believe you would do such an act. The party having the other deed says he is damaged fifty thousand dollars by the transaction, and demands your dismissal, and threatens to sue the company for damages." Mr. Doolittle replied, "If my dismissal will appease the wrath of the gentleman, it is a small matter; but as to the damages, that is another thing." Here Mr. Doolittle, who had had been advised of all the facts in the case, related them to the superintendent, and told him it was simply a robbing scheme and so satisfied the superintendent that it was true, that he ended the interview by bringing his fist down on his desk, saying: "Let him sue; he can't recover a cent; but William, you need a rest of thirty or sixty days; take a vacation; I will see that your pay goes right along."

Mr. Doolittle resides with his family in Sioux Falls, where he has one of the finest homes in the city, and where for a number of years he has been prominent in the public and civic affairs of the municipality. He was elected alderman from the first ward in 1896, re-elected two years later, and since May, 1897, he has served as president of the council. In 1879 he organized the first division of Locomotive Engineers in Sioux City, Iowa, was chief of the organization for several years, and much of its success is directly attributable to his able and untiring efforts.

Mr. Doolittle has been identified with a number of undertakings since coming to Sioux Falls, notably among which are the Citizens' Telephone Company and the Interstate Telephone Company of Sioux Falls, being superintendent of the first named enterprise and president of the other two.

Mr. Doolittle has always had the good of the community at heart, and, as an enterprising, progressive citizen, gives his influence and generous support to all measures calculated to promote the general welfare. He is prominent in Masonic circles, has served as grand commander of the grand commandery, Knights Templar, of South Dakota, besides filling the honorable position of potentate of El Riad Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. Socially and as a citizen he stands well, numbers his friends by the score among all classes and conditions of people, and enjoys to a marked degree the esteem and confidence of the public.

Mr. Doolittle's family consists of a wife and two children, the former before her marriage having been Miss Catherine Strock, of Galveston, Indiana. The only son, who resides at Sioux Falls, is Walter S., a locomotive engineer on the Omaha road, who was first lieutenant in a South Dakota regiment during the Spanish-American war, and saw much active service in the Philippines; Mary Grace, the youngest of the children, is still a member of the home circle.

LEROY D. MILES, who is associated with his brother, J. A., in the ownership and conducting of the Spink County Stock Farm, is a native of the state of Michigan, having been born on a farm in Barry county, on the 14th of October, 1856, and being a son of James L. and Susan (Cooper) Miles, both natives of Ohio. The father of the subject was numbered among the pioneers of Michigan, whither he removed with his parents in the year 1832, several years prior to the admission of the state to the Union. They made the journey through from Ohio with teams and located in the midst of the virgin forest of Barry county, where they developed a valuable farm. The father of the subject there continued to be actively engaged in farming and stock raising for many years, having been associated with his brother, Alonzo, in the stock business and having been among the first to drive cattle from Michigan to the Ohio markets in the early days. He continued to reside in Michigan until 1883, when he came to South Dakota, and soon afterward turned over his farming and live-stock business to his sons. He died April 4, 1899, in his seventy-seventh year. The mother died in 1901, aged sixty-three years.

Leroy D. Miles was reared on the homestead farm and secured his education in the common schools of his native county. He early became familiar with the stock business, in which his father was prominently engaged, and thus is an authority as to values and handling of live stock.

Mr. Miles came to South Dakota in 1883, and has been from the start associated with his brother James A. in farming and stock raising. They secured government land in Spink county, and their landed estate here now comprises three sections of valuable land in the northeastern part of the county, and two miles south of the village of Conde, which is the postoffice address for the great stock farm, which attracts many visitors and buyers each season. The Spink County Stock Farm is specially devoted to the breeding of Hambletonian and Percheron horses, Galloway cattle and Rambouillet sheep, and the best types of each are raised, while the firm have for sale the best of breeding stock at all times. The farm is finely improved and is one of the show places of the county, while the Messrs. Miles are known as progressive and reliable business men, commanding the confidence and esteem of all with whom they come in contact.

The subject of this review is a staunch Republican in his political proclivities and has been a zealous worker in its cause. In November, 1902, he was elected to the office of county treasurer, receiving a gratifying majority, and assumed the active discharge of his official duties in January, 1903. He is identified with the Masonic fraternity and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On the 14th of October, 1888, Mr. Miles was united in marriage to Miss Carrie E. Curran, a daughter of J. M. and Carrie Curran, who came to South Dakota in 1885 and located in Spink county, being numbered among the prominent pioneers of this section of the state. Mr. and Mrs. Miles have six children, namely: Ruth, Hazel, Lynn, Lena and Mabel and an infant.

THOMAS E. PHILLIPS was born in Millersburg, Holmes county, Ohio, on the 3d of June, 1840, being a son of John D. and Hester (Crane) Phillips, both of whom were born and reared in Pennsylvania. The former was born in Washington county, as was also his father, John Phillips, who there devoted his life to farming, the family having been established in the Keystone state in the early pioneer era. The parents of the subject were married in Pennsylvania, whence they later removed to Holmes county, Ohio, where the father became a prominent and successful farmer and a man of influence in the community, having held various county offices and having been known as a public-spirited and upright citizen. In his family were eight children, of whom four are living at the present time.

Thomas E. Phillips passed his boyhood days on the homestead farm and after completing the curriculum of the common schools continued his studies in Hayesville College, at Hayesville, Ohio, until the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion, when he subordinated personal interests to respond to his country's call. In September, 1861, Mr. Phillips enlisted as a private in Company B, Sixteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He was mustered in at Wooster and thence proceeded with his command to Camp Dennison, and thence to Lexington, Kentucky, where the regiment was encamped for some time. The command had an engagement at Mill Springs and then proceeded onward by way of Crab Orchard to Cumberland Gap, where they remained until September, 1862, when they were compelled to evacuate, owing to shortage of provisions. They retreated to Gallipolis, on the Ohio river, and thence went to Portsmouth, where they outfitted and then took the transport boat down the river to Memphis, under command of General Sherman. From Memphis they went to Haines Bluff, where they had a heavy engagement and were repulsed, after which they proceeded up the Mississippi and Red rivers to Arkansas Post, which they attacked and reduced. In the engagement at Haines Bluff Mr. Phillips received a severe wound in the right shoulder and was sent back to Ohio, where, after his convalescence, he received his honorable discharge, at Columbus, in September, 1863. Shortly afterward he went to Grand Haven, Michigan, and thence crossed Lake Michigan to Milwaukee, Wisconsin, from which point he went to LaCrosse and thence up the Mississippi river to St. Paul, Minnesota, where he tarried a few months. He then proceeded by stage to Fort Dodge, Iowa, and thence westward to Sioux City, that state, where he arrived in October, 1864. From that place, then a mere village, he came with a freighting outfit, owned by Charles Bogue, to the confluence of Crow and Choteau creeks, in what is now Bon Homme county, South Dakota. At that time a small military garrison was established at what is now known as Tacket's Station, and when our subject's party had approached within half a mile of the west branch of Choteau creek a man came running bareheaded, from the direction in which they were going, and shouted the word Indians as he approached. Upon reaching the outfit he stated that the savages had attacked the stage coach of which he was driver, among the passengers being Sergeant Trass and Eugene Brewer, a half-breed Indian. The coach was attacked by four Sioux Indians, who fired into the vehicle and killed Sergeant Trass, after which they "held up" the others and robbed the coach, after which they cut the horses loose and made good their escape. Word was sent to the soldiers, but owing to the condition of their horses they were unable to go in pursuit of the marauders. The driver, whose name was Stephen Coleman, was residing in Sioux City, Iowa, as late as 1902, and is probably there at the present time. After learning of this experience Mr. Phillips' party returned to Fort Randall and thence back to Crow creek, arriving late at night. From that point they continued the journey back to Sioux City, and a few days later Mr. Phillips went to Calliope, now Hawarden, on the Sioux river, in Iowa, where he passed the winter, while in the spring he went out on a trapping expedition with George Christie, on the Rock river, remaining a few months and meeting with success. In the meanwhile Christie returned to Calliope for provisions and found the place deserted, and it transpired that two of the party who had been there had been killed by Indians, after which the other departed. Mr. Phillips finally returned by way of Calliope to Sioux City, and during the trip he and his companions several times narrowly escaped attack by the Indians. In October, 1865, in company with four others, he made another trapping expedition, being out about a month and returning to what was known as the Twelve-mile house at the time of Burleigh's election to congress. Later the same party went up the Big Sioux river to Dell Rapids, where were found evidence of recent visitations by the Indians, and accordingly the sturdy little band of trappers, believing discretion the better part of valor, returned to Sioux City, and there our subject was engaged in various lines of business until 1875, when he started for the Black Hills, being a member of a party of forty men. They crossed over to the government trail, proceeding from Fort Randall to the Red Crow Indian agency, but upon crossing the White river for the second time they encountered a company of soldiers under command of Major Walker, who compelled them to turn back, as the government had issued strict orders that no one should enter the Black Hills district for settlement or prospecting. In the spring of 1876, having received permission from Major Walker, Mr. Phillips organized another party, the outfit consisting of one hundred and sixty men and forty-one wagons. They started for the Black Hills, crossing the Missouri at Ponca agency, and thence proceeding by way of Turtle Butte to Porcupine Butte, from which point they made ready to cross the dreary waste known as the Bad Lands. As a preliminary precaution they sent forth scouts, who finally returned and reported that Indians were in evidence all along the route. The company decided to take the risk, however, but spared no pains to protect themselves from attack, twenty men being sent out as flankers. They were not molested the first day and upon camping for the night established heavy guards. In the morning they found two Indian blankets, which had been left by savages who had evidently attempted to slip in and stampede the horses during the night. It was evident from that time forward that the Indians followed closely upon their trail, but the numerical strength of the party was such that they were not attacked, arriving safely in Custer on the 10th of April of the centennial year. There Mr. Phillips remained until July, engaged in placer mining, and then returned to Sioux City by way of Fort Pierre, making the trip on a flatboat. Near the mouth of the White river the Indians fired at the party but no damage was done. Mr. Phillips continued his residence in Sioux City until 1879, and then passed a few months in Colorado. In 1880 he removed with his family to Deadwood, South Dakota, where he remained about six months, at the expiration of which he came to Fort Pierre, where he has ever since maintained his home. Here he engaged in the furniture business and later became prominently identified with the raising of sheep, his ranch being located near the White Clay buttes, and with this great industry he has ever since been prominently concerned, running a large band of sheep and having been prospered in his efforts. He is honored for his sterling integrity of character, and is a fine type of the sturdy frontiersman, while it could be wished that the limits of this work were not so circumscribed by the necessities of the case that it is impossible to enter details concerning his many interesting experiences in the early days. In politics Mr. Phillips is a stalwart Republican, but has never been an aspirant for public office.

On the 27th of December, 1865, Mr. Phillips was united in marriage to Miss Rachel DuFran, of Sioux City, Iowa, and they have six children, John, Annie, Thomas, Lulu, Minnie and Maud.

RICHARD JACKSON WOODS, assistant general manager of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company, with headquarters at Sioux Falls, was born January 17, 1863, in Belfast, Ireland, while his parents, whose home was in Louisiana, were on a visit to that city. His father, Arthur Woods, is an Irishman by birth, though for many years a citizen of the United States and a resident of Louisiana, and his mother, who before her marriage bore the name of Charlotte Bullidick, was born in Mississippi and reared in the South. Richard J. spent his boyhood days at the family homestead in Louisiana, and after receiving his preliminary education in the schools of that state, took an academic course in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he made substantial progress in the higher branches of learning. On quitting school, he decided to seek his fortune in the west; accordingly, in 1878, he came to South Dakota and for some time thereafter worked as a farm hand near Sioux Falls, in addition to which he also drove team a few months for a gentleman by the name of Quigley. To these and various other lines of endeavor he devoted his attention during the ensuing five years, or until 1883, when he was appointed guard at the penitentiary, which position he held until the summer of 1887. Resigning his place on June 2d of that year, Mr. Woods, one week later, was united in marriage with Miss Anna Davis, of Sioux Falls, and immediately thereafter engaged in the real-estate business, which he continued with encouraging success until 1890, when he was appointed special agent of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin. He entered upon his new field of labor under the most favorable auspices and from the beginning his success more than met his expectations. It was not long until he commanded the largest insurance business in the city of Sioux Falls and this prestige he has easily sustained to the present time, being considered one of the most successful solicitors in the United States, not only by the large company he so ably represents, but by other companies, that for years have held out liberal and tempting inducements to secure his services. Some idea of the magnitude of his work in this line may be inferred from the fact that from June, 1892, to June, 1893, he wrote seven hundred and twelve thousand dollars of insurance, and four times during that year, as his monthly reports went to the home office, he was notified that he stood number one in a list of twenty-five thousand active agents in the employ of the Northwestern Mutual, a record perhaps without a parallel in the history of his own or any other company in this country.

He possesses a winning, as well as a powerful personality, understands thoroughly the art of managing men, and being born a leader with unlimited faith in his own ability, he experiences little difficulty in carrying to successful issue any undertaking to which he addresses himself.

Mr. Woods is now general district agent of twenty-two counties, through the central part of the state, and with a large force of experienced subordinates, to each of which he imparts no small share of his personal magnetism and enthusiasm, it is not at all strange that he commands the bulk of the insurance business of South Dakota, or that the extensive work under his vigilant management is continually on the increase. He is also, at the present time, president of the National Association of the Northwestern Life Insurance Company Special Agents, a position requiring not only a resourceful mind and superior business talent, but a high order of executive ability as well.

In 1889, and again in 1890, Mr. Woods was president of the State Firemen's Association, and in the former year he was appointed by Governor Mellette, chief of engineers and ordnance, with the rank of colonel. Since coming west he has been an influential factor in local and state politics, and from that time to the present his ability as an organizer and leader in the Republican party has been duly recognized and appreciated throughout the state. He has been a prominent factor in county, district and state conventions, dominating many of these bodies, besides being elected, in 1894, president of the Republican State League, in which capacity he bore an active and efficient part in the campaign of that year. In the Republican National League convention, held at Cleveland, Ohio, in June, 1885, he was elected one of the vice-presidents of the league and appointed chairman of the committee on credentials, and in 1896 he was nominated by the state Republican convention as a presidential elector, and his name placed at the head of the ticket.

In a preceding paragraph incidental reference is made to Mr. Woods' commanding position in the fraternal and benevolent work of South Dakota. While an active worker in every branch of the Pythian brotherhood, it is as a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks that he has especially distinguished himself and in which he has achieved not only a state but a national reputation. He has been prominent in all the varied interests of this popular and rapidly growing fraternity; has attended a number of sessions of the grand lodge, in all of which he served as chairman on returns and credentials, and it is needless to say that he has long been considered one of the most popular members of that honorable body. July 22, 1903, Colonel Woods was elected by the grand lodge of Elks, at Baltimore, grand esteemed loyal knight.

In speaking of Mr. Woods, the Dakota Elk of November, 1902, contains the following appropriate references: "It is no idle thought to predict that Brother Woods will some day occupy the highest position in the gift of the order, a position he is eminently qualified to fill." "He is a natural born organizer, a leader, and his advice and counsel are considered essential on many perplexing propositions that come before the officers of the grand lodge." "He is as popular at home and in his home state, as he is elsewhere and his friends are legion." "He is in the true sense of the term, a self-made man and those who have known him longest, love him best." "With a heart as deep as a well and as broad as barn door, he distributes charity without ostentation, but with a liberal hand, and all who come within the range of his influence pronounce him the embodiment of hospitality and a prince of good fellowship."

REV. WILLIAM I. GRAHAM, D. D.—Crowning the advanced and admirable scheme of popular education in the state of South Dakota are several excellent institutions of higher learning, of which the subject of this sketch was the honored and efficient president for a full decade, while he still remains a member of its faculty, having devoted thirty years of his life to educational work and being a man of reconдите talents.

Dr. Graham is a native of the old Buckeye state of the Union, having been born on a farm in Noble county, Ohio, on the 22d of June, 1844, and being a son of David and Jane Graham. He passed his boyhood days on the home farm and received his rudimentary education in the district schools, making such use of his advantages that he became eligible for minor pedagogic honors, having taught for a number of years in the public schools, both before and after entering college. In 1869 he was matriculated in the Ohio Wesleyan University, in the city of Delaware, where he completed the classical course and was graduated as a member of the class of 1873, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts. In 1876 his alma mater conferred upon him the degree of Master of Arts, while in 1896 Baker University, at Baldwin, Kansas, conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Divinity. From 1873 to 1876 Dr. Graham was principal of the high school at Logan, Ohio, and in the meanwhile had completed a course of ecclesiastical study and been ordained to the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal church. In the autumn of 1876 he assumed the pastorate of the church of this denomination at Kirkville, Iowa, becoming a member of the conference of that state, and remaining identified with the same until 1879, when he accepted the chair of ancient classics in Baker University, at Baldwin, Kansas, where he did most effective work during the following ten years, at the expiration of which he went to the south and passed four years in educational work in Fort Worth, Texas, and Atlanta, Georgia. He then, in 1893, came to South Dakota and accepted the presidency of Dakota University, being inducted into this executive office in August of that year and at once entering vigorously upon the discharge of his official duties, to which he continued to give his attention for the following ten years, giving a most able administration and advancing the interests of the institution in all departments. In September, 1903, he resigned the presidency in favor of Rev. Thomas Nicholson, D. D., and has since occupied the chairs of philosophy and Greek, remaining one of the prominent members of the faculty and being held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

FRANK CHLADEK was born in Bohemia on the 15th of November, 1845, his parents being Joseph and Annie (Novak) Chladek. Their family numbered five children: Frank, Joseph,

Louis, Josie and Poweli. In the public schools of his native land the subject of this review obtained his education and when twenty-four years of age he emigrated to the new world, attracted by the favorable reports which he had heard concerning this land and its business opportunities. He made his way to Chicago, where he lived for five years, and in 1872 he came to South Dakota, settling in Yankton county, where he pre-empted a quarter section of land seven miles south of Lesterville. Since that time he has been a resident of this portion of the state and has gained rank among the most successful farmers of this locality. Unflinching industry has been the basis of his success and added to this are other strong traits of character, such as perseverance, determination and sound judgment. He worked for five years as an engineer in Yankton and then his health became impaired so that he resumed farming. He also began the sale of farming machinery and subsequently in connection with his brother established a large machine business which he carried on for some time, meeting with prosperity in their undertaking. Mr. Chladek now owns two thousand acres of the best land in Yankton county. As his financial resources have increased he has placed his money in the safest of all investments—real estate—and his holdings are now very extensive. He is likewise largely interested in the business of buying and selling grain, live stock and farming machinery. He carries forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes, brooking no obstacles that can be overcome by honest and persistent effort.

On the 24th of January, 1867, Mr. Chladek was united in marriage, in Bohemia, to Miss Mary Cizek and unto them have been born eleven children: Powlie, Lottie, Clara, William, Emil, Emma, Eddie and Frank, all of whom are living, and Powlie and Frank, who have passed away and one that died in infancy. The living son, to whom was given the name of Frank, married Miss Zeitka, and is now engaged in business in Hayward. Powlie is the wife of Joseph Fuchs, a resident farmer of Yankton county. Lottie is the wife of Frank Kolda, a business man of Lesterville, South Dakota, and the other children are at home.

In public affairs Mr. Chladek has been prominent and influential and his fellow townsmen, recognizing his worth and ability, have called him to public office. He served as county commissioner for six years and was a school trustee for many years, doing much for the benefit of educational advancement in this locality. He is one of the most prominent Bohemian American citizens of Yankton county and has been looked upon as a leader and adviser of his countrymen. No native son of America, however, is more loyal to the stars and stripes or manifests greater fidelity to the county and its institutions. His church relationship is that of the Roman Catholic denomination.

CHARLES FRANKLIN PIERCE, superintendent of the Riggs Institute, at Flandreau, Moody county, was born in the town of Ware, Hampshire county, Massachusetts, on the 17th of January, 1858, and secured his early educational training in the public schools of his native state and at times assisted his father in the machine shops. In 1873 he accompanied his parents on their removal to Nebraska, and they settled on a farm near Creighton, Knox county, where his father took up government land and became numbered among the pioneers of that section. In 1876 the subject taught his first term of school and with money earned by teaching during the winter terms he was enabled to continue his own educational discipline, entering Boone Seminary, at Boone, Nebraska, where he prosecuted his studies for two years, after which he was engaged in teaching in the public schools of that state for several years. In 1887 Mr. Pierce entered the Indian school service as a teacher at the Santee Agency, Nebraska, where he soon received a promotion to superintendent of the school. In 1892 he was transferred to Oneida, Wisconsin, where he was detailed to erect buildings and organize a school among the Oneida Indians. In 1895 he was again promoted, being made disbursing officer at that place, while in 1900 he was transferred to his present important office as superintendent of the Riggs Institute at Flandreau.

Mr. Pierce is a Republican, and has been frequently a delegate to county and state conventions in the different states in which he has resided. In 1884 he was elected superintendent of schools for Knox county, Nebraska, and thereafter he became editor and publisher of the Transcript, at Creighton, that county. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, the order of the Eastern Star, the Knights of the Maccabees, and Ancient Order of United Workmen. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. Pierce was married to Miss Laura A. Jamer and they have had five children.

THOMAS CALE, of Bon Homme county, was born in county Roscommon, Ireland, December 22, 1836. He spent his early life near the place of his birth, but enjoyed few advantages in the way of educational training. When twelve years of age he followed his mother to America, and joined her at Bloomfield, New Jersey, where she located immediately after her arrival in this country. Later Mr. Cale went to Portage City, Wisconsin, but subsequently changed his abode to Pike county, Missouri, where he tilled the soil until his removal to South Dakota. On coming to the territory, he took up a quarter section of land in what is now Cleveland township, Bon Homme county, being one of the first pioneers in that part of the country. After building a small log cabin Mr. Cale set to work improving his land and in due time reduced the greater part of it to cultivation and became quite a thrifty and prosperous farmer. The original log dwelling answered the purposes for which intended until replaced by the present substantial and commodious structure, and from time to time other buildings were erected, additional improvements were made and continued success attended the energetic and well-directed labors of the proprietor.

In 1869 was solemnized the marriage of Mr.

Cale and Miss Ann Carroll, the latter, like her husband, being a native of county Roscommon, Ireland, and to them nine children have been born.

STEPHEN OLIVER, of Bon Homme county, South Dakota, was born in Rock county, Wisconsin, September 13, 1860. His early life was spent in the state of his birth and during his childhood and youth he attended the public school and acquired a good practical education. When a young man he learned the machinist's trade and worked at the same until 1883, when he came to Bon Homme county, South Dakota, with the object in view of devoting his attention to farming and stock raising. He first purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land, but later exchanged it for a like number of acres, on which he has since lived and prospered, and which, under his effective labors and judicious management has become one of the best improved and most productive farms of its size in the county. He has made a number of substantial improvements on his place, the buildings, well-tilled fields, and the large number of fine domestic animals bearing evidence to its prosperous condition. Mr. Oliver votes the Republican ticket. He was married to Miss Amy Crandall, of Bon Homme county, and to them have been born six children.

HUGH HARTLY was born in Stonington, Connecticut, January 8, 1860. He was ten years old when his parents left Connecticut for the west and since the year 1870 his life has been very closely interwoven with the history of Bon Homme county, South Dakota. He was not permitted to enjoy many educational advantages; however, he made the most of his opportunities and obtained a valuable practical knowledge. He assisted his father in developing and cultivating the homestead and on reaching the age of manhood entered one hundred and sixty acres of land in Springfield township, on which he lived for a period of five years, during which time he addressed himself manfully to its improvement. At the expiration of the time noted Mr. Hartly moved to the place where he has since lived, a beautiful, productive and admirably situated farm, devoted to stock raising and farming. Mr. Hartly is familiar with the nature of soils and their adaptability to the different products of this part of the state and he seldom fails to realize abundant returns from the wheat, oats, corn and hay crops which are every year harvested from his place. In connection with general farming, he devotes a great deal of attention to cattle, hogs and horses, and from the sale of his animals he derives no small share of the income which comes to him as a reward for his well-directed labors. Mr. Hartly in politics supports the Democratic party, while he is earnest and devout in his allegiance to the Catholic church.

JOSIAH A. PIERSON, deceased, was born on the 8th of April, 1838, in Woodfield, Ohio, and in the public schools of his native state he acquired his education. After arriving at years of maturity he sought a companion and helpmeet for life's journey, being married to Miss Nancy A. Alexander, of Princeton, Indiana. Their wedding took place in Illinois, and unto the union four children were born. Mrs. Pierson, the first wife of the subject, was called to her final rest and Mr. Pierson was again married, his second union being with Miss F. L. Houlton, and to them was born one child.

In his early manhood Mr. Pierson engaged in teaching school in Illinois and afterward turned his attention to merchandising and farming. In 1881 he arrived in South Dakota and purchased land in this state. He became a very extensive stock raiser and was one of the prominent and successful representatives of agricultural interests in this part of the state. After purchasing his land he discovered that it contained clay beds and afterward sold a large tract to a cement company.

Mr. Pierson gave close attention to his business and his efforts at farming and stock raising brought to him a splendid financial return. In his political views he was a Republican and was a member of the Christian church.

J. T. REILLY, of Orient, Faulk county, was born in Allamakee county, Iowa, on the 14th of April, 1859, and was reared on the old homestead which was the place of his birth, and his educational training was received in the excellent public schools of Iowa. He continued thereafter to be associated with his father until 1882, when he came to South Dakota and took up a timber claim in Clark county. In the fall of that year he returned to his old home, and in the spring of the following year he came once more to South Dakota, with whose advantages and resources he had become greatly impressed. At this time he took up squatter's claim in Faulk county, and retained the same after the government survey was made, ultimately perfecting his title to the property, the claim lying four miles northwest of Orient. He continued to be actively and successfully engaged in farming and stock raising until December, 1902, when he disposed of the property and removed to Orient, where he has since been established in the general merchandise business. In 1890 he was elected a member of the board of county commissioners, while for eight years he held the office of assessor of his township, and has been a member of the board of supervisors.

Mr. Reilly was married to Miss Jane E. Hand, and of this union have been born seven daughters.

SVENNING PETERSON, of Charles Mix county, was born in Norway, December 6, 1853. He grew up and was educated in his native land, but before reaching his majority determined to seek a new home in the great republic beyond the sea. It was in 1880 that he started on his long journey to the new world, accompanied by his recently wedded wife, and on arrival he hastened overland to the distant territory of Dakota. After spending two years at Yankton he came to Charles Mix county, and homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres of land, the cultivation of which has constituted his occupation ever since. He has greatly improved his land and made out of it a farm which compares favorably with the best in the county. Besides general farming, Mr. Peterson raises horses, cattle and hogs, and conducts his business in the manner of a prosperous agriculturist. He is a member of the Republican party and usually votes that ticket.

Before leaving Norway Mr. Peterson was married to Miss Angaba Olson, by whom he has six children. Mr. Peterson and his family are members of the Lutheran church.

JOHN CONNOR, whose postoffice address is Orient, Faulk county, but whose finely improved ranch is located across the line in Hand county, was born in the city of Wheeling, West Virginia, which was at that time still an integral portion of Virginia. He was reared under the sturdy discipline of the home farm and early became inured to the strenuous work involved in its cultivation, while his educational advantages were those afforded by the common schools of the locality and period. He continued to assist in the operation of the home farm until he had attained the age of twenty-three years, when he went to Lancaster county, Missouri, where he remained for the ensuing two years, at the expiration of which he purchased a team and wagon and started for northwestern Nebraska. Upon arriving in Nebraska City he turned to Sydney and thence to Coonsville, where he traded his team for a house and lot. He then made a trip to Omaha, Lincoln and other places in Nebraska, and then came down the Elkhorn river to Blair, and on to Missouri Valley, Iowa, from which place he returned to Coonsville and disposed of his interests there, and then took up his residence in Mondamin, Iowa. Later he purchased an outfit and started for Dakota, coming by way of Sioux City, to Sioux Falls, and making an overland trip of one hundred and fifty miles. In Sioux Falls he purchased a breaking plow, and then started on in search of a location. He finally filed on a homestead claim in McCook county, where he put up a sod house, in which he domiciled himself in true pioneer style. He held down the claim for four years and passed the severe winter of 1888-9 in his primitive dwelling. Mr. Connor finally sold his property and turned his attention to dealing in oxen, meeting with fair success. He then came to Hand county, where he took up a pre-emption claim. He found the land unsuited for grazing purposes and, accordingly removed east of his original claim, and purchased a relinquishment claim for fifty dollars, while he now controls about two sections of land, by right of lease. Upon his home place he has made excellent improvements, having good buildings and other facilities, and here he gives his attention to the raising of cattle as a principal enterprise. He has been signally prosperous since coming to Hand county, and is known as one of the influential citizens of the county. Mr. Conner was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Deal, and they have five children.

OLE HOKENSTAD is a native of Norway, born in Christiania, the capital of that country, on the 28th of March, 1846. He was reared and educated in his native land and when a youth turned his attention to mechanical pursuits, becoming in due time skillful at carpentry and cabinet-making. In 1886 he came to America and after spending a short time in Quebec, Canada, went to Milwaukee, Wisconsin, thence to Monroe, the same state, where he worked at cabinet-making for a period of three years; he also followed his trade about one year in the city of Janesville, and there returned to Monroe, where he resumed his trade until the spring of 1870, when he came to South Dakota, locating on the present site of Sioux Falls, of which city he was one of the first settlers. On April 14th, of the above year, Mr. Hokenstad took a claim of one hundred and sixty acres on the public domain near Sioux Falls and after living on the same for six weeks secured employment at his trade in the above town. He devoted the next three years to carpentry work in Sioux Falls and at the expiration of that time came to Lincoln county and entered a quarter section of land in Dayton township. He at once proceeded to improve his place in Dayton township, and in the course of a few years his farm was one of the best in the county. Mr. Hokenstad has worked hard and by patient and long continued effort has succeeded not only in making a good home, but in acquiring a competence sufficiently liberal to place him in independent circumstances. He served as supervisor for several terms, also as road master and for a period of years filled the responsible position of school treasurer. A Republican in politics, he was elected county commissioner, an office he held for six years, during which time he labored zealously to promote the interests of the county. After the death of his parents he lived with friends of the family until old enough to earn his own livelihood when he found employment in various parts of his native county as a farm laborer. At the age of eighteen he took passage for the United States and spent some time in the city of Philadelphia. From there he went to Swartzville, New Jersey, where an uncle was living, and after devoting several years to farm work in the vicinity of that town, changed his location to Jackson county, Wisconsin, where he followed agriculture and lumbering. Disposing of his interests in the latter state, Mr. Fee went to Ford county, Illinois, and purchased eighty acres of railroad land, which he cleared and otherwise improved, and on which he made his home until his removal to South Dakota, in 1873. On coming to this state he took up land in section 10, Dayton township, Lincoln county, and at once proceeded to improve the same. His property increased greatly in value until in the course of a few years he was the owner of one of the finest and best located farms in the township of Dayton. Mr. Fee is now in comfortable circumstances and ranks with the leading agriculturists and stock raisers of Lincoln county. Mr. Fee has held a number of township offices and takes an active interest in public affairs,

It was in that state that the daughter gave her hand in marriage to Mr. Cunningham, and their union has been blessed with four children.

On coming to Decatur Mr. Cunningham secured a homestead claim in Mayfield, and later made a purchase of land here, comprising a quarter section near the James river. He sold his property and with the proceeds he bought four hundred acres, on which he is now living, paying for it ten dollars per acre. JOHN F. DAUGHERTY was born in Maryland on the 1st of August, 1847, and is indebted to its public-school system for the educational privileges he enjoyed. His father died when the son was a mere boy and the mother afterward married again. John Daugherty did not receive very kind treatment from his stepfather and so left home in Baltimore and made his way to Illinois. He was there living at the time of the outbreak of the Civil war, and, with patriotic spirit, he offered his services to the government. He was captured during service and was incarcerated in the famous Libby prison, where he was detained for several weeks, at the end of which time he was liberated and paroled. After the war Mr. Daugherty went to California, where he became manager of a large lumbering business in the famous Redwood regions of that state. Leaving the Pacific coast, he allied his interests with those of Dakota and became largely interested in land here. In order to establish a home of his own and to enjoy the companionship of a helpmate he married Miss Ella Colton, a native of South Bend, Indiana. In the year after their marriage the young couple went to Pierre, where Mr. Daugherty engaged in freighting. His residence in that place continued until 1882, when he removed to Wakonda, where he began buying and selling grain and stock. He has since engaged in this line of business, shipping both products of the state on a very large scale. He also owns an extensive ranch in the

In the summer following his graduation from the university he accepted a position with a mining company at Cambria, Wyoming, but only remained in its employ about two months. He then came to Terry, this state, as assayer for the Portland Mining Company, remaining with this enterprise until 1898. He

JOHN T. KEAN, of Woonsocket, Sanborn county, one of the able and prominent members of the bar of South Dakota, has been an important factor in public affairs, having served as lieutenant governor of the state and in other offices of trust and responsibility, and being particularly deserving of representation in this history of the commonwealth with whose affairs he has been so intimately identified.

John Taylor Kean is a native of the Badger state, having been born in Whitewater, Wisconsin, on the 11th of March, 1857, a son of John V. and Phoebe S. (Taylor) Kean, the former of whom was a carpenter by trade and vocation, having been one of the pioneers of Wisconsin, where he took up his residence in the territorial epoch, having removed thither from the state of Pennsylvania. Both he and his wife are now deceased, and of their six children two are living at the present time. The subject completed his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools of Monroe, Wisconsin, and early manifested a strong predilection for literary pursuits and public speaking, while his ambition to acquire a thorough education led him to put forth every effort to secure the funds with which to pursue his professional studies. In 1876 he entered the law department of the University of Wisconsin, at Madison, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1877, and thereafter he completed a post-graduate course in the National Law School in Washington, D. C., this being in 1883. Owing to his financial position he was compelled to seek other employment for a time before entering upon the practice of law, and thus worked in the sawmills and shingle-mills of Wisconsin and at whatever else came to hand, ever having a high appreciation of the dignity of honest toil, in whatever field of endeavor. In 1880 Judge Kean located at Lake Mills, Iowa, where he initiated his independent professional career. From 1882 to 1884, inclusive, he was employed in the offices of the war department in Washington, and in the spring of 1884 he came to South Dakota and took up his residence in Woonsocket, where he resumed the practice of law, soon gaining distinctive prestige through his ability and ambitious effort in his chosen profession. He is well grounded in the science of jurisprudence, familiar with the minutiae of the law in its various branches and ever showing facility in his recourse to precedents, while he is known as a strong advocate and conservative counsel, invariably giving careful preparation to every case and having exceptional strength as an advocate before a jury. He has a large and important practice and is one of the leading members of the bar of the state, while he also has extensive and valuable real-estate interests. He is an able public speaker, graceful in diction and pleasing in address, and he has taken a prominent part in the various political campaigns, in which he has proved an able exponent of the principles and policies of the Republican party, while he is also frequently called upon to deliver public addresses in other lines, his services being thus in requisition almost invariably on the occasion of public observances of the Fourth of July and Memorial day. In 1890 he was elected county judge of Sanborn county, and remained in tenure of this office for two years, his rulings being wise and impartial and never meeting with reversal in the higher tribunals. He was the candidate of his party for the office of lieutenant governor in the election of 1898, was elected by a gratifying majority and was incumbent of the office for the two ensuing years. He was elected chief executive of the municipal government of Woonsocket in 1902 and guided its affairs with marked discrimination and genuine public spirit. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order and the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution.

On the 3d of April, 1884, Judge Kean was united in marriage to Miss Bessie F. Perry, daughter of Waldo G. Perry, of Vermont, who was for many years superintendent of the dead-letter office in the national capital, in which city the marriage of the subject was solemnized. Mrs. Kean died April 17, 1903, at Palo Alto, California.

At the age of fifteen he began working at gardening, and continued to be identified with this line of enterprise until his twenty-second year, when he accompanied his parents and the other members of the immediate family on their immigration to America. For the first three years they resided in the city of Chicago, Illinois, and there the subject learned the trade of mason and plasterer. At the expiration of the period noted the family came to South Dakota, locating forthwith in the vicinity of the present village of Irene, Clay county. In this county the subject followed the work of his trade about four years, and then effected the purchase of eighty acres of land, improving the same with good buildings and there continuing to be actively engaged in agricultural pursuits for the ensuing fourteen years. He still owns this farm, which is maintained under a high state of cultivation, and which has materially appreciated in value during the intervening years. At the expiration of the period noted Mr. Reinholt moved into the village of Irene and established his present business enterprise, which has been prosperous from its initiation and which has attained to wide scope and importance as taken in a comparative way with similar undertakings in other agricultural sections of the commonwealth. He is also a contractor on a rural free mail-delivery route, owning the teams and wagons and employing subordinates to operate the same. In politics he accords a stanch allegiance to the Republican party and has been a member of the board of school directors for a number of years past. He holds to the Protestant faith in religion, while fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Danish Brotherhood.

He planted fruit trees upon the place, and has always carried on farming here. He now owns two hundred and eighty acres, of which more than one-half is under cultivation, the remainder being devoted to pasturage and to the raising of hay. Mr. Schaffer makes a specialty of shorthorned cattle and Poland-China hogs. He also raises oats, grain, wheat and other cereals adapted to the soil and climate.

WILLIAM C. FRY, one of the most highly esteemed citizens of Charles Mix county, is a native of the old Bay state, having been born in Massachusetts in 1833, and was reared and educated in his native county, where he received the advantages of the common schools, the while growing up under the sturdy discipline of the farm. Later he removed to Wisconsin, where his father also located, and in that state he devoted his attention to farming and lumbering for many years, being a hard worker and gaining success through consecutive toil and endeavor. At the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion he was among the first to tender his services in defense of the Union, enlisting in the Sixteenth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and the history of the regiment constitutes the history of his personal war record. He was taken prisoner and was confined for six days in Libby prison, at Richmond, being then paroled. He served during practically the entire period of the war.

In 1880 Mr. Fry came to South Dakota and took up a tract of government land in Lincoln county, where he remained until he came to Charles Mix county and took up a homestead claim, on a portion of which the village of Bartholdi is now located. He is now the owner of a half section of valuable and well-improved land, and of the same about one hundred and sixty acres are under a high state of cultivation, while the remainder is devoted to grazing purposes and to the raising of hay. He has been successful in his farming enterprise and is one of the most honored pioneers of the county. He was one of the founders of the village of Bartholdi, where he has been engaged in the general merchandise business, securing an excellent patronage, and has also been postmaster of the town. In politics he is an uncompromising Republican and he and his wife are valued members of the Presbyterian church, while fraternally he is identified with the Grand Army of the Republic.

When but fourteen years of age he left school and began to "rustle for himself," as the colloquial phrase well expresses it. He followed various occupations until 1875, when he became identified with the work of railroad construction, in which connection he advanced to positions of responsibility, finally becoming superintendent of construction and having been concerned in the building of a number of the important western railroads, while he has made Chicago his home and business headquarters, having retired from his association with railroading enterprises in 1898, since which time he has given much of his attention to the handling of western lands and to other capitalistic enterprises, showing great business sagacity and judgment and also marked executive talent. He is now the owner of two thousand six hundred and forty acres of valuable land in Charles Mix county. His land is principally devoted to grazing purposes and he raises a high grade of cattle. His educational advantages were such as were afforded in the public schools of that state. In 1883 he came to South Dakota and took up a homestead claim in Charles Mix county, the same constituting his present place in part, for he and his brothers own a total of six hundred and forty acres of land, which they operate together, all having come here in the pioneer epoch in the county, while all have labored earnestly and indefatigably and attained a marked success. They all reside together in the one homestead, and are numbered among the popular and prominent citizens of the county. In politics the subject is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and he has been called upon to serve in various township offices and also as a school official. Fraternally he is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America.

He secured his early education in the public schools of his native state, his advantages being somewhat limited, as, owing to the death of his father, he was early compelled to depend upon his own exertions. He worked on a farm from the age of fourteen until he had attained his legal majority, and then went to Nebraska, where he secured land, for which he paid two and one-half dollars an acre, and he there devoted his attention to farming for the ensuing four years, at the expiration of which he disposed of the property. Subsequently he came to South Dakota and located in Charles Mix county, where he purchased three hundred and seventy-eight acres of land. He forthwith turned his attention to the improvement and cultivation of his farm, and subsequently purchased additional land so that his estate now comprises six hundred and forty acres, while the property is equipped with excellent buildings and other substantial improvements and is one of the valuable farms of this favored section of the state, the greater portion of the land being under a high state of cultivation. In connection with his agricultural enterprises Mr. Biddle devotes much attention to the raising of cattle and swine. In state and national affairs he is a staunch Democrat, but in local matters he is independent.

Mr. Biddle was united in marriage to Miss Kate Grant, who was born in New York, and of this union have been born seven children.

VINCENT BRUNER, who was one of the sterling pioneers of Charles Mix county, was born in Bohemia, Austria, where he was reared and educated, and there he learned the trade of mason, to which he devoted his attention for a number of years after coming to America. He developed and improved one of the valuable farms of Charles Mix county—the homestead upon which his widow still resides, situated five miles south of Geddes, in Jackson township. The original residence on the place was a sod shanty of the primitive type, and as prosperity attended his efforts he continued to make improvements on his ranch, and the same is now one of the most attractive and productive in this locality, having a large and substantial farm residence and other good buildings, while the home is surrounded by a nice grove of trees which were planted by him. He here continued to be engaged in farming and stock growing until his death, since which time his widow has carried forward the enterprise with the assistance of her children. He was a Democrat in politics and took a deep interest in local affairs of a public nature. He served two years as a member of the board of county commissioners, and in all the relations of life so lived as to merit and receive the confidence and respect of his fellow men.

Mr. Bruner was united in marriage to Miss Mary Weiss, and of this union were born ten children.

JOHN J. MAWHINEY, one of the honored residents and influential citizens of Charles Mix county, is a native of the old Keystone state of the Union, having been born in Pennsylvania, on the 21st of June, 1833. He passed his boyhood days in his native county, in whose common schools he received his early educational training. He has subsequently been engaged in teaching and has proven particularly successful. He has been employed in pedagogic work in five different states in the Union, finally retiring from the labors of this profession in 1897. For a number of years he devoted his attention to teaching during the winter terms and engaged in farming during the summer seasons. After he came to South Dakota he became the owner of a farm and was there engaged in farming and stock raising until he disposed of the property, since which time he has resided in Wagner, where he is the owner of good property, including his pleasant home, while he is also the owner of town property in other places in the county. He has been a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party from the time of its organization, and was elected to the office of justice of the peace, and is now serving in that capacity, while for the past three years he has been a member of the school board. He and his wife are zealous and devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal church, in whose work they are actively concerned.

Mr. Mawhiney was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Force, and they have four children.

HENRY MANSHEIM, of Charles Mix county, is a native of Lee county, Iowa, where he was born on the 1st of March, 1861, and he early became inured to the work of the home farm, while his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the public schools of his native county. At the age of seventeen years he left school and thereafter worked by the month as a farm hand until he had attained his legal majority, when he came to South Dakota and took up a homestead claim in Jackson township, Charles Mix county, this property being a portion of his present ranch. He spared no effort or labor to improve his land, and the years have brought to him a due measure of success. Later Mr. Mansheim purchased an adjoining quarter section of land, so that he now has three hundred and twenty acres, the greater portion of his farm being under cultivation, while he has also been very successful in the raising of live stock, giving special attention to the breeding of cattle and hogs, while he also does considerable business in the line of dairy farming. In so far as state and national issues are involved he is a staunch adherent of the Democratic party, but in local matters he maintains an independent attitude. He has held office in his school district practically from the time of coming to the county to the present. He and his wife are communicants of the Catholic church, and he is also identified with the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association.

Mr. Mansheim was married to Miss Matilda J. Long and they have five children.

RASMUS PETERSON was born in Denmark on November 11, 1842, and was reared upon his father's farm there, his parents never leaving their native country. In 1866, however, Mr. Peterson bade adieu to home and friends and sailed for the United States. Arriving in Wisconsin, he was employed for a time in Racine county. He next went to Michigan, where he worked in a sawmill and then returned to Racine county.

While there Mr. Peterson was united in marriage to Miss Johanna Anderson and he carried on farming there until he came to South Dakota. Here he secured a homestead claim, all wild and unimproved, but with marked energy and strong determination he began its cultivation and development and now in addition to his homestead farm he owns good town property. This farm is supplied with modern equipments and is located not far from Irene, so that he is enabled to enjoy the advantages of town life as well.

Mr. and Mrs. Peterson became the parents of ten children. Mr. Peterson exercises his right of franchise in support of the men and measures of the Republican party. He has been officially connected with the schools for eleven years and he belongs to the Lutheran church.

WILLIAM VOLL is a native of Russia, where his birth occurred on June 1, 1852. He grew to manhood in his native land and was raised on a farm, his father having been an honest, industrious tiller of the soil. In 1872 he came to America and, proceeding direct to South Dakota, took up a quarter section of land in Bon Homme county, later purchasing an additional tract of four hundred and eighty acres, only a small part of which was improved when he took possession. Subsequently he disposed of his interests there and changed his abode to Hutchinson county, purchasing what was known as the Bechtold place, a fine tract of land, on which he has made many substantial improvements, converting it into one of the most productive and valuable farms in the community. Mr. Voll served four years as school director, besides filling other local offices, and as a Republican he wields a strong influence for his party. In addition to farming and stock raising Mr. Voll is an enthusiastic horticulturist and for a number of years he has devoted much attention to this interesting and fascinating pursuit, and now has one of the finest orchards in the county.

The subject was married to Miss Rosenia Link, like himself a native of Russia, and the union has been blessed with a family of thirteen children.

PHILIP SCHAMBER.—On another page of this work appears a sketch of the subject's brother, Fred W., and as in the connection is entered an outline of the family history it will not be necessary to give a supplementary review at this point. He whose name initiates this paragraph is one of the able and popular young business men of Eureka, McPherson county, and was born in Russia, on the 1st of June, 1870, and was about four years of age at the time of his parents' immigration to America, whither they came in 1874 and forthwith took up their residence in what is now the state of South Dakota, where the subject was reared to maturity, securing his educational training in the public schools and under the able direction of his father. He became identified with the hardware business at Tripp, Hutchinson county, where he was associated with his father and brothers, and in 1889 this business was sold and the brothers removed to Eureka, where they engaged in the hardware and farming implement business under the firm name of Martin Schamber & Sons, the interested principals being the honored father, Martin Schamber, and his sons, Fred W., Julius, Emil and Philip. Subsequently the subject disposed of his interests in the business and entered the employ of the well-known firm of Wardner, Bushnell, Glessner & Company, of Chicago, as traveling representative, selling agricultural machinery. He was thus engaged for two seasons and then established himself in the grain business in Eureka, buying an elevator. Later he disposed of the elevator and practically retired from the grain business to give his attention to the buying and shipping of live stock, with which line of enterprise he has since been prominently and successfully concerned. He is also the owner of an interest in the Golden Rule department store in the city of Aberdeen. In politics Mr. Schamber has ever been known as a staunch Republican, and he was appointed postmaster of Eureka, in which capacity he has since continued to render effective service.

Mr. Schamber was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Hezel, and of this union have been born two children.

A. SCHOEN, M. D., is a native of Austria, where he was born on the 3d of November, 1877, and he was yet a mere lad at the time he accompanied his parents on their removal to America. After attending the public schools of the metropolis of the Union he took a course in the College of the City of New York. In the autumn of 1896 he was matriculated in the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York city, being graduated as a member of the class of 1899. In the year following his graduation, at his technical state examination, required as supplementary to his collegiate professional degree, he was given an honorary license for his proficiency, and in September of that year he opened an office in New York city, where he continued in practice until 1902, when he came to South Dakota and took up his residence in the city of Yankton, where he is building up a gratifying practice. In politics he is independent, while fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and the Knights of the Maccabees.

MATTHEW BIGGINS is a native of the Emerald Isle, having been born in County Cavan, on the 17th of September, 1835, and being a son of representatives of staunch old Irish stock. The mother died in Ireland, and her husband afterward came with his children to the United States, locating in the city of Philadelphia. In that city our subject completed his educational discipline while in his boyhood he also learned the trade of shoemaking. In 1861 Mr. Biggins gave evidence of his intrinsic loyalty to the Union by enlisting for service in the war of the Rebellion. Mr. Biggins remained in active service for a period of four years, within which time he participated in many important battles. After the close of the war he returned to Pennsylvania, where he followed his trade, having in the meanwhile become a member of a Pennsylvania regiment of old soldiers, known as the Veteran Reserves, which enlisted as a portion of the regular army. It was sent to the territory of Dakota, and here Mr. Biggins continued in the army service for several years. He took up a homestead claim near Wheeler, Charles Mix county, having ever since retained possession of this property, to which he acquired title, as did many other soldiers who secured land in this locality, through a special act of congress, the land being originally known as the Fort Randall military reservation. For some time Mr. Biggins had charge of the mess house of the Crow Creek Indian reservation, since which time he has given his attention to the management of his fine farm. In politics he is a Republican, and he is a communicant of the Catholic church, as are also the members of his family.

Mr. Biggins was united in marriage to Miss Deborah McGrath, who was likewise born in Ireland, and they became the parents of eleven children.

JAMES H. STEPHENS, of Springfield, Bon Homme county, is a native of the state of Illinois, having been born in Jo Daviess county, on the 16th of September, 1850. He passed his boyhood days in his native county, where he attended the common schools, and he was about ten years of age at the time when the family removed to Wisconsin, where he continued to attend school until the age of fifteen years, when he entered upon an apprenticeship at the trade of harnessmaking, becoming a skilled workman. He thereafter worked as a journeyman in various towns and subsequently came west to Sioux City, Iowa, remaining about one year and then returning east to the city of Chicago. In 1872 he came to Yankton, Dakota, where he remained one year, at the expiration of which he took up his residence in Springfield, where he opened a harness shop and also a furniture and undertaking establishment, becoming one of the pioneer merchants of the town, and he successfully continued his operations in the lines noted until 1897, when he disposed of his interests and has since lived practically retired, giving a general supervision to his capitalistic investments. His political support is given to the Republican party, and in 1878-9 he served as a member of the lower house of the territorial assembly, while in 1894 he was elected to represent his district in the state senate, being chosen as his own successor in 1896. Fraternally he holds membership in the Free and Accepted Masons; Yankton Chapter, No. 2, Royal Arch Masons, and Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Mr. Stephens was married to Miss Emily A. Place, of Yankton, who died, being survived by three children, and subsequently Mr. Stephens consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Henrietta Hyatt, of Illinois, and they are the parents of three children.

JOHN BROWN, of Springfield, Bon Homme county, was born in Quebec, Canada, and was reared in the land of his birth and educated in the public schools of the same. When but a youth he left home and went to St. Lawrence county, New York, where he spent the two years following at various kinds of manual labor, and then accepted a position with the Fairbanks Scale Company, at St. Johnsbury, Vermont, and devoted the ensuing three years to mechanical work in their factory at that place, after which he went to Fond du Lac county, Wisconsin, where he was engaged in the lumber business.

Disposing of his business in the latter state, Mr. Brown moved to Iowa, where he purchased a farm and turned his attention to agriculture, and continued to reside there until he sold his possessions and changed his residence to Bon Homme county, South Dakota. On coming to this state he took up land in the vicinity of Springfield and from that time to the present has devoted his attention chiefly to farming and stock raising, in both of which his success has been most encouraging.

For a number of years Mr. Brown has had a contract with the government to furnish beef to the Indians and in addition to this and his agricultural and live-stock interests he does a flourishing business as a coal dealer. Politically he is a Democrat, in religion a Catholic and his fraternal relations are with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

SAMUEL McCORMACK, of Armour, Douglas county, is a native of the Dominion of Canada, having been born in Nova Scotia. He received his educational training in his native province, and at St. Johns, New Brunswick, he served a thorough apprenticeship as a carpenter and builder. Upon coming to the United States he was employed for one year as a journeyman by a firm in the city of Boston, being still under instruction, as he desired to perfect himself in all details of his chosen vocation. Later he became a ship carpenter and as such sailed on a number of the large clipper ships, continuing to be thus employed for four years. He finally located in East Boston, whence he later removed to Chelsea, Massachusetts, where he remained until 1866, engaged in the work of his trade, and in that year he came west to Clayton county, Iowa, where he erected a number of the principal church edifices and other important buildings. After the great fire in the city of Chicago he went to that city and superintended the work of erecting six of the principal church buildings. Later he located in Webster City, Iowa, where he built the court house and several fine residences, and then came to Sioux Falls, Dakota, becoming one of the pioneer contractors and builders of Dakota territory, and retaining his home in that place until after the division of the territory and the admission of the two states into the Union. In Sioux Falls Mr. McCormack erected a large number of the principal buildings. In 1895 Mr. McCormack went to Kenton, Ohio, where he erected a fine private residence and the grammar school, the latter contract having been secured in the face of much active competition and opposition on the part of local contractors. In 1900 he came to Armour, where he has since maintained his home, and in the spring of 1903 he was accorded the gratifying and important appointment of superintendent of construction of state buildings, said appointment coming through the state board of charities and corrections. A more judicious and merited appointment could not have been made, for the subject is thoroughly skilled in his chosen profession, to which he has devoted the major portion of his long and useful life, while his fidelity to contract, his knowledge of values and his inflexible integrity will insure to the state the best of service in the work assigned to his charge. In politics our subject is a Prohibitionist in principle, allegiance and practice, and his religious faith is that of the Congregational church. He is also identified with the Masonic fraternity.

Mr. McCormack was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Hancock, of East Boston, Massachusetts, and they have had six children.

ALBERT SMITH was born in the village of Laharpe, Hancock county, Illinois. He was granted the advantages of the common schools in his youth and thereafter took a course of study in Knox College, at Galesburg, Illinois. In 1872 he removed to Minnesota, where he remained until 1875, when he returned home, by reason of the impaired health of his father, who died shortly afterward. The subject again went to Minnesota, and established himself in the hardware business in Wright county, where he continued operations about six years, meeting with fair success. His health finally became delicate and this led to his removing to South Dakota, whither he came in 1883. He located on a farm eight miles north of Britton, in Day county, the place being now in Marshall county, and shortly afterward he returned to Howard, Minnesota. In the spring of 1884 he came once more to Day county, South Dakota, and became one of the organizers of the first bank in Webster, while he served as cashier of the same until 1888, when the institution was closed, owing to depressed financial conditions, though the promoters of the enterprise allowed none of their patrons to lose by reason of the suspension. In the autumn of that year Mr. Smith was elected county auditor, of which office he continued incumbent for the long period of six years, after which he served in various other offices of public trust and responsibility, ever proving himself a discriminating and faithful executive. In 1900 he was elected clerk of the courts, and has since served as such. He is also representative of a number of the leading fire-insurance companies and does a very considerable business as underwriter for the same. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, and also with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias.

Mr. Smith was united in marriage to Miss Hannah J. Alley, who was born in West Virginia, and they have two sons.

J. H. PARROTT, one of the representative citizens and business men of Pierpont, Day county, is a native of the state of Wisconsin, having been born on a farm in Green Lake county. He was reared on the old homestead farm, while his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the public schools of Wisconsin. He came as a youthful pioneer to the state of South Dakota, locating on the north shore of Lake Kampeska, in Codington county, where he continued to be engaged in farming and stock growing until he removed to Raymond, Clark county, and from thence to Day county, where he became one of the founders of the town of Pierpont, where he has ever since maintained his home, having been conspicuously concerned in the upbuilding and material and civic development of the town. Here he engaged in the general merchandise business, his store having been one of the first in the place. Three weeks after he had opened his establishment the building and the greater portion of its contents were destroyed by fire, entailing an almost total loss, but he was not disheartened by this reverse and soon reopened his store, while he has now a large, attractive and well-appointed establishment. He is the owner of a half section of most fertile and productive land adjoining the town, and in addition to general agriculture he devotes special attention to the raising of cattle and horses. A peculiar and valuable feature in connection with this land is that on any portion of the same, by drilling to a depth of from fourteen to sixteen feet, an artesian well may be secured, the water being pure and rising from four to five feet above the surface.

In politics Mr. Parrott has ever given a loyal support to the Democratic party and has shown an active interest in the forwarding of its cause. He was for two terms mayor of Pierpont, and gave a most able and satisfactory administration of municipal affairs. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Knights of the Maccabees and the Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Parrott was married to Miss Rose Holdrich, who was born and reared in Minnesota, and they have three children.

W. S. MITCHELL was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, on the 16th of February, 1861, and received his educational discipline in the excellent schools of his native land, where he remained until he had attained the age of twenty-one years, when he severed the home ties and came to America. He landed in New York city and remained in the national metropolis about six months, at the expiration of which he came to the west and located in St. Cloud, Minnesota, where he followed his trade, that of stone cutter, for the ensuing year, at the expiration of which he returned to New York, where he passed the following year and then came again to St. Cloud, where he made his home until he came to South Dakota and took up his residence in Sioux Falls, where he was engaged in the work of his trade until the following year, when he cast in his lot with that of the good people of Dell Rapids, where he organized the Dell Rapids Granite Company, of which he became secretary and treasurer, the company owning and operating valuable quarries in this locality. He continued to be actively concerned in this line of enterprise for a period of twelve years, at the expiration of which he disposed of his interests and engaged in the hotel and restaurant business in Dell Rapids. He has gained to his place a high reputation for the best of service in all departments, and Mitchell's hotel and restaurant enjoy unmistakable popularity with the traveling public. For the past five years he has been manager of the local opera house and in the connection has given the public an excellent class of entertainments. In politics Mr. Mitchell has ever given an unqualified allegiance to the Republican party but has never sought or desired public office. He is held in high regard in fraternal circles and he is identified with the Masonic order, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Pythias, Knights of the Maccabees, Modern Woodmen of America and the Dramatic Order of the Knights of Khorassan.

Mr. Mitchell was united in marriage to Miss Hattie Love, and they have one child.

S. M. LINDLEY, of Bonesteel, Gregory county, is a native of the Hawkeye state, having been born on the parental farmstead in Iowa. He grew up under the sturdy discipline of the homestead farm and his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the public schools of the locality. He continued to be associated with the work of the parental farm until he had attained the age of nineteen years, when he set forth to seek his fortunes in what is now the state of South Dakota, being attracted by the discovery of gold in the Black Hills, to which district he made his way. He there remained a few months and then located in Charles Mix county, where he took up government land and gave his attention to farming and stock raising. He was an influential factor in the public affairs of that section, having been elected county commissioner when but twenty-one years of age, while he also served as county clerk and register of deeds. He continued to reside in that county until he disposed of his interests there and came to the new county of Gregory, settling near Wheeler and in the immediate proximity of the embryonic village of Starcher, where he served as the first postmaster. He has ever been a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and was the one principally instrumental in securing the introduction of the legislative bill providing for a treaty with the Indians for the opening of the Rosebud reservation to settlement. Mr. Lindley was a member of the legislature in 1901, and there gave most effective service in the interests of his constituency, and he was also a member of the Republican state central committee. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Ancient Order of United Workmen, while his religious views are in harmony with the faith of the Episcopal church, in which he was reared, his wife being a communicant of the Catholic church. Mr. Lindley was united in marriage to Miss Lizzie Marshall, of Charles Mix county.

B. C. ASH, one of the prominent and successful stock growers of Hughes county and also incumbent of the office of sheriff of the county, is a native of the Hoosier state, having been born in White county, Indiana. When he was about five years of age, his parents removed from Indiana to Sioux City, Iowa. The subject received his preliminary educational training in the schools of Sioux City, and after the removal of the family to Yankton continued his studies in the common schools of that place as opportunity presented, while he early initiated his independent career. Mr. Ash was appointed deputy United States marshal, and continued to serve in this capacity for varying intervals during a number of years. Subsequently he left Yankton and removed to the site of the present thriving and attractive city of Bismarck, and his is the distinction of having erected the first house in the town. He held the position of wagonmaster for General Custer, who was then making his first trip through this section of the northwest, where his life was later sacrificed. Later Mr. Ash located in Pierre, where he engaged in the livery business and also conducted a general store, becoming one of the leading and influential business men of the capital city. He identified himself with the stock business, to which he has since given much attention, raising cattle and horses upon an extensive scale and having a large and well-improved ranch, which is located one hundred and twenty-five miles northwest of Fort Pierre, in Stanley county. In politics he is a staunch advocate of the Democratic party and has been one of the active workers in the party ranks. In 1900 he was elected sheriff of Hughes county, giving a most able administration and being chosen to this office again in the spring of 1904, for a second term of four years. In 1896 he received from President Cleveland the appointment as Indian agent at the Lower Brule agency, retaining this incumbency four years and proving a most capable official. He is identified with the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Mr. Ash was united in marriage to Miss Sarah A. Brisbane, and they have three children.

H. N. CHAPMAN was born in the province of Quebec, Canada, and was reared and educated in his native land. At the age of twenty-one he went to Boston, Massachusetts, and passed a year in the employ of a wholesale house, then returned to Quebec, where he remained until 1871. In March of that year he came to South Dakota, and settled at Yankton, taking contracts on the construction of the Dakota & Southern Railroad. Later he engaged in butchering at Yankton. In 1876 he arrived at Deadwood with two wagon loads of window glass, the first brought to that point, and sold it at a great profit, getting his own price. Here he devoted his time to mining, doing placer work for the most part, and making his home at Deadwood, where he remained until he came to Rapid City and located land on Spring creek twelve miles from the town, but still retaining his mining claims, of which he yet has a number. Settling on his place, he engaged in raising stock, beginning with sheep and following with cattle and horses. In politics he is an earnest and ardent working Republican, taking an active part in all the campaigns of the party, but without desire or effort to secure office for himself. In 1895 he moved his family to Rapid City, and since then he has maintained his home there, having a fine modern residence, but he is still engaged in the stock industry and his interests in it are large. The Masonic order awakened his interest many years ago and since then he has been active and earnest in devotion to its welfare. At Yankton Mr. Chapman was united in marriage with Miss Sarah A. Davis, a native of Canada, and they have four children.

DELOSS PERRY, farmer, stock raiser and representative citizen, is a native of Bradford county, Pennsylvania. He spent his youth and early manhood in his native state, attending the public schools of Bradford county. He remained on the home farm and assisted to cultivate the same until his twenty-fourth year, and was united in marriage with Miss Melvina Bennett, of Tioga, Pennsylvania, after which he purchased a small farm and engaged in the pursuit of agriculture for himself. Four years later he came to Minnehaha county, South Dakota, and entering a quarter section of land, lived on the same until he removed to a claim in the county of Kingsbury. Mr. Perry brought with him a good team of horses, a number of cattle and after building a small board house was better fixed for farming than the majority of his neighbors. Mr. Perry persevered in his attempts to found a home and get a start in the west and how well he succeeded is attested by his present large farm and live-stock interests and the prominent position he occupies among the leading agriculturists and stock raisers of Kingsbury county. He owns one of the finest and most valuable farms in this part of the state, besides a large amount of excellent grazing land and keeps on his place at all times blooded horses, cattle, sheep and the best breed of hogs. He is also engaged in the dairying business, this as well as his other enterprises proving quite profitable.

Mr. and Mrs. Perry have five children. In politics Mr. Perry formerly supported the Republican party, but of recent years he has been voting irrespective of political affiliations. He is a member of the Pyramids, a fraternal organization, and with his wife and family belongs to the Congregational church.

JOHN WESTFALL, one of the enterprising farmers and stock raisers of Custer county, was born in the southern part of Louisiana. He remained in his native state until a youth of fifteen and then left home, going to Illinois, where he was engaged in different kinds of manual labor during the ensuing four years, spending the latter part of that period in the city of Rock Island, from which place he went to Omaha, Nebraska. When nineteen years of age he left the latter state for South Dakota, making the trip to the Black Hills via Sidney and arriving at Harney when that flourishing city was little more than a mining camp. He remained one year prospecting in the vicinity and then went to Deadwood, where he followed mining about the same length of time, meeting with fair success in his operations. Returning to Harney, he sold several claims which he had previously located and after living in that town and vicinity until the spring of 1882 took up his present ranch three miles from Hermosa, on Battle creek, where he has since been engaged in agriculture and the live-stock business, devoting especial attention to cattle raising.

In addition to his home place Mr. Westfall has acquired considerable real estate in the neighborhood, much of which has been reduced to cultivation and otherwise improved and he is now in comfortable circumstances, with flattering prospects of a long and prosperous business career before him.

J. B. DICKEY, M. D., was born in Wayne county, Illinois, and there grew to manhood's estate, attending at intervals the public schools, but at the age of thirteen beginning to earn his own livelihood. When a youth he learned the shoemaking business in his father's shop, but did not work very long at the trade, devoting the greater part of his time to farm labor. His father owned a farm and on this the subject spent several years very profitably until entering the St. Louis Medical College. He also ran a stationary engine for two or three years, in which capacity he earned money sufficient to defray his expenses while taking his first course of lectures, after which he devoted his vacations to any kind of honorable work he could find to do, in this manner paying his way through the medical college. The subject received his degree in the month of March, 1882, and the same year he went to Winslow, Arizona, where his brother had located some time previously, and the two effected a copartnership, soon commanding an extensive and lucrative professional business. They did the practice for the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad (now the Santa Fe), in addition to which their field included a wide range of country, a large part exceedingly difficult of access. After remaining a little over one year in Arizona the Doctor moved his business to Iroquois, South Dakota, in 1883, where, in addition to practicing his profession, he opened a drug store. He conducted this business with encouraging success for about fourteen years and then exchanged it for a farm near Iroquois to which he removed and which he cultivated for a period of two years in connection with his professional work. Later he rented the place and returned to town, since which time he has devoted his attention exclusively to the healing art, being now the oldest physician in Iroquois. Dr. Dickey is a Mason and has held a number of prominent official positions in the order, serving four years as master of the local lodge to which he belongs, besides representing it at different times in the grand lodge. He is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and is now state examiner of the same, being also an active member of the Modern Woodmen of America. In politics he is a Democrat and as such was elected county commissioner and that, too, despite an overwhelming normal Republican majority. After serving three years the opposition requested the privilege of renominating him, as his own party the meanwhile had become imbued with certain populistic principles which he could not well indorse. He was triumphantly re-elected and discharged the duties of the office for a period of seven years, in addition to which he served nine years on the school board and for three years was a member of the town board of Iroquois.

Mr. Dickey was married to Miss Lena Wilfer, a native of Germany, and they have had four children.

EDWARD HAZELTINE was born in Fryeburg, Maine, and was taken three years later to York state, where he remained some time, removing thence to Canada, which was his home until 1871. Meanwhile he attended the public schools and when old enough began working with his father, who was an experienced millwright, and to this kind of labor he devoted his attention until becoming quite an efficient mechanic. He accompanied his parents to Howard county, Nebraska, where the family were among the early settlers. The subject's father took up a tract of government land in that county and engaged in farming and stock raising and it was there that Edward spent the ensuing five years, attending school and assisting in the development and cultivation of the homestead. When the Black Hills were opened the elder Hazeltine joined the rush to the land of great expectations, being followed the same year by his family. Edward Hazeltine and his father became associated in the mercantile business and soon established a lucrative trade. Severing his connection with the above enterprises at that time he went on the range and continued to ride the same until the following fall, when he located at what is now the city of Keystone and, in partnership with several of his friends, began prospecting for gold and lime, in the prosecution of which he traveled a large area of country and made some exceedingly fortunate strikes. Later Mr. Hazeltine ran a stage from Tin Camp to Rapid City, but the meanwhile kept up his mining interests and was quite successful in prosecuting the same. In 1891 he returned to Battle Creek where he followed placer mining during the summer months, but later in the season settled on a small tract of land north of Keystone and turned his attention to gardening, in connection with which he subsequently engaged in the live-stock business. Meantime his father and brothers took up a ranch on Battle Creek and began farming and cattle raising and about seven years later Edward was admitted to partnership with them, after which the business grew steadily in magnitude, the management being under the personal direction of the subject. The same year in which the business relationship was formed a sawmill was erected near Keystone, which proved a paying investment. In 1897 Mr. Hazeltine took up a homestead in the forest reserve, two miles north of Keystone, and moving a sawmill to the same engaged in the manufacture of lumber on quite an extensive scale. His brothers are interested with him in this enterprise, as well as in stock raising and farming, and their combined business has so grown in proportions that the partnership is now one of the strongest and most successful of the kind in this part of the country. They also purchased a complete threshing outfit and at this time thresh all the grain in a large section of the country. The progressive spirit manifested in all of his undertakings shows Mr. Hazeltine the possessor of universal energy and determination while his hopefulness and optimism have had not a little to do in paving the way to the prominent position in business circles which he now occupies.

Politically Mr. Hazeltine wields a strong influence for the Republican party.

MARTIN AMUNDSON, one of the representative farmers and stock raisers of Kingsbury county, South Dakota, is of Scandinavian birth, being a native of Norway. He was reared to manhood amid the romantic scenery of Norway, attended school at intervals until his sixteenth year and early learned the lessons of honest toil which life on a farm in that country invariably imparts. Losing his father at the tender age of eight years, he was soon thrown upon his own resources and two years later went to live with a neighboring farmer. When fourteen years old he began receiving wages for his services and at the age of sixteen left his first employer and engaged by the year with a farmer by the name of Nitberg. After a year or so with that gentleman he spent the ensuing three years in railroad construction, working on sawmills and at various other kinds of employment, and at the expiration of that time came to United States, making his way direct to Kingsbury county, South Dakota, where an older brother was then living, and spent that fall in the latter's employ. The following winter and at intervals during the ensuing spring and summer he worked on the Northwestern Railroad, the meantime taking up a pre-emption, a part of which he broke and planted in potatoes the first year. He continued to labor for wages, and as opportunities afforded he worked his own land from time to time until he finally reduced the same to a fine state of cultivation. Later he sold his claim and bought a relinquishment on a quarter section, which he at once proceeded to improve. Mr. Amundson bought another quarter section of fine land which with the farm alluded to above, he still owns, his real estate at the present time amounting to three hundred and twenty acres on which are to be seen some of the best improvements in the township in which it is situated. Mr. Amundson labored diligently to develop his lands and make improvements and was so successful in his undertakings that in the course of years he found himself in independent circumstances. He cultivated both of his farms until 1900, when he rented his tree claim, and since that time has managed the place on which he now lives, but, as indicated above, does little of the hard work himself, being in a situation to employ labor whenever he sees fit to do so. In connection with his agricultural interests he raises a great deal of live stock, keeping on his place at all times blooded horses, fine cattle and a number of hogs, and he feeds every year all of the large corn crop grown in his fields. He is a model farmer, uses the best implements and machinery obtainable and does everything according to system, in consequence of which he realizes the largest possible returns from his time and labor.

He is a Republican in principle, but does not confine his voting strictly to party; in matters religious he is a member of the Norwegian Lutheran church.

R. A. ROUNSEVILLE, a representative farmer and stock raiser of Kingsbury county, is a native of Waterloo county, Wisconsin. He grew to manhood in Sheboygan county, Wisconsin, attended the public schools at intervals until eighteen years old and assisted his father in running the home farm until attaining his majority. Coming to Kingsbury county, South Dakota, he entered a quarter section of land, after which he worked among the neighboring farmers for several years to earn sufficient money to develop and otherwise improve his claim. Meanwhile he spent considerable time on his land and when not otherwise engaged addressed himself manfully to its improvement. He began farming for himself with an ox-team and a plow and with this outfit succeeded in breaking the greater part of his ground and fitting it for tillage. He entered the marriage relation, after which he set up a domestic establishment on his place and, beginning to farm in earnest, was in due time on the high road to success and prosperity. Mr. Rounseville owns three hundred and twenty acres of fine land, admirably situated for farming and stock raising, and to these two lines of industry he has devoted his attention, with most encouraging financial results. Mr. Rounseville and family belong to the Catholic church, the parents as well as the children having been born and reared in this faith. In former years the subject was a Democrat, but when the Populist party was organized he espoused its principles and became one of its first leaders in the county of Kingsbury. He was elected on this ticket county commissioner and served two terms, making a capable, painstaking and exceedingly popular official. He was township clerk, has been assessor and in addition thereto is now treasurer of the school board of his township.

J. W. KILEY, of Meade county, South Dakota, was born in Middletown, Susquehanna county, Pennsylvania, and spent his early life on his father's farm. At the proper age he entered the public schools and so rapid was his advancement that he was soon able to pass the required examinations and obtain a teacher's license, and for some time thereafter he devoted the winter seasons to educational work. He continued farming and teaching in Pennsylvania until he went to Kansas, where he spent about one year on a large cattle ranch.

In the spring of 1877 Mr. Kiley started for Dakota, with the Black Hills as an objective point, arriving in Deadwood the following June, and at once engaged in prospecting, to which he devoted his attention until he came to Sturgis and entered the employ of a rancher on Alkali creek. After spending one year thus he located land in the vicinity, but two years later left the place on account of scarcity of water and bought the right to the ranch about seven miles from Sturgis, on which he has since lived and achieved such marked success as a cattle raiser. Mr. Kiley moved to his present place in 1884, and at once inaugurated a system of improvements which in due season made it one of the finest and most valuable ranches on the creek. By judicious management he succeeded in getting a substantial start in the way of live stock, and by adding to his herds from time to time finally forged to the front as one of the leading cattle raisers in his part of the county, a reputation he still sustains. Mr. Kiley married Miss Mary Smith, of Indiana. In his political views Mr. Kiley is a pronounced Democrat, and since attaining his majority he has been a firm and active supporter of his party.

ADAM ROYHE is of foreign birth, being a native of Hesse Darmstadt, Germany. He spent his childhood and youth in Hesse Darmstadt, and received a good education in the schools of his native state. He accompanied his parents to the United States and attended school in Wisconsin, where he learned to read and write the English language, having previously obtained a sufficient knowledge of the same to converse fluently. The following summer he worked on the farm and at the age of nineteen left home and began earning his own livelihood, spending some time in the lumber regions of Wisconsin. In company with a friend he came to South Dakota, walking from Marshall, Minnesota, to Kingsbury county, his original destination having been the city of Yankton. On the way they stopped in Brookings county, where they were informed that better land could be obtained in the county of Kingsbury than in the section of country for which they were bound. Accordingly Mr. Royhe took up a claim, and after spending the summer on the same and reducing about fifteen acres to cultivation, returned to Wisconsin, where he remained until the following spring, purchasing the meanwhile a team of horses, a wagon and various agricultural implements to be used on his western homestead. With the advent of spring he returned to his claim and broke a considerable portion of ground, spending the succeeding winter in the pioneer section of Wisconsin, and in this way he divided the time during the ensuing three years. Mr. Royhe took to himself a wife and helpmeet in the person of Miss Minnie Deetman, of Columbia county, Wisconsin, and in the spring of the following year settled permanently in Kingsbury county, South Dakota, remaining on his own claim until 1890, when he took up his residence in Arlington. He still owns the above farm, which is in a high state of cultivation, and in addition thereto has a half section of fine land, which is also well improved and successfully tilled. Mr. Royhe opened a meat market in Arlington, which he operated with encouraging success for two years, and then began handling grain for the Van Dusen firm, continuing with them until erecting an elevator of his own. Since then he has carried on an extensive grain business, being one of the largest buyers and shippers in the county, and in connection therewith he also deals quite extensively in real estate.

He has been influential in political circles ever since becoming a resident of South Dakota, has held a number of township and county offices and for a number of years has been a delegate to nearly every Republican convention held in his county, district and state. He served with marked ability as state senator, during which time he was on some of the most important committees of the upper house, including among others the committees on banking, insurance, cities and municipal corporations and railroads. He is identified with several local enterprises, being a director of the First National Bank and a stockholder in the same. He stands high in the Masonic order, and is also identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and with his wife belongs to the Eastern Star lodge. In his religious belief Mr. Royhe subscribes to the German Lutheran faith, his wife being a member of the Episcopal church. They are the parents of four children.

In his youth he attended the public schools, later pursued his studies for some time in one of the ward schools of Chicago, and at the early age of fourteen acquired his first practical experience in life as a clerk in a general store at Wilmington. He continued as a salesman in different mercantile establishments until he responded to the President's call for volunteers by enlisting at Chicago in what was known as the Mercantile Battery of that city, with which he served with an honorable record until July, 1865. Following his discharge Mr. Hudson came to South Dakota, and for some time thereafter was engaged in trading and distributing government supplies among the Indians, at Fort Thompson, at which he was stationed for a period of thirteen years, and of which he was also postmaster. Subsequently he came to Yankton, where he became associated with Governor Edmunds in the banking business, the subject severing his connection with the institution in 1886. Since then Mr. Hudson has devoted his attention to the brokerage, real-estate and insurance and general loan business, being at this time not only the leader in these lines at Yankton, but having perhaps the largest and most extensive patronage of any man in the state, similarly engaged. Since becoming a citizen of South Dakota he has been untiring in his endeavors to promote the state's interests, materially and otherwise. For the past eighteen years he has been a member of the Yankton school board, and since 1898 has presided over that body.

Mr. Hudson is one of the Republican standard bearers in South Dakota, and as such has been instrumental in leading the party to success in a number of local, state and national contests. With a strong belief in revealed religion and a profound reverence for the Bible, his life measures according to the high standard of excellence as set forth within the Gospel and affords a commendable example of practical Christianity. Many years ago he united with the Episcopal church, and for more than a quarter of a century he has held the position of vestryman in the different congregations with which iden-

E. E. HUDSON, of Yankton, is a native of Trumbull county, Ohio, and spent the first eight years of his life in that county. In 1846 he accompanied his parents upon their removal to Illitified. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. Hudson entered the marriage relation with Miss Clara E. Warren, of Rockford, Illinois, a lady of intelligence, refined tastes and varied culture.

REV. WILLIAM KROEGER, M. D.—A unique and distinguished position is that occupied by the honored subject of this sketch, who is a member of the priesthood of the Catholic church, one of the leading physicians and surgeons of the state and one who has accomplished an admirable and noble work for the good of humanity in connection with both vocations to which he has given his attention and great ability. He is the founder, and virtual owner, of the attractive little village which bears his name, in Hanson county, and has there established a sanitarium and medical institution and hospital which have attained a wide and noteworthy reputation.

Dr. Kroeger is a native of the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, where he was born on the 25th of January, 1853, being the eldest of the eight children of August and Elizabeth (Sexton) Kroeger, both of whom were born in Germany, the former in Clopenburg and the latter in West-fald. They came to America when young and their marriage was solemnized in the city of Cincinnati, where for many years the honored father of our subject followed his trade, that of carriage painting. He is still living in the "Queen City," being seventy-four years of age at the time of this writing, in 1904, while his wife passed to the life eternal when the subject of this review was a child of two years and five months, having been a devoted member and communicant of the Catholic church, as is also her venerable husband, who is a man of sterling character and one whose life has been one of signal usefulness. Dr. Kroeger received his preliminary educational discipline in the parochial schools and other church institutions of his native city, and at the age of eighteen years was matriculated in the Ohio Medical College, of Cincinnati, where he completed the prescribed course and was graduated, with high honors, as a member of the class of 1871, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He was thereafter for three years engaged in the practice of his profession in Cincinnati, and in the meanwhile had determined to prepare himself for the priesthood of the church in whose ancient and inviolate faith he had been reared. He completed his divinity course in St. Meinrad, Indiana, and on the 26th of January, 1880, was ordained to the priesthood by Rt. Rev. Joseph Dwenger, of the diocese of Fort Wayne. His first parochial charge was in Elkhart, Indiana, but as his health had become impaired he entered a request that he might be sent to some other climate, and this led to his identifying himself with South Dakota, to which state he came March 25, 1893. Here he was placed in pastoral charge of the Church of the Epiphany, in Hanson county, twelve miles north of Spencer, and here he accomplished a most excellent work, infusing both spiritual and temporal enthusiasm and finally brought about the erection of the attractive church edifice, which is one of sixteen which have been built through his efforts. With the work of the church here he has ever since been closely identified, while the town of which he is the founder is built up about the church edifice, which was practically its nucleus, the postoffice bearing the name Epiphany, while that of the town is Kroeger. While still actively engaged in his sacerdotal duties here he continued his medical studies and also made many original researches and experiments in the line. Rt. Rev. Martin Marty, bishop of the diocese, became aware of the attainments of Dr. Kroeger as a physician and surgeon and in 1894 suggested to him the propriety of bringing his professional knowledge into requisition in connection with his pastoral duties in view of the impoverished condition of many of his people, and he thus carried the double burden of responsibility, the result being that he finally became convinced that there lay before him the maximum of duty in relieving the physical suffering of humanity, for his reputation as a physician and surgeon soon far transcended local limitations and the suggestion of the church authorities was thus the direct cause which led to his retiring from the work of its priesthood to devote himself to the medical profession. He had given special study to the treatment and cure of diseases of neurotic order and those peculiar to the female, and in the great sanitarium which he has established particular care is given to the treatment of cases of these orders. His latest discovery for the treatment of epilepsy, St. Vitus dance, nervous debility, consumption, kidney disease, catarrh of the stomach and cancers, through which he has accomplished wonderful results, has brought him into recognition throughout the entire medical world. He has in his finely equipped laboratory three of the largest X-ray machines, of his improvement, in the state, and in 1903 his sanitarium had patients from every state in the Union and all over the world. In August, 1899, Dr. Kroeger tendered to the bishop his resignation as rector of the Church of the Epiphany, and this was accepted by that prelate in the following month, since which time Father Kroeger has given his entire attention to his professional work and the management of the various institutions which he has established in the town which bears his name. His allegiance to the church remains of the most devoted order and in his professional work he draws no denominational lines, giving the benefit of his services and great abilities to all who come to him for succor from pain and suffering. He is imbued with that deep humanitarian sympathy which transcends mere emotion to become an actuating motive, and thus his work as a physician is certain to be the more potent and far-reaching. The location of Epiphany is well chosen, being on the height of ground between the Big Sioux and James rivers, while from the town the land slopes gently in all directions, making the site an ideal one both in matter of beauty and sanitary conditions. The town is known as Kroeger and is situated ten miles from Canova, which is on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, and twelve miles from Spencer, on the Omaha division of the same road. Dr. Kroeger started the town without funds and has today an investment representing fully two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The population at the time of this writing is about one hundred and fifty people, and the town has besides its large and finely equipped sanitarium, two good hotels, a drug store, two general stores, hardware establishment, grocery, livery, lumber yard, etc., all being under the direct superintendence of Dr. Kroeger. The village is supplied with electric lights, water-works and artificial ice plant, while in April, 1903, the Doctor established a weekly newspaper, the Kroeger Echo, installing a fine modern plant for the purpose. In 1900 he established the Bank of Kroeger, of which he is president, cashier and sole owner, while in 1904 he also put into operation a plant for the manufacture of paper boxes, which he utilizes in connection with his medical preparations, this being the only factory of the sort in the state. He has made two trips abroad in recent years and took post-graduate courses in leading medical institutions on the continent. The Doctor is a man of gracious and genial personality, winning and retaining strong friendships and having the high regard of all who know him. He has great power of initiative, much administrative ability and high intellectual attainments, so that he is staunchly fortified for the great work which he has undertaken, even as he was for that which he accomplished in his sacred office as a priest of the great mother church. It is a pleasure to the publishers of this history to include in the same this brief tribute to his labors and his noble character as a man and citizen. He has a great many employes and if it were not for him the people would have starved as he has always been willing to assist them in need.

LOUISE M. MENTELE.—Dr. Kroeger has a very able assistant in the person of Miss Mentele, concerning whose life we are permitted to incorporate the following data. She was born in Kaltbrunn, Baden, Germany, in the famous Black Forest district, on the 13th of May, 1873, being a daughter of Anton and Antonia (Heitz-männ) Mentele. She received her early education in the excellent national schools of her native land and when she was nine years of age accompanied her parents on their immigration to America. The family first located in Halstead, Kansas, where she attended the English schools for some time, and in 1881 removed with her parents to Dubuque, Iowa, where she continued her educational work in the Academy of the Sacred Heart. In 1883 the family came to South Dakota and took up their abode near Howard, Miner county, and here Miss Mentele continued to attend school until she had attained the age of sixteen years. In August, 1894, she came to Epiphany, where she became housekeeper for Rev. William Kroeger, M. D., being housekeeper for the three pastors previous for a short time, while through his kindly care and guidance she has since been advanced to a position of marked responsibility. She served for a time as his bookkeeper and stenographer, and under his direction then took up the study of medicine and anatomy, devoting special attention to cancerous and exterior tumors, or any diseases of that nature, and she is now the main and the only partner in the institution, hospital and business, to which work she gives her special time and attention, being an expert in the operation and therapeutic utilization of the X-ray machine. She has the sympathy and capability which makes her a most grateful companion, doctor and nurse, and is held in affectionate regard by all who have come under her kindly ministrations and she has received her diploma with great honors from Rev. Dr. William Kroeger. She is a communicant of the Catholic church and deeply interested in its work in the local parish of Epiphany, South Dakota, and is always ready to give a helping hand and always fulfills the duties of the church.

BENJAMIN RIPPERDA is associated in an intimate way with Rev. William Kroeger, M. D., whose career is briefly narrated in a preceding sketch, and it is but consistent that he be accorded recognition in this connection. Mr.

Ripperda was born in Jamestown, Wisconsin, on the 13th of February, 1872, and is a son of Bernard and Caroline (Lager) Ripperda. He received his early educational training in the public schools of Lewisburg, that state, and then entered St. Joseph's College, at Dubuque, Iowa, where he was graduated as a member of the class of 1890, while three years later he was graduated in Baylies' Business College, in the same city, having there completed a thorough commercial course. After leaving this institution he was employed in a clerical capacity in a general merchandise establishment in Dubuque for one year, at the expiration of which he went to the city of St. Louis, Missouri, where he remained for fourteen months in the employ of the Plant Seed Company. The climate made such inroads on his health that he then returned to Wisconsin, locating in Cuba, where he had charge of the implement department of the hardware establishment of M. Hendricks & Company until the autumn of 1897, when he came to South Dakota. Here he was for one year engaged in teaching school for Father Kroeger, in the parish of the Epiphany, and then took charge of his office affairs, in the capacity of secretary to the Doctor. In 1898 he took up the study of medicine under the able preceptorship of the Doctor, and is now the consulting physician of the sanitarium and has charge of the office affairs. He is one of the graduated pupils of the sanitarium and has proved an able co-adjutor to Dr. Kroeger. He is a Democrat in politics and his religious faith is that of the Catholic church. He is a young man of much force and individuality and is held in high esteem in the community with which he has cast his lot.

JACOB BRITZINS is a native of Ohio and was born in the county of Tuscarawas. He spent an uneventful childhood at the place of his birth, and when nine years old removed with his parents to Minnesota, where he grew to maturity on a farm and received a practical education in the district schools of the locality in which the family lived. Reared a tiller of the soil and early becoming inured to the rugged duties of the farmer, he very naturally took to this kind of life, and ever since starting in the world for himself he has devoted his time and energies to the same, meeting with the success which industry and good management inevitably bring to their possessor. After living in Minnesota for a period of thirteen years, Mr. Britzins decided to seek more favorable opportunities further west; accordingly he came to South Dakota and took up a tree claim at Watertown, Codington county, and the year following entered the land on which that city now stands, also made some improvements at Big Stone, where his brother was then living. In the spring of 1880 he came to Brown county and located a pre-emption claim about two miles east of the site of Aberdeen, after which he hauled material from Watertown with which to erect a small, though comfortable habitation. Later he built a dwelling on the land now occupied by the flourishing city of Aberdeen which was the first improvement of any kind in that place, as he was the first actual settler. It was not long until settlers began to arrive. Until within the course of three or four years the country was pretty well taken up by an energetic class of people. It was in 1884 that Mr. Britzins entered the homestead on which he still lives, and his career from that time to the present demonstrates what a man of industry and thrift can accomplish when proceeding on the right plan, and which enabled him to take advantage of circumstances. By judicious management he added to his real estate at intervals until he is now the fortunate owner of four hundred and eighty acres of as fine land as the state affords, and on this farms quite extensively. Mr. Britzins cultivates the soil according to modern methods, uses the best implements and machinery obtainable and employs a number of hands to whom he pays liberal wages. His farm is well improved and in value compares favorably with the best cultivated land in the northeastern part of the state.

Mr. Britzins has been an ardent supporter of the Republican party ever since old enough to cast a ballot, and he has been a delegate to a number of township and county conventions. He is a firm believer in revealed religion, and with his wife belongs to the Evangelical church at Aberdeen. Mrs. Britzins was formerly Miss Mary Mertar, and they have two children.

REV. W. A. CAVE is a native of the Buckeye state, having been born in Circleville, Ohio. He was reared to manhood in Circleville, where he received his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools, being graduated in the high school. He was soon afterward matriculated as a student in Wooster University at Wooster, Ohio, having in the meanwhile determined to prepare himself for the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal church. After leaving college he devoted one and one-half years to preaching, though he had not yet been formally ordained, and thereafter he was for two years engaged in designing furniture and other products in wood. He entered a theological seminary, where he continued his technical studies, after which he was in turn a student in the University of London, England, and that at Berlin, Germany. After leaving school he passed fourteen months in traveling through Europe, Palestine and Egypt. At the expiration of this period he returned to Ohio, where he was ordained to the ministry. He was assigned to the pastorate of the church at Albany, that state, where he remained until he came to South Dakota, and was admitted to the conference of this state, being placed in charge of the church at Springfield, where he continued to do effective service until he was appointed to the charge at Howard, but three months later he was given the pastoral charge of the church in Brookings, having since continued here. His work has been successful in both a spiritual and temporal way in each field of labor, and the church in Brookings has attained signal vitality through his earnest and devoted endeavors. He is a forceful and eloquent speaker and his every utterance bears the impress of conviction and sincerity, so that he maintains a strong hold upon the attention of those whom he addresses. Mr. Cave speaks both the French and German languages in addition to his native tongue, and is a consistent and appreciative student of the best religious and secular literature, while he has gained a high reputation upon the lecture platform. He has one of the best private libraries in the state, and is fully appreciative of the value of his friends, the books. Mr. Cave was married to Miss Della A. Wise, of Nelsonville, Ohio, and they have three children.

J. L. INGALLS, one of the large land owners and successful farmers and stock raisers of Minnehaha county, is a native of New York, born on a farm in Allegany county. When he was a mere child his parents emigrated to Kane county, Illinois, where he remained until about seventeen years old. Later he removed with his parents to Howard county, Iowa, and after spending about nine years there changed his abode to the county of Butler, in the same state, where he continued to make his home until his removal to South Dakota. Meanwhile he enjoyed such educational advantages as the schools of the different places in which he lived afforded, and having been reared to agricultural pursuits he selected that honorable calling for his life work, and ever since young manhood has prosecuted the same with varied success, his career since coming to South Dakota fully meeting the high expectations he may have previously entertained.

Mr. Ingalls made a judicious selection in the matter of locating a home, choosing for the same a beautiful and highly fertile tract of land in Mapleton township, which is one of the most productive agricultural districts in the county of Minnehaha. By a series of improvements, as well as by systematic tillage, he has made his place one of the finest and most valuable farms in the county. Only a portion of the farm is under cultivation, the rest being devoted to live stock, for which the land appears peculiarly adapted. Mr. Ingalls pays considerable attention to the latter branch of farming, raising large numbers of fine cattle and excellent breeds of sheep and other domestic animals of high grade,

Mr. Ingalls was married in Elgin, Illinois, to Miss Elizabeth Nichols, a native of Essex county, New York, and they become the parents of thirteen children.

O. J. COONS, one of the leading citizens of Bowdle, South Dakota, and cashier of the Bank of Bowdle, was born in Iowa county, Iowa. He was reared from the age of nine to twenty-two years in Missouri, where he attended the public schools. At the age of twenty-two years he began traveling as a salesman, continuing four years. He next clerked in a clothing store at Sac City, Iowa, for about eleven years, and then engaged in the real-estate and abstract business at that place for eleven years. He came to Bowdle in 1899, and bought out the Bowdle Bank, becoming cashier of the same, in which position he has since continued. He and his partner are also interested in a large cattle ranch in Edmunds county, where they have a ranch of nine sections of land.

Mr. Coons married Miss M. Jennie Traner, who was born in Grant county, Wisconsin. Mr. Coons is a member of the Masonic fraternity and of the Knights of Pythias.

JOSEPH NIKODIN was born in Bohemia, March 12, 1833, and was educated in his native country, but left school at the age of twelve years in order to learn the weaver's trade, serving an apprenticeship of three years. He afterward began learning the trade of house building, which he followed for three years and when a young man of twenty years he joined the army of his native country, spending eight years in military service. On returning to civil life Mr. Nikodin was married to Miss Annie Holly, also a native of Bohemia, and of this union two children were born in Bohemia, and two in the United States. It was in 1869 that Mr. Nikodin sailed for America, and with his family went to Iowa, where he lived for about six months. Not being particularly pleased with that state he then removed to South Dakota and took advantage of the opportunity which the government offered for the securing of farms. He entered one hundred and sixty acres near Utica, Yankton county, and he still lives upon the old homestead, which became his place of residence in 1870. He also purchased an additional tract, but since that time he has given part of the tract to his sons.

ALONZO E. CLOUGH, M. D., was born in St. Lawrence county, New York, and received his rudimentary educational discipline in the public schools of his native state. After the family removal to the west, he continued his studies in the common schools and at Cresco Academy, while later he was matriculated in the Upper Iowa University, at Fayette. Subsequently he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Keokuk, Iowa, where he completed his technical course, being graduated and receiving his coveted degree of Doctor of Medicine. Later he took a special course in the New York Polyclinic, and he has also taken several special post-graduate courses in the leading medical schools of the city of Chicago.

Shortly after receiving his degree Dr. Clough came to South Dakota and located in Madison, Lake county, where he has ever since maintained his home and where he has built up a large and representative practice, and he is to be noted as one of the pioneer physicians of the state. The Doctor is a staunch Republican in his political proclivities, and has been one of the leaders in the party councils in the state, having had the distinction of serving as chairman of the state central committee in 1892-3, though he has never sought official preferment of a personal nature. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and also with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He and his family are communicants of the Protestant Episcopal church.

Dr. Clough was united in marriage to Miss Mary P. Matheny, who was born and reared in Wauseon, Ohio, and of this union have been born three children.

J. E. McLANE is a native of Wabasha county, Minnesota, and passed his boyhood days on the pioneer homestead. Owing to the exigencies and conditions of time and place his educational advantages were somewhat limited in his youth. He was about nineteen years of age at the time of his parents' removal to South Dakota, but instead of remaining with them on the new farm in Bon Homme county he came to Fort Pierre, Stanley county, where he entered the employ of wood and beef contractors engaged in supplying the military post. In 1880 he located on a ranch in Sully county, where he was engaged in the raising of stock until 1892, when he again came to Stanley county and located at Fort Bennett, near the mouth of the Cheyenne river and about forty miles distant from Fort Pierre, where he now has a well-improved ranch, and where he is successfully engaged in the raising of cattle and other stock upon a large scale.

J. C. McCARTHY is a native of the city of Boston, Massachusetts, both of his parents dying before the subject had attained the age of seven years. The latter was thereafter cared for by his brother until he was fourteen years of age, having in the meanwhile availed himself of the advantages afforded by the public schools of Cambridge, Massachusetts. At the early age noted he became dependent upon his own resources, and personally earned the money with which to defray the expenses of his maintenance and education. He followed various vocations in the east for a number of years and then came to South Dakota, where he has since maintained his home. In 1901, convinced of the great possibilities in store in connection with the development of the mining industry in the state and recognizing the attractions of the Black Hills' wonderful mineral zone, he identified himself with the mining interests of this section, associating himself with the promoters of the Hidden Fortune and Columbus Consolidated Gold Mining Companies, of Lead, Lawrence county, and forthwith entered the field in placing the stock of the two concerns, being successful in disposing of large blocks of the same to leading capitalists of the east and thus insuring the steady progress of the work of developing the valuable properties controlled. Mr. McCarthy is a typical "hustler," is genial and of pleasing address, and has won the staunchest of friends in all circles of society. In politics he is an ardent Republican and his religious faith is that of the Protestant Episcopal church, of which he is a communicant, while fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He makes his home and headquarters in Lead.

D. C. THOMAS is a native of Waukesha, Wisconsin, where he received such educational advantages as were afforded in the common schools, and he was reared to the sturdy discipline of the farm. His quickened ambition and natural predilection prompted him to spare no effort in securing a broader education, and by teaching and doing such other work as came to hand he succeeded in defraying the expenses of his collegiate course. He was matriculated in the law department of the celebrated University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, where he was graduated. He initiated the practice of his profession in Buena Vista county, Iowa, in which state he continued in practice until 1879, when he came to what was then the territory of Dakota and located in Watertown, as one of the first representatives of his profession in the town and county. Here he became associated in practice with his brother, W. R. Thomas, and they succeeded in building up a large and lucrative practice and in gaining marked precedence at the bar of the territory and the state.

The subject has been most intimately identified with the growth and development of Watertown. He has been a member of the directorate of the City National Bank from the time of its organization, served for several years as president of the board of education, was incumbent of the office of mayor of the city, and has been shown other gratifying and unmistakable evidences of popular confidence and regard. He is at the present time president of the state board of charities and corrections, and the executive duties of this important office demand a very considerable portion of his time and attention. He has been an ardent and uncompromising advocate of the principles of the Republican party from the time of attaining his majority, and has been one of its most prominent leaders in this state. He effected the organization of the party in Codrington county, and was chairman of its first central committee, while upon him devolved the duty of conveying to the governor the petition for the organization of the county. In 1880 he made a trip to Washington, where he prevailed upon the authorities to change the location of the United States land office from Springfield to Watertown. Mr. Thomas is an appreciative member of the time-honored order of Freemasons. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church of Watertown, of which he has been a trustee from the time of its organization.

Mr. Thomas was married to Miss Mary Logan, who was born in Pennsylvania, and they have one child.

T. J. THOMPSON was born and reared in Winterport, Maine, where he received his educational training in the common school. As a youth he sailed before the mast for one year, and then served an apprenticeship at the art of telegraphing, becoming an expert operator. Finally he came to the west and located in Iowa, where he was engaged as operator and station agent at various points for a number of years. He then moved to Hastings, Nebraska, in which city he established himself in the hardware business, there continuing to be successfully identified with this line of enterprise for about fifteen years, at the expiration of which he came to South Dakota, and took up his residence in the thriving and progressive little town of Fairfax, where he engaged in the same line of business, having the only hardware establishment in the town, and having built up a large and prosperous business. He still retains the ownership of a valuable tract of land in Sheridan county, Nebraska.

For one year the subject also conducted a branch hardware store in Bonesteel, but he now centers his interests in Fairfax. In politics he is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and fraternally he is identified with the Masonic fraternity.

Mr. Thompson was married to Miss Mary Abbott, who was born and reared in the same town as was himself, and they have three children.

He passed his youthful days amid the scenes and labors of the homestead farm, while his educational training was received in the public schools of Illinois, Missouri and Kansas, in each of which states his parents resided during his youthful years. He continued to be identified with farming for some time as a young man, but it should be noted that he also attained marked popularity and success as a teacher in the common schools, having devoted eighteen years to this line of work, principally in Arkansas, and for a time in Nebraska and South Dakota. In 1891 Mr. Turney came to Gregory county and became one of the first settlers in Fairfax. He also took up government land and is now the owner of six hundred acres in this county, about two hundred and twenty-five acres of the same being under effective cultivation, while he also gives special attention to the raising of cattle, swine and horses, ever aiming to bring his stock up to the highest standard. Mr. Turney is thoroughly progressive and public-spirited and has taken an active part in local affairs. He is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and served for four years as county treasurer, maintaining his residence in Fairfax, the county seat, where he is the owner of valuable property. He has served as a member of the official board of the school district and has exerted his influence at all times for the advancement of the best interests of the county. He and his wife are members of the Congregational church, and fraternally he is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

Mr. Turney wedded Miss Mary Turner, daughter of John and Margaret Turner, and of this union have been born four children.

JOHN M. PORTER, who is now living practically retired in the village of Fairfax, was born in Pickaway county, Ohio. He was reared on the old pioneer homestead, and such were the exigencies of time and place that his early educational advantages were extremely meager. He continued to be identified with the agricultural industry in Ohio for many years, having assisted in the clearing of much land and in the development of the resources of the old Buckeye commonwealth. In 1882 he disposed of his interests in his native state and removed to Nebraska, where he took up government land, improving the property and there engaging in general farming and stock-growing until 1894, when he sold out and came to Gregory county, South Dakota, where he took up a homestead claim. This property has been placed under an excellent state of cultivation and equipped with good improvements. Mr. Porter there continued to be actively engaged in farming and stock raising until the spring of 1901, when he came to Fairfax, where he has since lived in the home of his son. The subject is a stalwart Republican but has never sought or held public office, and he has long been a zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

After completing the curriculum of the common schools Dr. Milburn continued his studies in a collegiate institute, and later was a student in the Upper Canada College. He then was matriculated in the well-known McGill Medical College, in the city of Montreal, in which well-equipped institution he completed his technical course and was graduated, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Shortly after his graduation the Doctor located in the city of Grand Rapids, Michigan, where he was engaged in the practice of his profession until he came to Wessington, South Dakota, where he has since remained, and where he has built up an excellent practice and where he enjoys marked popularity in professional, business and social circles. In politics the Doctor gives his allegiance to the Republican party.

JAMES CONZETT is a native son of the old Keystone state, having been born at New Castle, Pennsylvania. He was afforded the advantage of attendance at the public schools until 1864, when his father took him to Switzerland and placed him in a college there. Becoming dissatisfied, however, he almost immediately quit the institution and returned to America, reaching here very soon after the return of his father. He spent the subsequent winter in school at New Castle, and then decided to take a trip through the west. He went to Ohio, but, his father dying, he returned to New Castle the same year and took charge of his father's business. Subsequently he went to Princeton, Indiana, where he remained a year and then went to St. Louis, where he remained another year. From there he went to Kansas City, Missouri, where he remained about a year and a half, going thence to Utah, where he was engaged in mining, in connection with which he was also in the produce business. In 1876 he decided to locate in the Black Hills, going first to Cheyenne, and from there going up the trail with teams, arriving in Deadwood about the middle of September. Shortly afterward he went to Galena and built one of the first log cabins in that locality. He was actively engaged in mining until 1897, when he located and developed the Emma group of claims, which subsequently became the property of the Galena Mining and Smelting Company. He also became owner of the original Alexander property, later adding to it by location. He subsequently disposed of all his holdings to the Galena Mining and Smelting Company and removed to Deadwood. He retained a property on Ruby gulch and organized a company known as the Ruby Gold Mining and Milling Company, and the property is now being developed and there is in sight a large body of ore, sufficiently rich to justify the expenditure of large sums in the erection of the mill.

Mr. Conzett is a member of the Pioneer Society of the Black Hills and has been honored by being four times elected to the office of president of the society. He is also a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and a member of the Business Men's Club and the Olympic Club.

Mr. Conzett was married to Miss Netta Maxam. The subject has for many years taken a keen interest in the trend of public events, and during the candidacy of William Jennings Bryan for the presidency Mr. Conzett participated actively in the campaign and delivered many effective speeches in favor of Mr. Bryan and the principles for which he stood.

HENRY O. ORSTAD, one of the successful farmers of Lincoln county, is a native of Norway. His parents emigrated to the United States in 1866, locating in Iowa, whence they came through to what is now South Dakota in 1869, making the trip with ox-teams. The subject was nine years of age at the time and his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the pioneer schools. When he was a lad of fifteen his father met with an accident which permanently crippled him, and Henry thereupon took charge of the farm under the direction of his father and has ever since lived on the same, now having three hundred and twenty acres, well-improved and under effective cultivation, while he also raises an excellent grade of live stock, including cattle and swine. His comfortable and attractive residence was erected in 1883 and remodeled in 1901, while his barn affords accommodation for one hundred tons of hay and other produce. His political support is given to the Populist party, and he has held various township offices, while he has also taken a deep interest in educational affairs. He and his wife are members of the Lutheran church.

HENRY HOATTUM, one of the representative farmers of Lincoln county, was born in Clinton township, this county, and received the best educational advantages afforded in this section. He has always been associated with his father in farming and stock raising, and is now the owner of three hundred and forty acres while his brother Edward has two hundred and sixty acres, the two being associated in their operations. Thence he accompanied his parents to Iowa in 1852, and in 1868 he came with the family to what is now the state of South Dakota, making the trip with ox-teams. He took up a homestead claim in Lincoln county, while the original dwelling was a sod house of the most primitive type. The subject has improved his place, adding to its area until he now has a fine farm of three hundred acres.

The subject was united in marriage to Miss Julia Anderson, of Iowa, and their wedding tour was the trip to South Dakota in a "prairie schooner." To them were born eight children. Mr. and Mrs. Arneson are members of the Lutheran church, and in politics the subject maintains an independent attitude. He has served as a member of the board of county commissioners and has also held the various township offices, while he is well known and greatly esteemed in the community.

J. A. HAWKINS, one of the interested principals in the Bank of Pierpont, Day county, is a native of the state of Minnesota, having been born in the village of Frankfort, Mower county. He received his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools of his native town, and thereafter completed a course of study in the Minnesota State High School, at Spring Valley. In 1892 he came west with a carload of horses, intending to return to Minnesota. He visited Montana, Idaho and North and South Dakota, and became impressed with the attractions offered to a young man in the new commonwealth last mentioned, and finally decided to cast in his lot with its people. He first located in Waubay, Day county, where he maintained his home for five years, being engaged in various pursuits, including teaching, surveying and the operation of a meat market. He then removed to Pierpont, where he was employed as a teacher in the village schools for a short interval, at the expiration of which he established himself in the grain business, becoming associated with the late C. C. Dart, under the firm name of Dart & Hawkins. They built up a prosperous and important enterprise in the line and continued operations until the death of Mr. Dart, when it devolved upon the surviving partner to settle up the business, and he became associated with Mrs. W. M. Hart, in establishing the Bank of Pierpont, in the ownership of which institution they have since continued, the bank now controlling an excellent business and being one of the solid financial concerns of this section of the state.

In politics the subject gives an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party, and served for many years as treasurer of the village and also as treasurer of the school district. He and his wife are active and valued members of the Baptist church, and fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, while he is also affiliated with the Order of the Eastern Star, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and its auxiliary, the Daughters of Rebekah; the Ancient Order of United Workmen and its Degree of Honor; the Modern Woodmen of America, the Royal Neighbors and the Knights of the Macca-bees.

JAMES GOODWIN, one of the prominent farmers and stock growers of Charles Mix county, was born in Portsmouth, England, on the 16th of March, 1838. He received his preliminary education in his native land and after his father's death he and his sister accompanied their widowed mother on her emigration to the United States. They remained for a short time in the state of Ohio and then removed to Wisconsin, in each of which states Mr. Goodwin was able to attend school for a time, thus supplementing the training which he had previously secured in England.

Mr. Goodwin was reared to maturity in Grant county, Wisconsin, where he devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits until the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion, when he gave prompt evidence of his loyalty to the land of his adoption by tendering his services in defense of the Union. After a gallant and meritorious service of over three years he received his honorable discharge, but he thereafter continued in the service until the close of the war, having re-enlisted, his record having been that of a loyal and valiant son of the republic.

After the close of the war Mr. Goodwin returned to his farm in Wisconsin, later disposing of the property and removing to Minnesota, where he was engaged in farming about six years, when he returned to Wisconsin, where he passed the ensuing two years. He then removed to Kansas, where he was engaged in the raising of and dealing in cattle, being later similarly engaged in Nebraska. In 1883 he came to Charles Mix county, South Dakota, where he took up a homestead claim near the Missouri river. Since that time he has here added materially to his landed estate, and the family now own jointly five hundred and sixty acres of as fine land as is to be found in the entire state, the same being located in the rich bottoms of the Missouri valley and practically all being available for cultivation, though the greater portion is utilized for grazing purposes, while the subject has personally under cultivation one hundred and sixty-five acres, while in addition to his own holdings he also rents one hundred and sixty acres. He raises cattle and has also given attention to the breeding of hogs, being one of the extensive breeders of swine in this section, while in all his operations he is progressive, bringing to bear a marked executive ability and mature judgment. Fraternally he affiliates with the Grand Army of the Republic, at Geddes.

Mr. Goodwin was married to Miss Martha Potts, of Grant county, Wisconsin, and they became the parents of seven children.

When he was twenty years of age he crossed the plains to Los Angeles, California, where he passed the summer. In the fall of that year he returned east as far as Abilene, Kansas, and was occupied in the stock industry there. The next year was passed at his Iowa home, and he then came back to Kansas and renewed his enterprise in the cattle business. Later he sold his interests in Kansas and went to Iowa again for the winter, after which he came to the Black Hills, bringing a large herd of cattle with him which he placed on the Cheyenne river. These were the first cattle placed there, the whole country at the time of his arrival being new and undeveloped. Starting on a small scale, he gradually enlarged his herds until he became one of the largest stockmen in this section. Of late years he has become possessed of extensive tracts on the Cheyenne and elsewhere, and has also considerable pasture land leased. From the time of his arrival in the Hills he has made his home at Rapid City, and he now has there an elegant modern residence. Of the fraternal orders he has united with but one, the Masonic order, which he joined soon after reaching the age of twenty-one. He was married in Dubuque county, Iowa, to Miss Laura Jewett, a native of that state, and they have one child.

EDWARD LADICK, one of the successful farmers and stock raisers of Charles Mix county, was born in the city of Rochester, New York, in 1852, and when he was four years of age his parents removed to Michigan, and in that state they passed the remainder of their lives. The subject attended the public schools of Michigan, while he learned the trade of blacksmith under the direction of his father, but was principally engaged in farm work until he had attained his legal majority. At the age of twenty-two years he went to Franklin, Pennsylvania, where he served an apprenticeship at the trade of boiler making, to which he devoted his attention for five years. In 1874 he was married to a Miss Campbell, who was born and reared in Pennsylvania, and they became the parents of one child. Mrs. LaDick was summoned into eternal rest and Mr. LaDick contracted a second marriage, being then united to Miss Lizzie Volland, of Yankton county, this state, and of this marriage were born three children.

Mr. LaDick came to South Dakota in 1884 and entered claim to a homestead in Charles Mix county, near the Missouri river, and here he has ever since maintained his home, having made excellent improvements on his farm, which is principally devoted to the raising of live stock, though a portion of the tract is maintained under a high state of cultivation, the land being particularly fertile. In politics Mr. LaDick is a stalwart advocate of the principles and politics of the Republican party, and his religious faith is that of the Catholic church, of which both he and his wife are communicants.

VEUCEL MACH was born in Bohemia on the 8th of June, 1850, and was only three years of age when brought by his parents to the United States and upon the home farm in Wisconsin he spent his youth, pursuing his education in the public schools of that locality. At the age of twenty-one years he came to Dakota, settling in Yankton county, where he secured a homestead claim and in order to have a home here he was married to Miss Annie Stepanck, whose birth occurred in Jackson county, Iowa. The home of Mr. and Mrs. Mach has been blessed with four children.

Mr. Mach is now the owner of four hundred and eighty acres of valuable land near Utica. He became one of the first settlers in this county, locating here thirty-two years ago when this section of the country was almost an unbroken wilderness. Taking advantage of the opportunities afforded here for the successful conduct of agricultural pursuits Mr. Mach has become prosperous. In all matters pertaining to the general good he has been active and helpful and his co-operation for public improvement has been of marked benefit to his locality. He was a member of the school board for several years, having been elected for three consecutive terms. He gave his political support at an early day to the Democracy, but in more recent years has affiliated with the Republican party and is a member of the Roman Catholic church.

T. W. TAUBMAN, of Plankinton, Aurora county, is a native of the state of Iowa, having been born in Cedar Falls, on the 18th of April, 1865. He received his early educational discipline in the public schools of his native town, where he later continued his studies in the State Normal School. After leaving school at the age of eighteen years, he came to Plankinton, Aurora county, South Dakota, where he secured employment in a lumber yard, remaining thus engaged until 1885, in the autumn of which year he became an employe in the office of the Aurora County Standard, where he received his training in newspaper work. In the fall of 1888 he established the Plankinton Herald, which he has since successfully conducted. It has the largest circulation of all papers in the county, and its influence is indicated in this fact. The office of the Herald is well equipped, including a good job department. Mr. Taubman is a staunch supporter of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, and during the second administration of President Cleveland he served four years as postmaster at Plankinton. He was also a member of the village council for a period of four years. He was one of the eight delegates of the Democratic party who represented South Dakota in the national Democratic convention in Kansas City, 1896, and was a member of the committee which notified Mr. Bryan of his nomination. Fraternally he is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Knights of the Macabees.

Mr. Taubman was united in marriage to Miss Muriel G. Samuels, of Mount Vernon, this state, and of this union was born one child, who died in infancy.

CHARLES T. OLDHAM, one of the honored pioneers of Charles Mix county, was born in Lawrence county, Illinois, on the 22d of December, 1849, and was about five years of age at the time of his parents' removal to Iowa, and as the state was at the time but slightly settled his educational advantages in his youth were limited. There he learned the trade of cabinet-making, to which he devoted his attention in that locality until 1868, when he made a tour through Kansas and Missouri, working at his trade in various places until he came to what is now Charles Mix county, South Dakota, where he secured land, under homestead, pre-emption and timber culture entries. Subsequently he purchased an entire section of land in the county. He owns at the present time about twelve hundred acres of rich bottom land on the Missouri river, and has the greater portion of his land under cultivation, and is also one of the successful cattle raisers of this section, having been energetic and progressive and having been successful in both departments of his farming enterprise. In politics Mr. Oldham was formerly a Democrat, but he is now a staunch advocate of the socialistic principles of the high type represented in the modern movement. In 1878 he was elected sheriff of the county, but failed to qualify, the population of the county being so small that all officers followed the same course, the object being to keep down the rate of taxation.

Mr. Oldham was united in marriage to Miss Archambean, who died, leaving three children. Mr. Oldham subsequently married Mrs. Victoria Montaug, widow of Adolphus Montaug.

JAMES J. MILLER, of Yankton county, was born in Schleswig, which was formerly under the control of Denmark but since the war of 1864 the property on which the subject was born has come into possession of Germany. His natal day was the 1st of October, 1832, and his education was acquired in the Danish schools, which he attended until sixteen years of age. On leaving school he began working upon a farm for his uncle, J. L. Jacobson, in whose employ he remained for several years. When twenty-two years of age he was called upon to serve in the army of his country and remained in its service for eighteen months.

Mr. Miller was united in marriage to Miss Ann Maria Nickelson, the wedding taking place in their native land, and unto them three children were born. The mother of these children passed away in her native land and Mr. Miller was again married, his second union being with Maria Kestma. Eight children have been born of this union.

an indelible impression upon their minds as they had to travel from Sioux City on a sleigh through one of the worst snowstorms witnessed in the west in many years. Mr. Miller secured a homestead in Yankton county and still resides thereon. He has made all of the improvements upon his property and has developed it into one of the most attractive farms in Yankton county. He served as school director for several years and was also road supervisor. In politics he has ever been a stanch Republican and he and his family are members of the Lutheran church.

FRANK LVATOS, now deceased, was born in Bohemia and there he was educated. He afterward followed farming in his native country and he was there married to Miss Annie Steskal, also a native of that land. When about thirty years of age he bade adieu to friends and native country and with his little family crossed the ocean to the United States. He did not tarry long, however, in the east, but made his way at once into the interior of the country and on reaching Yankton county, South Dakota, he secured land, which he entered from the government in accordance with the homestead act. This did not, however, represent his total possessions for as the years passed and his financial resources increased he added to his property until he became the owner of a valuable tract of four hundred and eighty acres, which he possessed at the time of his demise.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Lvatos were born ten children. Mr. Lvatos passed away in 1885, respected by all who knew him and leaving to his family the priceless heritage of an untarnished name, for he was highly esteemed as an upright man and as a devoted and loyal member of the Catholic church. His widow still resides upon the old homestead.

Joseph Lvatos was born in Yankton county and was educated in the district schools, wherein he pursued his studies until he reached the age of sixteen years. He then began to work on his father's farm, where he was employed continuously until twenty-three years of age. He married Miss Clara Kudrna, and the marriage of the young couple was blessed with three children. Joseph Lvatos now engages in the cultivation of land near Lakeport.

PATRICK CUNNINGHAM is a native of Canada, his birth having occurred in the province of Ontario, and to the public school system of his native country he is indebted for the educational privileges he enjoyed. He left school at an early age and began to earn his own living by working in the lumber woods. He soon realized that there is no royal road to wealth and that no excellence can be accomplished without labor, so he set himself resolutely to the task of building up his fortune through energy and unfaltering perseverance. In the fall of 1869 he came to South Dakota with his brother William and together they cut down trees which they floated down the river to Yankton, where they were converted in the sawmill into marketable lumber. Mr. Cunningham also assisted in making governmental surveys. The state was then upon the wild western frontier and pioneer conditions existed on every hand. With the progress that has since been made he has been actively identified, taking a deep and helpful interest in everything pertaining to the public good and to the general improvement of his adopted state.

Mr. Cunningham was united in marriage to Miss Slowey, and they became the parents of two children. Mr. Cunningham owns two hundred and eighty acres of excellent land. He is now extensively engaged in raising and shipping stock, which he sends to the Chicago markets, there finding a ready sale. In his political views he is a stalwart Democrat and he and his family are devoted communicants of the Roman Catholic church.

FRANK KOZAK was born in Bohemia, and there his boyhood and youth were passed and his education was also there acquired. He continued to reside in the old world until thirty-two years of age, when he crossed the Atlantic to America and made his way to Decatur. Here he secured land and has since devoted his energies to its cultivation and improvement, making it a valuable farm. He has placed excellent buildings upon his land and has carried on stock raising on an extensive scale. He is an excellent judge of stock and on the market has received very gratifying prices for the stock which has been shipped from his farm.

Ere leaving his native land Mr. Kozak was united in marriage to Miss Josie Jinbor and unto them have been born three children. Mr. Kozak and his family are members of the Roman Catholic church.

SAMUEL KAUCHER was born in Germantown, Ohio, and was reared under the parental roof and in the public schools of Ohio he acquired his education. On putting aside his textbooks he started out in life on his own account, and, having learned the business of constructing mills under the direction of his father, he began work for himself as a builder of flour mills and distilleries. He followed that pursuit in Ohio and Indiana until he removed to Colorado, where he again took contracts in the same line, remaining in that state several years. He next located at Council Bluffs, Iowa, where he resided for two years and there he engaged in mill building. Subsequently he came to South Dakota, where he resumed his labors in the same line, following that pursuit continuously until about six years ago. A number of years before, however, he had purchased land pleasantly located two and a half miles from Yankton. Of this he sold part to a cement company, having accidentally discovered that this land contained splendid clay beds, the clay being well adapted for the manufacture of cement. On ceasing his building operations Mr. Kaucher located upon his farm. Fifteen or sixteen years ago he began planting cherry, apple and plum trees and he now has forty acres of his land in orchards. In addition to the fruits mentioned he also raises peaches. He was one of the first men to try the experiment of raising fruit in Dakota. Success has attended his efforts and he has realized handsome profits from the fruit trees in his orchards. All the fruit which he produces is of splendid quality, size and flavor and he is very hopeful for South Dakota's future as a fruit-producing state. His own work has demonstrated the possibilities in this direction and he certainly deserves recognition from the public for what he has accomplished.

Mr. Kaucher was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Rohrer, a member of the Lutheran church, in which faith she was reared.

THOMAS GARVEY, of Yankton county, South Dakota, was born in Ottawa, Canada, and came with his family to South Dakota in 1875 and has since been identified with the agricultural interests of Yankton county. He is now the owner of a good farm, on which he has lived for a number of years. He had the misfortune once to be burned out, but has since erected a modern substantial residence and good barn and other outbuildings. His crops were seriously affected by the grasshoppers at one time and the Missouri river floods ruined his crops at another time, but he has generally prospered and is now quite well-to-do.

Mr. Garvey led to the marriage altar Miss Mary Dinneen and they have seven children. The family are communicants of the Catholic church and Mr. Garvey is also a member of the Modern Woodmen camp at Gayville. He uses his right of franchise in support of the Democratic party and for twelve years he has been an efficient member of the school board.

JANS P. PETERSON, one of the highly honored citizens of Vermillion, is a native of Denmark, and he secured his early education in the excellent schools of his fatherland. He finally left the parental home and set forth to seek his fortunes in America, relying upon his own labors to make his way in the world. He located in Wisconsin, where he was engaged in farm work, after which he went to Illinois, where he showed his loyalty to the land of his adoption by tendering his services in defense of the Union. He continued in active service until victory had crowned the Union arms, having made a record as a valiant and faithful soldier.

After the close of his military service Mr. Peterson returned to Wisconsin, while the next year he went into Illinois, where he was employed about a year, at the expiration of which he located in Muskegon, Michigan, where he found employment in lumber yards for the ensuing two years. He then went to Illinois, where his marriage was solemnized, and shortly afterward he removed with his bride to Iowa, where he remained six months. In the spring of 1869 he came to what is now Clay county, South Dakota, making the trip with team and wagon, and thus transporting his small stock of household goods as well as his family, and upon his arrival in the county his cash capital was represented in the sum of one dollar and twenty-five cents. He took up government land and the original residence was a dugout, which he constructed as soon as possible after his arrival, and he then began the work of bringing the wild land under cultivation. He was energetic, persevering and endowed with good judgment, so that prosperity finally smiled upon him in no uncertain way. He has gained a competence and still owns his original farm, which is now improved with high-grade buildings and under a high state of cultivation, the place being managed by his son, who rents the same. A few years ago Mr. Peterson purchased a choice lot in Vermillion, and upon the same erected an attractive and commodious modern residence, and here he and his devoted wife have since lived retired. They are zealous and valued members of the Congregational church and have long taken an active part in religious work. In politics Mr. Peterson votes according to the dictates of his judgment, not being constrained by partisan dictates. He served as a member of the territorial legislature in 1872-3, and has held the entire number of township offices, having been clerk of the township for many years, while he served for several years as justice of the peace, and as a member of the school board of his township. At the present time he is a valued and loyal member of the board of aldermen of his home city. He retains a lively interest in his old comrades of the Civil war by his affiliation with the Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. Peterson was married to Miss Christine Hanson, and they became the parents of eight children.

EDWIN M. RADWAY, who is now living retired in Springfield, Bon Homme county, is a native of the old Empire state, born in Cortland county, New York. He received his educational training in the schools of his native state, and was twenty years of age at the time of his parents' removal to Wisconsin, where he assisted in the development of the pioneer farm, remaining at the parental home until he had attained the age of thirty years, though in the meanwhile he had been absent two years or more, since in 1852 he joined the throng of argonauts making their way to the gold fields of California. He remained in the Golden state about two years, and then returned to his home in Wisconsin, making the trip by way of the Nicaragua route. In 1864 he again went to California, and after remaining a short time he returned by way of the isthmus of Panama. After his second return to Wisconsin Mr. Radway was engaged in farming, but he disposed of his interests there and came to South Dakota and took up government land in Bon Homme county, where he has thus made his home for thirty years. There were but few settlers in the county at the time and the land was practically all in its primitive condition. He began the development of his claim, and to his original claim Mr. Radway added from time to time until he had accumulated three hundred and twenty acres, while he made the best of improvements on the place, including the erection of a fine residence, good barns, etc., while he set out an orchard and planted many trees, so that the place is now one of the best in the county. Mr. Radway rented the farm and removed to Springfield, in order to afford his children better educational advantages, and in 1901

he disposed of the home ranch and purchased a large and handsome residence in Springfield, where he is now living retired, also owning other town property. In politics he maintains an independent attitude, and has ever been a liberal and public-spirited citizen.

Mr. Radway was united in marriage to Miss Christine I. Fellows, and they have two children.

ROBERT B. FISK merits recognition in this history as one of the representative members of the bar of the state and as one of the honored and influential citizens of Gettysburg, Potter county, in which county he has maintained his residence since 1886.

Robert Brown Fisk is a native of the beautiful old Bluegrass state, having been born in Covington, Kentucky, on the 2d of March, 1852, and being a son of John F. and Elizabeth S. (Johnson) Fisk. His father was one of the influential citizens and prominent public men of Kentucky, having been a leading member of the bar of the state and having been lieutenant governor of Kentucky in 1862. He was loyal to the federal government during the great Civil war and was known during that climacteric period as the "war governor," while his was the distinction and honor of having introduced in the Kentucky legislature the resolution under which the state remained in the Union. He was born in Genesee county, New York, on the 14th of December, 1815, and his death occurred at Covington, Kentucky, on the 21st of February, 1902, in the fullness of years and well earned honors. Elizabeth S. (Johnson) Fisk, the mother of the subject, was born in the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, on the 1st of January, 1822, and died in Washington City, D. C., while on a visit to her daughter, Belle Fisk Andrews, wife of Byron Andrews, on April 18, 1904. It may be noted in this connection that the Fisk genealogy is traced back to Fisk, lord of the manor of Stradhaugh, Wales, while in America have been many distinguished representatives in the line, among the number having been James Fisk, the well-known financier and railroad man, usually designated as "Jim Fisk;" also Professor John Fiske, the well-known historian; Clinton B. Fisk and others, Honorable Stephen A. Douglass having been a representative of the line on the maternal side.

Robert B. Fisk passed his youth in his native city and had the advantages of a cultured and refined home and the fostering care of kind and indulgent parents. He early manifested a distinctive predilection for study and also a fondness for mechanics, in which latter connection it may be stated that while absent from school by reason of impaired health he devoted about a year to learning, as far as possible, the carpenter's trade, this action being taken without the knowledge of his parents, and he became eligible for the rank of journeyman, but never followed his trade as a vocation. His early educational discipline was secured in the public schools of his native city, where he completed the full high-school course and also, by special arrangement, the first three years of a Yale collegiate course. He was thus graduated in the Covington high school as a member of the class of 1870, and forthwith began the reading of law in the office of the firm of J. F. and C. H. Fisk, the principals in the same being his father and his elder brother. Thereafter he completed the full course in the law school of the Cincinnati College, in the city of Cincinnati, and in 1872 he was admitted to practice in all the courts of the state of Kentucky, when less than twenty years of age. It has been claimed by other members of the bar that he was the first minor ever thus admitted to full professional practice in Kentucky. He spared no pains to thoroughly fortify himself for the work of his profession, and in this connection devoted no little attention to the study of medicine and surgery, as necessary adjuncts to a proper legal education. He was engaged in the practice of his profession in Kentucky until the spring of 1884, in April of which year he made his advent in what is now the state of South Dakota, taking up his residence in Pierre on the 1st of May, and there remaining until 1886, when he removed to Potter county and located on a homestead near Gettysburg, residing on the place until 1890, since which time he has made his home in the attractive capital city of the county, while he has been from the start actively and prominently engaged in the practice of his profession in this county. He has been concerned in much important litigation, and amongst the most notable cases in which he has appeared as counsel and advocate may be mentioned the Forest City ferry case, the mandamus cases of Potter and Sully counties, the Patterson bastardy case and the Glover murder case. He is recognized as an able trial lawyer and is a close student, giving careful preparation to all causes and never failing to show the utmost loyalty to the interests of his clients. Mr. Fisk has mining interests in Colorado, Idaho and Montana, is the owner of a half-interest in the town-site of Gettysburg, and has a well-improved and valuable farm and stock ranch of one thousand acres, near that town.

In politics the subject has ever been a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party and has shown a deep interest in the forwarding of the party cause. He was supervisor of the census of the territory, taken in 1885, under United States laws, for that portion of Dakota territory now comprising the state of South Dakota. This census of the territory is the only one ever taken by a state or territory that has been recognized by the federal government as correct, and for that reason paid for by the government. Hon. A. W. Edwards, of Fargo, North Dakota, was the supervisor for the northern half of the territory. This census proved a powerful leverage in securing the division of the territory and the admission of the states of North and South Dakota to the Union.

In 1894 Mr. Fisk was elected county judge of Potter county, serving on the bench for one term and declining a renomination. Fraternally he is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and is a member of the Christian church. It may be stated that in 1862 he enlisted as a drummer boy in the Union army, but was rejected because of his youth.

Just after attaining his majority, he became engaged to a schoolmate during his last years at school, Miss Julia C. Green. An estrangement took place between the two, however, and Miss Green was married to another. She became a widow with one child, a boy. On October 30, 1883, was solemnized the marriage of Judge Fisk to his schoolmate sweetheart, at Greenwood, the country place of her mother, near Logansport, Indiana. Mrs. Fisk is a great-granddaughter of Samuel Meredith, the first treasurer of the United States, who contributed one hundred and forty thousand dollars of his private fortune to the infant republic, that contribution being practically the nucleus of the fund in the national treasury. Mrs. Fisk was born at Dayton, Ohio, on June 16, 1854, and is a daughter of Richard and Margaret J. Green, the former having been a merchant by vocation, and, for several terms, a member of the Ohio legislature.

Upon the marriage of his mother to Judge Fisk, the boy, of his own choice, although then but eight years of age, took the name of Fisk, retaining his given names, Olin Meredith. The warmest cordiality and love have always prevailed between Judge Fisk and the boy, the relations between the two being fully those of father and son.

Upon the breaking out of hostilities between the United States and Spain, Olin M. Fisk enlisted in the First South Dakota Regiment, and was made first lieutenant of Company G. He served the full term of his enlistment, going to the Philippine islands, where, with his regiment, he served upon the firing line for one hundred and twenty-two consecutive days, a length of actual firing-line service said to have never been equaled in the annals of war. Judge Fisk is very proud of his son, and the two are now partners, under the name of Fisk & Son, in the poultry business, at Gettysburg, where they are erecting a poultry plant which they intend shall be the best equipped and largest plant of the sort in the state. Judge Fisk is still enjoying a large and lucrative practice at his home town and in the surrounding country.

JOSEPH HACESKY was born in Bohemia and was a youth of seventeen years at the time of the arrival of the family in this state and was about six years of age when they came to the new world. His educational privileges were obtained in the schools of Cleveland and he gained a good knowledge of the English language and of the branches of learning taught in our public institutions. He was united in marriage to Miss Rosy R. Lenger, who was also born in Bohemia, and their union has been blessed with five children.

In 1877 Mr. Hacesky took up his abode upon the farm where he is yet living and subsequently he purchased an additional tract of land, which he also operates. He is a successful farmer, having gained a very comfortable competence because of his continued labors, which are directed by sound judgment and good business ability. He was treasurer of the school board for several years and has always been deeply interested in the cause of education. He and his family are communicants of the Catholic church and socially he is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America and also with the Y. C. B. J., a Bohemian society.

M. C. FELKER, M. D., residing in Chamberlain, Brule county, is a native of Maine. His parents removed thence to Chicago, Illinois, and there the Doctor received his early educational training in the common schools, after which he entered Wheaton College, in the village of Wheaton, Illinois, where he continued his studies for a period of three years, later becoming a student in a private school. Having determined to prepare himself for the medical profession, Dr. Felker bent himself diligently and earnestly to the work of technical preparation. He not only completed the prescribed course in Rush Medical College, of Chicago, but he was likewise graduated in the Chicago Medical College, holding diplomas from each of these institutions. Dr. Felker was sent as a volunteer assistant surgeon to Dr. Daniel Brainard, who occupied the chair of surgery in Rush College, and served in this capacity during the major portion of the war of the Rebellion. After the close of the war the subject was actively engaged in the practice of his profession in Chicago for three years, at the expiration of which he removed to Iowa, where he was engaged in practice about four years, at the expiration of which he came to Kimball, Brule county, South Dakota, and established himself in practice, being one of the pioneer physicians and surgeons in the county. He is now a resident of Lyman county, where he is the owner of a large and valuable stock ranch, and he has to a large extent retired from the active practice of his profession.

Upon the organization of Lyman county Dr. Felker was chosen as its first assessor, and thereafter he served for two years as county treasurer. In politics he is an uncompromising Democrat, and he has long been an active and zealous worker in the party ranks.

CHRISTIAN BAADE, of Yankton county, was born in Germany and remained there until twenty-four years of age and in the meantime he acquired a fair common-school education. He came to the United States, determined to work his way upward if it could be done through energy and perseverance. He was a young man of twenty-four when he reached America and took up his abode in Minnesota. There he worked until he came to Yankton county, South Dakota. He secured a homestead claim, but found that wealth was not to be won for the asking even in this favored section of the country. On one occasion the grasshoppers descended upon his crops, destroying every particle of vegetation on his farm. He persevered, however, in his work and all of the excellent improvements seen upon his place stand as monuments of his enterprise and thrift. He has planted an apple orchard, has erected good buildings and now has a well-developed property. In connection with general farming he raises hogs and cattle and his annual sales of stock add continually to his income.

Mr. Baade was united in marriage to Miss

Clara Havell, and they have three interesting children. The parents hold membership in the Lutheran church and Mr. Baade gives his political support to the Republican party.

FRANK CHAP, of Yankton county, was born in Bohemia, his parents being also natives of Bohemia. When they came to America they established their home in Yankton county, South Dakota, where the father purchased land, and in the course of years made it a very productive property. Frank Chap was twelve years of age when he came with his parents to South Dakota and he here began work in the fields. Subsequently he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land and began agricultural work on his own account.

Mr. Chap wedded Miss Mary Bahensky, of Yankton county, who was born in Bohemia, and they have become the parents of five children. The farm of Mr. Chap is well improved and by the careful conduct of his business affairs he is providing a comfortable living for his family. He is a member of the Catholic church and his family also attend its services.

EDGAR B. PETTERSON was born in Sweden on the 26th of September, 1829. He spent his childhood and youth in Sweden and received only a limited education, his time being required at home as soon as he was old enough to labor to advantage. At the age of seventeen he went to sea, but after sailing for two years with his father he left the vessel and came to the United States, where he followed the same kind of life from 1850 to 1853 inclusive, plying on the waters between the cities of New York and Philadelphia. In the latter year he went to California and during the ten years following devoted his attention to mining in various parts of the west, finally making his way to Nevada, where he mined for a period of seven years.

At the expiration of the time noted Mr. Peterson revisited his native land, but after spending six months there returned to California and until the year 1871 lived in the city of San Francisco. From there he came to Lincoln county, South Dakota, and taking up a claim of one hundred and sixty acres in Dayton township settled down to a life of agriculture, which calling he has since pursued with encouraging success, the meanwhile adding to his real estate and making many substantial improvements on his farm. Politically he votes the People's ticket, manifests an abiding interest in public affairs and has filled various local offices, having served for a number of years as a member of the school board.

In the year 1873 Mr. Petterson took to himself a wife and helpmeet in the person of Miss Margaret Boynstad, of Norway, the daughter of Ole and Sarah Boynstad. Mr. and Mrs. Petterson have a family of eight children, namely: Phoebe, one of the successful and popular teachers of Lincoln county; George B., Hilda S., Olive, Edwin, Emma E. and Clara May, all at home.

HENRY FREIDEL was born in Yankton county and in the public schools of this county obtained his education. He spent his boyhood days in the usual manner of farmer lads of the period, assisting in the labors of field and meadow and as the years went by gaining valuable experience as a preparation for his own business career. He is now engaged in general farming on his own account and has one hundred and sixty acres of land under cultivation. He is also engaged in the raising of hogs and cattle and is a farmer of enterprise, following progressive methods and carrying on his work along practical lines so that his efforts are bringing to him desirable returns.

Mr. Freidel was united in marriage to Miss Abbie Hacesky and they have one son. In politics Mr. Freidel is independent.

JOSEPH PAPIK, now deceased, was born in Bohemia, and was a lad of seven summers when brought by his parents to the new world. He was educated in the public schools of this country, manifested special aptitude in his studies and he was a linguist of superior ability, speaking the English, Bohemian and German tongues fluently.

Mr. Papik was united in marriage to Miss Josie Urban, who was born in Bohemia and unto them were born three children. In order to provide for his family Mr. Papik followed the occupation of farming and as the years went by he was enabled to add annually to his income. He owned and operated three hundred and twenty acres of land and was a man not only successful, but who was also honorable and enjoyed the unqualified regard and confidence of those with whom he was associated. His death was not only deeply regretted by his widow and their children, but also by many friends, who had entertained for him the most kindly feeling because of his excellent traits of character and his own geniality and consideration for others. In his political views Mr. Papik was an earnest Republican and on its ticket he was elected to represent his district in the house of delegates of South Dakota, where he served for eight years. He gave careful thought and earnest consideration to every question which came up for settlement and he left the impress of his individuality upon the legislation enacted during his term.

FAY MATTISON was born in Shaftsbury, Bennington county, Vermont, and when but four years of age was taken by his parents to Wisconsin and there he was reared, obtaining his education in the public schools. After arriving at years of maturity he married Miss Emma E. Tillison, of Iowa, and they have become the parents of four children.

Mr. Mattison's residence in South Dakota dates from 1865, when he secured a homestead claim in Union county, occupying it for a year, but he lost the property because of having been away from the farm for one night only. He now engages in the sawmill business and is also the owner of three hundred and twenty acres of land, his time and attention, however, being largely given to the manufacture of lumber and the product of his mill finds a ready sale on the market because of its excellent quality and the honorable dealing of our subject. Socially Mr. Mattison is connected with the Masonic fraternity, belonging to a lodge in Dixon county, Nebraska. He belongs to that class of citizens whose deep interest in the public welfare has caused them to become active factors in the work of general progress and improvement. While successfully carrying on his individual business interests he has at the same time labored for the welfare of his adopted county and state and his efforts in its behalf have been far-reaching and beneficial.

JOHN VENECEK, of Yankton county, was born in Bohemia. His parents came to the new world, establishing their home in Yankton county, South Dakota, on land not far from Tabor, the father securing a tract of land from the government. The subject of this review was thirteen years of age when he came to the United States with his parents. His education was acquired in Bohemia, but after arriving in this country he had little opportunity for attending school. He married Miss Rosalia Kocowiek, who was born in Bohemia and who by her marriage has become the mother of seven children.

The home farm of Mr. Venecek comprises four hundred acres of land, and in addition to the cultivation of the soil he is engaged in the raising of stock. His fields are devoted to the production of grain, oats and wheat and he usually harvests good crops, which find a ready sale on the market. He is a member of a Bohemian society, Z. C. B. J., and enjoys the high regard of his fellow countrymen and of other residents of this community.

JOSEPH WEGENER, one of the leading business men of Hecla, Brown county, is a native of the Hawkeye state, having been born in the city of Dubuque, Iowa. He was educated in private schools in Dubuque and then entered a local drug store, where he learned the science of pharmacy in a most practical way. When twenty years of age he came to South Dakota and located in Columbia, Brown county, while in the following year he took up a claim of government land. He resided on this claim until he had perfected his title to the same, and then came to Hecla and opened a drug store, gaining a representative support from the start and now having one of the most popular and attractive business places in the town. He has ever shown himself ready to give his aid and influence in support of all measures for the general good of the community, being essentially public-spirited and progressive. Fraternally he has attained to the thirty-second degree in the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry, being thus crowned a Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret and standing high in the circles of this time-honored fraternity. He is a member of the consistory at Aberdeen, and a charter member of Humanity Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, in Hecla, while he is also affiliated with the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

Mr. Wegener was married to Miss Jennie A. Myra, and they have five children.

METHIAS LARSON was born in Norway and there he spent the days of his childhood and youth, remaining in his early life with his parents, also natives of Norway. In 1850 the parents left that country and became residents of Dane county, Wisconsin, and after coming to America he assisted his father in the arduous task of developing a new farm. When the country became involved in civil war he espoused the cause of the Union and became a valiant soldier. He arrived in Dakota in 1862 and entered one hundred and sixty acres of government land and soon afterward he planted seven acres to timber. All the improvements upon the place have been made by him and he now has a valuable property. He raises cattle, most of which is of common grades, but he also has some full-blooded shorthorn and good Hereford cattle. He likewise raises Poland-China and Berkshire hogs.

Mr. Larson was united in marriage to Miss Lena Hoesgard, and unto them were born four children. The family are identified with the Lutheran church and Mr. Larson votes with the Republican party.

PETER W. JOHNSON was born January 6, 1829, in Vassenwangen province, Norway, in which country his parents, John B. and Christi (Olson) Johnson, spent their entire lives as farming people. The subject passed the days of his boyhood and youth in his native land and there worked at the shoemaker's trade. At the age of eighteen years he decided to try his fortune in America and on reaching this country first located in Chicago, where he worked in a lumber yard for six years, remaining there until 1859. The following two years were spent in Dane county, Wisconsin, and in 1861 he came to South Dakota and took up a tract of one hundred and sixty acres of land in Yankton county, for which he paid the government price of one dollar and a quarter per acre, and is today the owner of a fine farm of three hundred acres and has sold a tract of eighty acres for sixty-five dollars per acre. Although he carries on general farming he gives considerable attention to the raising of stock, being a breeder of cattle, and he also keeps good horses and hogs.

FRANK NIKODYN was born in Bohemia on the 15th of May, 1865, and is a son of Joseph Nikodyn. He was reared in his parents' home and educated in the public schools. In December, 1892, he was married to Miss Mary Feefar, and four children were born unto them, namely: Tiny, Mary, Lillie and Frank, all of whom are yet living, but the mother passed away on the 10th of March, 1901. On the 17th of June, 1902, Mr. Nikodyn was again married, his second union being with Miss Mary Nedved, who was born in Bohemia. This marriage has been blessed with one child, Othilia.

The landed possessions of Mr. Nikodyn comprise two hundred and twenty acres, all within the boundaries of his home farm, located near Lesterville. He operates all of his land and each year harvests good crops, and also raises considerable stock, making a specialty of the raising of hogs and each year he places a large number of these animals upon the market. He belongs to the Farmers' Fire Insurance Company, a Bohemian society, insuring against loss by fire or lightning. He also has membership relations with the Z. C. B. J. Society, likewise having as its members the native sons of Bohemia. His religious connection is with the Presbyterian church and his life is in harmony with his professions in this regard.

ROBERT L. McINTOSH was born in Delaware county, Iowa, May 16, 1855, grew to maturity on a farm and received a practical education in the public schools. He remained in his native state until 1887, at which time he disposed of his interests there and moved to Springfield, South Dakota, where he spent some time dealing in horses, later purchasing one hundred and sixty acres of land in section 6, Homer township, Bon Homme county.

Mr. McIntosh has succeeded well as a farmer and at the present time owns a fine homestead of two hundred and eighty acres, two hundred of which are in cultivation, and in addition thereto he rents three hundred and sixty acres in the vicinity, devoting the greater part of the latter to live stock, in the raising of which he has achieved a wide and enviable reputation. He served two terms as county commissioner, one of the most important local offices within the gift of the people. Politically he is a zealous supporter of the Republican party.

PATRICK MARTIN, who resides near Running Waters, is one of eight children born to Patrick and Anna Martin, and dates his birth from March 17, 1835, having first seen the light of day near the city of Quebec, Canada.

The early life of Patrick Martin was spent in Canada, and, being reared to agricultural pursuits, has followed the same nearly ever since. In the year 1865 he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Malone, a native of Kilkenny, Ireland, and the daughter of William and Mary (Roach) Malone. After his marriage Mr. Martin engaged in farming and continued to live in Canada until the spring of 1881, when he moved to Bon Homme county, South Dakota, and settling at Running Water, entered the employ of the Chicago, Minneapolis & St. Paul Railroad, with which he was engaged during the ensuing nine years. Meanwhile he purchased one hundred and seventy-one acres of land near the above town and on severing his connection with the road at the expiration of the time noted, moved to the same and began the work of its improvement. He has succeeded well as a farmer and now owns seven hundred acres of fine real estate, all but one hundred cleared and in a high state of cultivation, his improvements of all kinds being among the best in the county.

Politically Mr. Martin is a Democrat, and religiously belongs to the Catholic church, his wife being a member of that communion also.

C. A. JOHNSON was born in Springfield, Erie county, New York, and is a scion of sturdy Puritan stock, the name which he bears having been identified with the annals of American history from the early colonial epoch. The subject was a lad of about nine years at the time of the family removal to Wisconsin, and there he was reared to the sturdy discipline of the homestead farm, while he received such educational advantages as were afforded in the common schools of the locality and period. At the age of seventeen years, Mr. Johnson entered the Elroy Seminary, at Elroy, Wisconsin, where he completed a three-years course of study. His financial resources were limited and in order to accomplish his ambition to thus further prosecute his educational work, he entered the office of one of the leading physicians of Elroy, and by his services in the connection defrayed the expenses of his board in the home of the doctor. He was compelled to borrow money to pay his tuition in the seminary, and this kindly loan he promptly repaid with his first earnings. For a number of years after leaving school Mr. Johnson was successfully engaged in teaching in the public schools of Wisconsin, and his ability and judgment led him to make a number of excellent investments in land; in the connection it is a significant fact that practically every real-estate venture in which he has embarked has been brought to a successful issue. In 1884 he moved to Wood Lake, Nebraska. At that time there was nothing located at that station on the Elkhorn Railroad except a section house and a claim shanty. Mr. Johnson rented the claim shanty and started a general store, established a postoffice, and became the first postmaster of Wood Lake. In 1886 he established the Wood Lake Bank. In 1892, through the efforts of Orion Porter, Mr. Johnson made a visit to Fairfax, South Dakota, and the resources of Gregory county so impressed him that he located several business enterprises. Those at Fairfax were dealing in general merchandise and lumber. On the Missouri river, at Porter's Landing, he established the Johnson Lumber and Grain Company, which he operated for five years and which made necessary the re-establishing of the boat line between that point and Running Water. In 1893 he established the Fairfax State Bank, which is the strongest banking institution in Gregory county. Mr. Johnson's business transactions in Gregory county since starting business here aggregate over a million dollars. He has always been a successful investor in real estate and his dealings in that direction have become so numerous that the C. A. Johnson Realty Company was formed to conduct that branch of the business. The company owns the most desirable of the additions to the towns of Fairfax and Bonesteel, as well as much other of the most desirable realty in the county. Mr. Johnson is the owner of large tracts of land in this county, the same being utilized principally for grazing purposes. He is president of the Fairfax State Bank and also of the Citizens' Bank of Bonesteel. In politics he gives a stanch allegiance to the Republican party, and is identified with the Masonic fraternity, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Mr. Johnson was united in marriage to Miss Martha Chandler, and they have two children.

P. L. PIERCE, one of the sterling pioneers of Campbell county, is a native of the great Empire state of the Union, having been born in Sparta, Livingston county, New York. When he was a lad of six years he accompanied his parents on their removal to Columbia county, Wisconsin, where he was reared to manhood under the conditions of the pioneer days in that state, his father there being engaged in farming. The subject received a common-school education, and continued to reside in Wisconsin until 1868, when he removed to Iowa, where he was engaged in farming for the ensuing eight years, at the expiration of which he took up his abode in Minnesota, where he was engaged in the hotel business until 1882, in which year he came to what is now the city of Aberdeen, South Dakota. Here he was engaged in the livery business for two years and then came to Campbell county, entering a homestead claim of government land. This homestead he still retains, the same being located three miles distant from the Missouri river and two miles from the line of North Dakota. In this favorite locality Mr. Pierce now owns a half section of land, and his place is well improved, being one of the best in this locality. Mr. Pierce has been at all times progressive and has taken advantage of opportunities which others would not have discerned, and he has labored in season and out to gain the goal of independence and success. For fourteen seasons he operated a threshing machine, and his services in the connection have been demanded in past years far and wide through this section, as is evident when we recall the fact that he has assisted in the harvesting and threshing of grain at points fully three hundred miles distant from his home place.

Mr. Pierce was united in marriage to Miss Rebecca Briggs, who was born in Indiana, and they became the parents of four children. Mr. Pierce is a stanch Republican.

CARL UECKER was born in Anklam, Germany, and was reared and educated in the fatherland, where he learned in his youth the trade of ship carpenter, to which he there continued to devote his attention until he emigrated thence to America, believing that here were afforded superior opportunities for the gaining of independence through personal effort. In the following year he came to South Dakota and took up a tract of government land in Clark county, where he turned his attention to farming, this original homestead being a portion of his present estate. He was not conversant with the language of the country, was not experienced in agricultural pursuits and had to contend with the many hardships and privations which ever fall to the lot of the pioneer, but he pressed steadily forward, never flagging in courage and determination, and in the course of time prosperity crowned his efforts and he came into his just deserts. He was married to Carlina Nuske, who was born in Greifsvalt, Germany, and they have five children.

I. M. GEYER was born in Ogle county, Illinois, and was reared in Whiteside county, Illinois, whither his parents removed from Ogle county when he was a mere child, and his educational advantages were such as were afforded in the common schools of the locality. He continued to be identified with agricultural pursuits in Illinois until he came to what is now the state of South Dakota, arriving in Watertown, Codington county, in the spring of that year. He then proceeded on foot to Faulk county, and there took up government land. Mr. Geyer forthwith set himself to the task of breaking his land and making it ready for cultivation. The very day that he finished harvesting his first crop the stacks were struck by lightning and the grain entirely destroyed. His second crop, covering two hundred and fifty acres, was destroyed by hail, and the third crop secured to him only a half yield, as he met with an accident which confined him to the hospital for some time, so that he was unable to give the necessary attention. These successive misfortunes would have daunted the courage of one less self-reliant and determined, but the subject did not waver in his loyalty to the state and has lived to see his confidence in the same amply justified. He remained in Faulk county two years and then removed to Clark county, where he became the owner of land, to which he devoted his attention until 1894, engaged in both farming and stock raising. In 1894 Mr. Geyer came to Stanley county and took up land on the Cheyenne river, at a point forty-five miles northwest of Fort Pierre, and here turned his attention more specially to the raising of stock, in which he has been very successful. He raises sheep on an extensive scale, usually having a large band and that of high-grade type, while he also raises horses.

Mr. Geyer was united in marriage to Miss Winifred Doughty, and of this union have been born two children.

JOSEPH WERTHERER, one of the most successful and popular business men of Potter county, claims the "right little, tight little isle" of England as the place of his nativity and comes of stanch old English lineage. He was born in Staffordshire, and was reared to maturity in his native county and received a common-school education. At the age of twenty-one years he severed the home ties and came to America, locating in the city of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Six months later he moved to the Hocking valley of Ohio, where he was employed in connection with the mining of coal in that famous district about three years. He then went to the Indian territory, where he devoted three years to prospecting and mining and met with fair success. In the spring of 1888 he came to South Dakota, making Lebanon his destination, and forthwith engaged in farming and stock growing in this vicinity. In 1890-91, leaving his family at the home in this county, he was in Wyoming, passing the two years at Cambria, near Newcastle, where he was foreman in the coal mines, having one thousand workmen under his supervision. On his return to Lebanon he established himself in the general merchandise business, in which he has since successfully continued, having a large and well-equipped store and controlling an extensive trade. He has accumulated a large amount of real estate in the town and county, his fine ranch being devoted to diversified agriculture and to the raising of live stock of excellent grade. In politics he is an ardent Populist and is one of the influential men in its local contingent, having been chairman of the county central committee of the party for the past ten years and having shown much skill in the maneuvering of his forces in the various campaigns. Fraternally the subject is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Modern Woodmen of America.

Mr. Wertherer was united in marriage to Miss Emily Dudley, who, like himself, was born and reared in Staffordshire, England, and of this union have been born seven children.

JUDGE EDWIN PARLIMAN, deceased, who during his lifetime was considered a leader of the bar of Minnehaha county, was born in Stark county, Ohio, December 21, 1832. He was given the advantages of a common-school education, which was supplemented by attendance at Allegheny College, at Meadville, Pennsylvania, from which he graduated in 1850. Upon attaining his majority, he removed to Decorah, Iowa, where he learned the watchmaker's trade and where he later engaged in the jeweler's business on his own account. In 1857 he went to Austin, Minnesota, and shortly afterwards located in Hastings, the same state. He took up the study of law and in September, 1860, was admitted to the bar and practiced law at Hastings until his enlistment in the United States military service. He enlisted in the Second Minnesota Cavalry Regiment and the following year received a commission as first lieutenant of his company, being promoted to a captaincy in 1865 and at the time of his discharge, in December, 1865, he was brevetted major. Upon the completion of his military services he returned to Hastings and renewed his law practice, continuing so engaged until coming to Sioux Falls in 1867. While still a resident of Minnesota, he held the office of district attorney of Dakota county two terms. He was the first village attorney of the village of Sioux Falls and was appointed county attorney by the county board, holding this position three years. At the first election after South Dakota's admission as a state, he was elected county judge and held his position until 1897, seven consecutive years, to the great satisfaction of litigants and lawyers. After leaving the bench he resumed the practice of law, at first in partnership with Harry R. Carlsen, and later continuing the practice alone. He was appointed referee in bankruptcy, being the first appointee to this position after the bankruptcy law went into effect, holding the position until ill health compelled him to resign, when his son Ralph was appointed to the position. On March 1, 1899, he formed a partnership with his son Ralph, under the firm name of Parlman & Parlman, this association continuing until his death.

Judge Parlman was a good lawyer and a good citizen. His judicial integrity was beyond criticism and his death was deemed an irreparable loss by the members of the bar with which he had been so long associated.

Judge Parlman was twice married. In 1852 he wedded Miss Jerusha North and to them were born four children: Emma B., wife of C. S. Donaldson, of Lakeville, Minnesota; Percy M., wife of Jessie Scofield, of Lakeville, Minnesota; Ralph, of Sioux Falls; and Maty, wife of E. G. Brickner, of St. Paul, Minnesota. By mutual consent Judge Parlman and his wife separated and were divorced in 1880. Mrs. Parlman still lives at St. Paul, Minnesota. On February 1, 1881, the Judge was united in marriage to Miss Mary Cunningham, to which union has been born one child, Arthur C. Mrs. Parlman survives her husband and makes her home in Sioux Falls.

In Judge Parlman we find united many of the rare qualities which go to make up the successful lawyer and jurist. He possessed perhaps few of those brilliant, dazzling meteoric qualities which have sometimes flashed along the legal horizon, riveting the gaze and blinding the vision for the moment, then disappearing, leaving little or no trace behind, but rather had those solid and more substantial qualities which shone with a constant luster, shedding light in the dark places with steadiness and continuity.

RALPH W. PARLIMAN, one of the prominent and leading attorneys of Sioux Falls, is a native of the old Buckeye state, having been born at Newton Falls, Ohio, January 25, 1861, the son of Edwin and Jerusha I. (North) Parliman. He obtained a good common-school education, which was supplemented by attending the high school in Hastings, Minnesota. In 1885 he commenced the study of law with his father, Judge Edwin Parliman, and was admitted to practice June 24, 1887. He first came to South Dakota May 10, 1878, and located at Sioux Falls and commenced the active practice of his profession at Britton, South Dakota, in 1887. In 1891 he moved to Webster, this state, where he continued his business association with James Wells, under the firm name of Wells & Parliman, taking personal charge of the office. March 1, 1899, he located at Sioux Falls, where he formed a partnership with his father under the firm name of Parliman & Parliman, which enjoyed marked success and was continued up to the time of Judge Parliman's death, June 5, 1899. He then remained alone in the practice until, in December, 1903, he became associated with C. P. Bates, as Bates & Parliman, and they have since remained associated, commanding one of the largest law practices at the Minnehaha bar. As a lawyer Mr. Parliman evinces a familiarity with legal principles and a ready perception of facts, together with ability to apply the one to the other, which has won him a reputation as a sound and safe practitioner. Years of conscientious work have brought with them an equal increase of practice and reputation and also growth in legal knowledge and wide and careful judgment. In discussion of the principles of law he is noted for clearness of statement and candor. His zeal for a client never leads him to urge an argument which in his judgment is not in harmony with the law, and in all the important litigation with which he has been connected no one has ever charged him with anything calculated to bring discredit upon himself or cast a reflection upon his profession. By a straightforward, honorable course he has built up a large and lucrative legal business and financially has been successful far beyond the average of his calling, as he stands today among the first at the bar of his county. In politics, Mr. Parliman was reared a Democrat and remained faithful to the traditions of his party until the campaign of 1896 when, feeling that he could not conscientiously endorse his party's course, he affiliated with the Republicans. In 1888 he was elected state's attorney of Marshall county, and on May 10, 1894, President Cleveland appointed him postmaster of Webster, which position he held until June 5, 1898. While a resident of that place he was a member of the school board for nine years. May 14, 1898, he was commissioned first lieutenant and quartermaster of the Third Regiment United States Volunteer Cavalry and on June 21, 1898, he was appointed quartermaster of the First Cavalry Brigade, being detached from his own company. May 20, 1899, he was appointed referee in bankruptcy and retained this position for two years. Fraternally he is affiliated with Minnehaha Lodge, No. 5, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Sioux Falls Lodge, No. 62, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Webster.

On March 16, 1888, Mr. Parliman was united in marriage to Miss Mattie A. Chamberlain and they have five children: Ralph W., Marie, James C., John E. and Beatrice I.

FRANK HUSS, a leading stockman of Pennington county, South Dakota, making his headquarters at Pedro, is a native of Tiffin, Ohio, where he was born on the 5th of February, 1863. On the paternal side, he is of German ancestors and on the maternal, German and English. His paternal grandfather, Jacob Huss, was a native of Pennsylvania and at the age of eight years was left an orphan. Subsequently he moved to Frederick county, Maryland, and later to Seneca county, Ohio, where he married Mrs. Sarah Hunter (nee Robinson), widow of John Hunter. She was a native of Martinsburg, Virginia, and the fruits of her union with Mr. Huss were six children. Jacob Huss died at Tiffin, Ohio, at the age of forty-six years, while his widow passed away also at Tiffin, aged eighty years. The subject's father, George R. Huss, is the only member of this family now living. He was born at Tiffin, Ohio, January 5, 1828, and married Mary A. Tomb, January 8, 1851. To this union were born eight children, namely: Charles, deceased; Benjamin J., of Logan, Ohio; Dr. John R., of Pierre, South Dakota; Bell, deceased; Harry, of Toledo, Ohio; Frank C., the subject of this sketch; Emma, now Mrs. H. L. Wenner, of Tiffin, Ohio; Nellie, now Mrs. W. G. Nichols, of Tiffin. The subject's maternal grandfather, Benjamin Tomb, was a native of Pennsylvania and moved to Ohio some time in the 'forties. Prior to his removal he married in Pennsylvania and became the father of nine children. He was engaged in the banking business at Tiffin, Ohio, for thirty years. His wife, Mary A., was born at Jersey Shore, Pennsylvania, in November, 1854.

Frank C. Huss received his education in the public schools of Tiffin, Ohio, and at the age of eighteen years started out in life upon his own responsibility. He first went to Ogallala, Nebraska, where he remained three years in the employ of the Sheidley Cattle Company. In 1884 he went to Cisco, Texas, but one year later came to Hot Springs, South Dakota, and was employed on a ranch for several years. In 1892 he came to Pennington county and engaged in the stock business with Thomas B. Tomb, under the firm name of F. C. Huss & Company, but in 1896 bought his partners out and since this time has been in the business alone, meeting with pronounced success in the enterprise.

On the 2d of September, 1890, Mr. Huss was married to Mrs. Harriett L. Chapman, who was born in Illinois, March 3, 1870, the daughter of James E. and Mary Chapman. To the subject and his wife were born two children, George F. and Nellie E. Mrs. Huss died March 27, 1895, and on August 22, 1900, Mr. Huss married Miss Minnie M. Calfee, who was born in Magnolia, Iowa, January 16, 1866, the daughter of William and Mary S. Calfee, and to this last union of the subject was born two children, Mercy S. and Mary T.

Politically the subject is an ardent Republican and takes an active interest in the welfare of his party, though precluded from participating actively in campaign work because of business demands. Fraternally he is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, while religiously he supports the Methodist Episcopal church at Pierre, in which he has been trustee for four years and member of the board of stewards for two years. The subject has taken a deep interest in the welfare of the community in which he resides and has done all within his power to advance its varied interests and today holds a high place in the esteem of his fellow citizens.

ISAAC MURPHY, a successful contractor of Sioux Falls, was born July 15, 1863, at Chatfield, Minnesota. His father, who was engaged in agricultural pursuits, died when the subject was but two years old, while his mother is still living. The subject attained his early education in the schools of Chatfield, but at the early age of seventeen years was compelled to start out on his own responsibility. He first engaged in cutting timber in Minnesota, but after three years he came to Dakota territory and located on a farm six miles northeast of Sioux Falls where he remained for one year. He then engaged in railroad contracting work and a short time later he located in Sioux Falls and engaged in his present business, house raising and moving. He rapidly acquired a reputation for thorough workmanship and has handled some very large contracts in this state, being thoroughly well equipped and competent in every way to handle any contract in his line. He raises and moves brick, stone and frame buildings and gives special attention to shoring up fronts. Politically Mr. Murphy is a Republican, though business demands have precluded his giving any special attention to politics. He started in life without a dollar and has made all he possesses by his own resources and stands today one of the representative men of his section of the state. Mr. Murphy has been twice married. On October 21, 1885, he wedded Miss Eva Marsden, the fruits of which union were two children, Marsden A. and Lila E. Mrs. Murphy died May 11, 1896, and on October 17, 1898, Mr. Murphy was married to Miss Agnes C. Wright and they have one child, Clifford I. Their home is a center of gracious hospitality and their friends are legion.

SIoux FALLS BREWING AND MALT-ING COMPANY. — MORIZ LEVINGER stands as chief executive of one of the most important industrial concerns in the city of Sioux Falls, being president and general manager of the Sioux Falls Brewing and Malting Company, while he has been identified with the enterprise since 1886 and has been the leading factor in building up one of the greatest breweries in the west. He is a thorough, discriminating and reliable business man and is one of the representative citizens of the city.

Concerning the inception and rise of the Sioux Falls Brewery we can not do better than to quote somewhat freely from a previously published article concerning the same: "The Sioux Falls Pantagraph in its issue of October 7, 1873, stated that John McClellan had sold four lots on the side hill to Messrs. Krudnig and Foerster, of Yankton, on which they would commence the erection of a brewery as soon as material could be procured for the purpose. These lots were located near by, if not the same, lots now occupied by Heynsohn Brothers, but no attempt was made to build a brewery upon them. In an issue of the same paper of August 29, 1874, we find the following item: 'Parties are now engaged in building a brewery and will have it completed so far as to offer the genuine lager by Christmas,' and that 'Knott and Nelson are the names of the gentlemen building it.' The boiler reached Sioux Falls October 27, 1874. About January 20, 1875, the firm of Knott & Nelson was dissolved by mutual consent, S. S. Nelson retiring; and C. K. Howard became associated with Mr. Knott, first under the firm name of George A. Knott & Company, and later the interested parties incorporated as the Sioux Falls Brewing Company. The business was conducted for several years by this firm, with a capital stock of forty thousand dollars, George A. Knott taking fifteen thousand dollars of the stock, C. K. Howard fifteen thousand, and the officers of the First National Bank of Sioux Falls the balance. Mr. Knott was the general manager of the business until the affairs of the company became involved in litigation, in 1886."

Without entering into detail in the connection, it may be said that it was at this juncture that Mr. Levinger became identified with the institution, and much difficulty was experienced by him in sustaining his claims and protecting his capitalistic interests. A long and tedious series of litigations ensued and the case became a somewhat celebrated one, being finally brought before the supreme court of the territory at its February term in 1888, at which time the decision was adverse to Mr. Levinger, while in the rehearing at the May term the decision was sustained. Finally a second rehearing was asked and denied and the case was then appealed to the supreme court of the United States. This action caused the defending parties to assume a different attitude and within a short time a settlement of the matter was consummated by the litigating parties, much to the satisfaction of Mr. Levinger and his associate, Moses Kaufmann, the secretary and treasurer of the present company. Not yet was the way to be made clear for those interested in the success of the enterprise, for further litigation followed, on various grounds, terminating finally as late as 1894, since which time the business has been unhampered and has grown steadily in scope and importance.

In the first year after the operation of the brewery was inaugurated two hundred and fifty barrels of beer were manufactured, the second year showing an output of twice that quantity, while the third year fifteen hundred barrels were turned out. Since the brewery came under the control of Messrs. Levinger and Kaufmann extensive improvements have been made in the plant, making it one of the largest and best equipped in the west. In 1900 the company erected a new granite stock house and made other improvements, involving a total expenditure of one hundred and sixty-four thousand dollars. In 1901 was erected the present fine malt house, which is controlled by a separate company, of which Mr. Levinger is president, the concern having a paid-in capital of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, while the capacity of the malt house is one thousand bushels a day. The personnel of the official corps of this company is as follows: M. Levinger, president; C. N. Voss, of Davenport, Iowa, vice-president; C. J. Longfellow, secretary; and C. E. McKinney, treasurer. The brewing company is incorporated with a capital of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and its officers are Moriz Levinger, president and general manager, and M. Kaufmann, secretary and treasurer. In 1903 an addition to the brewery was made, in the erection of a modern grain elevator, at a cost of one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, and through this provision the capacity of the plant has been doubled. The products of the brewery have attained a wide reputation for their superior excellence, and the trade of the concern extends over a wide radius of country, while the annual output now reaches an average of thirty-five thousand barrels. The interested principals are men of sterling character and command the confidence and esteem of all with whom they have dealings, while both are numbered among the loyal and valued citizens of Sioux Falls.

MARTIN G. SINON, one of the representative members of the bar of South Dakota, being established in the practice of his profession in Fort Pierre, was born in Addison county, Vermont. He received his preliminary educational discipline in the public schools of his native state, having been graduated in the high school at Vergennes, Vermont, and having thereafter continued his studies in an excellent classical school in the same town. He then began reading law under the effective direction of a leading member of the bar of that place, and under these conditions continued his technical studies for three years. In 1875 he came to the west and located in the city of Des Moines, Iowa, being duly admitted to the bar of the state, and being there engaged in practice until he located in Highmore, the county seat of Hyde county, South Dakota, where he continued to be successfully engaged in the work of his profession until 1889, when he located in Pierre, where he remained one year, at the expiration of which he established his home and professional headquarters in Fort Pierre, where he has since continued in general practice and where he has built up a large and representative business. Mr. Sinon is a staunch adherent of the Democratic party, and has been an active worker in its cause, while he has been prominent in its local councils. He was elected register of deeds of Hyde county, and was elected as his own successor two years later, thus serving four consecutive years. He was also elected state's attorney of Stanley county, making a most excellent record as public prosecutor and being chosen to succeed himself, while later he was appointed to the same office, to fill a vacancy.

Mr. Sinon was married to Miss Mary Scott, of Polk county, Iowa, who is now deceased, she being survived by four children.

WILLIAM JONES, deceased, bore a prominent part in the upbuilding of South Dakota during its territorial days and deserves special mention in a work of this kind. He was a native of the old Buckeye state, born in 1831, and acquired a common-school education in his native state. Concluding that the west had better opportunities for advancement, he came to this section and engaged in railroad contracting, having aided in the construction of the Union Pacific Railroad. He operated and owned the first stage line from Denver, Colorado, to Santa Fe, New Mexico. Later he went to Colorado and engaged in merchandising at Georgia Gulch, also giving some attention to mining interests which he had acquired. He made money and used it to good purpose. During the war of the Rebellion, he equipped and paid the entire expenses of a regiment of Colorado troops which were sent to the front and during the first two years of the struggle he acted as quartermaster. After the close of the war he engaged in freighting from St. Joseph, Missouri, west, and in 1872 he went to Utah where he remained four years, coming to Black Hills, Dakota territory, in 1876. Here he engaged in farming and stock raising, which he followed up to the time of his death, which occurred at Spearfish, February 16, 1886. A Republican in politics, he always took an active part in the interests of his party and did much to strengthen party lines in his section of the state.

Mr. Jones was married in Denver, Colorado, in 1863, to Ellen Keliher, who survives him, now living at Sioux Falls at the age of seventy-three years. Their children are Linnie B., widow of Bernard McCrossan, of Sioux Falls; Henry M., of Sioux Falls; Nellie, wife of O. R. LaMontague, of Lead, South Dakota. Mr. Jones possessed a character which won for him universal esteem. A man of strong convictions, he had the courage to express and maintain his opinions at all times. Possessed of indomitable energy, he was always at the front in everything that obtained to uplift his fellow man and advance the community in which he lived. He won for himself a reputation that kept him to the forefront among his fellow citizens throughout his active days. In his family he was a generous provider, a kind husband and indulgent and kind father and possessed the attributes of character that unconsciously win respect and admiration.

FREDERICK A. JONES, of Minnehaha county, his finely improved and valuable farm being located in Sioux Falls township, comes of stanch old New England stock, and is himself a native of the Green Mountain state, having been born in Stamford, Bennington county, Vermont. He secured his rudimentary education in the public schools of his native city, and was a lad of seven years at the time of his parents' removal to Illinois, where he continued to attend school at intervals, after which he was employed on various farms in Illinois until he came to what is now the state of South Dakota and became numbered among the pioneers of Minnehaha county, purchasing a farm and having ever since continued to make his home on the same, while he has brought the land under a high state of cultivation and improved it with substantial buildings, including an attractive and commodious residence. He has planted a nice grove of trees, now well-matured, and everything about his farm betokens thrift and prosperity. In politics he has ever accorded an uncompromising allegiance to the Democratic party, and has been an active worker in its cause, though he has never sought official preferment.

Mr. Jones was married to Miss Cora J. Stoddard, and they have seven children.

CHARLES A. STEPHENS, one of the prominent and successful young farmers and stock growers of Beadle county, was born in Grant county, Wisconsin. His parents were numbered among the early pioneers of Wisconsin, and there the father attained prominence as a farmer and a raiser of and dealer in live stock, especially horses. He came to the territory of Dakota, in company with the subject of this sketch, in 1886, and the subject has since visited the state each successive year, he and his father having been engaged in shipping horses from Wisconsin to South Dakota during the intervening years, and in the connection they accumulated a large tract of land in Beadle county, the development and improvement of the same leading the entire family to remove to the county and take up a permanent residence, while the subject has continued to be actively associated with his father in the management of the fine property here. The subject secured his educational training in the public schools of his native county and has had most excellent business discipline through his intimate association with his honored father from his youth up. In politics he is a stanch Republican, as is also his father, and both are known as progressive and public-spirited citizens.

Mr. Stephens was united in marriage to Miss Ellen Ziegler, who was likewise born and reared in Grant county, Wisconsin, and they have two children.

T. B. LONG, one of the representative member of the bar of Brule county, is a native of Iowa, and secured his early educational discipline in the public schools of Mason City, Iowa, being graduated in the high school, and later he was for one year a student in the law department of the Iowa State University, at Iowa City, having previously prosecuted his technical reading under an able preceptor, and was admitted to the bar. In 1880 Judge Long came to what is now the state of South Dakota and located in Mitchell, where he was engaged in the practice of his profession about two years, while he also took up a pre-emption claim adjoining the town site of Mount Vernon, in the same county. Later he came to Brule county and took up his residence in Kimball, where he has ever since maintained his home and where he has gained prestige in his profession and distinguished precedence as a citizen. He is an uncompromising Republican in his political proclivities and was elected state's attorney of Brule county. He was also elected to the probate bench, and he acceptably administered the affairs of this important office for one term. Under the administration of President Harrison, Judge Long was appointed postmaster at Kimball, and held the office four years. Since retiring from office he has given his attention to the active work of his profession. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order and also the Knights of Pythias. Judge Long was united in marriage to Miss Minnie Egloff, and they have one child.

REV. J. R. HIGGINS, the able and popular priest in charge of St. Rose church and parish in the attractive village of Montrose, McCook county, is a native of the fair Emerald Isle, though he has passed practically his entire life in America. He was born in County Sligo, Ireland, and his parents emigrated to the United States when he was a child of four years. They located in the city of New York, in the parish of historic old St. Michael's church, and there the subject passed his youthful days. He secured his preliminary educational discipline in the parish school of St. Michael's church, and after completing the prescribed curriculum he entered St. Francis Xavier College, in the city of New York, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1883. He then completed his philosophical and theological courses in Dominican colleges in Kentucky and Ohio, and then was ordained to the priesthood. After his reception of holy orders Father Higgins initiated the active work of his sacred calling by serving as a missionary priest in Kentucky, Tennessee and Minnesota. While residing in the last mentioned state he made a lecture tour through South Dakota, and incidentally he became favorably impressed with the state as a desirable field for his work, and he determined to locate here providing the necessary permission could be secured from the church authorities. He was granted his desire, and became a member of this diocese, being first assigned to pastoral work in Bon Homme county, where he labored until 1903, when he was assigned to his present charge as rector of St. Rose church, in Montrose, where he has gained the affectionate regard and hearty co-operation of the members of his parish, into whose work he is infusing zeal and vitality, while his gracious personality and tolerance have gained to him distinctive popularity in his new field of labor.

JAMES DOUGLASS, the present postmaster of Carthage, was born in New York, and at the country schools of his native place received the elementary education usually allotted to the children of that day. The western fever was then raging strongly in the eastern states, and James Douglass did not escape this universal infection and so, when twenty-one years of age, we find him on his way to Wisconsin, where in due time he found a "local habitation." This first settlement, however, was but temporary, being disturbed by the outbreak of the great Civil war which interrupted the vocations of millions of men in every part of this vast country. James Douglass enlisted and was sent with his command to Missouri. He remained in the service until November, 1865, when he received his honorable discharge and immediately thereafter returned to Wisconsin. He purchased a farm near Madison, the state capital, and lived there six years, after which he removed to Lake Mills, from which point he was engaged for several years in carrying the mails. In 1880 Mr. Douglass decided on a still farther immigration into the western territories, and purchased land in Miner county, South Dakota, which at that time was but sparsely populated. In fact, he was one of the first settlers and has since been largely instrumental in developing and building up that part of the new state. He was elected county commissioner, and served one term to the entire satisfaction of his constituency. Further honors were soon conferred upon him in the shape of an election to the legislature, and the satisfaction with his services was so great as to lead to his re-election. In addition to the public offices above mentioned, Mr. Douglass served acceptably as chairman of the board of supervisors of Redstone township. In politics he has been a lifelong Republican, firmly impressed with the correctness and soundness of the principles of his party and always a strong supporter of its policies and candidates. In 1899 he was appointed postmaster of Carthage by President McKinley and has held this office continually since that time. Mr. Douglass was married to Miss Rachael Doolittle and they have three children.

FOSTER F. WHEELER is a native of the old Granite state, having been born in Amherst, Hillsboro county, New Hampshire, and passed his boyhood days in his native town, where he availed himself of the advantages of the local schools. After attaining manhood he came to the territory of Dakota, which was then absolutely on the frontier of civilization. He located in Yankton, and made that place his headquarters until he took up his residence on his present farm, where he has ever since maintained his home. He was one of the very first permanent settlers in Charles Mix county, and the county seat, Wheeler, was named in his honor. Upon coming to the county Mr. Wheeler took up government land, and this has ever since been his home and the scene of his labors. He has made excellent improvements on his ranch, having a nice residence, surrounded by trees of his own planting, while on the place he has one of the best artesian wells in the state. In politics Mr. Wheeler has given a staunch allegiance to the Republican party from the time of its organization, and he has wielded much influence in public affairs of a local nature, while he has served as a member of the board of county commissioners, as a school officer and in other positions of trust. He was also elected probate judge of the county. Mr. Wheeler is married and is the father of two children.

THOMAS JONES, one of the extensive farmers and stock growers of Hand county, is a native of the Emerald Isle, having been born in County Fermanagh, Ireland. The father of the subject passed his entire life in Ireland, and after his death his widow emigrated with her children to America, the subject of this sketch being about ten years of age at the time. She settled in Jo Daviess county, Illinois, as a pioneer, and there purchased a farm, upon which she continued to reside until her death, her sons ably co-operating in the work of carrying on the farming operations. The subject received his rudimentary education in his native land and after coming to America continued his studies as opportunity offered. The major portion of his educational discipline was secured in night schools, as his services were demanded in connection with the work of the farm during the daytime. He continued to attend school until he had attained the age of twenty years. Eventually he removed to Pottawattamie county, Iowa, where he was engaged in farming until he came to his present location in Hand county, taking up a homestead claim, in Florence township, and on this land his present substantial residence is located. To his original claim he has added until he now owns a valuable ranch. He is one of the successful and extensive raisers of high-grade cattle in this section, and also devotes special attention to the raising of horses.
